Gower. Why, 'tis a gall, a fool, a rogue: that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself at his return into London, under the form of a soldier. And Frenchmen are perfect in great commanders' names: and they will learn you by rote, where services were done:—at such and such a sconce, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was not, who discomfited, who term's the enemy stood on; and this they can perfectly in the phrase of war, which they track up with new-turned oaths: And what a heard of the general's cut, as much as the rest of the camp, will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful to be thought on: but you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may be marvellous mis-grounded.

Flu. I tell you what, captain Gower:—I do perceive he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the 'orld he is; if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him. Supper's mind. [Drum heard.]

Duke. Thank you the king is coming; and I must speak with him from the bridge.

Enter KingHenry, Gloster, and Soldiers.

Flu. Got pless your majesty!

K. Hen. How now, Fluellen? canst thou from the bridge!

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the bridge: The French is gone off, look you, and there are great names: and they will learn you by rote, where services were done:—at such and such a sconce, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was not, who discomfited, who term's the enemy stood on; and this they can perfectly in the phrase of war, which they track up with new-turned oaths: And what a heard of the general's cut, as much as the rest of the camp, will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful to be thought on: but you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may be marvellous mis-grounded.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The pertinency of the'atherversity hath been very and very remarkable great; for, for any part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church, one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his name is Bardolph; his complexion is to red, and flames of fire; and his lips swells at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes purple, and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his ears are cut.

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off; and we give express charge, that in our marches through the country, there be nothing compelled from the people by force, but what is taken but paid for; none of the French upbraided, or abused in disdainful language; for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentle gamester is the soonest winner.

[Trumpets sound. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. My liege, I know me by my habit.

K. Hen. Well then, I know thee: What shall I know of thee?

Mont. My liege, my master's mind.

K. Hen. Well now, Montjoy.

Mont. Thus says my king:—Say thou to Harry of England, Though we seemed dead, we did but sleep; Advantage is a better soldier, than rashness. Tell him if his king would have rebuked him at Harlequin; but that we thought not good to bruise an injury, till it were full ripe;—now we speak upon our cue; and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly, and answer to our sword, and admire our subduing

3 In proper time.
Bid him, therefore, consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested, without impeachment; for, to return, his loss would be worse downwards. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the master of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgraces, we have enriched these, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add—deference: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mon. Montjoy.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back.
And tell thy king—I do not seek him now; but could be willing to march on to Calais, without impeachments; for, to say the truth, (though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much unto an enemy of craft and vantage,) my people are with sickness much embittered; my numbers lessen'd; and those few I have almost no better than so many French.

Who, when they were in health, I tell thee, herald,
I thought upon one pair of English legs
Did head them down—yet I forgive thee, God,
That I do brag thus!—this thy air of France
Hath blown that vice in me; I must repent.
Go, therefore, tell thy master here I am;
My ransom is this trait and worthless truce;
My army, but a weak and sickly guard;
Yet God before, tell him we will come on,
They who their tabernacles against another neighbor.

Stand in our way. There's for thy father, Montjoy;
Go, but thy master well advise himself,
If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd,
We shall make the way away with your red blood.
Discolor: and so, Montjoy, fare you well.
The sum of all our answer is but this:
We would not seek a battle, as we are;
Nor, if we were, we will not shun it;
So tell your master.

Mon. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness.

Glo. I hope they will not come upon us now.

K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.
March to the bridge; it now draws toward night—
Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves.

And on to-morrow bid them march away. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The French Camp near Azincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Rambures, the Duke of Orleans, Dalphin and others.

Con. Tut! I have the best arm of the world.

Wold it were day?

Ori. You have an excellent arm; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Ori. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable,

You talk of horse and armor.

Ori. You are as well provided of both, as any prince in the world.

Dau. What a long night is this!—I will not choose my horse with any that tread on our pastures. Ca, ha! He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs! le cheval volant, the Pegueus, qui a les marines de feu! When I bestride him, he strikes out so much as to make a hawk's eye; the earth sings when he touches it; the lowest horn of his hoof is more muscoat than the pipe of Hermes.

Ori. He's of the color of the nutmeg.

Dau. And of the beat of the guinea. It is a beast for Persians: he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness, while his rider mounts him: he is indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call—beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palmyrs; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces honours.

Hinderance. * Then used for God being my guide.

* Alluding to the bounding of tennis-balls, which were stuffed with hair.

Ori. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, so correctly describe the quality; it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: it is a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's horse to ride on; and for the world (familiar to us, and unknown, to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him.) I once write a sonnet in his praise, and began thus: Wondrous nature.

Ori. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my horse, for my horse is my mistress.

Ori. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. My joy! the other day, unthought, your mistress shrewly shook your back.

Dau. So, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. Of! then, beke, she was old and gentle; and you rode, like a kerne 1 of Ireland, your French nose off, and in your strat trowsers. 2

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dau. I think it, and you, and therefore I ride and ride not warily, till into foul bogs; I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade. 3

Ori. I am, like a wise, comely, my mistress wears her own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. I am red retourné à son propre renommement, et la frise telle au bourbier: you make use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress; or any such work, so little kin to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constable, the armor, that I saw in your tent yesterday, are those stars, or sons, upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfluously.

Con. Even as your horse bears your prances; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismounted.

Dau. 'Would I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day! I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: But I would it were morning, for I would him be about the ears of the English.

Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty English lances?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight; I'll go arm myself. [Exe. Ori. The day is four hours for morning.

Ram. He longs to eat the English.

Con. I think, he will eat all he kills.

Ori. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.

Ori. He is, simply, the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity: and he will still be doing.

Ori. He never did harm, that I heard of.

Con. Nor will do none to-morrow; he will keep that good omen till to-morrow.

Ori. I know him to be valiant.

Con. I was told that by one who knows him better than you.

Dau. What of him? 4

Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said, he cared not who knew it.

Ori. He needs not, it is no hidden virtue in him.

Con. I'll call him fool, but it is; never any body saw it but his lackey: 'tis a hooved valor; and, when it appears, it will bite.5

2 Trowsers.

3 An equivocal in terms of falconry: he means his valor is hid from everybody but his lackey, and when it appears it will fall off.
Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord high constable, the English lie within seven hundred paces of your tent.

K. Hen. Who hath measured the ground?

Mess. The Lord Grandpre.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman,—

Mess. With a long bow, and through their idle flames Each battle sees the other's umber'd face; Steed threatens steed, in high and hoastful neighs Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents, The armorers, accommodating the knights, With busy hammers closing rivets up, Give dreadful note of preparation. The court scocks do crow, the clocks do toll, And the third hour of drowsy morning name, Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul, The confident and over-lusty French Do the low-rated English play at dice; And chide the cripple tardy-sailed night, Who, like a fool and ugly witch, doth limp Solaciously away. The poor condemned English, Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires Sit piteously, and pity residually. The morning's danger; and their gesture sad, Investing lank-lean cheeks, and war-worn coats, Present them unto the gazng moon: So many horrid ghosts. O, now, who will behold The royal captain of this rein'd band, Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent, Let him cry—Praise and glory on his head! For forth he goes and visits all the host; Bids them good-morrow, with a modest smile; And calls them—brothers, friends, and countrymen, Upon his royal face there is no note. How dread an army hath enrobed him; Nor doth he declare one jot of color Unto the weary and all-watch'd night; But firmly looks, and over-ears attention, With cheerful semblance and sweet majesty; That every wretch, prunig and pale before, Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks; A largess universal like the sun. His liberal eye doth give to every one, Thawing cold fear. Then, mean and gentle all, Behold, as many unworthiness define, A little touch of Harry in the night: And so our scene must to the battle fly: Where (O for pity!) we shall much disgrace—

Enter CHORUS.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time. When creepung murrain, and the poring dark, Fills the wide vessel of the universe. From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night. The hum of either army still sounds, That the fix'd sentinels almost receive The secret whispers of each other's watch: Firing with fires; and through their idle flames Each battle sees the other's umbr'ed face; Steed threatens steed, in high and hoastful neighs, Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents, The armorers, accommodating the knights, With busy hammers closing rivets up, Give dreadful note of preparation. Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armor, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

K. Hen. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

Orl. Foolish cure! that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples: You may as well say,—that's a valiant foal, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Then we shall find to-morrow—they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to think, what shall we do about it?

Orl. It is now two o'clock; but let me see,—by ten, We shall have each a hundred Englishmen.

Orl. They might do better at proving, by how much—A fool's bolt is soon shot.

Con. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

The name of Aincourt: Yet, sit and see;

Minding true things, by what their muckeries be.

SCENE I.—The English Camp at Aincourt.

Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloster.

K. Hen. Gloster, tis true, that we are in great danger;

The greater therefore should our courage be.

Good-morrow, brother Bedford; God Almighty! There is some soul of goodness in things evil. Would men observingly distil it out; For our sad neighbor makes us early stirring, Which is both healthful and good business; Besides, they are our outward consciences. And preachers to us all; admonishing, That we should dress us fairly for our end, Thus may we gather honey from the weed, And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter Eperingham.

Good-morrow, old sir Thomas Eperingham: A good soft pillow for that good white head Were better than a churchful turf of France.

Epr. Yet so, my liege; this lodging likes me better. Since I may say—now he li a king.

K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present place. Upon example; so the spirit is cased. And, when the mind is quick'en, out of doubt, The organs, though defunct and dead before, Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move With casted slough and fresh leciency. Lead me thy clack, sir Thomas.—Brothers both, Recommend me to the princes in our camp; Do my goodbye and farewell to them, and anon, Desire them all to my pavilion.

Epr. We shall, my liege.

[Exeunt Gloster and Bedford]

K. Hen. Shall I attend your grace?

Epr. Yes, if you will. [Exeunt]

Enter PISTOL.

Pist. Qui va là?

K. Hen. A friend.

8 Calling to remembrance.

9 Which is the skin which serpents annually throw off.

10 Lightness, nimbleness.
Pist. Dispute among us: Art thou officer?

Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trailest thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so: What are you?

Pist. A good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.

Pist. The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame.

K. Hen. The king is in good, of list most valiant:
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from my heart-string
I love the lovely bully. What's thy name?

K. Hen. Look here, what's thy name?

Pist. Le Roy'. A Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Then must thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate,
Upon saint David's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your daggers in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinman too.

Pist. The face for thee then!

K. Hen. I thank you: God be with you.

Pist. My name is Pistoll called. [Exit.

K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter FLEUILLER and GOWER, severally.

Gower. Captain Fluellen!

Pist. What name of Cheshu Christ, speak lower.

It is the greatest adumbration, in the universal 'ord, when the true and ancient prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept: if you would take the war, but to examine the wars of Pompey, the Great, you shall find. I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle, or puddle pabble, in Pompey's camp, I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars and the care of it, and the forms of it, and the subterfice of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gower. Why, the enemy is loud; you heard him all night.

Fluellen. If the enemy is an ass and a fool, and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb; in your own conscience now?

Gower. I will speak lower.

Fluellen. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will.

[Exit Gower and FLEUILLER.

K. Hen. Thou dost appear to be a man of fashion, There is much care and valor in this Welshman.

Enter BATES, COURT, and WILLIAM.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I take it to: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

K. Hen. I wonder the beginning of the day, but, I think, we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

Will. A good old commander, and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. He thinks we are men wroth with a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Hen. Nor it is not meet he should. For, thou say'st, he patterns me: I think, the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him, as it doth to me; the element shows to him, as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions; his eye, the smartness in his weakness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing; therefore, when he sees reason of fear, of ourselves, of our men, we should be of some relish as ours are: Yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

K. Hen. What do you say here, sir?

Fluellen. But every coward courage he will: but, I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in the Thames up to the neck: and so I would he, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quite here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think, he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then, 'twere he were here alone; so should he not be more to be ransom'd, and a many poor men's lives saved.

K. Hen. I dare say, you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone; howsoever you speak this, to show other men. I think you wish him any where so contented as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honorable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. A great nother would we could seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects; if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

K. Hen. At the same time be not the case, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make; when all those legs, and arms, and heads, chopp'd off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all,—We died at such a place; some swear, some, crying; some, for a surgeon; some, upon their wives left poor behind them; some, upon the debts they owe; some, upon their children rawly² let. I am assured there are few the well, that die in battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument! Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; when they to disobey, were against all proportion of subjection.

K. Hen. So, it a son that is by his father sent about merchandise, to sinfully marcy upon the sea, the universe of his reckoning, such a matter, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assaulted by robbers, and he in making his escape, and unexpected, be killed, what the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation:—But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the king is not now his servant: for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitration of swords, can try it out with all unsported soldiers. Some, peradventure, have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bul-wark, that have before cored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have dealt the law, and outrun native punishment, the king's majesty, and order of his boot, they may dispose of them as they please; if they deal by God's law, they may dispose of them as they please. I am awestruck at the number of the soldiers, the men who have borne arms, or been borne away; and where they would be safe, they perish: Then if they die unpardoned, no more is the king guilty of their damnation, than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gain'd; and, in him that escapes, it may be, he may think that making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill is upon his own head, the king is not to answer for it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. I myself heard the king say, he would not be ransom'd.

Will. As I would so, to make us fight cheerfully; but when our throats are cut, he may be ransom'd, and we ne'er the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. 'Mass, you'll pay him then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder gun, that a poor and private displeasure can do against a monarch! You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice, with fanning in his face with a peacock’s feather. You’ll never trust his word after! come, ’tis a foolish saying.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too round; I should be angry with you if the time were convenient.
Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.
K. Hen. I embrace it.
Will. How shall I know thee again?
K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou dar’st acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.
Will. Thither’s glove; give me another of thine.
K. Hen. There.
Will. This I will also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, This is my glove, by this hand, I will take thee a box on the car.
K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.
Will. Thou dar’st us well be hanged.
K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king’s company.
Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.
Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends; we have French quarrels enough, if you could tell how to reckon.
K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us; or they bear them on their shoulders: but it is an English trick to cut French crowns; and, to-morrow, the king himself will be a clipper. [Exeunt Soldiers.
Upon the king! let us live, our souls,
Our debts, our careful wives, our children,
And our sins, lay on the king;—we must bear all.
O hard condition! twin born with greatness,
Subjected to the breath of every fool,
Whose sense no more can feel but his own wring-
ing!
What infinite heart’s ease must kings neglect,
That wise men enjoy!
And what have kings, that private have not too,
Save ceremony, save general ceremony!
And what art thou, thou idle ceremony!
What kind of god art thou, that suffest more
Of mortal grieves, than do thy worshippers?
What art thy rents? what are thy comings-in?
O ceremony, show me but thy worth.
What is the soul of adoration?
Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men?
Wherein thou art less happy being feared
Than in they fearing.
What drink’st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,
But poison’d slaty? O, be sick, great greatness,
And why ceremony give they the cure?
Thinkst thou, the very liver will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to texture and low bending?
Canst thou, when thou command’st the beggar’s knee,
Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream,
That play’st so subtly with a king’s repose;
I am a king, that find thee; and I know,
’Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The inter-tissued robe of gold and pearl,
That have enjoyed, lord the king.
The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp
That beats upon the high shore of this world,
No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,
Not all these, laid in head majestical.
Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave;
Who, with a body full, and vacant mind,
Can ruminate with distrestful bread;
Never sees horrid night, the child of hell;
But, like a lackey, from the rise to set,
Sweats in the eyes of Phoebus, and all night,
Sleeps not in Elysium; nor doth rise
Doth rise, and help Hyperion to his horse;
And follows so the ever-running year
With profitable toil, to his grave:
And thus from birth to age, such a stretch,
Winding up days with toil, and nights with sleep,
Had the face-hard, and vantage of a king.
The slave, a member of the country’s peace,

Enjoy it; but in gross brain little wails,
What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter ERINGHAM.
Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,
Seek through your camp to find you.
K. Hen. [Exit]
Erp. I shall not, my lord. [Exit
K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldier’s hearts!
Possess them not with fear; take from them now
The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them!—Not to-day, O Lord,
O not to-day, think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown!
I Richard’s body have interred now:
And on it have bestow’d more contrite tears,
Than from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a day their wither’d hands hold up
Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two chapels, where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still my father’s soul: more will I do:
Though all that I can do, is nothing worth:
Since that my peniteince comes after all,
Imploiring pardon.

Enter GLOSTER.
Glo. My liege?
K. Hen. My brother Gloster’s voice!—Ay;
I know thy errand. I will go with thee:—
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me.

Enter DACPHY, ORLEANS, RAMBURES, and others.
Orli. The sun doth gild our armor; up, my lords.
Dau. Monziez a cheval!—My horse! valet! lac-te!—
Orli. O brave spirit!—
Dau. Voulez vous—les eaux et la terre—
Orli. Bien puis-je?—l’a se et le sole—
Dau. Cet! rousin Orleans.—

Enter CONSTABLE.
Now, my lord constable!
Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh.
Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their feet.
Orli. Their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And don’t they with superfluous courage: Ha!
Rum. What, will you have them weep our horses?
How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter a Messenger.
Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.
Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!
Do but behold you poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men,
There not work ur soul’s.
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins,
To give each naked cutlet-caxe a stain,
That our French gallants shall may draw out,
And sate for lack of sport: let us but blow on them.
The vapor of our valor will o’erturn them.
’Tis positive against all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys, and our peasants—
Who, in unnecessary action, swarm
About our squares of battle,—were enough to prove this field of such a battle-line here;
Though we, upon this mountain’s basis by,
Took stand for idle speculation:
—but our honors must not.
What’s to say?
Very little of this we do,
And all is done.
Then let the trumpet sound
The tucket-monendance, and the note to mount;
For our approach shall so much dare the field,
That England shall couch down in fear, and yield.

Enter GRANPpE.

Gr. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
You island carriages, desperate of their horses,
Dread that, to-day by your heads, to-morrow;
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully.
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar's retreat,
And blantly through a rasty beaver peeps.
Their horses sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jade
Lod down their heads, dropping the hides and hips;
The gun down-roping from their pale-dead eyes;
And in their pale dull mouths, the gimlet-bit
Lies soul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them all, impatient for their hour.

Description cannot suit itself in words,
To demonstrate the life of such a battle
In life and death as it played itself.

Cn. They have said their prayers, and they stay
For death.

Dau. Shall we go send them dinner, and fresh
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?

Cn. I stay but for my guard; on, to the field!
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The English Camp.

Enter the English Host; GLOSTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, SALISBURY, and WESTMORELAND.

Gr. Where is the king?

Exe. This day he cries aloud, "Gloster! gloster!"
To view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full three-score thousand.

Exe. There's five to one: besides, they all are fresh.

Sat. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.

God be wi' you, princes all; I'll go to my charge:

If we no more meet, till we meet in heaven,
Then let it be my noble Lord of Bedford,—
My dear lord gloster,—and my good Lord Exeter,—
And my kind kinsman,—warriors all, advice!
Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with you.

Exe. Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
And yet I do thee wrong, to mind thee of it,
For thou art framed of the firm truth of valor.

[Enter SALISBURY.

Bed. He is as full of valor as of kindness:
Princely in both.

West. O that we now had here

Enter KING HENRY.

But one tenth thousand of those men in England,
That do no work to-day!

K. Hen. What's he that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland!—No, my fair cousin!
If we are mark'd to die, we are enough
To do our country's loss; and if to live,
The fewer men, the more to do honor.
God will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold;
Nor care I, who doth feed upon my cost;
It earnestly, not, if men my carriages wear:
Such outer things dwell not in my desires:
But, if it be a sin to covet honor,
I am the most offending soul alive.
Not that I disdain to wear a crown from England:
God's peace! I would not lose so great an honor,
As one man more, methinks, would share from me.
For the best hope I have, O, do not wish one more:
Rather grew him, Westmoreland, through my host.

That he, which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convey, put into his purse:
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us.

This day is called—the feast of Crispian:
He, that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is named,
And rise the most valiant hero in the name of Crispian:
He, that shall live this day, and sees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his friends,
And say—'tis-morrow is Saint Crispian:
Then will he strip his body baret,
And show his scars, and say these wounds I had on Crispian's day.
Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he'll remember, with advantages,
What feats he did that day: Then shall our names
Familiar in their mouths as household words,—
Hurry the king, Bedford, and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloster,—
In their shoes is the living present; and remember'd:
This story shall the good man teach his son;
And Crispian Crispian shall ne'er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remembered:
We wew, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he, to-day, that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; he he ne'er so vile,
This day's strat'gy gentle his condition:
And gentlemen in England, now a-bed,
Shall think themselves accurs'd if they were not here;
And hold their handsmocks cheap, while any speaks
That fought with us upon Saint Crispian's day.

Enter SALISBURY.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:
The French are bravely in their battle set,
And will with all expedition charge on us.

K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England, cousin?
West. God's will, my hege, 'would you and I alone,
Without more help, might fight this battle out!
K. Hen. Why, have you now but unwish'd five thousand
Which likes me better, than to wish us one—
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tuckel. Enter MONTAIG.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, king
K. Hen. What hast sent thee now?
Mont. The constable of France.

K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer back;
Bid them achieve me, and then sell my bones.

Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?
The man, that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast ly'd, was kill'd with hunting him.
A many of our bodies shall, without a day's stay,
Find native graves; upon the which, I trust,
Shall witness live in brass of this day's work;
And those that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dunes;
They shall be fame'd; nor there the sun shall greet them.

And draw their lances reeking up to heaven;
Let them, without ceremony, shake their elms,
The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.
Mark then a bounding valor in our English;
That, being dead, like to the bull's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief;
Killing in relapse of mortality.
Let me speak proudly;—Tell the constable,
We are but warriors for the working-day;
Our gaiety, and our pride, are out of our head.
With rainy marching in the painful field:

63. 6 i. e. This day shall advance him to the rank of a gentleman.
63. 6 Remind. 63. 6 Gilding. 63. 6 Soiled.
There’s not a piece of feather in our host, (Good argument, I hope, we shall not fly.) And time hath worn us into snovery: But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim: And my poor soldiers tell me—yet ere night They’ll be in fresher robes: or they will pluck The gay new coats o’er the French soldiers’ heads. And turn them out of service. If they do this, (As, if God please, they shall,) my ransom then Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labor; Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald; Thou canst not pluck a law but these my points Which if they have as I will leave ‘em to them, Shall yield them little, tell the constable. Mont. I shall, king Harry. And so fare thee well: Thou hast traded to hear more. [Exit. K. Hen. I fear, thou’lt once more come again for ransom.

Enter the DUKE OF YORK.

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg the heading of the Howard?

K. Hen. Take it, brave York.—Now, soldiers, march away:— And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day! [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Field of Battle.

Pist. Quality, call you me!—Construe me, art thou a gentleman? What is thy name? discuss. Fr. Sol. O Seigneur Dieu! Pistolet ou traite, monsieur应当 be a gentleman:— Perpend my words, O signeur Dew, and mark: O signeur Dew, thou diest on point of fox, except, O signeur, thou give to me Exousious ransom. Fr. Sol. O, prenez misericorde! assez petit de moy. Pist. Moy shall not serve, I will have forty mous; For I will fetch thy rim out of thy throat, In drops of crimson blood. Fr. Sol. Est-il impossible d’eschapper le force de ton brus.

Pist. Brass, cur! Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat, Offerst me brass! Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moy!

Pist. Sir, yield so me thou so is that a ton of mous?— Come hither, boy; Ask me this slave in French, What is his name. Boy. Ecoutez! Comment estes vous appeles? Fr. Sol. Monsieur le Fer. Boy. He says his name is—master Fer. Pist. Master Fer, I’ll fer him, and fire him, and ferret him—discuss the same in French unto him. Boy. I do not know the French fer, nor ferret, and ferret, and fire.

Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat. Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, Monsieur?

Pist. Il me commande de vous dire que vous rentez vos prest, car ce soldat lez est disposte toute heure de couper votre gerge. Pist. Qui, couper gerge, par ma foi, jespéant. Une, thou givest me the crowns, brave crowns; Or mangled shalt thou be by this my sword. Fr. Sol. O, je vous supples pour l’amour de Dieu, me pardonnez! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maine, guerres ma vie, et je vous donneray deux cents escus.

Pist. What are his words?

Boy. He prayes you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house; and for his ransom, he will give you two hundred crowns.

Pist. Tell him,—my fury shall abate, and I The crowns will I take.

Fr. Sol. Petit maistre, que dit-il?

Boy. Even que l’il est contre son jurement, de preterer aucun prisonnier; meantouz, pour les corps, qu’ils ayez feur; promis, il est content de vous donner la libertie, le jurement.

Fr. Sol. Sur mes genoux, je vous donne mille remerciements: et je n’estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d’un chevalier, je pense, le plus courageux, et très distingué seigneur d’Angleterre.

Pist. Expound unto me, Boy.

Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks, that he did himself die; inly he hath fallen into the hands of (as he thinks) the most brave, valorous, and three-worthy signeur of England.

Fr. Sol. As I suck blood, I will some mercy show.— Follow me, cur. [Exit Pistol. Boy. Suivez vous le grant capitaine. [Exit French Soldier.]

I did never know so full a voice issued from an empty heart: but the saying is true,—The empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Bardolph, and Nym, had ten times more valor than this roaring devil Pike old play, that every one may rave heads with a wooden dagger; and they are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously. I must stay with the lackeys, with the lugubruce of our camp: the French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it; for there is none to guard it but boys. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field of Battle.

Alarums. Enter DAUPHIN, ORLEANS, BOURBON, CONSTABLE, RAMBOURS, and others.

Con. O diable! Ort. O Seigneur!—le jour est perdu, tout est perdu.

Dum. M’sieu ma vie!—tous est confonne, all! Reproach and everlasting shame Sits mocking in our plumes.—On seek this fortune! [A short Alarum. Ort. Why all our ranks are broke, Diane. O perdurable! shame!—let’s stab ourselves. Be these the wretches that we played at dice for! Ort. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom! Bour. Shame, Diablerie, and eternal shame, nothing but shame! Let us die instant: Once more back again; And he that will not follow Bourbon now, Let him go hence, and, with his cap in hand, Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door, Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog, His base quarreller is contaminates. Con. Disorder, that hath spilt us, friend now! Let us, in heaps, go offer up our lives Unto these English, or else die with fame. Ort. We are enough, yet living in the field, To another English in our throng, If any order might be thought upon. Bour. The devil take order now; I’ll to the throng; Let life be short; rise, shame will be too long. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter KING HENRY, and Forces; Exeunt, and others.

K. Hen. Well have we done, three valiant countrymen; But all’s not done, yet keep the French the field. Exe. The duke of York commends to your highness, K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle! thrive, within this hour, I saw him down; thrice up again, and fighting; From mount to mount, all blood he was. Exe. In which array, (brave soldier,) doth he lie, Larding the plain: and by his bloody side, (Yoke-fellow to his honor-owing wounds,) The noblest of Suffolk also lies there. Suffolk first died: and York, all haggled over, Comes to him, where in gore he lay steed’d, And takes him by the beard; kisses the gashes, That had so did wound upon his father’s war, And cries aloud.—Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk! My soul shall thine keep company to heaven; That soul so sweet, for mine, then fly o’er earths; As, in this glorious and well-fighten field, We keep together in our charity! Upon these words I came, and chever’d him up: He would me in the face, raught me his hand, [Lasting. *t. e. Who has no more gentry. * Reached
And, with a beele grape, says,—Dear my lord, Command my service to my sovereign. So did he turn, and over Soutlook's neck He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips; And so consum'd to death, with blood he seal'd A testament of noble-ending love. The pretty and sweet manner of it forced Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd; But I was not so much of it, as much as But all my mother came into mine eyes, And gave me up to tears. K. Hen. I blame you not; For, hearing this, I must perform a promise With mischief eyes, or they will issue too.— [Alarum.]

But, hark! what new alarum is this same? The French have reinforcement their scatter'd men; Then every soldier kill his prisoner; Give the word through. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter Fluellen and Exeunt.

Flu. Kill the pays and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the laws of arms: his as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you mark, now as, can be haid in the 'orld: in your conscience now, is it not! Goe. 'Tis certain, there's not a boy left alive; and that we truely raiseth, that the little, have done this slaughter: besides, they have burnit, and carried away all that was in the king's tent: wherefore the king, most worthy, hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O, 'tis a gallant king! Flu. Ay, he was born at Monmouth, captain Gower. What call you the town's name, where Alexander the pig was born? Goe. Alexander the great.

Flu. Why, pray you, is not pig great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, of the many one reckoning, shape a phrase a little variations.

Goe. I think, Alexander the great was born in Macedon; his father was called—Philip of Macedon; as I take it.

Flu. I think it is in Macedon, where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain,—if you look in the maps of the 'orld: I warrant, you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon; and there is also moreover a river in Monmouth; it is called Wy, at Monmouth; but it is out of my way to present what is the name of the other river; but 'tis one, 'tis like as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. You mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is none after indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander, (God knows, and you know,) in his rages, and his furies, and his o'time stirs, and his choler, and his moods, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little inordinate in his pains, did, in his ales and his angers, look out, his kindest, Clytus. Goe. Our king is not like him in that; he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take takes out of my mouth, ere it is made an end and finished, I speak but in the figures and comparisions of it: As Alexander is kill his friend Clytus, being in his ales and his cups; so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, is turn away the fat knight with the great pelly-doubt; he was full of jests, and mopes, and knaves, and nacks: I am forget his name.

Goe. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. Thus: I can tell you there is good men born at Monmouth. Goe. Here comes his majesty. Alarum. Enter King Henry, with a part of the English Forces; Warwick, Gloster, Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France Until this instant.—Take a trumped, herold; Ride thou into the horsemen on yon hill; If they will fight with us, but them down, Or with the field; they do offend our sight: If they'll do neither, we will come to them; And make them skirn's away as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assuran sages: Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have; And not a man of them, that we shall take, Shall taste our mercy.—Go, and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Exe. Here comes the Herald of the French, my lord. Goe. His eyes are humbler than they used to be. K. Hen. How now, what means this, herald? Exe. know'st thou not, That I have lined these bones of mine for ransome? Com'st thou again for ransom? Mont. No, great king: I come to thee for charitable licence. That we may wander o'er this bloody field, To book our dead, and then to bury them; To sort our nobles from our common men; For many of our princes (worse the while) Lie drown'd and sash'd in mercenary blood; (So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs In blood of princes) and their wounded steeds Fret jetlock deep in gore, and, with wild rage, Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters, Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king, To view the field in safety, and dispose Of their dead bodies.

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald, I know not, if the day be ours; or no; For yet a many of your horsemen per, And gaplock o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours. K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength for— What is this castle call'd, that stands hard by? Mont. They call it—Agincourt. K. Hen. Then call we this—the field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Cristo Crompanus. Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great uncle Edward, the plack prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought many a victory battle here in France. K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: If your majesty is remember'd of it, the Welshmen did gout service in a garden where hicks did grow, wearing lecks in their Monmouth caps; which your majesty knows to this hour, is an honourable Note of the service, and, I do believe, your majesty takes no scorn to show the deck up so early one day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honor: For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman. Flu. All the water in Wy cannot wash your majesty's Western face; there's no lack of yon, I can tell you that: Gest pless it and preserve it, as long as it praises his grace, and his majesty too.

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman. By Go, by thee, captain; but as your countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the 'orld: I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praise had be, Go; so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so—our heralds go with him. Bring me just notice of the numbers dead (On both our parts.—Call vender fellow sober.) [Points to Williams. Exeunt Montjoy, and others.]

Exe. Soldier, you must come to the king. K. Hen. Soldier, why wear'st thou that glove in thy cap? Will. An't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive. K. Hen. An Englishman! Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal, that swagger'd with me last night; who, if a live, and not ever dare bold a fellow above, I have sworn to take him a box of the ear; or, if I can see my hand in his cap, (which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear, it alive,) I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you captain Fluellen is it fit this soldier keep his oath! Flu. He is a craven1 and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience. K. Hen. It may be, his enemy is a gentleman of great sort,2 quite from the answer of his degree. 1Scour. 2Coward. 3High rank.
But though he be as gentle a gentleman as the devil is, as Lucifer and Beelzebub himself, it is necessary, take your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is so plain, and a Jack-arsa’s as ever his plack shoe trod upon God’s ground and his earth, in my conscience, fa.

K. Hen. The keep thy vow, sirrah; when thou meet’st the fellow.

Will. So will I, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under!

Will. Under captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain; and is good knowledge and literature in the wars.

K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I’ll call him, sir. [Exit.]

K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear this favor for me, and stick it in thy cap: When Alencon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his hand: if any man challenge this, this is a friend to Alencon, and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost love me.

Flu. Your grace does me as great honors as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects; I would run see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove, that is all; but I would fain see it once, an please God of his grace, that I might see it.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower!

Flu. He is my near friend, an please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him.

K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick,—and my brother Gloster,

Follow Fluellen closely at the heels;
The glove, which I have given him for a favor, May, impure, purchase him a box of your ear: It is the soldier’s; I, by bargain, should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick; If that the soldier strike him, (as, I judge By honest bearing, he will keep his word,) Some sudden mischief may arise of it;
For I do know Fluellen valiant, And, touch’d with choler, hot as gunpowder, And quickly will return an injury: Follow, and see there be no harm between them.— Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Before King Henry’s Pavilion.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Williams, it is to knight you, captain.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Gower’s will and his pleasure, captain, I perceive you now, come apace to the king: there is more good toward you, and development, than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?

Flu. Know the glove! I know the glove is a glove.

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it.

Flu. Shun, an arrant traitor, as we’re in the universal lord, or in France, or in England.

Gower. How now, sir! you villain! What do you think I’ll be far-sown?

Flu. Stand away, captain Gower; I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That’s a lie, thy throat;—I charge you, in his majesty’s name, apprehend him; he’s a friend of the duke Alencon.

Enter Warwick and Gloster.

War. How now! how now! what’s the matter?

Gloster. My lord of Warwick, here is (praises he Got for it) the most contagious disputation, I come to light, look you, as you should desire in a summer’s day. Here is his majesty.

Enter King Henry and Exeter.

K. Hen. How now, how’s the matter?

Ex. Here, my lord, here is a villain and a traitor, that, you look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alencon.

Will. My leg, this was my glove: here is the fellow of it: and he, that I gave it to in change, promised to wear it in his epy; I promised to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty, hear now, (saving your majesty’s permission) a bond that an arrant, as ever his plack shoe trod upon God’s ground and his earth, in my conscience, fa.

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier; Look, here is the fellow of it: ? Was I, indeed, thou promisedst to strike; and thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. It is thine, your grace; and my majesty, I have an answer for it, if there is any martial law in the order.

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All omissions, my liege, come from the heart; never can see any from hence, that might offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse.

Flu. I could not come to take like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witnesses the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you, take it for your own fault, and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no omission; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with the trifle.

And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, fellow; And wear it for an honor in thy cap, Till I do challenge it.—Give him the crowns;— And let him of the best needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his pelly;—Hold, there is twelve pence for you, and I pray you to serve God, and keep your peace; if you be not, pray God peace, and quarrels and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the better for you.

Will. I will none of your money.

Flu. It is with a good will; I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes; Come, wherefore should you be so pushish! your shoes is not so good: 'tis a good sifting, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter an English Herald.

K. Hen. Now, herald; are the dead number’d!

Her. Here is the number of the slaughter’d French.

K. Hen. The prisoners of both parties are taken, uncle!

Exe. Charles duke of Orleans, nephew to the king.

John duke of Bourbon, and lord Bourgulaît;
Of other lords, and barons, knights, and squires,
Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

K. Hen. He that doth tell me of ten thousand French,

That in the field lie slain: of princes in this number,
And nobles bearing banners, they lie dead,
One hundred twenty-five hundred added to the list.

Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen,
Eight thousand and four hundred: of the which,
Five hundred were but yesterday didst’khy’d:
So that, in these ten thousand they have lost,
There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries;
The rest are—princes, barons, lords, knights, squares,
And gentlemen of blood and quality.
The names of those thier nobles that lie dead,— Charles De-la-bret, high constable of France; Jacques de Chattillon, admiral of France; The marquess of Breslau, of meshoes, lew squires; Great-master of France, the brave sir Guiscard Duqupin; John duke of Alencon; Antony duke of Brabant,
The brother to the duke of Burgundy; And Edward duke of Bar; of insty earls, Grandpré, and Roussi, Faneobuck, and Fox, Beaumont, and Marie, Vaudemont, and Lestale; Here was a royal fellowship of dead,
Where is the number of our English dead?

[Enter Herald presents another paper.]

Edward the duke of York, the earl of Solloule,
Sir Richard Ketley, Denny Gam, and
None else of name: and, of all other men,
Bet five-and-twenty. 0 God, thy arm was here,
And not to us, but to thy arm alone.

Asse we all.—When, without strangling,
But in plain shock and even play of battle,
ACT V.

Enter CHORUS.

Chor. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,
That I may prompt them: and of such as have, I humbly pray them to admit the excuse
Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life
He here presented. Now we bear the king
Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts,
Athwart the sea: Behold, the English beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys,
Whose shouts and claps out-vocet the deep-mouth'd
Which, like a mighty whiffer*d spore the king,
Seems to prepare his way: so let him land;
And, solemnly, see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath thought, that even now
You may imagine him upon Blackheath:
Where that his lords desire him, to have* borne
His bruised helmet, and his bended sword.
Before him, through the city: he forbids it,
Being free from vanities and self-glorious pride;
Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent,
Quite from himself, to God. But you behold,
In this his action, a working-house of thought:
How London doth pour her citizens!
The mayor, and all his brethren, in best sort,— Lilliput's back return again to France.
With the plebeans swarming at their heels—
Go forth, and let their conquering Caesar in:
As, by a lower but by loving likelihood;*
Were now the general of our gracious empress?—
(As, in good time, he may) from Ireland coming.
Bringing rebellion broached* on his sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him! much more, and much more cause.

Did they this Harry. Now in London place him;
(As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the king of England's stay at home:
The emperor's coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them;) and omit
All the occurrences, whatever chanced,
Tell Harry's back-return again to France;
There must we bring him; and myself have play'd
The interim, by remembering you—this part,
Then brook abridgment; and your eyes advance
After your thoughts, straight back again to France.
[Exit.

SCENE I.—France. An English Court of Guard.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint David's day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things; I will tell you, as my friend Captain Gower. The rascally, scald, bawdy, leonine, pragging knave, Pistol,—which you and yourself, and all the world, know to be no better than a fillow, look you now, of no merits—he is come to me, and brings me pease and salt yesterday, look you, and put me eat my leek: it was in a place where I could not breed no contem- tions with him; but I will be sobold as to wear in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

*An officer who walks first in processions.
†i.e. To order it to be borne.
‡Similitude.
§The earl of Essex in the reign of Elizabeth.
¶Spilted, transfixed.

Enter Pistol.

K. Hen. Yes, captain, but with this acknowledgement, That God taught for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites?

Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum, The dead with charity enclos'd in clay.
We'll then to Calais: and to England then;
When ne'er from France arrived more happy men.

[Exeunt.

K. Hen. Yes, captain, but with this acknowledgement, That God taught for us.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his turkey-cocks,—Got pless you, ancient Pistol! you scurdy, leonine, Pistol! you scurry! you scurvy, leonine, scurvy, scurvy, Pistol! you scurry! you scurvy, scurvy, Pistol! you scurry! you scurvy, scurvy, Pistol! you scurry!

Flu. Ha! art thou Bedlam? dost thou think, base Trojan.
To have me told up Parca's fatal web?

Flu. I perceive you heartily, scurvy, leonine, knife, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek; because, look you, you do not love nor nourish your actions, and your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Flu. Not for Cadwallader and all his goats.

Flu. There is one soul for you. [Strikes him.] Will be so good, scald knife, as eat it?

Flu. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say very true, scald knife, when God's will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your vitals; come, there is sauce for it. [Strikes him again.] You called me yesterday, mountain-squire; but I will make you to-day a square of low degree. I pray you, all to; if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Flu. Enough, captain: you have astonished him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will best his gale four days.—Pist, I pray you; it is good for your green wound, and your bloody coxcomb.

Flu. Must Iathe?

Flu. Yes, certainly; and out of doubt, and out of questions too, and ambiguities.

Flu. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge; I eat, and eke I swear.

Flu. Eat, and eke I swear. Will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Flu. Quiet thy endage: thou dost see, I eat.

Flu. Such good do you, scald knife, heartily.

Flu. Nay, 'pray you, throw none away; the skin is good for your proked coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hercæfer, I pray you mock at them; that is all.

Flu. Good.

Flu. Ax, leeks is good—Hold you, there is a great to heat your pale.

Flu. Me a great!

Flu. Yes, verily, and in truth you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Flu. T think it great, and amazeth me.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in endages; you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but endages. God be wi'you, and keep you, and heal your pale.

Flu. All hell shall star for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition,—began upon an honorable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of deceased valor,—and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and gailing at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English endage: you find it otherwise; and henceforth, let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.
You are assembled; and my speech entreats,
That I may know the let,* why gentle peace
Should expec. these inconveniences,
And bless us with her former qualities.
K. Hen. If, duke of Burgundy, you would the peace,
Whose science gives growth to the imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenors and particular effects
You have, consider briefly, in your hands.
Bar. The king had them; to which, it the
as yet,
There is no answer made.
K. Hen. Well then, the peace,
Which you before so urged, lies in his answer
Fr. King. I have but with a cursorv eye
Over the articles: pleased with what you
To appoint some of your council presently to sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-examine, we will, suddenly,
Pass our accept, and peremptory answer.
K. Hen. Brother, we shall,—Go, uncle Exeter,—
And brother Clarence,—and you, brother Gloster,
Warwick,—and Huntingdon,—go with the king:
And take with you free power to ratify
Agreement, or alter, as your wisdoms best
See shall advantageous for our dignity,
Any thing in, or out of, our demands.
And will consult beto.—Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us?
Q. Iss. Our gracious brother, I will go with them;
Hen. I will not. He may do what place
When articles, too nicely urged, be stood on.
K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here
With us;
She is our capital demand, comprised
Within the fore-rank of our articles.
Q. Iss. She hath good leave.
Exeunt all but HENRY, KATHARINE, and her Gentlewoman.
K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair!
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms,
Such as well at a lady's ear.
And put your love-vow to her gentle heart!
Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.
K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?
Kath. Pas bonne vue, j'aimotetut vaist—likeem. K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate; and you are like an angel.
Kath. Que dit-il que je suis semblable à tes angels?
Alice. Ouy, fragment, (sont votre grace,) ainsi dit-il.
K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not have him.
Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines des tromperies.
K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the terrors of men are full of deceits.
Alice. Ouy; dat de longues de de maus is be full of deceits; dat is de princes.
K. Hen. The princess is the better Englishwoman.
Earth, Kate, my wandering is fit for thy understanding: I am glad, thou canst speak no better English; for, if thou couldst, thou wouldst
find me such a plain king, that thou couldst think
I hath no need to buy thy crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say—I love
you then, if thou urge me further than to say—Do you love me? and, I wear out my suit. Give me thy answer; Kate, do, and so clap hands and a bagman: How say you, lady?
Kath. Sont vosvre honoher, me understand well.
K. Hen. The princess is the better Englishwoman.
Dum, Kate, my wandering is fit for thy understanding: I am glad, thou canst speak no
better English; for, if thou couldst, thou wouldst
find me such a plain king, that thou couldst think
I hath no need to buy thy crown. I know no
ways to mince it in love, but directly to say—I love
you then, if thou urge me further than to say—Do
you love me? and, I wear out my suit. Give me thy answer; Kate, do, and so clap hands and a

thine; come will never cannot shall love for a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose thee is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there, let thine eye be thy court, never breathe of it, and should hold me love me for this, take me: if not to say—that I shall de, is true; but—for thy love, by the Lord, I am too too, and while thou live, dear Kate, take a fellow-man in my thoughts, and thy life an ed2 constancy; for he perchance must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to win others in places; for all that love to talk, that they may rhyme themselves into ladies' favors—they canst not be reasonable, and reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black be will; a curled gate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow; but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and moon; or rather the sun, and not the moon; for it shines bright, and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me: And take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king: And what sayes thou of my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I should love de enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible, you should love the enemy of France, Kate; but in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well, that I will not part with a village of it; I will have, Kate, Saint Denis be my mine, and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate! I will tell thee in French; which, I am sure, will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife upon her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off.

J'ai par la possession de France, et quand vous avez la possession de moi, vous pouvez voir, what then? Saint Denis be my speed!—donc vous est France, et vous est mine. It is as easy for me to conquer the kingdom, as to speak so much French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Suf, ma noble dame, le Francais que vous parlez, est meilleur que l'Anglais (bien que je parte). K. Hen. No, faith, is not, Kate: but in knowing my tongue, and I think, most truly, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, I will have thee understand thus much English: Canst thou love me?

kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbors tell, Kate? I'll let them tell. Let them tell at night when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will, to disperse those parts in me, that mean, resembling a plain mask of metal, which has not yet received any impression. *Fall away, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage. Now bestowed my Father's ambition: he was thinking of civil wars when he got me; therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I courted of yours, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appear: my comfort is, the old age, which ill-lay of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face, than I dost thee, at the worst; and thou shalt weare me, if thou weare me, better and better; and therefore tell me, most fair Katherine, will you have me? But off your maidenly blushes, and I'll do my courtship with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say—Harry of England, I am thine: which words thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud; England is thine, and France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music, and thy English broken: therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English, Wilt thou have me?

Kath. But is, as it shall please de ray mone.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him.

kath. Den it shall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I will kiss your hand, and I call yours—my queen.

Kath. Les dames, et demoiselles, pour lire autresbefore leur mope, il n'est pas la costume de France.

K. Hen. Madam my interpreter, what says she?

Alice. Dat is not de be fashion pour lesdoyfes of France. I cannot tell what is better, en English. K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendre better que moy.

K. Hen. It is not the fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Ouay, fragment.

K. Hen. 0, Kate, nice customs, crafty to great Kings, Dear Kate, I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows from hence, is as broad as the mouths of all fand- talks; as I will do yours, for uprightness, for English fashion of your country, in denying me a kiss; therefore, patiently, and yielding. [Kissing her.]

kath. If you have won my love, you have won more than you seek. Your tendre, Kate, is more eloquence in a sugar touch, than, in the tongue of a French counsel; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England, than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your lord. Enter the French King and Queen. BURGUNDY. BURGUNDY. BEAUMARCHAIS, GUESTER, EVERT, MASTROBERT, and other French and English Lords.

Discover. God save your majesty! my royal cousin, touch you our princess English!

K. Hen. I would have her hear, my fair cousin, and that is good English. Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz; and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the noise nor the diction, that, with the better about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I do not suspect, when you would conjure in her, you must make a circle: if conjure up love in her, in his true likeness, he must appear naked, and blind: Can you blame her then, being a maid yet closed over with these egrets of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for maid to consent to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink, and yield; and love is blind, and endures. 2Slight barrier. 3Temper.
Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent to winking.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning; for maids, when summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral* ties me over to time, and a hot summer; and so I will catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so; and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness; who cannot see many a fair French city, for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girded with maiden walls, that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of, may wait on her: so the maid, that stood in the way of my will, shall show me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article: his daughter, first; and then, in sequel, all, according to their firm proposed natures.

Exc. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:—Where your majesty demands,—That the king of France having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition, in French,—Notre très cher filz

Henry, roy d'Angleterre hérédier de France: and thus in Latin,—Præclarissimus filius noster Henricus rex Angior, & frères Francie.

Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied, but your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Hen. I pray you, then, in love and dear alliance,

Let that one article rank with the rest:
And, thereupon, give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood raise up

*Application.

Issue to me: that the contending kingdoms
Of France and England, whose very shores look
With envy of each other's happiness,
May cease their hatred: and this dear conjunction Plant neighborhood and Christian-like accord
In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance
His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Now welcome, Kate;—and bear me witness all,
That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

Q. Inst. God, the best maker of all marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one!
As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spouse,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league:
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receive each other!—God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage:—on which day,
My lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath,
And all the peers, for surety of our leagues.—
Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me!
And may our oaths well kept and prospérous be!

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

Upon a wooden coffin we attend;
And death's dishonorable victory
Will our stately presence glorify.

Like captives bound to a triumphal car,
What? shall we curse the planets of mischance?

Or shall we think the subtle-witted French
Conjurors and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
By magic versus have contrived his end?

Wife. He was a king blest of the King of kings.

Unto the French the dreadful judgment-day
So dreadful will not be, as was his sight.
The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought:
The Church's prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church! where is it! Had not churchmen prayed?

His thread of life had not so soon decay'd:
None do you like but an effeminate prince,
Whom, like a school-boy, you may overawe.

Wife, Gloster, what'er we like, thou art protector;
And lookest to command the prince, and realm.
The wife in proud; she holdeth thee in awe.

More than God, or religious churchmen may.

1 There was a notion long prevalent, that life might be taken away by metrical charms
By three-and-twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon;
So that there had he his enmark of his death.
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof, sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground confusely,
To keep the horses off from his men in fight.
More than three hours the light continued;
Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.
Hundred thousand fell, and none durst stand him,
Here, there, and every where, enraged he slew:
The French exclaim'd the devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood aghast on him:
His soldiers, spying his undaunted form,
A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bawds of the battle.
Here they conceived the conquest fully been'd up,
If sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward;
He being in the yawning (placed behind
With purpose to relieve and follow them.)
Cowardly fed, not having struck one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre.
Enclosed were they with their enemies:
A base Wallon, to win the dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,
Durst not presume to look once in the face.
Talbot, is Talbot slain? then I will say myself,
For living idly here, in pomp and ease.
Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foes-man be betray'd.
I must go to, he lives; but is took prisoner,
And lord Sciles with him, and lord Hungerford;
Most of the rest slaughter'd, or took likewise.
Talbot's his ransom there is none but I shall pay;
I'll ha' the dauphins head and needful from the French;
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend;
Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.—
Farewell, my masters; to my task will I;
Bounties in France fortwith I am to make,
To keep our great saint George's feast withal:
Ten thousand soldier with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.
3 Mess. He had need; for Orleans is besieg'd;
The English army is grown weak and faint:
The Earl of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mischief:
France is revoluted from the English quite;
Except some petty towns of no import:
The dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rheims;
The bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Regnier, duke of Anjou, doth take his part;
The Duke of Alencon fleeth to his side.

Exe. The dauphin crowned king! all fly to him! O, whether shall we fly from this regnet?

Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' threats:
Belvoir, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.
Befster, why doubt'st thou of my forwardness?
An army have I musterd in my thoughts,
Wereith therefore already France is over-run.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My gracious lords,—to add to your la-
ments,
Wherein you now bedew king Henry's hearse,—
I must inform you of a dismal sight.
Betwixt the stout lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What! wherein Talbot overcome! is't so?

3 Mess. No, my wherein lord Talbot was overthrown:
The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.
The leath of Angoust lost, this dreadful lord,
Regnier fell in the siege of Orleans.
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,

Nurse was anciently so spelt.

2. e. Their miseries which have had only a short intermission.
Scene III.  KING HENRY VI.

And he may well in fretting spend his gall,
Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.

Char. Sound, sound alarum; we will rush on them.

Now for the honor of the forlorn French:
Hunt if I gave my death, that killeth me,
When he sees me go back one foot, or fly.

[Exeunt.

Alarum; Excursions; afterwards a Retreat.

Re-enter CHARLES, ALIGNON, REIGNER, and others.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I!—
Dogs! cowards! dastards!—I would never have held,
But that they left me 'midst their hungry war.

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
Fie lighteth as one weary of his life.
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alen. Froissard, a countryman of ours, records,
England all Oliver's and Rowland's bred,
During the time Edward the Third did reign.

More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Sansons, and Goliasse,
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!
Leon raw-bow'd, rauced! who would ever suppose
They had such courage and audacity!

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brained slaves.
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager;
Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down, then forsake the siege.
Reig. I think by some odd gimme's or device,
Their arrows play like clocks, still to strike on;
Else never could they hold out so, as they do.

By my consent, we'll even let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the prince dauphin? I have news for him.

Char. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.
Bast. Methinks, your looks are sad, your cheer appall'd;
Hath the late overthrow brought this offence?
Be not dismaz'd, for succor is at hand:
A holy maid hither with me I bring,
Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven,
Ordained to raise these tedious sieges,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,
Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome;
What can past, or what's to come, she can descry.
Speak, shall I call her? Believe my words;

Char. Go, call her in. [Exit Bastard. But, first,
Put on her mitre, put her robe of skill,
Reignier, stand thou as dauphin in my place;
Question her proudly, let thy looks be stern:
By this means shall we sound what skill she hath.

[Re-enter La Pucelle, Bastard of Orleans, and others.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wondrous feats?

Pue. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?
Where is the dauphin?—come, come from behind;
I know thee well, though never seen before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart:
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave a while.
Reig. Malevolent, so I hear. Pue. Dauphin,
I am by birth a shepherd's daughter,
My wit as bright in any kind of art,
Heaven, and our lady gracios, hath it pleas'd To shine on my contemplative estate;
Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lamb's,
And saw the bright red ray display'd my cheeks,
God's mother deigned to appease her to me;
And, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation,
And free my country from calamity:
Her aid she promised and assured success:
In complete glory she reveal'd herself;
And, whereas I was black and swart before, With three clear rays which she infused on me,
That beauty am I bless'd with, which you see.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated:
My courage by my looks, if thou dar'st,
And then shalt find that I exceed my sex.
Resolve on this? Thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou consent to try my wakile mate.
Char. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms;

Only this proof I'll of thy valor make,—
In single combat thou shalt buckler with me:
And, if thou vanquish'st, thy words are true;
Otherwise, I renounce all confidence.

Pue. I am prepared: here is my keen-edg'd sword,
Deck'd with the flower-de-luces on each side;
The which at Tournay, in saint Katharine's churchyard,
Out of a deal of old iron I chose forth.
Char. These arms, I warrant, are the sword of Deborah.

Pue. And, while I live, I'll ne'er fly from a man.

[They fight.

Char. Stay, stay thy hands; thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the sword of Deborah.

Pue. Christ's mother helps me, else I was too weak.

Char. Who'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must help thyself.
Impatiently I burn with thy desire;
My heart and hands thou hast at once subdued.
Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,
Let me thy servant, and not severen be;
'Tis the French dauphin suiteth to thee thus.

Pue. I must not yield to any rites of love,
For my profession's sacred from above;
When I have closed all thy foes and thine
Then will I think upon a recompense.

Char. Mean time, look gracious on thy prostrate foster.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

Alen. Doubtless he shrixes this woman to her snock;
Else never could she so long protract his speech.

Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?

Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do know.

These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on?
Shall we go over Orleans, or no?

Pue. What? no, I say, no; fruitful recreants!
Fright till the last gasp; I will be your guard.

Char. What she says, I'll confirm; we'll fight it out.

Pue. Assuredly, and to the English scourge.

This night must one of us perish and die;

Expect saint Martin's summer! halyon days,
Since I have entered into these wars.
Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
Till, by broad spreading, it disperse to nought.
With Henry's death, the English circle ends;
Dispersed are the glories it included.

Now am I like that proud insultting ship,
Which Cesar and his fortune bare at once.

Char. Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?
Thou with an eagle art inspired them.
Helen, the mother of Crete, Constance,
Nor yet saint Philip's daughters', were like thee.
Bright star of Venus, raise 'em on the earth,
How many rescue upon her by your staff.

Alen. Leave off delay, and let us raise the siege.

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our honors;
Drive them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd.

Pue. Freely at first we'll try;—come, let's away about it:
No prophet will I trust if she prove false. [Exeunt.

Scene III.—London. Hill before the Tower.

Enter, at the Gates, the Duke of Gloucester, with his Serving-men, in blue Coats.

Glo. I am come to survey the Tower this day;
Since Henry's death, I fear, there is conveyance.

[To the Guard.

2Be firmly persuaded of it.

1 Expect perpetuity after unfortunate.

3 Meaning the four daughters of Philip mentioned in Acts. xxx. 1.
Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
open the gates; Gloster it is that calls.

[Servants knock.
1 Ward. [Within.] Who is there that knocks so impertinently?
1 Serv. It is the noble duke of Gloster.
2 Ward. [Within] Whoe'er he be, you may not be let in.
Serv. Answer you so the lord protector, villains?
1 Ward. [Within] The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

Do we no other service than we are will'd.

Servants rush at the Tower Gates. Enter, to the Gates, WOODVILLE, the Lieutenant.

Wood. [Within] What noise is this? what trai-
ors have we here?

Glo. Lieutenant, is it you, whose voice I hear?
Open the gates; here's Gloster, that would enter.

Wood. [Within] Have patience, noble duke; it may not be done.

The cardinal of Winchester forbids:
From him I have express commandment,
That thou, nor none of thine, shall be let in.

Glo. Fault-hearted Woodville, prizest thou 'fore me!

Arrogant Winchester? that haughty prelate,
Whom Henry our late sovereign, me'c'd could break:

Thou, friend to God, or to the state.

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

1 Serv. Open the gates unto the lord protector;
Or we'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter WOODVILLE, attended by a Train of Servants, in service Coats.

Win. How now, ambitious Humphrey! what means this?

Glo. Plead 'prest, dost thou command me to be shut out?

Win. I do, thou most usurping prodigy,
And not protector of the king or realm.

Glo. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator;
Thou, that art contriv'd to murder our dead lord.
Thou, that giv'st wolves indulgences to sin:

I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,
If thou passest in this thy insolence.

If I may, stand thou back, I will not.budge a foot.

This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain,
To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Glo. I will not stay thee, but I'll drive thee back:
Thy scarlet robes, as a child's bearing-cloth,
I'll use, to carry thee out of this place.

Win. Do what thou dar'st; I beard thee to thy own utterance.

Glo. What? am I da'rd, and bearded to my face?

Draw, men, for all this privileged place;

Blue-coats to twain-coats. Priest, beware your beard!

[GLOSTER and his men attack the Bishop.

I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly:

Under my feet I stamp thy cardinal's hat;
In spite of pape or dignities of churchmen.
Here by the checks I'll drag thee up and down.

Win. Gloster, thou'lt answer this before the pope.

Glo. Winchester goose! I cry—a rope! a rope!

Now beat that hence: Why do you let them stay?—

Thou'lt chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's-array.
Out, twain-coats!-out, scarlet! hypersen.

Here a great tumult. In the midst of it, enter the Council of London, and Officers.

May. Eye, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,

Thus contumeliously should break the peace!

Glo. Peace, mayor; thou know'st little of my wrongs;

Here's Beaumont, that regards nor God nor king,
Hath here distrain'd the Tower to his use.

Enter, to the Tower, GLOSTER, a letter, on a
letter;

One that still motions war, and never peace,

O'churching your free purses with large limes;

Alluding to his shaven crown.

4. A strumpet.

An allusion to the Bishop's habit.

That seeks to overthrow religion,

Because he is protector of the realm:
And would have armure here out of the Tower,

To cut away all losse, and suppress the prince.

Glo. I will not answer thee with words, but blows.

[Here they skirmish again.

May. Nought rests for me, in this tumultuous

But to make open proclamation—

Come, officer; as loud as e'er thou canst.

Off. All manner of men, assembled here in arms this day, against God's peace and the king's, we

Chambers, and assembled thee, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use, any sword, weapo-

dor dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death.

Glo. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law:

But we will boldly and break our minds at the

Win. Gloster, we'll meet; to thy dear cost, be sure:

Thy heart-blood I will have, for this day's work.

May. 'Till I call for clubs: if you will not away:—

This cardinal is more haughty than the devil.

Glo. Mayor, farewell; thou dost but what thou

Must. All sensible Gloster! guard thy head;

For I intend to have it ere long.

[Exeunt. May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.

Good God! that nobles should such stomachs bear!

I myself fight not once in forty year.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.---France. Before Orleans.

Enter on the Walls, the Master-Gunner, and his Son.

Glo. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieged:

And how the English have the suburbs won.

Son. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them,

However, unfortunate, I miss'd my aim.

Glo. But now thou shalt not. Be thou ruler

by me:

Chief master-gunner am I of this town;

Now must I must do to procure immediate

The prince's escape! have inform'd me,

How the English, in the suburbs close intrench'd,

Wont, through a secret grate of iron bars

To yonder tower, to overpower the city;

And thence discover, how, with most advantage,

They may vex us, with shot, or with assault.

To intercept this inconvenience,

A piece of ordnance assign'd it I have placed;

And fully even these three days have I watch'd,

If I could see them. Now boy, do thou watch,

For I can stay no longer.

If thou seest any, run in and bring me word;

And thou shalt find me at the governor's.

[Exit.

Son. Father, I warrant you; take you no care;

I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them.

Enter, in an upper Chamber of a Tower, the Lords Mayor and Master, Sir WILLIAM GLASSBAILE,
Sir THOMAS GARBRAVE, and others.

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd!

How well thou handled, being prisoner!

Or by what means, and thou to be releas'd?

Disconsolate, I pr'ythee, on this turret's top.

Tal. The duke of Bedford had a prisoner,

Called,—the brave lord Ponton de Santrailles;

Of whom I was exchanged and ransom'd.

But with a base man of arms by far,

Once, in contempt, they would have harnett'd me:

Which I, dissembling, scorn'd: and craving death

rather than I would be so pilled in deem'd.

In fine, redeem'd I was as I desired.

But, O! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart!

Whom with my bare fists I would execute,

If I could hold him brought into my power.

Sal. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd?

Tal. With scolds, and scorns, and contumelious

In open market-place produced they me,

To be a public spectacle to all;

Here, said they, to the terror of the French,

The courage of the English, all our children so.

Then broke I from the officers that led me;

And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,

That is, for peace-officers arm't with clubs or staves.

Pride.

[Spies.

So stripp'd of honors.
To hurl at the beholders of my shame.
My grisly comeliness made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls as they deemed me secure:
So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread,
That they suppos'd, I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces passions of across my cell.

Where a guard of chosen shot I had,
That walk'd about me minute-while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready was my sword to shoot me to the heart.

I spare to hear what torments you endure:
But we will be revenged sufficiently.
Now is it supper-time in Orleans?
Here is a ghastly gate, I cannot count every one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify;
Let us look in, the sight will much delight thee,—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and sir William Glendale,
Let me have your express opinion on this:
Where is best place to make our battery next.

Gar. I think, at the north gate; for there stand lords.

Glenn. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.

Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,
Or with light skirmishes enticed.

[Shot from the Town. Salisbury and Gargrave fall.

Sal. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners!
Gar. O Lord, have mercy on me, woeeful man!
Tal. What chance is this, that suddenly hath Speak Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak;
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men!
One of thy eyes, and thy cheek's side struck off!
Accursed tower! I accursed fate hath
That hath contriv'd this woeeful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame:
Henry the Fifth he first triumph'd to the wars;
Who could such trumpet did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.
Yet liv'st thou, Salisbury! though thy speech doth
One eye thou hast, to look to heaven for grace:
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.
—Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive.
It Salisbury wands mercy at thy hands.
Bear hence his body, I will help to bury it—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort;
Thou shalt not die, whites—
He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me;
As who should say, When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.—
Placentia, I will, and a-Nernisken.
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn:
Wretched shall France be only in my name.

[Exeunt; afterwords on Alarum.

What stir is this? What tumultus in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarum, and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord, the French have gath-
A manifold, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,—
A holy prophetess, new risen up,—
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

[Salisbury eaves.

Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury doth groan;
It rips his heart, he cannot be revivify'd.
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you—
Pucelle or jujice, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a spagnum of your mangled brains.
Convey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then we'll try what bastard Frenchmen dare.

[Exit. Exeunt, hearing out the Bottles.

SCENE V.—Before one of the Gates of Orleans.

Alarum. Skirmishings. Talbot pursueth the Dauphin, and driveth him in: then enter Joan la Pucelle, driving Englishmen before her.

Then enter Talbot.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valor, and my forces!
Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them;
A woman, clad in armor, chaseth them.

Enter La Pucelle.

Here, here she comes:—I'll have a bout
with thee;
Devil, or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a witch,
And straightway give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Puc. Come, come, 'tis only I that must disgrace thee.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail!
My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder;
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

Puc. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet come:
I must go virtual Orleans withth.
O'ertake me, if thou canst; I see thy strength.
Go, cheer up thy languish'd-starved men;
Help Salisbury to make his testament;
This day is ours, as many more shall be.

[PUCELLE ENTERS THE TOWN, WITH SOLDIERS.

Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;
I know not where I am, nor what I do;
A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannah,
Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists:
So bees will smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives, and houses, driven away.
They call us, for a blessed, English dogs;
Now, like to whoels, we crying run away.

[Alarum. Another Skirmish.

It will not be—Retire into your fencings;
You all consented unto Salisbury's death,
For none could withstand his stroke in his revenge.

Pucelle is entered into Orleans,
In spite of us, or aught that we could do.
O, would I were to die with Salisbury!

The shame be not will make me die by thy head.

[Alarum. Retreat. Exeunt Talbot and his Forces, &c.

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter on the Walls, Pucelle, Charles, Reignier, Attencion, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colors on the walls;
Rescue'd is Orleans from the English wolves:
Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word.

Char. Diviner creature, bright Astraea's daughter!

How shall I honor thee for this success!
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
That one day blushing bear, and fruitful be the next.
France, triumph in thy glorious promises!

Recover'd is the town of Orleans:
More blessed hap had ne'er betell our state.

Reg. Why ring not out the bells throughout the town?

Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires,
And feast and banquet in the open streets.
To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.

Att. All France will be replete with mirth and joy,
When they shall hear how we have play'd the Char. This Joan, not we, by whom the day is won;

For which, I will divide my crown with her:
And all the present and future in my realm
Shall, in procession, sing her endless praise.
A stately pyramid to her I'll rear,
Than Rhodope's, or Memphis', ever was:
In memory of her, when she is dead,
Her ashes, in an urn more precious,
Than the rich jewel's coiffer of Darius,
Transported shall be at high festival
Before the kings and princes of France.

No longer on saint Denis we'll cry;
But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint
Come in; and let us banquet royally,
After this golden day of victory.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

The superstition of those times taught, that he who could draw a witch's blood was free from her power.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter to the Gates, a French Sergeant, and two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant;
If any noise, or soldier, you perceive,
Near to the walls, by some apparent sign.
Let us have knowledge at the courtward.
1 Ser. Sergeant, you shall.

[Exit Sergeant, thus are poor sentinels
(When others sleep upon their quiet beds)
Construed to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, and Forces, with scaling ladders; their drums beating a dead March.

Tal. Lord regent, and redoubled Burgundy,
By whose approach, the regions of Artois,
Wallon, and Picardy, are friends to us,—
This happy night the Frenchmen are secure,
Having all day carous’d and banqueted;
Embrace we then this opportunity.

As fitting best to quittance their deceit,
Contriv’d by art and balfool sorcery.

Bed. Coward of France!—how much he wrongs his force,
Despairing of his own arm’s fortitude,
To join with witches, and the help of hell.

Bar. Traitors have never other company.—

But what’s this Puckler, whom they term so true?
Tal. A maid, they say.

Bed. A maid! and be so martial!
Bar. Pray God, she proves not masculine ere long;
If underneath the standard of the French,
She carry armor, as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with sports;
God is our fortress: in whose conquering name,
Let us resolve to scatter their flinty buctars.

Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow thee.
Tal. Not all together; better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways;
That, if it chance the one of us do fail,
The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed; I’ll to your corner.

Bar. And to this.

Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave,—
Now, Salisbury! for thee, and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appear
How much in duty I am bound to both.

[The English scale the walls, crying St. George! and all enter by the Town.

Sent. [Within.] Arm, arm! the enemy doth make assault!

[The French leap over the walls in their shirts. Enter several ways, Bastard, Alencon, Burgundy, half ready, and half unready.

Alen. How now, my lords! what, all unready so?

Bast. Unready? ay, and glad we escape so well.

Reig. Twas time, I trow, to wake and leave our beds,

Hearing alarms at our chamber doors.

Alen. Of all exploits, since first I followed arms,
Ne’er heard I of a warlike enterprise
More venturous, or desperate than this.

Bast. I think this Talbot be a fiend of hell.

Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favor him.

Alen. Here cometh Charles; I marvel how he escap’d.

[Enter CHARLES and LA PUCHELE.

Bast. Tutt! holy Joan was his defensive guard.

Chars. Is thy thynning, thou deceitful dame?

Didst thou at first, to Lutter not well,
Make us partakers of a little gain,
That now our loss might be ten times so much?

Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?

At all times will you have my power alike?
Sleeping, or waking, must I still prevail,
Or will you blame and lay the fault on me!—

4 The same as guard room.

Improvident soldiers! had your watch been good,
This sudden mischief never could have taught.

Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default;
That, being captain of the watch to-night,
Dull is to be honor to that weighty charge.

Alen. Had all your quarters been as strictly kept,
As that whereof I had the government,
We had not been thus shamefully surpriz’d.

Bar. Mine was secure.

Reig. And so was mine, my lord.

Char. And, for myself, most part of all this night,
Within her quarter, and mine own precinct,
I was employ’d in reasoning to and fro.

About relieving of the sentinels:
Then how, or which way, should they first break in?

Puc. Question, my lords, no further of the case,
How, or which way; ’ns sure, they found some place

But weakly guarded, where the breach was made.
And now here rests no other shift but this,—
To gather our soldiers, scatter’d and dispersed,
And lay new plotters to embarrass them.

Aurum. Enter an English Soldier, crying A Talbot! A Talbot! They fly, leaving their Clothes behind.

Sold. I’ll be so bold to take what they have left.
The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Orleans. Within the Town.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whose pitchy mantle over-veil’d the earth,
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

[Retreat sounded.

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury;
And here advance it in the market-place,
The middle centre of this cursed town.

Now I have paid my vow unto his soul;
For every drop of blood was drawn from him,
There hath at least five Frenchmen died of night.
And, that hereafter ages may behold
What ruin happen’d in revenge of him,
Within their clearest temple I’ll erect
A tomb wherein his corpse shall be inter’d;
Upon the which, that every one may read,
Shall be engrav’d the sack of Orleans;
The treacherous manner of his mournful death,
And what a traitor I had been to France.

But, lords, in all our bloody massacre,
I must we met not with the dauphin’s grace;
His new-com champion, virtuous Joan of Arc;
Nor any of his false confederates.

Bed. ’Twixt thought, lord Talbot, when the fight began,
Rouse’d on the sudden from their drowsy beds,
They did, amongst the troops of armed men,
Leap o’er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bar. Myself (as far as I could well discern,
For smoke, and dusky vapors of the night)
Am sure I scorch’d the dauphin and his train.
When arm in arm they both came swiftly running,
Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves,
That did not leave the water’s edge all day.
After that things are set in order here,
We’ll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! which of this princely train
Call you this Sir Talbot, for his acts
So much applauded through the realm of France?

Tal. Here is the Talbot; who would speak with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, countess of Auvergne,
With modesty adorning thy renown,
By me entreats, good lord, thou wouldest vouchsafe
To visit her poor castle where she lies;—

6 Plans, schemes
7 Wonder.
8 Dews.
That she may boast she hath beheld the man
Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

Bur. Is it even so? Nay, then, I see our wars
Will turn into a peaceful comic sport,
When ladies crave to be encountered with—
You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for, when a world of
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rule'd:
And therefore tell her, I return great thanks;
And this submission will attend her:
Will not your honors hear me company?

Bed. No, truly, it is more than manners will:
And I ha' heard it said,—Unbidden guests
As wise a welcome when they are come.

Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,
I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.
Come hither, captain. [Whispers.]—You perceive
Capt. I do, my lord, and mean accordingly. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Aurvergne. Court of the Castle.

Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge:
And what you have done so, bring the key to me.

Port. Madam, I will.

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out right,
I shall as famous be by this exploit,
As that old Thomas by Gyr-card withal.
Great is the rumor of this dreadful knight,
And his achievements of no less account;
Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,
To give their censure of this rare reports.

Enter Messenger and Talbot.

Mess. Madam,
According as you wish your ladyship desired,
By message craved, so is lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome. What is this the man?

Mess. Madam, it is,
Count. Is this the sconce of France?
Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad,
With that name the mothers still their babies;
I see report is fabulous and base;—
I thought, I should have seen some Hercules,
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.
Alas! this is a child, a silly dwarf;
It cannot be, this weak and wretched shrimp
Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble you;
But, that my hand hath not been idle,
I'll sort some other time to visit you.

Count. What means he now!—Go, ask him what he goes.

Mess. Stay, my lord Talbot; for my lady craves
To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Tal. Martyr, for that she's in a wrong belief,
I go to certify her, Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter, with Keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.

Tal. Prisoner! to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord; and for that cause I train'd thee to my house.
Long time the shadow hath been thrall to me,
For in my gallery the picture lies.
But now 'tis substance shall endure the like;
And I will chain these legs and arms of thee,
That fast by tyranny, these many years,
Wasted our country, slain our citizens,
And sent our sons and husbands captive.

Tal. Ha, ha, ha!

Count. Art thou, wretch, me, to whom thou art thine?

Tal. I am indeed.

Count. Then have substance too.

Tal. No, no, no, but shadow of myself;
You are deceiv'd, my substance is not here;
For what you see, is but the smallest part

And least proportion of humanity:
I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here,
It is of such a spurious charic pitch,
Your rods (save one) are not sufficient to contain it.

Count. This is a radius, or mercer's for the nonce;
He will be here, and yet he is not here:
How can these contraries agree?

Tal. I'll show you presently.

He waves a horn. Drum's heard; then a Dial of Ordnance. The Gates being forced, enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded,
That Talbot is but shadow of himself?
These are his substance, sinews, arms, and strength,
With which he yokes all your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns,
And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse;
I find there is no less than mine in them well.
And more than may be gathered by thy shape.
Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am sorry, that with reverence
I did not return the fair interpreter.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue
The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body.
What you have done hath not offended me;
No other satisfaction do I crave.
But only (with your patience) that we may Taste of your wine, and see what cates you have;
For solid things are always seen among them well.

Count. With all my heart: and think me honored
To feast so great a warrior in my house. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. The Temple Garden.

Enter the Earls of Sомерсет, Suffolk, and Warwick; Richard Plantagenet, Vernon, and another Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords, and gentlemen, what means this conference?

Dare no man answer in a case of truth!

Suf. within the Temple wall we were too loud;
The garden here is more convenient.

Plan. We say at our leisure, if I found you the truth;
Or, else, was wrangling Somerset in the error?

Suf. Faith, I have been a truant in the law;
And never yet could frame my will to it;
And now, therefore, frame the law to my will.

Suf. Judges, you my lord of Warwick, then betwixt us.

War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher to speak,
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,
Between two blades, which bears the better temper,
Between two horses, doth he bear him best,
Between two girls, which hath the fairest eye,
I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment: But in these nice sharp quiblets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a law.

Plan. Madam, but here is a matter of forbearance:
The truth appears so nailed on my side, That any purblind eye may find it out.

Suf. And on my side it is so well apparell'd,
So clear, so strong, and so evident.

War. That it will glimmer through a blunt man's eye.

Plan. Since you are tongue-tay'd and so leathen'd,
In dumb significant presumes your thoughts:
Let him, that is a true-born gentleman,
And stands upon the honor of his birth,
If he suppose that we pleased to unmask,
From oil this brat pluck a white rose with me.

Suf. Let him that is no coward, nor no flatterer,
But dare maintain the party of the truth,
Pluck a red rose from all this thorn with me.

War. I love no colors; and, without all color Of base insinuating flattery,
I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet.

Suf. I pluck this red rose, with young Somerset;
And say withal, I think he held the right.

War. Stay, lords and gentlemen; and pluck no more,
Till you conclude—that he, upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Suf. Good master Vernon, it is well objected: If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

3 For a purpose. 4 Noise, reported. 5 Deceit; a play on the word. 6 Proposed.
Plan. And I.
Ver. Then, for the truth and plainness of the case,
I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here,
Giving my verdict on the white rose side,
Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off;
Lest you wound me in your zeal to show me rose red,
And fall on my side so against your will.
Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt.
And keep like wounder where still I am.
Som. Well, well, come on: Who else?
Law. Unless my study and my books be false,
The argument you hold, was wrong in you;
In sign whereof, I pluck a white rose too.
Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?
Som. Here is my scabbard, meditating that,
Shall die yours, let it be a rose in a blood red.
Plan. Mean time, your cheeks do counterfeit our roses;
For pale they look with fear, as witnessing
The truth on our side.
Som. No, Plantagenet,
'Tis not for fear, but anger,—that thy checks
Blush for pure shame at our counterfeits;
And yet thy tongue will not express the terror.
Plan. Hath not thy rose a colder, Somerset?
Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?
Plan. A sharp and piercing to maintain his truth;
While thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.
Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding
That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.
Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I scorn thee and thy fashion, percy boy.
Suf. Turn not thy scorn this way, Plantagenet.
Plan. Proud Poole, I will; and soon both him and thee.
Suf. I'll throw to my part thereof into thy throat.
Som. Away, away, good William De-la-Poole!
We grace the yeoman, by conversing with him.
War. Now, by God's will, thou wrongest him,
Somerset;
His grandfather was Lionel, duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England;
Spring restless yoremen? from so deep a rest?
Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege; Or dust not, for his craven heart, say thus.
Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my
On any plot of ground in Christendom:
Was not thy father, Richard, earl of Cambridge,
For treason executed in our late king's days? And his, his treason, started not the country,
Corrupted, and exempt 1 from ancient genius;
His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;
And, till thou be restored, thou art a yeoman.
Suf. It is a shame my father was attached, and attained;
Condemn'd to die for treason, but not traitor:
And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset.
Were growing time once ripen'd to my will,
For your partaker Poole, and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory,
To secure you for this apprehension?
Look to it well; and say you are well warn'd.
Som. Ay, thou shalt find us ready for thee still:
And know us, by these colors, for thy foes;
For these my friends, in spite of thee, shall wear,
This pale and angry rose, as insigniance of my blood-drinking hate.
Suf. Go forward, and be choky'd with thy ambition!
And so farewell, until I meet thee next. [Exeunt.
Som. Live, live at peace, Poole— Farewell, true Richard. [Exeunt.
Plan. How I am branded, and must perforce en-
War. This blot, that they object against your house.
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament,
Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloster:
And, if thou be not then created York,
I will not live to be accounted Warwick.
Mean time, in signal of my love to thee,
Against proud Somerset, and William Poole,
Will I upon thy party wear this rose:
And keep it on me—This brand I burn!
Grown to this faction, in the temple garden,
Shall send between the red rose and the white,
A thousand souls to death and deadly night.
Plan. I'll take a mastic-vein: I cannot send to
That you on my behalf would pluck a flower.
Ver. In thy behalf still will I wear the same.
Law. And so will I.
Plan. Thanks, gentle sir.
Come, let us four to dinner: I dare say,
This quarrel will drink blood another day.
[Exeunt.
SCENE V.—A Room in the Tower.
Enter Mortimer, brought in a Chair by two Keepers.
Mort. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,
Let dying Mortimer here rest himself—
Even like a man new hated from the rack,
So fare my limbs with long imprisonment:
And these grey locks, the pursuivants 2 of death,
Nestor-like aged, in an age of care,
And the end of Edward and Mortimer.
These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exquit: 3
Weak shoulders, overborne with burdens' grief,
And yearly years, and like to a wither'd vine,
That drops his sapless branches to the ground:
Yet are these feat,—whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,—
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
As witting I no other comfort have—
But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?
1 Kind. Richard Plantagenet, my friend! Is he come?
Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignorantly used,
Your nephew, late-dispised Richard comes.
Mort. Direct mine ears, I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp:
O, tell me, when my lips do touch his cheeks,
What may that kind dispise of men's miseries,
With sweet enlacement doth dismiss me hence;
That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter Richard Plantagenet.

1 Keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.
Mort. Kind Richard Plantagenet, my friend! Is he come?
Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignorantly used,
Your nephew, late-dispised Richard comes.
Mort. Direct mine ears, I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp:
O, tell me, when my lips do touch his cheeks,
What may that kind dispise of men's miseries,
With sweet enlacement doth dismiss me hence;
That so he might recover what was lost.
Why dash thou say—of late thou wert despis'd?
Plan. Nay, my uncle, I have lean thine aged back against mine arm!
And, in that case, I'll tell thee my disease. 4
This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew twixt Somerset and me.
Among which terms he used his lavish tongue,
And did upbraid me with my father's death;
Which obloquiy sets bars before my tongue,
To settle with the like I was not valiant, and Therefore, good uncle,—for my father's sake,
In honor of a true Plantagenet,
And for all fires sake,—declare the cause
My father, earl of Cambridge, lost his head.
Mort. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me,
And hath detain'd me, all my flow'ring youth,
2 Pursuivants are officers who attend upon heralds.
3 Exquist:;—exquisite.
4 I.e. Those who have no right to arms.
5 The Temple, being a religious house, was a sanctuary.
6 Opinion.
7 Exquist:;—exquisite.
Within a losthouse dungeon, there to pine,
Was cursed instrument of his decease.
Plan. Discover more at large what cause that was:
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess.
Meth, I will; if that my fading breath permit,
And death approach not ere my tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, hagardly to this king,
Depost's his cousin Richard, Edward's son,
The most,-begotten, and not to be outdone.
Of Edward king, the third of that descent:
During whose reign, the Percy's of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavor'd to advance me to the throne:
The case mov'd their warlike lords to this,
Was—for that (young king Richard thus remov'd, Leaving no heir begotten of his body)
I, from the next by birth and parentage;
By my mother I derived an
From Lionel duke of Clarence, the third son
To king Edward the Third, whereas he,
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroic line.
But mark; as, in this骇alous great attempt,
They labored to plant the nightful heir,
I, how they libery, and they so res.
Long after this, when Henry the Fifth,—
Succeeding his father Bolingbroke—did reign,
Thy father, earl of Cambridge,—then deriv'd,
From famous Edmund Langley, duke of York,—
Marrying my sister, that thy mother was,
Again, in pity of my hard distress,
Lose an arm, an eye, a leg, lost the use of them,
And half install'd me in the diadem:
But, as the rest, so tell that noble earl,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whose descent the branch which I descended.
Plan. Of which, my lord, your honor is the last.
Mor. True; and thou seest, that I no issue have:
And that my fainting words do warrant death:
Then art my heir; the rest, I wish thee gather:
But yet be wary in the studious care.
Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with me:
But yet, as I think, my father's execution
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.
Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic;
Strong-fix'd is the house of Lancaster,
And, like a star, to this must not be mov'd,
But now thy uncle is removing hence;
As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place.
Plan. My uncle, would some part of my young years
Might but redeem the passage of your age!
Mor. Thou dost then wrong me; as the slaughter
Which gaveth many wounds, when one will kill.
Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good;
Only, give order for my funeral,
And so birewell, and fare all thy hopes!
And prosperous be thy life, in peace, and war!

Plan. And peace, no war, beth thy parting soul!
In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage.
And, like a hermit, overpass'd thy days.—
Well, I will hence the dungeon in my list;
And what I do imagine, let that rest—
Keepers, convey him hence; and I myself
Will see his burial better than his life.—

[Excus' keepers, bearing out Mortimer.]
Here dies the dusky torso of Mortimer.
Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort—
And, for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
That have been suffer'd, and the wrongs which have been cause,
I doubt not, but with honor to redress,
And therefore haste I to the parliament;
Latter to be restored to my blood,
Or make my title the advantage of my good. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Parliament House.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Gloucester, Warwick, Somerset, and SpaceXke; the Bishop of Winchester, Richard Plantagenet, and others. Glouster offers to put up a Bill;* Wincheste snatches it, and tears it.

Win. Com'est thou with deep premeditated lines,
With very deep pendants of studious devise,
Humphrey of Gloucester! if thou canst accuse,
Or ought intend'st to lay unto my charge,
Do it without invention suddenly;
As with sudden and extraneous speaking
Purpose to answer what thou canst object.
Glo. Presumptuous priest! this place commands
my patience,
Or thou shouldest find thou hast disdoin'd me.
Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able
Teritrium to rehearse the method of my pen;
No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestilential, and desultious pranks,
That very masts prattle of thy pride.
This is not most perilous, without example
Froward by nature, enemy to peace;
Lascivious, wanton, more than well becomes
A man of thy profession, and degree;
And thus for treachery, what's more manifest;
In that thou hadst a trap to take my life,
As well at London bridge, as at the Tower!
Besides, I charge thee, if thy thoughts were sithen,
The king thy sovereign, is not to excuse
From infamous malice of thy swelling heart.
Win. Glover, I do defy thee,—Lords, vouchsafe to give me hearing what I shall reply.
I, if it were covetous, ambitions, or worse,
As he will have, me how am I so poor?
Or how haps it, I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling?
And for dissension, who precrieth peace?

*Thinking.·

ii. c. Articles of Accusation.

More than I do,—except I be provok'd!
No, good my lords, it is not that offend'ss;
It is not that, that hath men's'd the duke:
It is, because no one should sway but he;
No one, but he, should be about the king;
And that he consider'd his persons in his last;
And makes him roar these accusations forth.
But he shall know, I am as good—
Glo. Thou bastard of my grandfather!—
Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I pray,
But one impious in another's throne?
Glo. Am I not the protector, saucy priest?
Win. And am I not a prelate of the church?
Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a cause keeps,
And is'th it to patronage his theft.
Win. Unreverent Gloucester!—
Thou art reverent
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.
This Rome shall remedy.
Win. I answer not; doth,
Ream thither, then.
Sum. My lord it were your duty to forbear.
Win. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne;
Sum. Methinks, my lord should be religious,
And know how to preserve that belongs to
Methinks, his lordship should be humbler;
It fitted not a prelate so to plead.
Sum. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so near.
Win. State holy, or unholy, what of that?
Is not he thy protector to the king?
Plan. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his tongue;
Lost it be said, Speak, sirrah, when you should;
Methinks, it is better left with lords. Else would I have a line at Winchester. [Aside.

K. Hen. Unles of Glover, and of Winchester,
The special watchmen of our English west;
I would prevail, if prayers might prevail,
To join your hearty love and a prayer,
O, what a scandal is it to our crown,
That two such noble peers as ye should jar!
Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell,
Civil dissension is a virupus worm,
That gnaw the bowels of the commonwealth.—

[28x218]A noise within: Down with the tawny coats!]

What tumult’s this?

War.

An uproar, I dare warrant,

Begun through malice of the bishop's men.

[34x195]A noise again; Stones! Stones!]

Enter the Mayor of London, attended.

May. O, my good lords,—and virtuous Henry,

Put the city of London, put us!

The bishop's and the duke of Gloster's men,

Forbidden late to carry any weapon.

Have fill’d their pockets full of pebble-stones;

And, banding themselves in contrary parts,

Do part at last on another’s prey.

That many have their giddy brains knock’d out.

Our windows are broke down in every street.

And we, for fear, commend’d to shut our shops.

Enter, skirmishing: the Returners of Gloster and Winchester, with bloody Harry.

K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to ourselves,

To hold your slaughter’d hands, and keep the peace.

Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.

1 Serv. Nay, if we be

Forbidden stones, we’ll fall to it with our teeth.

2 Serv. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.

[Skirmish again.

Glo. You of my household, leave this peevish broil,

And set this unaccustom’d fight aside.

3 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a man

Just, and a prince of war, and, for your real birth,

Inferior to none but to his majesty:

And ere that we will suffer such a prince,

So kind a father of the commonwealth,

To be dishearten’d by an inkhorn man.

We, and our wives, and children, all will fight,

And have our bodies slaughter’d by your foes,

If ever, ay, and the very parings of your nails

Shall pluck a field, when we are dead.

[Skirmish again.

Glo. And if you love me, as you say you do,

Let me persuade you to forbear a while.

K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul!

Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold

My sighs and tears, and will not once relent!

Who should be pitt’d, if not yourself?

Or who should study to preserve a peace

If not so delightfully disputable?

War. My lord protector, yield;—yield, Winchester:—

Except you mean, with obstinate replies,

To stay your sovereign, and destroy the realm.

You see what mischief, and what murder too,

Hath been enacted through your enmity;

That is at peace, except ye thirst for blood,

War. Sir, I will yield, or I will yield the worst.

Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stop!

Or, I would see his heart out, ere the priest

Should ever get the privilege of me.

War. Behold, my lord of Winchester, the duke

Hath bandish’d moody, discontented fury,

As by his smoothed brows as doth appeal!

Why look you still so stern, and truculent?

Glo. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.

K. Hen. Fyce, uncle Beaumont! I have heard you preach:

That malice was a great and grievous sin:

And will not you maintain the thing you teach,

But prove a chief offender in the same?

War. Sweeter King!—the bishop hath a kindly gird

For shame, my lord of Winchester! relent

What, shall a child instruct you what to do?

Glo. O, the fair, young, princely, dutiful,

Richard, the duke of Gloster, I will yield to thee,

Love for thy love, and hate for hate’s sake!

Glo. Ay; but, I fear me, with a hollow heart.—

See here, my friends, and loving countrymen;

This tedious and a fit hour of truce,

Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers;

So help me God, as I dissemble not!

Win. So help me God, as I intend it not. [Aside.

K. Hen. How, how, how!—his loving uncle, and his partaker,

How joyful am I made by this contract!—

Away, my masters! trouble us no more:

But join in friendship, as your lords have done.

1 Serv. Content! I’ll fit to the surgeon.

2 Serv.

And so will I. 3 Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern affords.

[Exeunt Servants, Mayor, &c.

War. I hope the scroll, most gracious sovereign,

Which, in the right of Richard Plantagenet,

We do exhibit to your majesty.

Glo. Well urged, my lord of Warwick:—for,

If an your grace mark every circumstance,

You have great reason to do Richard right:

Especially, for those occasions

At Elthamplace I hold your majesty.

K. Hen. And those occasions, uncle, were of force:

Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is,

That Richard be restored to his blood.

War. I hope Richard be restored to his blood;

So shall his father’s wrongs be recompens’d.

Win. As will the rest, so willich Winchester.

K. Hen. If Richard will be true, not that alone,

But all the whole inheritance I give,

That doth belong unto the house of York,

From whence you spring by local descent.

Plon. Thy humble servant vows obedience,

And humble service, till the point of death.

K. Hen. Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;

And, in the name of that duty done,

I girt thee with the valiant sword of York,

Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet;

And rise created princely duke of York.

Plon. And so thrive Richard, as thy fays may tell!

And as my duty springs, so perish they

That grudge one thought against your majesty!

Alt. Well done, high prince, the mighty duke of York!

Som. Perish, base prince, inglorious duke of York!

[Aside.

Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty,

To cross the seas, and to be crow’d in France:

The presence of a king engenders love

Amongst his subjects, and he loyal friends;

As it disanthesates his enemies.

K. Hen. When Gloster says the word, king Henry goes;

For friendly counsel cusscd off no foes.

Glo. Your ships already are in readiness.

[Exeunt all but Exeter.

Exe. Ay, we may march in England, or in France,

Not seeing what is likely to ensue.

This late disension, grown betwixt the peers,

Burns under sequestred ashes of forlorn love,

And will at last break out into a flame:

As feaster members revolt but by degrees,

Till bones, and dust, and sinews, all away,

So will this base and envious discord breathe.

And now I fear that fatal prophecy,

That time shall subdue the son of Henry, named the fifth,

Was in the mouth of every sucking babe,

That Henry, born at Mountfitchet, should win all;

And Henry, born at Windesred, should lose all:

Which is so plain, that Exeter doth wish

His days may finish ere that hapless time.

[Exit.

Scene II.—France. Before Rouen.

Enter La Pucelle disguised, and Soldiers dressed

the Countrymen, with Sacks upon their backs.

Puc. These are the city gates, the gates of Rouen,

Trough which our policy must make a breach:

Take heed, be wary how you place your words;

Talk like the vulgar sort of market-men,

That come to gather money for their corn.

If we have entrance, (as, I hope, we shall,)

And that we find the slothful watch but weak,

I’ll by this barefoot soldier, and his men,

That Charles the dauphin may encounter them.

1 Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to soak the city,

And we be lords and rulers over Rouen;

Therefore we sell knock’d, (as you say.)

[Knocks.

Guard. [Within.] Qui est là?

Puc. Paissans, pauwres gens de France:

Poor market-decks, that come to sell their corn.

Guard. Enter, go in: the market-lot is run.

[Opens the Gates.

Recompense.
Scene III.

KING HENRY VI.

Puc. Now Rouen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground.
(Proc. &c., enter the City.)

Enter CHARLES, Bastard of Orleans, ALÉCION, and Forces.

Char. Saint Deus bless this happy stratagem! And on once again we'll sleep securely in Rouen.

Bur. Here enter'd Pucelle, and her practisants.
Now she is there, how will she specify
Where is the best and safest passage in?

Char. So if we thrust out a torch from the tower;
Which once discern'd she that her meaning is—
No way to that; for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter LA PUCELLE on a Battice: holding out a Torch burning.

Puc. Behold, this is the happy wedding torch,
That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen;
But burning fatal to the Talbotties.

Bur.
Bast. See, noble Charles! the beacon of our friends,
The burning torch in yonder turret stands.
Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge,
A prophet to the fall of all our foes!
Aien. Before the time. Delays have dangerous ends;
Enter, enter, the chapel!—presently.
And then to execution on the watch.
(They enter.

Alarums. Enter TALBOT, and certain English.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears.
If Talbot but survive thy treachery,—
Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,
Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escaped the pride of France.
(Exit to the Town.

Alarum; Excursions. Enter from the Town BEDOLLE, BURGUNDY, and the English Forces. Then enter, on the Walls, LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, BASTARD, ALÉCION, and others.

Puc. Good morrow, gallants! want ye corn for bread?
I think, the duke of Burgundy will fast,
Before he'll buy again at such a rate:
Taxes full of damsel! Do you like the taste?
Bur. Bred on, vile bent, and shameless conse-
tezan!
I trust, you long, to choke thee with thine own,
And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.
Char. But, our grace may starve, perhaps, before that time.

Bed. O, let no words, but deeds, revenge this treason!
Puc. What will you do, good grey-beard? break a lance,
And run a tilt at death within a chair?
Tal. Fool's fiend of France, and bag of all desire,
Engrossed with this false and villainous be
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,
And twit with cowardice a man half dead?
Danel. I'll have a bout with you again.
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Puc. Are you so hot, sir?—Yet, Pucelle, hold thy peace.

If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow,—
(Talbot, and the rest, consult together.)

God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker?
Tal. Bare ye come forth and meet us in the field?
Bur. Believe, your lordship takes them for fools,
To try it if our own be ours, or no.
Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate,
But unto thee, Alécion, and the rest;
Will ye, like soldiers, come and light it out!
Alein. Signior, no.

Tal. Signior, hang!—base mulcteurs of France!
Like peasant butt-boys do they keep the walls;
And there will we to see such cuffs as gleam in chains.

Puc. Captains, away; let's get us from the walls;
That Talbot means no goodness, by his looks,—
God be wi! you my lord! we came, sir, but to tell you
That we are here.
(Exeunt LA PUCELLE, &c., from the Walls.

Tal. And there will we, or two, or three, or four,
Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame!—

Vow, Burgundy, by honor of thy house,
(Prick'd on by public wrongs, sustains'd in France,)
Either to get the town again, or die;
And I— as sure as English Henry lives,
And as his father here was conqueror;
As sure as in this late betrayed town
Great Cœur-de-lion's heart was buried;
So sure I'll do to get the town, a better place,
Fitter for sickness, and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not dishonor me;
Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen,
And will the partner of your valour, or else
Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade you.

Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read,
That stout Pendragon, in his litter, set
Came to the field, and vanquished all his foes:
Methinks, I should revive the soldiers' hearts,
Because I ever found them as myself.
Tal. To save the morning in a dying breast!—
Then be it so:—Heavens keep old Bedford safe!—
And now no more ado, brave Burgundy,
But gather we our forces out of hand,
And set upon our boasting English enemy.
(Exeunt BURGUNDY, TALBOT, and Forces, leaving BEDFORD, and others.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter SIR JOHN FASTOLFE, and a Captain.

Cap. Whitchurch away, sir John Fastolfe, in such haste!
Fadl. Whither away? to save myself I fly;
We are like to have the overthrow again.
Cap. What! will you fly, and leave lord Talbot!
Fadl. Nay, all the Talbots in the world to save my life.
Exe. Cap. Cowardly knight! ill fortune follow thee!
(Exeunt.
Retreat: Excursions. Enter from the Town, LA PUCELLE, ALÉCION, CHARLES, &c., and exclaiming.

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven please;
For I have seen our enemies' overthrow.
What is the trust or strength of foolish men?
They, that of late were dreading with their scouts,
Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves.
(Exeunt, and is carried off in his Chair.

Alarum: Enter TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and others.

Tal. Lost, and recover'd in a day again!
This is a double honor, Burgundy.
Yet, heavens have spared this victory!
Bur. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy
Endures thee in his heart; and there crests
Thy noble deeds, as valor's monument.
Tal. Thinks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle now?
I think, her old familiar is asleep;
Now where's the Bastard's branches, and Charles his sleek?
What, all a-mort? Rouen hangs her head for grief,
That such a valiant company are fled.
Now will we take some orders in the town,
Placing therein some expert officers;
And then depart to Paris, to the king:
For there young Harry, with his nobles, lies,
Bur. Which was left with Talbot, prieur of Burgundy.
Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget
The noble duke of Bedford, late deceased,
But see his exequies^{4} fulfilled in Rouen;
A brave soldier never reached far from a center heart did never sway in court;
But kings, and mightiest potentates, must die;
For that's the end of human misery.
(Exeunt)

SCENE III.—The Plains near the City.

Enter CHARLES, the Bastard, ALÉCION, LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident,
Nor grieve that Rouen is so recovered:
Care is not in our hands; we may try too long.
For things that are not to be remedied.

^2 Scoffs.
^3 Quite disparited.
^4 Make some necessary dispositions.
^5 Funeral rites.
Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while,
And like a peacock sweep along his tail;
We'll pass his plumes, and take away his train,
If dauntn, and the rest, will be but rul'd.

Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy cunning had no difidence;
One hundred feod shall never breed dissent.
Bust. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
And we will make thee famous through the world.

Alen. We'll set thy statute in such a tryal place,
And have thee reverence like a blessed saint;
Employ thee then, sweet virgin, for our good.

Puc. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise:
By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words,
We will entice the duke of Burgundy
To leave the Talbot, and to follow us.

Char. Ay, marry, sweetening, if we could do that,
France hath no place for Henry's warriors;
Nor should that nation boast it so with us,
But be extripated from our provinces.

Alen. For ever should they be expuls'd from

And not have title to an earldom here.

Puc. Your honors shall perceive how I will work,
To bring this matter to the wished end.

[Drums heard.

Hark! by the sound of drum, you may perceive
Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

An English March. Enter, and pass over at a distance, Talbot and his Forces.

There goes the Talbot, with his colors spread;
And all the troops of English after him,

A French March. Enter the Duke of Burgundy, and Forces.

Now in the rearward comes the duke, and his;
Fortune, in favor, makes him lag behind.
Summon a parley, we will talk with him.
[Parley sounded.

Char. A parley with the duke of Burgundy.

Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy?

Puc. The princely Charles of France, thy countryman.

Char. Speak, Pucelle; and enchant him with thy words.

Puc. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of France!
Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee.

Bur. Speak on; but be not overbold.

Puc. Look on thy country, look on France,
And see the cities and the town defaced
By wasting ruin of the cruel foe!
And marks on thy mother's lowly bane,
When death doth close his tender dying eyes,
See, see, the pinning malady of France;
Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds,
Which thou thyself hast given her woeful breast!
O, turn thy edged sword another way;
Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help:
One drop of blood, drawn from thy country's bosom,
Should give thee more than streams of foreign gore;
Return thee, therefore, with a flood of tears,
And wash away thy country's stained spots!

Bur. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words,
Or nature makes me suddenly relent.

Puc. Besides, all French and France exclaims on thee.
Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny,
Who join'st thou with, but with a lordly nation,
That will not trust thee, but for profligate sake.
When Talbot hath set footing once in France,
And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill,
Who then, but English Henry, will be lord,
And thou by his command'd, like a fugit,
Call we to mind,—and mark but this, for proof;—
Was not the duke of Orleans thy foe?
And was he not in English prisoner!

[Expelled.

But, when they heard he was thine enemy,
They threw him free, without his ransom paid,
In spite of Burgundy, and all his friends.
See then! thou fight'st against thy countrymen,
And join'st with them to be thy slaughters-men.
Come, return, thou false contrast:
Burgundy, and all the rest, will take thee in their arms.

Bur. I am vanquished; these haughty words of hers
Have harden'd me like roaring cannon-shot,
And made me almost yield upon my knees.
Forgive me, country, and sweet countrymen!
And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace:
My forces and my power of men are yours;
So, farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee.

Puc. Done like a Frenchman, turn, and turn again!
Char. Welcome, brave duke! thy friendship makes us fresh.

Bust. And doth beget new courage in our breasts,
Alen. Pucelle hath bravely play'd her part in this,
And doth deserve a coronet of gold.
Char. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers;
And seek how we may prejudice the foe.

[Exeunt.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, and other Lords, Vernon, Basset, &c. To them Talbot, and some of his Officers.

Tal. My gracious prince,—and honorable peers,—Hearing of thy arrival in this realm,
I have a while given truce unto my wars,
To do my duty to my sovereign;
In sign whereof, this arm,—that hath reclamation'd
To your obedience witty fortresses,
Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength,
Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem.
Let fall thy haughty word before thy highness' feet;
And with submissive loyalty of heart,
Answers the glory of his conquests got,
First to thy god, and next unto your grace.

K. Hen. In this the famed lord Talbot, uncle
Gloster,
That hath so long been resident in France!

Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

K. Hen. Welcome, brave captain, and victorious lord!

When I was young, (as yet I am not old,)
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword;
Long since we were resolved of thy truth,
Your faithful service, and your toil in war;
Yet never have you tasted our reward;
Or helm, sword, or cuirass, will so much as thanks,
Because till now we never saw your face;
Therefore, stand up; and, for these good deserts,
We here create you earl of Shrewsbury;
And in our coronation take your place.

[Exeunt King Henry, Gloster, Talbot, and Nobles.

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea,
Disgracing of these colors that I wear
In honor of my noble lord of York,—
Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st!

Bos. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage
The vicious barking of your saucy tongue
Against my lord the duke of Somerset.

Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honor as he is.

Bos. Then, what is he? as good a man as York.

Ver. Haark ye; not so, in witness, take ye that.

[Strikes him.

Bos. Villain, thou know'st not the law of arms is such,
That, when thou receiv'st a sword, the present death;
Or else this blow should branch thy deepest blood.
But I'll unto his majesty, and crave
I may have liberty to wound this wrong:
When thou shalt see, I'll invent thee to thy cost.

[Exeunt.
ACT IV.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Exeter, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Winchester, Warwick, Talbot, the Governor of Paris, and others.

Glo. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head. Wis. God save king Henry, of that name the steward!
Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath.—

[Governor kneels.]

That ye elect no other king but the present one; and Esteem none friends, but such as are his friends; and None your foes, but such as shall pretend
Malicious practices against his state:
This shall ye do, so he be your righteous God!

[Exit Gov. and his Train.

Enter Sir John Fastolfe.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais, To hasten unto your coronation, A letter was deliver'd to my hands, Whence your grace from the duke of Burgundy. Tal. Shame to the duke of Burgundy, and thee! I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee next, To tear the garland from thy craven' d leg.

[Plucking it off.]

(Which I have done,) because unworthy wrong.
Thou wast install'd in that high degree—
Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:
This daunt'd at the battle of Patay,
When but in all I was six thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one.—
Before we met, or that a stroke was given,
Like to a trusty squire, did run away;
In which assault we lost twelve hundred men;
Myself, and divers gentlemen,
Were there surpriz'd, and taken prisoners.
Then judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;
Or whether that such cowardly ought to wear
This ornament of knighthood, yea, or no.
Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,
And ill becoming any common man;
Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.
Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,
Knights of the garter were of noble birth;
Valiant and virtuous, full of faithful courage,
Such as were grown to erict by the wars;
Not rating death, nor shrinking for distress,
But always resolute in most extremes.
Here, thou art not for't, in this sort,
But dost usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honorable order; And should (if I were worthy to be judge) Be quittance degraded, like a base scurril, To that doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hastst thy doom;
Be packing, therefore, thou wasst a knight; Henceforward ween thee blush, on pain of death.—

[Exit Fastolfe.

And now, my lord protector, view the letter Sent from our uncle duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What means his grace, that he hath changed his style? [Vowing the superscription.

No more but, plain and bluntly,—To the king:
Hast he forgot, he is his sovereign! Or doth this churlish superscription Pretend some alteration in good will?
What's here!—I have, upon especial cause,—

M'liit with compassion of my country's wretch,
Together with the pitiful complaints
Of such as your oppression feeds upon,— Forever your peripherals, and
And join'd with Charles, the rightful king of France.
On monstrous treachery! Can this be so;
That in alline, vanity, and oath
Thereshould be found such false disssembling guile.

K. Hen. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt?
Glo. He doth, my lord; and is become your foe.

Glo. Is that the worst, this letter doth contain?
It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes.
K. Hen. Why then, lord Talbot there shall talk with him,
And give him chastisement for this abuse:—
My lord, how say you! are you not content?
Tal. Content, my liege! Yes; but that I am prevented.
I should have been't I might have been employ'd.
K. Hen. Then gather strength, and march unto his tent.
Let him perceive, how ill we brook his treason; And when offence is, it to flout his friends.
Tal. I go, my lord; in heart desiring still,
You may behold contusion of your foes.

[Exit.

Enter Vernon and Baset.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign! Bas. And me, my lord; grant me the combat too! York. This is my servant; Hear him, noble princes.
Som. And this is mine; Sweet Henry, favor him!
K. Hen. Be patient, lords; and give them leave to speak.
Say, gentilmen, What makes you thus exclaim? And wherefore crave you combat! or with whom?
Ver. With him, my lord; for he hath done me wrong.
Bas. And with him; for he hath done me wrong.
K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both complain?
First let me know, and then I'll answer you.
Bus. Crossing the sea from England into France, This fellow here, with envious earping tongue, Upbrad me about the nose I wear;
Saying—thou base son of the color of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks,
When stubbly he did repugn the truth,
About a certain question in the law,
Argued me at the duke of York and him;
With other vile and ignominious terms:
In contutation of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my lord's worthiness,
I crave the benefit of law of arms,
Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord; For though he seem, with forged counterfeit, To set a gloss upon his bold intent.
Yet know my lord, I provok'd by him; And he first took exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing—that the paleness of this flower Bewray'd the fairness of my master's heart.
York. None but this make, Somerset, be let.
Som. Your private grudge, my lord of York, will out;
Though ne'er so cunningly you smother it.
When, for so slight and frivolous a cause,
Such factions emulations shall arise!
Good cousins both, of York and Somerset, Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.
York. Let this dissension first be tried by fight; And then your highness shall command a peace.
Som. The quarrel toucheth none but us alone; Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then.
York. There is my pledge; accept it, Somerset.
Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.
Bus. Confirm it so, mine honorable lord.
Glo. Confirm it so! contemned be your strife, And perish ye, with your audacious pride! Presumptuous vassals! are you not ashamed, With this immodest clamorous exclamation, To trouble and disturb the king and us! And you, my lords,—methinks, you do not well, To bear with their perverse objections;
Much less, to take occasion from their mouths To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves;
Let me persuade you take a better course.

[Exeunt.]

K. Hen. Come hither, you that would be combattants;
The period of thy tyranny approacheth.
On us thou canst not enter but by death:
For, I protest, we are well fortified,
And strong amongst to issue out thy flight:
If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the staves of war to tangle thee:
On our side there are those who will pack thee,
To walk thee from the liberty of flight:
And no way canst thou turn thee for redress,
But death doth front thee with apparent spoil,
And strength, that now begins to join,
Finish the process of this sandy shore,
These eyes, that see thee now well colored,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.

[Drawn after Eff.

Hark! hark! the dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;
And mine shall ring thy dire depois.'

[Enter York, with Forces; to him a Messenger. York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That doseg't the mighty army of the dauphin?
Mess. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out,
That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his power,
To fight with Talbot: As he march'd along,
Ily by your espials were discovered
Two sanguine troops than that the dauphin led:
Which slaughtered him, and made their march for Bourdeaux.
York. A plague upon that villain Somerset;
That thus delays my promised supply
Of Englishmen, that were levied to this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am lov'd by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier:
God comfort him in his necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English strength,
Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spar to the presence of the noble Talbot;
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron,
And hemm'd about with grim destruction:
To either hand no like duke! to either York!
Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's honor.
York. O God! that Somerset—who in proud heart
Doth stop my cornets—were in Talbot's place!
So would we save a valiant gentleman,
By inflicting a traitor and a coward.
Mad ice, and wrathful fury, makes me weep,
That this we die, while remiss traitors sleep.
Lucy. I see some succeed to hollow lord!
York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word:
We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get;
All long of this vile traitor Somerset.
Lucy. Then, God take mercy on brave Talbot's soul!

[Exeunt.
KING HENRY VI.

And on his son, young John; whom, two hours since,
I met in travel toward his warlike father.
These seven years did not Talbot see his son;
And now they meet where both their lives are done.
Lucy, Art thou what joy shall noble Talbot have,
To bid his young son welcome to his grave?
Away! vexation almost stops my breath,
That sadden'd friends greet in the hour of death.—
Lucy, Art thou not now at my father's tomb?
But curse the cause I cannot aid the man.—
Maine, Blos, Pouchers, and Tours, are won away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay.
[Exit.

Lucy, while the vulture of solitude
Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders,
Sleeping neglects dot betray to loss
The conquest of our scarce-cold conqueror,
That even our king to-day may know'st his son.
Henry the Faithful: Whiles they each other cross,
Lives, honors, lands, and all, hurry to loss. [Exit.

SCENE IV. — Other Plaints of Gascony.

Enter Somerset, with his Forces; an Officer of Talbot's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now;
This expedition was by York, and Talbot,
Too rashly plotted; all our general force
Might with a silly of the very town
Be buckled with: the over-laning Talbot.
Both said and all his grace of former days.
By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure
York set him on to fight, and die in shame,
That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name.

Here is not innumerable fortune, who with me
Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth to aid.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Som. How now, sir William! whither were you sent?
Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold lord Talbot;
Who, ranc'ring about with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset,
To beat assailing death from his weak legions.
And whiles the honorable captam there
Drops bloody sweat from his war-weary limbs,
And, in advantage, ring ing, looks for rescue.
You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honor,
Keep off about with worthless emulation.
Let not your private discord keep you away,
The level succours that should lend him aid,
While he, renowned noble gentleman,
Yields up his life unto a world of odds.
Other the Bastard, Charles, and Talbot,
Alencon, Reinhimer, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. York set him on, York should have sent him aid.
Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims;
Swearing that you withheld his levied horse,
Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the horse:
I love him little, but less love,
And take but slight, to own him on sending me.
Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Bath now on't, 'tisry the noble-minded Talbot:
Never to England shall he bear his life;
But dies, betray'd to fortune by your strike.

Som. Come, go; I will despatch the horsemen straight.
Within six hours they will be at his aid.
Lucy. Too late comes rescue: he is ta'en or slain:
For by he could not, if he would have fled;
And if he did not, and Talbot never, then he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot then was true!
Lucy. His name lives in the world, his shame in you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The English Camp near Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot, and JOHN his Son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagem of war;

That Talbot's name might be in thee reviv'd,
When sea and tower, and each castle wall shall curse,
Should bring thy father to his drooping chair.
But,—0 munificent and ill-boding stars!—
Now thou art come into a fast of death,
A terrible and unavow'd danger:
Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest horse;
And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sudden flight; come, daily haste; be gone.

John. Father, I am too young for Talbot's blood,
That barely fled when noble Talbot stood.
Tal. Fly, to revenge my death, if I be slain.
John. He, that flies so, will never return again.
Tal. If love, or duty, he that both together are to die.
John. Then let me stay; and, father, do you fly:
Your loss is great, so your regard's should be;
My worth pakenish, no less is known in me.

[John, his son, enters, and exits.

Enter shortly the Duke of Exeter, with 20 horsemen.

Exe. The vulture of Talbot mounts his prey;
His face with rage and scorn is contemned;
And, from the pride of Gallia rescued thee.
The irreverent bastard Orleans—that drew blood
From thee, my boy; and had the mainhooden
Of thy first fight,—I soon encountered;
And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed
Some of his bastard blood; and, in disgrace,
Bespoke him thus: Contaminat, bas, 2

2 For unavoidable
3 Your care of your own safety.

[End of Scene.]
FIRST PART OF

Act IV.

CHAP. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in.

We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bust. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging mad.

Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Puc. Once I encountered him, and thus I said,

To have taken youth, he vanquished by a maid.

But Talbot's blood, majestic in his scorn—

He answer'd thus: Young Talbot has not born
To be the pillow of a giant's wench; so

In the bowels of the French, he fought proudly, as unworthy light.

Durst, doubtless, he would have made a noble knight,

To see, where he lies inherited in the arms Of the most bloody murder of his harms.

Bust. Hiew them to pieces, hack their bones asunder;

Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.

Char. O, no; forbear: for that which we have fled During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter Sir William Lucy, attended, a French Herald preceding.

Lucy. Herald, conduct me to the dauphin's tent; to know Who hath obtained the glory of the day.

Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission, dauphin! 'tis a mere French word.

We English warriors not what it means.

Char. I can see what prisoners thou hast taken; And to survey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners ask' st thou! hell our prison

But tell me whom thou seek'st.

Lucy. Where is the great Alceis of the field, Vanquish lord Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury—

Created, for his rare success in arms,

Great earl of Washford, Waterford, and Valence; Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchinhelf, Lord Strange of Blackmore, lord Verdon of Alton, Lord Llewellyn, lord Furnival of Hennefiel, The three victorious lords of Falconbridge; Knight of the noble order of saint George, Worthy Michael of Acre, and the golden fleece, Great marshall to Henry the Sixth,

Of all his wars within the realm of France?

Puc. Here is a sily stately style indeed!

Thou see'st that two hundred fifty knights hath, Writes not so tedious a style as this—

Him, that thou最大 with all these titles, Stingy and flyed, lies here at our feet.

Lucy. Towering-slain! the Frenchmen's only scourge.

Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis! O, were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd, That I, in rage, might shoot them at your faces! O, that I could but call these dead to life!

It were enough to fright the realm of France:

Were but his picture left among you here, I would amaze the proudest of you all.

Give me their bodies that I may bear them hence.

And give them burial as seems their worth.

Puc. I think, this usurper is old Talbot's ghost, He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit, For God's sake, let him have 'em; to keep them hence.

They would but sink, and putrefy the air.

Char. Go, take their bodies hence.

Lucy. I'll bear them hence But from their ashes shall be reared A phalanx that shall make all France afraid.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with 'em what thou wilt.

And now to Paris, in this conquering vein; All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain.

[Exeunt.]
ACT V.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, and Exeter.

K. Hen. Have you perus’d the letters from the pope,
And the emperour, and the earl of Armagnac?
Glo. I have, my lord; and their intent is this,—
They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a godly peace concluded of,
Between the realms of England and of France.
K. Hen. How doth your grace affect their motion?
Glo. Well, my good lord; and as the only means
To stop confusion of our Christian blood,
And establish quietness on every side.
K. Hen. As, marry, uncle; lor I always thought,
It was both monstrous and unnatural,
That such immunities and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.
Glo. Beside, my lord,—the sooner to effect
And surer bind, this knot of amity,—
The earl of Armagnac,—near knout to Charles,
A man of great authority in France,—
Profers his only daughter to your grace
In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.
K. Hen. Marriage, uncle, alas! my years are young;
And fitter is my study and my books,
Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.
Yet, call the ambassadors; and, as you please,
So let them have their answer every one:
I shall be well content with any choice,
Tends to God’s glory, and my country’s weal.

Enter a Legate, and two Ambassadors, with Wincheste, in a Cardinal’s Habit.

Exe. What is my lord of Winchester install’d,
And call’d unto a cardinal’s degree?
Then, I perceive, that will be verified,
Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,—
If once he come to be a cardinal,
He’ll make his cap equal with the crown.
K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits
Have been consider’d and debated on.
Your purpose is both good and reasonable:
And, therefore, are we certainly resolv’d
To draw conditions of a friendly peace;
Which, by my lord of Winchester, we mean
Shall be express’d present unto France.
Glo. And for theprofers of my lord your master,
I have inform’d his highness so at large,
As—liking of the lady’s virtuous gifts,
Herculean beauty, and the value of her dowry,—
He doth intend she shall be England’s queen.
K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contract,
Bear her this jewel, [To the Amb.] pledge of my affection,
And so, my lord protector, see them guarded,
And safely brought to Dover; where, insip’d,
Commit them to the fortune of the sea.
[Exeunt King Henry and Train; Gloster, Exeter, and Ambassadors.

Win. Stay, my lord legate; you shall first receive
The sum of money, which I promised should be deliver’d to his holiness;
For clothing me in these grave ornaments.
Leg. I will attend upon your lordship’s leisure.
Win. Now, Winchester will not submit, I traw,
Or be inferior to the proudest peer.
Humphrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That neither in birth, nor in authority,
The bishop shall be overborne by thee;
The other make thee stoope, and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—France. Plains in Anjou.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Aleyson, La Pucelle, and Forces, Marching.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits.

1Inhumanity.

2Chars worn about the person.

3The north was supposed to be the particular habitation of bad spirits.
Puc. A plagueing mischief light on Charles, and thee! And may ye both be suddenly surprised! By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds! Yours a self-borning? ha? enchantress, old thy tongue;

Puc. I pray thee, give me leave to curse a while. Your grace, so miscreant, when thou comest to the stage,

Exit:

Actor. Enter Suffolk, leading to Lady Margareet.

Suf. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner. [Gazes on her.]

O fairest beauty, do not fear, nor flout For that I am a man of peace but with decent hands, And lay them gently on thy tender side.

I kiss these fingers [Kissing her hand] for eternal peace: Who art thou? art thou that I may honor thee.

Margaret. My name and name; and daughter to a king,
The king of Naples, whose' thou art.

Suf. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.

Be not offended, nature's miracle,

Thou art ador'd to be taken by me:

So doth the swan her downy cygnet save,

Keep not the prisoners under with her wings. Yea, if this service usage once offended,

Go, and be free again as Suffolk's friend,

[She turns away as going.]

O, stay!—I have no power to save her pass;

My hand would free her, but my heart says—no. As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,

Twinkling another counterfeited beam,

So doth this gorgeous beauty adore thy honor, given my life to view her face,

Fain would I woe her, yet I dare not speak; I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind: Fye, de la Poodle! disable not thyself;

Just not a tongue! Is she not here thy prisoner! Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight? Ay, beauty's primacy is such, Confounds the tongue, and makes the senses rough.

And Suffolk, all thy name be so,—What ransom must I pay before I pass?

For I perceive, I am thy prisoner.

Suf. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suit, Before thou make a trial of her love?

Mar. Why speak'st thou not what ransom must I pay!

Suf. She's beautiful; and therefore to be woud:

She is a woman; therefore to be won.

[Aside.] Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom, yen, or no?

Suf. Fond man! remember that thou hast a wife; Then how can Margaret be thy paramour! [Aside.] Mar. Methinks she were best leave him for he will not hear.

Suf. There all is mard; there lies a coding card. Mar. He talks at random; sure the man is mad.

Suf. I will ask of Suffolk, what occasion thou may be had.

Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.

Suf. I will win this lady Margaret. For whom?

Why dost thou win my king? Tush! that's a wooden thing:

Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter.

Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied,

And peace established between these realms, But there remains a scruple in that too: For though her father be the king of Naples, Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet is he poor, And our nobility will scorn the match.

Mar. He, Henry, captivate! I see not at a loss!

Suf. It shall be so, disdain them better so;

Reny is youthful, and will quickly yield.——

[Aside.]

Maham I have a secret to reveal.

Mar. What though I be enthralld! he seems a knight,

And were not any way dishonour me.

[Aside.] Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

Mar. Perhaps, I shall be rescued by the French; And then I need not crave his courtesy.

Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause.

Mar. Tush! women have been captivate cre.

[Aside.]

Suf. Lady, wherefore talk you so!

Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but guilt for guilt.

Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose

Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?

Mar. To be a queen in bondage, is more vile, Than a slave in base servitude;

For princes should be free.

Suf. And so shall you

If happy England's royal king be free.

Mar. Why, what concurs his freedom unto me?

Suf. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen,

To put a golden sceptre in thy hand, And a precious crown upon thy head, If thou wilt condone to be my—

Mar. What?

Suf. His love.

Mar. So unworthy to be Henry's wife.

Suf. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am

To woo so fair a dame to be his wife, And have no portion in the choice myself.

How canst thou desire; are you so content?

Mar. An if my father please, I am content.

Suf. Then call our captains, and our colors forth

And, madam, at your father's castle walls

We'll crave a parley, to confer with him.

[Troops come forward.]

A Parley sounded. Enter Reignier, on the Walls

See, Suf, Reignier, see, thy daughter prisoner.

Reig. To whom?

Suf. To me.

Reig. Suffolk, what remedy? I am a soldier; and unapt to weep, Or to exclaim on fortune's unheaviness.

Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord: Consider this, and thy queen's honor. Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king; Whom I with pain have woud and won thereto, And this her easy-hand imprisonment Hath paid thy daughter princely liberty.

Reig. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks!

Suf. Fair Margaret knows, That Suffolk doth not flatter, nor deceive.

Reig. That is thy ransom. I deliver her!

To give thee answer of thy just demand.

[Exit from the Walls.]

Suf. And here I will expect thy coming.
Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.

Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?

Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity;
That was begotten by the villain's kiss.

I am with child, ye bloody homicides;
Murder not then the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hate me to a violent death.

York. What the heavens foreordain! the holy maid with child!

War. The greatest miracle that e'er ye wrought:
Is all your strict preciseness come to this?

York. She and the dauphin have been in a juggling;
I do imagine what would be her refuge.

War. Well, go to; we will have no bastards live;
Especially since Charles must father it.

Puc. You are deceiv'd; my child is none of his:
It was Alençon that enjoy'd my love.

York. Alençon! that notorious Machiavel!
It dies, as if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. Then lead me hence; with whom I have no choice but death.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Shall now be your companions; and thou, too,
Drive to your break your necks, or hang yourselves!

York. Break thou in pieces, and consume to ashes,
The foul accursed minister of hell!

Enter Cardinal Beaufort, attended.

Char. Lord regent, do I greet your excellence
With less complacency from the king.
For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,
Moved with remorse of these outrageous bruis's,
Have earnestly implor'd a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;
And here at hand the dauphin, and his train,
Approach, to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn'd to this effect?
After the slaughter of so many pupils?
So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers,
That in this quarrel have been overthrown,
And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,
Must I at last conclude an ignominious peace?
Have we not lost most part of all the towns,
By treason, falsehood, and by treachery,
Our great praetors, who had conquer'd
O, Warwick, Warwick! I breathe with grief
The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York; if we conclude a peace,
It shall be with such strict and severe covenants,
As little may the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter Charles, attended; Alençon, Bastard, Regnier, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peaceful truce should be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by yourselves
What the conditions of that lasting peace must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling choler
Chokes the hollow passage of my poison'd voice,
By which the ears of these our lawful enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:
That—in regard king Henry gives consent,
Of more compassion, and of lenity. To ease the country of distress and war,
And suffer you to breathe in peaceful truth—
You shall become true liege-men to his crown:
And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear
to pay in tribute, and to submit to me.
Thou shalt be placed as vicegerent under him,
And shall enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alençon must he be then a shadow of himself?
Adorn his temple with a coronet.⁴

⁴ Compassion. ⁵ Coronet is here used for crown.
And yet, in substance and authority, Rehearsed out of his present thoughts! This prolifer is absurd and reasonless.

Char. This known, already, that I am possess’d With more than half the Gallien territories, And there not reverenced for their lawful king: Shall I, for love of the rest unvanquish’d, Detract so much from that prerogative, As to be called but vency of the whole? Not an ambassador, I’ll rather shew That which I have, than, coveting for more, Be cast from possibility of all.

York. Insulting: Charles hath by secret means Used me, and press’d to obtain a league; And, now the matter grows to compromise, Stand’st thou aloof upon comparison? Either accept the title thou usurp’d, Or benefit proceeding from our king; And not of any challenge of desert, Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstancy To cavil in the course of this contract: If once it be neglected, ten to one, We shall not find like opportunity.

Allen. To say the truth, it is your policy, To save your subjects from such measure: And ruthless slaughter, as are daily seen By our proceeding in hostility; And therefore take not what compact of a truce, Although you break it when your pleasure serves. [Aside to Charles.]

War. How sa’st thou, Charles! shall our condition stand? Char. It shall: Only reserve’d, you claim no interest In any of our towns of garrison.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty; As thou art knight, never to disdain, Nor rebel to the crown of England, Thou not thy nobles, to the crown of England— [Cred. gives letters of legity.] So, now dismiss your army when you please; Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still, For here we entertain a solemn peace. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Elder King Henry in conference with Suffolk; Glosstor, and Exeter, following.

K. Hen. Your wondrous rare description, noble earl, Of beauties, your Margaret hath astonish’d me: Her virtues, grace with external gills, Do breed love’s settled passions in my heart: And like as rigor in tempestuous gusts Provideth the utmost bulk against the tide; So am I driven by beauty’s howling wind, Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive Where may have fruition of her love.

Suff. Tush! my good lord! this superficial tale Is but a preface of her worthy praise: The chief perfections of that lovely dame, Did sufficient skill to utter them; Would make a volume of cutting lines, Able to ravish any dull conceit. And, which is more, she is not so divine, So full replete with choice of all delights, But, with as humble lowliness, of mind, She is content to be at your command; Command, I mean, of virtues, chaste intents, To love and honor Henry as her lord.

Suff. Therefore, my lord protector, give consent, That Margaret may be England’s royal queen.

Glo. Sir, should I give consent to fatter sin? You know my kindred, and my private affections. Yonder lady, whose beauty is betwixt’D unto another lady of esteem: How shall we then dispense with that contract, And with the honor your word with reproach! Suff. As doth the son of Henry, her protector. Or one, that, at a triumph having vowed

"Be content to live as the benefactor of our king."

A triumph then signal’d a public exhibition; such as a mask, or revel.

To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists By reason of his solitary odds.

A poor earl’s daughter is unequal odds: And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glo. Way, what, I pray, is Margaret more than

Her father is no better than an earl.

Although in glorious titles he excel.

Suff. Yes, my good lord, her father is a king, The kindred of the Nazzadion and Jerusalem.

And of such great authority in France, As his alliance will confirm our peace, And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. Nay, so the chief of Armagnacs may do, Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.

Exe. Beside, his wealth doth warrant liberal dowry.

While Reigmier sooner will receive, than give.

Suff. A dowry, my lord’s! disgrace not so your king, That he should be so abject, base, and poor, To choose for wealth, and not for perfect love. Henry is able to enrich his queen, And not to seek a queen to make him rich.

Suff. He will, but whom his grace affects, Must be companion of his nuptial bed, And therefore, lords, since he affects her most, It must of all these reasons bindeth us, In our opinion be should be a prudent. For what is wedlock forc’d, but a fraud, An age of discord and continual strife! Whereas the contrary bringeth forth bliss, And is a pattern of celestial people.

K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your report, My noble lord of Suffolk; or for that My tender youth was never yet attain’d With any passion of inflaming love, I cannot tell; but this I am assured, I feel such sharp disposition in my breast, Such fierce alarms both of hope and fear, As I am sick with working of my thoughts. Take, therefore, shipping: post, my lord, to France; Agree to any even’st, and prepare, That lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come To cross the seas to England, and be crown’d King Henry’s faithful and appointed queen; For you, expenses a sufficient charge. Among the people gather up a tenth. Regen. I say; for, till you do return, I rest peace her fit for none, but for a king, And you, good uncle, banish all allience, If you do censure me by what you were, Not what you are, I know it will excuse. This sudden execution of my will; And so conduct me, where from company, I may resolve and ruminate my grief. [Exit.

Glo. Ay, grief, I bear me, both at first and last. Your cousiness, and friends, Suffolk, and Exeter. [Exit.

Suff. Thus Suffolk hath prevail’d; and thus he goes, As did the youthful Paris once to Greece, With hope to find the like event in love, But prosper better than the Trojan did. Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king; But I will rule both her, the king, and realm.

[Exit Judge.]

ACT I.

Flourish of Trumpets; then Huzzays. Enter, on one side, King Henry, Duke of Gloster, Salisbury, Warwick, and Cardinal Beaufort; on the other, Queen Margaret, led in by Suffolk; York, Somerset, Buckingham, and others, following.

Suf. As by your high imperial majesty
I had in charge, at my departure for France,
As procurator to your excellency,
To marry princess Margaret for your grace;
So in the famous ancient city, Tours,—
In presence of the kings of France and Scil,
The dukes of Orleans, Calabar, Bretagne, Alençon.
Seven cardinals, twelve barons, twenty reverend bishops,—
I have perform'd my task, and was espoused:
And humbly now upon my bended knee,
In sight of England, and her lordly peers,
Deliver up my title in the queen
To your most gracious hands, that are the substance
Of that great shadow I did represent;
The happiest gift that ever marquis gave,
The fairest queen that ever king receiv'd.

K. Hen. Suffolk, arise.—Welcome, queen Margaret:

I can express no kinder sign of love,
Than this kind kiss.—O Lord, that lends me life,
Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness!
For thou hast given me, in this beauteous face,
A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.

Q. Mar. Great king of England, and my gracious lord;
The mutual conference that my mind hath had—
By day, by night, waking, and in my dreams;
In courtly company, or at my bedchamber—
With you, none other-fairest sovereign,
Makes me the holier to salute my king
With tender terms; such as my wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth minister.
K. Hen. Her sight did ravish: but, her grace in speech,
Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty,
Makes me, from wondering, fall to weeping joys;
Such is the fulness of my heart's content.—
Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love.

All. Long live queen Margaret, England's happiness!
Q. Mar. We thank you all. [Flourish.
Suf. My lord protector, so it please your grace,
Here are the articles of contracted peace,
Between our sovereign and the French king Charles,
For eighteen months, concluded by consent.

Beloved above all things.
Glo. [Reads.] Imprimis, It is agreed, between the French King, Charles, and William de la Pole, marquis de Boussac, that the queen, Queen Henry, king of England,—that the said Henry shall espouse the lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier, king of Naples, Sicilia, and Jerusalem: and crown her queen, and sit upon the throne of the Heretick May next ensuing.—Item,—That the duchy of Anjou, and the county of Maine, shall be released and delivered to the king, her father.—

K. Hen. Uncle, now now! Glo. Pardon me, gracious lord; Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart, And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further. But I will lay these papers to one side, and read on. Car. Item,—It is further agreed between them,—that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered to the queen, her father; and she sent over of the king of England's own proper cost and charges, without having dowry.

K. Hen. They please us well.—Lord marquess, We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk, And girt thee with the sword.—

Cousin of York, we here discharge thy grace From being regent in the parts of France, Till term of eighteen months be full expired.—

Thanks, uncle Winchester, Gloster, York, and Buckingham,

Somerset, Salisbury and Warwick; We all thank thee for this great favor done, In entertainment to my princely queen. Comforted in this, and with all special proviso To see her coronation be performed.

Exeunt King, Queen, and Suffolk.

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state, To you, Duke Humphrey most unkind my grieve, Your grief, the common grief of all the land. What! did my brother Henry spend his youth His valor, soul, and people in the wars! Did he so often lodge in open field, In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat, To conquer France, his true inheritance! And did my brother Bedford toil his wits, To mend his brother, that Henry, grieve? Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham, Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick, Reced'd deep scars in France and Normandy! Or with my uncle Beaufort, and myself, With all the learned council of the realm, Studied so long, sat in the council-house, Early and late, deliberating to and fro, How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe! And hath his highness in his infancy Become so strong, in despite of men? And shall these labors, and these honors, die? Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance, Your deeds of war, and all our counsel, die? 1 peers of England most unkind is it for their labor and trouble? Faith! this marriage, cancelling your fame: Bittling your names from books of memory: Razing the characters of your renown; Dealing extremities of conquer'd France; Undoing all, as all had never been! Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse? This peroration with such circumstance?

For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still.

Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can; But if we cannot, we should give Suffolk, the new-named duke that rules the roost, Hath given the duchies of Anjou and Maine, Into the poor king Reignier, whose large style And greatness is the comfort of his name. Anjou and Maine, myself did win them both; Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer: And are the cities that I got with wounds, Doth not I again with peacefull words! Mort Dieu! York. For Suffolk's duke—may he be suffocate

This speech, crowded with so many circumstances of aggravation.

That dimed the honor of this wakilde isle! France should have torn and rent my very heart, Before I come to this place, I saw it in my never read but England's kings have had Large sums of gold, and dowries, with their wives: And our king Henry gives away his own, Tearing him with all that lyings in his manus. Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before, That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteen, For cost and charges in transporting her! She should have stay'd in France, and star'd in France.

Car. My lord of Gloster, now you grow too hot: It was the pleasure of my lord the king.

Glo. My lord of Winchester, I know your mind; 'Tis not my speeches that you do mislike, 'Tis my delat'ry deliver'd to the duke your father; and she sent over of the king of England's own proper cost and charges, without having dowry.

Car. Item. Here, our ancient bick'ring,—

Lightnings, lawsuit, and, what is most, I am gone; I prophesied—France will be lost ere long. [Exit.

Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage. 'Tis known to you, he is mine enemy: Nay, more, an enemy unto you all: And no great friend, I fear me, to the king. Consider, lords, he is the next of blood, And heir apparant to the English crown; Had he not an arm bearing by his majestie, And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west, There's reason he should be displeas'd at it, Look to it, lords! let not his smoothing words Slew the hearts of us with wise and weighty compeas! What though the common people favor him, Calling him—Humphrey, the good duke of Gloster; Clapping their hands, and giving his league, With—God preserve the good duke Humphrey! I fear me, lords, for this full flattering gloss, He will be found a dangerous protector.

Buck. Why should he then protect our sovereign, He being of age to govern himself? Cousin of Somerset, join you with me, And with me, with the duke of Somerset, We'll quickly hoise duke Humphrey from his sent.

Car. This weighty business will not brook delay; I'll to the duke of Suffolk presently. [Exit.

Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's pride, And greatness of his place, be grief to us, Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal; His insolence is more intolerable Than all the princes in the land beside; If Gloster be displaced, he'll be protector.

Buck. If Somerset and Gloster be protector, Despite duke Humphrey, or the cardinal.

Exeunt Buckingham and Somerset.

Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him. While he labors to the publick weal, Believes it to us for the labor of the realm. I never saw but Humphrey duke of Gloster Did bear him like a noble gentleman, But have I seen the haughty cardinal— More like a soldier, than a man of 'the church, As stout, and proud, as he were lord of all,— Never a man but a dare-devil, and menace him! Unlike the ruler of a commonwealth, Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age! Thy deeds, thy plainness, and thy house-keeping, To keep Humphrey the greatest favor of the commons, Excepting none but good duke Henry;— And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland, In bringing them to civil discipline; What can we to braid and suit the pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal, When thou wert regent for our sovereign, Have made thee fear 'dand honord of the people; Join we together, for the publick good; In what we can to bridge and suit the pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal, The pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal, With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition; And, as we may, cherish duke Humphrey's deeds, While they do and the profit of the land,

War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land, And common profit of his country!

York. And so says York; for he hath greatest cause.

Sal. What's make haste away, and look unto the main.

War. Unto the main! O father, Maine is lost; *Stranglings.
That Maine, which by main force Warwick did
And would have kept, so long as breath did last:
Maine, father, you meant; but I meant Maine;
Which I will win from France, or else I'll die.
[Exit Warwick and Salisbury.
York. AnHon and Maine are given to the French;
Paris is lost; the state of Normandy
Shall be a prey, and all the hopes they are gone:
Suffolk concluded on the articles;
The peers agreed; and Henry was well pleas'd,
To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.
I think they blainc them all; What is't to them?
To thine give they away, and not their own.
Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their
W-armd and purchase friends, and give to courtezans,
Still revelling, like lords, till all be gone
While as the silly owner of the goods
Weepeth over, and wring's his hapless hands;
And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,
While all is star'd, and all is borne away;
Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own.
So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue.
While his own lands are burden'd for, and sold,
Methinks, the realms of England, France, and Irland,
Bear they a swelling on my flesh and blood,
As did the fatal brand of Arragon burn'd,
Unto the prince's heart of Calydon.
Andown and Maine, both given out to the French!
York, the eyes of the lords of France, and
Even as I have of fertile England's soil.
A day will come, when York shall claim his own;
And therefore I will take the Nevill's part,
And make a show of love to proud Humphrey,
And, when I spy advantage, claim we crown,
For that's the golden mark I seek to hit:
Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
Nor hold his sceptre in his children's hand,
Nor wear the diadem upon his head,
Whose church-like honors fit not for a crown.
Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve;
And hold thy peace, and waken, when others be asleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state;
Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love,
With his new bride, and England's dear-bought live upon,
And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars:
Then will I raise the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfumed;
And I shall bear the standard of York,
To cradle with the house of Lancaster,
And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath castl'd England abroad.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Duke of Gloster's
House.

Enter Gloster and the Duchess.

Duch. Why doops my lord, like ever-risen'd eorn,
Hanging the head at Ceres' plenteous load?
Why doth the great duke Humphrey knit his brows,
As frowning at the manners of the day?
Why are these eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
Gazing on which seems to dim thy sight?
Wilt thou then there! King Henry's diadem,
E'en'd with all the honors of the world?
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face.
Until thy head be cireled with the same.
From thy head by hand, reach to the glorious gold—
What, is't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine:
And, having both together head'y it up,
We'll both together hit our heads to heaven;
And never so more abuse our sight so low,
As to vanquish one glance up-ward.
Glo. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy lord,
Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts;
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my king and in his child is the king,
Be my last breathing in this mortal world!
My troubous dream this night doth make me sad,
"For Richlieh.
"Maecenas; whose life was to continue only so long as a certain fire-brand should last. His mother, when having thrown it into the fire, expired in torment."

Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll require it.

With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.
Glo. Methought, this staff, mine office-badge in

Scene was broke in twain, by whom, I have forgot,
But, as I think, it was by the cardinal;
And on the pieces of the broken wand
There were直观 the heads of all the dukes of some sort,
And William de la Pole first duke of Suffolk.
This was my dream; what it doth bode, God knows.
Duch. Tis, this was nothing but an argument
That he that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove,
Shall lose his head for his presumption.
But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke,
Methought, I sat in seat of majesty,
In the cardinal's chair, and Wentworth,
And in that chair where kings and queens are crownd;

Where Henry and dame Margaret, kneel'd to me,
And on my head did set the diadem.

Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide outright:
Presumptuous dame, ill-nurtur'd Eleanor!
Art thou not second woman in the realm?
And the protector's wife, would I not lack,
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Above the reach or compass of thy thought?
And wilt thou now to my upbraiding hearken,
To tumble down thy husband, and all else,
From top of honor to disgrace's feet?
Away from me, and let me hear no more.
Duch. What, what, what, that art so cholie
With Eleanor for telling but her dreams?
Next time, I'll keep my dreams unto myself,
And not becheck'd.
Glo. Nay, be not angry, I am pleas'd again.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord protector, 'tis his highness' pleasure,
You do prepare to ride unto Saint Albans,
Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk.
Glo. I go, I go, sweet Nell, thou comest with us.
Duch. Yes, good my lord, I'll follow presently.
[Exit Gloster and Messenger.

Follow I must, I cannot go before,
While Gloster bears this base and cumbard mind.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks:
And, being a woman's wife, I could not lack
To play my part in fortune's pageant.
Where are you there! sir John? say, fear not, man,
We are alone; here's none but thee, and I.

Enter Hume.

Hume. Jesu preserve your royal majesty!
Duch. What say'ist thou, majesty? I am but grace.
Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's advice,
Your grace's title shall be multiplied.
Duch. What say'ist thou, man! hast thou as yet confer'd
With Marjory Jourdain, the cunning witch;
And Roger Boleingroke, the conjurer;
And will they undertake to do me good?
Hume. This they have promised,—to show your highness
A spirit rais'd from depth of under ground,
That shall make answer to your majesty,
As by your grace shall be propounded him.
Duch. It is enough; I'll think upon the questions:
When from Saint Albans we do make return,
We'll see the things agreed to the full.
Here, Hume, take this reward; make merry, man,
With thy condescend in this weighty cause.
[Exit Hume.

Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold;
Marry, and shall. But how now, sir John Hume?
Seal up your lips, and give no words but—mum—
The business is asked aye and nay, whether Dame Eleanor gives gold, to bring the witch;
Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil.
Yet have I done this for another coast:
I dare not stay from the rich cardinal;
And from the great and new-made duke of Suffolk;
Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,
They, knowing dame Eleanor's aspiring humor,
Where. "A title frequently bestowed on the clergy."
Have hired me to undermine the duchess,
And buzz these conjurations in her brain.
They say, a crafty knife does need no broker;
Yet these Suckldog and the cardinal's broker,
Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near
To call them both a pair of crafty knaves.
Well, so it stands; And thus, I fear, at last,
How will the day's work end with the day's wreck;
And her attainut will be Humphrey's fall:
Sorh how it will, I shall have gold for all. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Peter, and others, with Petitions.

1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close; my lord protector will come this way by-and-by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill.

2 Pet. Marry, the lord protect him, for he's a good fellow; then bless him! (Reads.)

Enter Suffolk, and Queen Margaret.

3 Pet. Here's a comes, methinks, and the queen with him: I'll be the first, sure.

2 Pet. Come back, last; this is the duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suf. How now, fellow! wouldnst anything with me?

1 Pet. I pray my lord, pardon me! I took ye for my lord protector.

Q. Mar. [Reading the superscription.] To my lord protector! are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them; What is thine?

2 Pet. Mine is, an 't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife, and all, from me.

3 Pet. That is something indeed.—What's yours?—What's here! [Reads.] Against the Duke of York, for encroaching the counties of Merkhit!—How now, sir knave?

2 Pet. Aha, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Pete. [Presenting his Petition.] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying, That the duke of York hath a false heir to the crown.

Q. Mar. What say you?—DID the duke of York say, he was rightful heir to the crown! ?

2 Pet. That my master was! No, forsooth: my master said, That he was, and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]—Take this fellow in, and send by his master with a pursuivant presently:—we'll hear more of your matter before the king. —[Exeunt Servants with Petition.

Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected Under the wings of our protector grace, Begin your suits anew, and sue to his grace for your king is old enough.

[Enter Petitioners. Tears the Petition.

Away, base cullions! Suffolk, let them go. All gone, let's be gone. —[Exeunt Petitioners.

Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise,
Is this the fashion in the court of England?
Is this the government of Britian's isle,
And this the royalty of Albion's king?
What, shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Gloucester's government?

Am I a queen in title and in style,
And must be made a subject to a duke?
I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours Thou canst a title in honor of my love.
And stol'st away the ladies' hearts in France;
If thou hadst been a king, they had resembled thee,
In courage, courtship, and proportion:
But all his mind is bent to holliness.
The noble Alc-Maries on his heads;
His champions are—the prophets and apostles;
His weapons, holy swords of sacred writ;
His study is his tilled-yard, and his loves
And tales of canonized saints.
I would, the college of cardinals
Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome,
And set the triple crown upon his head;
That the world should see a state of purity.
Suf. Madam, be patient: as I was cause
Your highness came to England, so will I
In England work your grace's full content.

Q. Mar. Besides the hateful protector, have we Beauchamp,
The imperious earl-in-chambers; Somerset, Buckinghaim.
And grumbling York and not the least of these, but can do more in England than the king.
Cardinal Drummond, that great lord, that great master of all,
Cannot do more in England than the Nevils;
Salisbury, and Warwick, are no simple prens.

Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much.

As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies, More high than simple; than duke Humphrey's strew.

Strangers in court do take her for the queen:
She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
And in her heart she scorns her poverty:
She won't live not to be avenged on him:
Contemptuous base-born callas as she is,
She vaunted amongst her minions other day,
The very train of her worst wearing-gown Was worth more than all my father's lands.
Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter.

Suf. Madam, myself have hied a bush for her;
And placed a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to the lutes,
And never mount to trouble you again.
So, let her rest: and, madam, list to me;
For I am base, and counsel you in this.
Although we fancy not the cardinal,
Yet must we join with him, and with the lords,
Till we have brought duke Humphrey in disgrace.

Q. Mar. What, the Duke of Albion?—this last complaint
Will make but little for his benefit:
So, one by one, we'll wean them all at last,
And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Enter KING HENRY; YORK, AND SOMERSET CONFERRING.

K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not what Somerset, or York, all's one to me.
York. If York have the hain deinai duce in France, Then let him be deny'd the regentship.
Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place, Let any other regent, I will yield to him.
War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or no, Dispute not that: York is the worthier.
Carr. Ambitious Warwick, let thy better speak.
War. The cardinal's not the better in the field. Buck. All in this presence, are thy betters, WarwicK.
War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.
Som. And—som—show some reason;—Buckingham.

Why Somerset should be prefer'd in this.
Q. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it so. God save the king, is the motto of the realm.
To give his censure: these are no woman's matters.
Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your censure?
To be protector of his excellence?
Gla. Madam, I am protector of the realm;
And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.
Suf. Resign it then, and leave thine influence.
Q. Mar. I say, I will resign it.
Gla. Because thou wert king, (as who is king but thou?)
The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck:
The dauphin hath prevaid beyond the seas;
And all the peers and nobles of the realm
Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.
Carr. The commonans hast took a' the English bags
Are landed and lean'd with thy extortions.
Som. Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost me more of public treasury.
Buck. Thy cruelty in execution,
Upon outlanders, hath exceeded law,
And left thee to the mercy of the law.
Suf. This was the virtue of our sovereigns in France,—
If they were known, as the suspect is great,—
Would make thee quickly hop without thy head.

[Exit Gloucester. The Queen drogs her fan.

Give me my master's letter, what, stand in the street?
[Give the Duchess a box on the ear. I cry you mercy, madam; Was it you?
Buck. Wasn't I, yea, it was, proud Frenchman?

Madam, husband!"

3 But, truc.
4. c. e. The complaint of Peter, the armorere's man, against his master.
5. Denied.
6. Censure here means simple judgment or epigram.
Scene IV.]

KING HENRY VI.

Could I come near your beauty with my nails, I'd set my ten commandments in your face. [Exeunt.

K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet; 'twas against her will. [Exit.

Duck. Against her will! Good king, look to't in time; She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby: The worst place most masterless no noble cares, She shall not strike dame Eleanor unrevenged. [Exit DUCHESS.

Duck. Lord Cardinal, I will follow Eleanor, And like a yelling Hymne... I'll have my ends. She's tickled now; her tune can need no spurs, She'll gallop last enough to her destruction. [Exit BUCKINGHAM.

Re-enter Gloster.

Glo. Now, lords, my choler is blown over, With walking once about the quadrangle, I come to talk of commonwealth affairs. As for your spiteful false objections, Prove them, and I'll be open to the law: But God in mercy so deal with my soul, As I in duty love my king and country! But, to the matter that we have in hand— I say, my sovereign, York is meteest To be your regent in the realm of France.

Suf. Before we make election, give me leave To show some reason, of no little force, That York were most unmerry at the present. York. I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmerry First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride: Next, if I be appointed for the place, My kinsman Somerset will keep me here, Without discharge, money, or furniture, Till France be won into the damphin's hands. Last time, I danced attendance on his will, Till Pans was burnt, I scarce had leisure. War. That I can witness, and a faster fact Did never traitor in the land commit. Suf. Peace, head-strong Warwick! Don't use me like a prude, why should I hold my peace?

Enter SERVANTS OF SUFFOLK, bringing in HORNER and PETER.

Suf. Becase here is a man accus'd of treason: Pray God the duke of York excuse himself! York. Dost any one accuse York for a traitor? K. Hen. What mean'st thou, Suffolk? tell me: What are these? Suf. Please it your majesty, this is the man That did accuse him of his master's crime: His words were these;—that Richard, duke of York, Was rightful heir unto the English crown; And that your majesty was an usurper. K. Hen. Horne, was he, man, were these words? Hor. An, I shall please your majesty, I never said nor thought any such matter: God is my witness, I was never so much accused by the villain. Pet. By these ten hands, he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were scouring my lord of York's arms. York. Base dunghill villain, and mechanical, I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's speech— I do beseech your royal majesty, Let me have all the rigor of the law. Hor. Alas, my lord, hang me, if ever I spake the words. My accuser is my prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be just with me: I have go'd I witness of this; therefore, beseech your majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law? Glo. This doom, my lord, if I may judge;— Let Somerset he regent o'er the French, Because in York this breeds suspicion; And let us have a French league at home For single combat in convenient place; And for the oath witness of his servant's malice; Then the law, and this duke Humphrey's doom. K. Hen. Then be it so. My lord of Somerset, We make your grace lord regent o'er the French. Sum. I humbly thank your royal majesty. Hor. And I accept the combat willingly. Pet. Alas, my lord, I cannot fight; for God's sake, pity my case! the spite of man prevail'd—The marks of her fingers and thumbs.

against me. O Lord, have mercy upon me! I shall never be able to fight a blow: O Lord, my heart! Glo. Sirrah, or you must fight, or else be hang'd. K. Hen. Away with them to prison, and the day of combat shall be the last of the next month.— Come, Somerset, we'll see thee sent away. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Duke of Gloucester's Garden.

Enter MARGERY JOUardin, Hume, Southwell, and BOLINGBROKE.

Hume. Come, my masters; the duchess, I tell you, expects performance of your promises. Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided: Will her ladyship behold and hear our execrations. Hume. Ay; What else? fear you not her courage. Boling. I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invincible spirit: But it shall be convenient, master Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we be below and make her believe, even, as we have done. [Exit Hume. Mother Jouardin, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth:—John Southwell, read you; and let us to our work.

Enter DUCEess, above.

Duck. Well said, my masters; and welcome all. To this gear? the sooner the better. Boling. The time, fair lady; we will know your times: Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night, The time of night when Troy was set on fire; The time when speck-owls cry, and ban-dogs howl, And spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves, That time best fits the work we have in hand. Madam, sit you, and fear not; we shall prove wise, We will make fast within a hollow'd verge. [Here they perform the ceremonies appurtenant, and make the circle; BOLINGBROKE, or SOUTHWELL, reads Conjurio etc., &C. 'TWERE MAD, and lights evilly; then the spirit rack'd.

Spire. Adsum. M. Jouardin. Asteth, By the eternal God, whose name and power Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask:— For, till thou speak, thou shalt not pass from hence. Spire. Ask what thou wilt—That I had said and done! Boling. First, of the King. Whel shall of him declare the treason! [Reading out of a paper. Spire. The duke yet lives that Henry shall dispose; But him outlive, and die a violent death. As the spirit speaks, SOUTHWELL wond'reth the cause.

Enter YORK and BUCKINGHAM, hastily, with their Guards, and others.

York. Lay hands upon these traitors, and their traitors. Beldamme, I think we watch'd you at an inch.— What, madam, are you there! the king and commons Are deeply indebted for this piece of pains: My lord protector will, I doubt it not, See you well guard'd it for these good deserts: And let us have a Jacob's ladder at home For single combat in convenient place; And for the oath witness of his servant's malice; Then the law, and this duke Humphrey's doom. K. Hen. Then be it so. My lord of Somerset, We make your grace lord regent o'er the French. Sum. I humbly thank your royal majesty. Hor. And I accept the combat willingly. Pet. Alas, my lord, I cannot fight; for God's sake, pity my case! the spite of man prevail'd—The marks of her fingers and thumbs.

*By exercise, Shakespeare invariably means to raise spirits and not to lay them.

Matier or business. Watch-dogs. Rewarde.
SECOND PART OF

We'll see your trinkets here all coming—
All.—Away!

[Exeunt Guards, with Southwell, Bolingbroke, &c.

York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch'd this well:
A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon!
Now pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.
What have we here? [Reads.]

The duke yet lives; that Henry shall depose,
But hid offire, and die a violent death.
With this it is just; [Aside.]

Tell me, what foil awaits the duke of Suffolk?
By water shall he die, and take his end.
What shall besieve the duke of Somerset?
Let him shun castles;
Sofer shall he be upon the sandy plains.

Then where castles mounted stand.
Come, come, my lords;
These oracles are hardly attain'd,
And have understood.
The king is now in progress towards Saint Albans,
With him, the husband of this lovely lady:
Thinker go these news, as fast as horse can carry
A sorry breakfast for my lord protector.

York. Your grace shall give me leave, my lord of York.
To be the post, in hope of his reward.
York. At your pleasure, my good lord.—Who's within there, ho!

Enter a Servant.

Invite my lords of Salisbury, and Warwick,
To sup with me to-morrow night.—Away.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Saint Albans.

Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Gloster, Cardinal, and Suffolk, with Falconers, bowing.

Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook?
I saw not better sport these seven years past:
Yet, by my troth, for chase, the wind was very high;
And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out.
K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon
And what a pitch she flew above the rest!—
To see how God in all his creatures works!
Yea, man and birds, are full of climbing high.
So merry, as it lies your majesty.
My lord protector's hawks do tower so well;
They know their master loves to be aloof,
And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.
God's own lord, his but a base wretch mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.
Car. I thought as much; he'd be above the clouds.
Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal; how think you by that!
Were it not good, your grace could fly to heaven!
K. Hen. The treaury of everlasting joy!
Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts
Beat on a crown, the treasure of thy heart;
Pleasing protector, dangerous peer,
That smooth'st it so with king and commonweal.
Glo. What, cardinal, is thy priesthood grown Peremptory?
Tantons auter legationes are!
Churchmen so hot! good uncle, hide such malice;
With such holiness can you do it!
Suf. No malice, sir; no more than well becomes
So good a quarrel, and so high a peer.
Glo. As who, my lord?
Suf. Why, as you, my lord;
And'think your lordly lordship-protectorship.
Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloster.
K. Hen. P'rily, peace, my lord;
Good queen; and what not on these famous peers,
For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.
Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make,
Against this proud protector with my sword!
Glo. What, holy uncle, wouldst thou come to that?
[Aside to the Cardinal.
Car. Marry, when thou dost.
[Aside.]
Glo. What dost thou mean to number for the matter,
In thine own person answer thy abuse.
[Aside.]
Car. Ay, where thou dost not peep; an it thou dost.
This evening on the east side of the grove.
[Aside.
K. Hen. How now, my lords!
Car.
Believe me, cousin Gloster,
Had not your man put up the wolf so suddenly.
We had no more sport—Come with thy two-handed sword.
[Aside to Gloster.

The falconer's term for hawking at water-soul.

This is the York:—

Then, where castles mounted stood.
Come, come, my lords;
These oracles are hardly attain'd,
And have understood.
The king is now in progress towards Saint Albans,
With him, the husband of this lovely lady:
Thinker go these news, as fast as horse can carry
A sorry breakfast for my lord protector.

York. Your grace shall give me leave, my lord of York.
To be the post, in hope of his reward.
York. At your pleasure, my good lord.—Who's within there, ho!

Enter a Servant.

Invite my lords of Salisbury, and Warwick,
To sup with me to-morrow night.—Away.

[Exeunt.]

Glo. True, uncle.
Car. Are you advis'd?—the east side of the grove?
Glo. Excellent. I am with you.[Aside.

K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gloster?
Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord.—
Now, by God's mother, priest, I'll shave your grace's beard.
Or all my fence[1] shall fail.
Car. Medici, telipsum:
Protector, see to I well, protect yourself.[Aside.

K. Hen. The wind's gone high; so do your stomachs, lords.
How irksome is this music to my heart!
When such strings jar, what hope of harmony?
I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter an Inhabitant of Saint Albans, crying, A Miracle!

Glo. What means this noise?
Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?
Inhab. A miracle! a miracle!
Suf. Come to the king, and tell him what miracle.
Inhab. Forsooth, a blind man at Saint Alban's shrine.
Within this half hour, hath receiv'd his sight;
A man, that ne'er saw in his life before.
K. Hen. Now, God be praised! that to believing
Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair.

Enter the Mayor of Saint Albans, and his Brethren; and Sixcoxe, borne between two Persons in a Chair; his Wife, and a great multitude following.

Car. Here come the townsman on procession,
To show your magnificence with his brightness.
K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale,
Although by his sight his sin be multiplied.
Glo. Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king.
His highness' pleasure is to talk with him.
K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord.
What hast thou been long blind, and now restor'd?
Simp. Born blind, an't please your grace.
Wife. Ay, indeed was he.
Suf. What woman is this?
Simp. His wife, and I will like your worship.
Glo. Hadst thou been his mother, thou couldst have better told.
K. Hen. Where went thou born?
Simp. Alban's in the north, like your grace.
K. Hen. Poor soul! God's goodness hath been great to thee.
Let none of our noblest unhallow'd pass,
But still remember what the Lord hath done.

Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, canst thou see him by chance?
Or of delicious to this holy shrine?
Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call'd
A hundred times, and other, in my sleep
By good Saint Alban; who said,—Simpex, come;
Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.
Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many times and oft Myself have heard a voice to call him so.

a Fence is the art of defence.
Enter Buckingham.

K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.

Enter Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Our simple supper ended, give me leave.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. In this close walk, to satisfy myself,

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. In craving your opinion on my issue:

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Which is unsuitable to England's crown.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Sol. My lord, I long to hear it at full.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. War. Sweet York, begin; and if thy claim be good,

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. The Nevells are thy subjects to command.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. York. Then thus:

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons:

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. The first, Edward the Black Prince, prince of Wales;

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. The second, William of Huttfield; and the third,

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Lionel, duke of Clarence; next to whom,

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Was John of Gaunt, the duke of Lancaster:

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. The fifth was Edmund Langley, duke of York:

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. The sixth, Edward, duke of York;

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. The seventh, Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloster.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. William of Wiindor was the seventh and last,

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Edward, the Black Prince, died before his father;

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. And left but him Richard, his only son, Who after Edward the Third's death, reign'd dressing:

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Till Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster,

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt;

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Crown'd by the name of Henry the Fourth, seiz'd on the realm; deposed the rightful king:

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she came.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. And him to Ponthiet; where, as all you know, Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Harms Richard was murder'd traitorously.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. War. Father, the duke had told the truth;

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. York. Which now they hold by force, and not by right;

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. For Richard, the first son's heir, being dead,

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. The issue of the next son should have reign'd.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. A company.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Wickedly.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick. Weigh.
York. The third son, duke of Clarence, (from whose line
I claim the crown,) had issue—Philippe, a daughter,
Who married Edmund Mortimer, earl of March:
Edmund had issue—Roger, came to March.
Roger had issue—Edmund, Anne, and Eleanor.
Sed. This Edmund, in the reign of Bolingbroke,
As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
And married Eleanor Glendevon, and been king,
Who kept him in captivity till he died.
But, to the rest.
York. His eldest sister, Anne,
Married Richard, earl of Cambridge; who was son
To Edmund Langley, Edward the Third's fifth son.
By her I claim the kingdom; she was heir
To the third part of Lancashire; who was son
Of Edmund Mortimer; who married Philippe,
Sole daughter unto Lionel, duke of Clarence:
So, if the issue of the elder son
Succeed before the younger, I am king.
War. What plain proceedings are more plain than this!
Henry both claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
The fourth son; York claims it from the third.
Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign:
It lasts not yet; but flourishes in thee,
And满意 his sons; but lands, in heire.
Then, father Salisbury, kneel we both together;
And in this private plot? be we the first,
That shall salute our rightful sovereign,
With bold and mighty right to the throne.
Both. Long live our sovereign Richard,
England's king!
York. We thank you, lords. But I am not your Shall I be crown'd; and that my sword be stain'd
With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster.
And that's not suddenly to be perform'd;
But with fair advice and silent secrecy.
Do you, as I do, in these dangerous days,
Wink at the duke of Suffolk's insinuation.
At his noble's doing, at Somercotes' death,
At Buckingham, and all the eyes of them,
Till they have mars'd the shepherd of the flock,
That virtuous prince, the good duke Humphrey:
'Tis they that seek: and they, in seeking that,
Shall find their deaths, if York can prohpye.
Sed. My lord, break we off; we know your Myself am the earl of Warwick.
York. And Nevil, this I do assure myself,—
Richard shall live to make the earl of Warwick
The greatest man in England, but the king.

SCENE III.—A Hall of Justice.

Trumpets sounded. Enter King Henry, Queen
Margaret, Gloucester, York, Suffolk, and Salisbury;
the Duke of Gloucester, March, Grey Jour-Dain, Southwell, Hume, and Bolingbroke, under guard.

K. Hen. Stand forth, dame Eleanor Cobham,
In sight of God and us, your guilt is great;
Receive the sentence of the law for sins
Such as by God's book are adjug'd to death.—
You four, from hence to prison shall go.

[To Journais. Etc.

From thence unto the place of execution:
The witch in mankind shall be hurl'd to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.
You, madam, for you are more noble born,
Despoiled of your honor in your life,
Shall die, three days' open penance done,
Live in your country here, in banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the Isle of Man.
Duck. Welcome is banishment, welcome were
The way to thine own wits.

Eleanor, the law, thou seest, hath judged thee;
I cannot justify whom the law condemns.—

[Exeunt the Duchies, and the other Prisoners,

Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief;
Ah, Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
* Squeezed spot.

Will bring thine head with sorrow to the ground!—
I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and mine age would ease.

K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey, duke of Gloucester: ere Give up thy staff; Henry will to himself
Protecter be; and shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet;
And, when the crown of Henry, my Humphrey, is
Then when thou wert protector to thy king.
Q. Mar. I see no reason why a king of years
Should be to be protected as a child,—
But that God and Henry govern England's helm.
Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.

Glo. My staff!—here, noble Henry, is my staff
As willingly do I the same resign.
As a prince, let me lay aside mine arm;
And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it,
As others would ambitiously receive it.
Farewell, good king: When I am dead and gone,
My honorable peace attend thy throne!—

Q. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen;
And Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, scarce himself,
That bears so shrewd a main: two pullets once,—
His lady banish'd, and a limb loos'd off;
This staff of honor raught:—These let it stand,
Where it is planted, for it shall be a Saj. Thus drops the lotts syne, and hangs his sprays;
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest days.
Marry, let this be his book go—Peter, to thy majesty
This is the day appointed for the combat;
And ready are the appellant and defendent,
The armorier and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight.
Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord; for purpose therefore Leit I the court, to see this quarrel tried.
K. Hen. O God's name, see the lists and all
Here let them end it, and God defend the right!—
York. I never saw a fellow worse bested;
Or a more courageous, than is the appellant,
The servant of this armorier, my lord.

Enter, on one side, Horner, and his Neighbors,
Drinking to him so much that he is drunk; and
He enters bearing his staff with a small-fog fastened to it; a drum before him; at the other side, Philadelphia, a drunkard and a similar staff; accompanied by Prentiss drinking to him.

1 Neigh. Here, neighbor Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack; And fear not, neighbor, you shall do well enough.

2 Neigh. And here, neighbor, here's a cup of chance.

3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double beer, neighbor; drink, and fear not your man.

Hor. Let me ease my brain, and I'll pledge you all;
And a fif for Peter!

Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee; and be not afraid.

2 Be. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master; fight for credit of the prentises.

Peter. I thank you all; drink and pray for me,
I pray you; for, I think, I have taken my last drink in this world—Here, Robin, if I die,
I give thee my apron; and, will thou shalt have my hammers—here, Tom, take all the money that I have.
O Lord, bless me; I pray God for
It may be to the use of my master, he hath beheld so much fence already.

Set. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blows.—Nay, what's thy name?

Peter. Peter, forestall.

Set. Peter! what more?

Peter. Thump.

Set. See yon fellows then thump thy master well.

Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knave, and myself an honest man; and touching the duke of York,
I think, as well as death, I never meant him any ill, or the king, nor the queen; And, therefore,
Peter, have at thee with a downright bow, as Bevis of Southampton fell upon Ascapart.
York. ow this—that this knife a tongue begins to double.

* Wishes for.
+ Reached.
* A sort of sweet wine.
Sound trumpets, stellari to the combatants.
[Act III. Scene I.
KING HENRY VI.
415
Hor. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason.
Died.
York. Take away his weapon:—Fellow, thank God, and drink the good wine in thy master's way.
Peter. O God!
Hor. I do confess, O Peter, thou hast half victorious in this presence! O Peter, thou hast half victorious in this presence!
K. Hen. Go, take hence that traitor from our sight;
For, by his death, we do perceive his guilt:
And God, in justice, hath reveal'd it;
The truth and innocence of this poor fellow
Which he so thought to have murder'd wrongfully,
Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward.
[Exeunt.
SCENE IV.—A Street.
Enter Gloster and Servants, in mourning clack.
Glo. Thus, sometime, hath the brightest day a
And, after summer, ever more succeeds
Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold,
So cares and joys abound as seasons fleets.
Saw what's o'clock?
Ten, my lord.
Glo. Ten is the hour that was appointed me.
To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess:
I hope, good lady, she endureth the horrid heat,
To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook
The abject people, gazing on thy face,
With evious looks, still laughing at thy shame;
That cast did follow thy proud chariot wheels,
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.
But, soft! I think she comes; and I'll prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her misery.
[Exeunt.
Enter the Duchess of Gloster, in a white sheet,
With her.
Glo. No, sir not, for your lives; let her pass by.
Duch. I come you, my lord, to see my open shame!
Now thou dost have peace, too. Look, how they gaze!
See, how the giddy multitude do point,
And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee!
A Master, hide thee from their hateful looks!
And, in thy closet pen'd, rue my shame,
And bare thine offences, both mine and thine.
Glo. Be patient, gentle Nell; forget this grief.
Duch. Ah, Gloster, teach me to forget myself:
For, whilst I think I am thy lawful married,
And thou a prince, protector of this land,
My thoughts, I should not thus be led along,
My heart afield, with papers on my back;
And follow'd with a rouble, that rejoice
To see my tears, and hear my deep lol'gone.
The ruthless dint doth out my tender feet;
And, when I start, the evious people laugh,
And bid me be advis'd how I tread.
Ali. Humphrey, can I hear this shameful yoke!
Trot'st thou that e'er I'll look about the world;
Or count them happy, that enjoy the sun?
So; dark shall be my light, and night my day;
To think upon my pomp, shall be my hell.
Sometimes, thus, I am dake Humphrey's wife;
And be a prince, and ruler of the land:
Yet so he rul'd, and such a prince he was,
As he stood by, whilst, I, his lawful duchess,
Was made a wonder, and a point-stock,
To every idle rascal follower,
But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame;
Nor sit at nothing, till the axe of death
Hang over thee, as it shortly will.
For Sullok,—he can that do all in all
With her, that hateth thee, and hates us all,—
And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,
Have all, in their malicious design,
To betray thy wings,
And, dy thou how thou canst, they' ll tangle thee:
But fear not thou, until thy foot be snared,
Nor ever seek prevention of thy foes.
Glo. Ah, now, forbear; thou almost all away;
I must offend, before I be attained:
And had I twenty times so many foes,
And each of them all twenty times their power,
All these could not procure me any more safety;
So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless.
Wouldst thou have me rescue thee from this reproach?
Why, yet thy scandal is not yet all away,
But I in danger for the breach of law.
Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell;
I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience!
These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.
[Exeunt.
Enter a Herald.
Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, holden at Bury the first of this next month.
Glo. And my consent me'er ask'd herein before!
This is close dealing,—We'll, I will be there.
My Nell, I take my leave,—and, master sherib.
Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.
Sher. Story, please your grace, here my commission stays:
And sir John Stanley is appointed now,
To take her with him to the Isle of Man.
Glo. Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Slay. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.
Glo. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well: the world may laugh again;
And I may live to do you kindness.
Duch. What, gone, my lord; and bid me not farewell!
Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot but speak.
[Exeunt Gloster and Servants.
Duch. Art thou gone too! All comfort go with thee!
For none abides with me: my joy is death;
Death, at whose name I oft have been afraid,
Because I wish'd this world's eternity,—
Stanley, I pray thee, and tell them to take precedence;
I care not whither, for I beg no favor,
Only convey me where thou art commanded.
En. Why, madam, that is to the Isle of Man;
There to be used according to your rank.
Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach.
And shall I then be used reproachfully!
Slay. Like to a duchess, and duke Humphrey's lady.
According to that state you shall be used.
Duch. Sherib, farewell, and better than I fare;
Although thou hast been conduct of my shame!
Sher. It is my office, madam, pardon me.
Duch. Ay, ay, farewell, thy office is discharged.
Come, Stanley, shall we go!
Slay. Madam, your penance done, throw off this sheet
And so we to attire you for our journey
Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet.
No, it will hang upon my richest robes,
And show itself; attire me how I can.
Go, lead the way; long to see my prison.
[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Abbey of Bury.
Enter to the Parliament, King Henry, Queen Margaret, Cardinal Beaufort, Suffolk, York, Buckingham, and others.
K. Hen. I muse, my lord of Gloster is not come:
Not easily. Curse.
Deep-fretted. Wonder.

\'Tis not his wont to be the humdest man,
What'er occasion keeps him from us now.
Q. Mar. Can you not see! or will you not observe?
The strangeness of his altered countenance?
With what a majesty he bears himself;
\nHarm, mischief.
Conductor.
How in solemn of late he is become,
How proud, pertinacious, and unlike himself?
We know the time since he was mild and amiable;
And, as it seems, we did but glance a facetious look,
Immediately he was upon his knee.
That all the court admir'd him for submission:
But meet him now, and, be it in the morn,
When every one will give the news away,
He knits his brow, and shows an angry eye,
And passeth; by with stiff unbowed knee,
Desdaining duty to us belongs.
So now it is not regarded, we think they grin;
But great men tremble when the lion roars;
And Humphrey is no little man in England.
First, and next, he is near you in descent;
And should you fall, he is the heir that will mount.
Me seemeth, then, it is no policy,—
Respecting what a ravenous mind he bears,
And a sixpence tax following your decease,—
That he should come about your royal person,
Or be admitted to your highness' council.
By flattery he won the common heart;
And, when he pleases to make commotion,
'Tis to be fear'd, they all will follow him.
Now 'tis the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted;
Suffer them now, and they'll o'ergrow the garden,
And fill the herds for want of wanton feed.
The reverent care, I bear unto your lordship;
Made me collect these dangers in the duke.
If he be so kind, call it a woman's fear;
Which, though sincere, it may well be, I think,
I will subscribe and say—'I wrong'd the duke.'
My lord of Suffolk,—Buckingham,—and York,—
Reprove my allegations, if you can;
Or else conclude my wishes were well
Suf. Well hath your highness seen into this duke,
And, had I first been put to speak my mind,
I thought I should have told you treach'rous tale.
The duchess, by his subornation,
Upon his lie, began her devilish practices:
Or if he were not privy to those faults,
Yet in his repenting of his high descent, (As next the king he was successive heir,) And such high vanities of his nobility,
Yet instigate the brain-sick Duke by means to frame our sovereign's fall.
Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep;
And in his simple show he harbors treason.
The treach'rous plot, when, he would steal the lamb.
No, no, my sovereign; Glaster is a male
Un-souled yet, and full of deep deceit.
Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law,
Declare death for small offences done?
York. And did he not, in his own phrase,
Levy great sums of money through the realm,
For soldiers pay, in France, and never sent it!
By passing and the towns each day resolved.
Buck. Tutt! these petty faults to Emils unknown,
Which time will bring to light in smooth duke
K. Hen. My lords, at once: The care you have of us,
To more down thorns that would annoy our seat,
Is worthy of all reward. But shall I speak my conscience!
Our kinsman Glaster is as innocent
From meaning treason to our royal person,
As is the sweet lamb, or harmless doe.
The duke is virtuous, and all his heart is given,
To dream on evil, or to work my downwital.
Q. Mar. Ah, what's more dangerous than this traitor?
Seems he a dove! his feathers are but borrow'd,
For he's disposed as the hateful raven.
Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,
For he's incresed; as are the raven's fellows.
Who cannot steal a shape, that means deceit!
Take heed, my lord; the wealse of all
Hangs on the cutting short that fhandard man.

Enter SOMERSET.

SOM. All health unto my gracious sovereign!
K. Hen. Welcome, lord Somerset. What news from France?
SOM. That all your interest in those territories
Is now betrayed; all is lost.
K. Hen. Cold news, lord somerset: But God's will be done!

Enter GLOSTER.

GLO. All happiness unto my lord the king! Pardon, my liege, that I have said so long.
SOM. No, Sir; Glaster, know, that thou art come too soon.

Enter GLOSTER.

GLO. All happiness unto my lord the king! I do discern high treason here.
GLO. Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush.
No change my countenance for this arrest;
A private suit is not so easily daunted.
The purest spring is not so soon dispelled.
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign:
Who can accuse me? wherein and I guilty?
York. 'Tis thought so; and what are they that think it?
I never rob'd the soldiers of their pay,
Nor ever had one penny bribe from France.
So virtuous, God, as I have watch'd the night.—
Aye, night by night,—in studying good for England,
That doit that e'er I wrested from the king,
And to the law, I heard'd to my use,
Be brought to answer me at my trial day!
No! many a pound of mine own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I disbursed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution.
Car. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.
Glo. I say no more than truth, so help me God!
For I did devise Strange tortures for offenders, and did devise Strange tortures for offenders, and did devise
That England was daint'd by tyranny.
Glo. Why, 'tis well known, that whiles I was Pity was all the fault that was in me;
For I should melt at an offender's tears,
And lowly words were reason for their fault.
Unless it were a bloody murderer,
Or foul felonious theft that fled poor passengers,
I never gave them condemnation punishment.
Men of the land, that bloody sin, I tortur'd
Above the idea, or what trespass
Suf. My lord, these faults are easy & quickly answer'd.
But murder crimes are laid unto your charge,
Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.
I do assure you in his highness' name;
And here commit you to my lord cardinal
To be kept, until your further time of trial
K. Hen. My lord of Glaster, 'tis my special hope
That you will clear yourself from all suspects;
My conscience tells me, you are innocent.
Glo. All, gracious lord, these days are dangerous!
Virtue is chok'd with foul ambition,
And charity chased hence by rancour's hand;
Our subornation is predominant,
And every exulting, every highness, man.
I know, their complot is to have my life;
And, if my death might make this island happy,
I would do a service of my tyranny.
I would expend it with all willingness.
But mine is made the prologue to their play;
For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will conclude as bad prospectors;
Beantors' red sparkling eyes blash't his heart's smale;
And Suffolk's cloudy brow his storey hate;
Sharpe Buckingham emburnd with his tongue;
The face that lies upon the face of my tyrant.
And dogged York, that reaches at the moon.
Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,
By false accuse dough level at my head:
And my my sovereign lady, with the rest,
Causeless have laid disgrace on my head.
And, with your best endeavor, have stur'd up
My courage to be my enemy mine.
Ay, all of you have laid your heads together,
"Glo. Cold news for me; for I had hope of France,..."
Myself had notice of your contentions, And think they make away with distrust, I shall not want false witness to condemn me; Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt; The ancient proverb will be well avowed,— And they are quickly found to beat a nest To guard the chicken from a hungry kite, As place Duke Humphrey for the king's protector! So the poor chicken should be sure of Suf. Madam, 'tis true: And were't not madness then, To make the fox surveyor of the fold? Who being accused a crafty murderer, His guilt should be but idly posted over, Because his purpose is not executed. Nay, for his death, nor twit him die, in that he is a foe. By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock, Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood; As Humphrey, prov'd by reasons, to my liege, And do for such. Do not let me leave to cide: Be it by guns, by stakes, by subtlety, Sleeping or waking, 'tis no matter how, So he be dead; for that is good deceit Which makes him first, that first intends deceit.

Say as you think, and speak it from your souls,— Were't not a hard and sudden death of her, To guard the chicken from a hungry kite, As place Duke Humphrey for the king's protector! So the poor chicken should be sure of

SECOND PART OF

ACT III.

That, henceforth, he shall trouble us no more.
And so break off; the day is almost spent:
Let Gloster, you, and I must talk of that event.
York. My lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days,
At Bristol I expect my soldiers;
For there I'll ship them all for the mainland.
Suf. I'll see it truly done, my lord of York.
[Exit all but York.]
York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful thoughts,
And change mis doubt to resolution:
Beseech thou hest to be; or what thou art
Resign to death, it is not worth the enjoying:
Let them be dead that weep over the wretched man,
And bid no harbor in a royal heart.
Faster than spring-time-showers, comes thought on thought;
And not a thought, but thinks on dignity.
My brain, more busy than the laboring spider,
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Weel, notices, well, their piteously done.
To send me packing with an host of men:
I fear me, but warm the starved snake,
Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
'Twas men I lack'd, and you will give them me:
I take it kindly; yet, be well assured
You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands.
While I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will not cross me in England some black storm.
Shall bow ten thousand souls to heaven, or hell:
And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on my mind,
Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,
Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.
And for a munition of my intent,
I have seduced a headstrong Kentishman,
John Cade of Ashford,
To make commotion, as full well he can,
Under the title of John Mortimer,
In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
Oppose himself against a troop of kerns;
And sought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine;
And at the end being rescu'd, I have seen him
Caper upright like a wild Marcus.
Shaking the bloody darts, as he his bells.
Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kene,
Hath he conversed with the enemy:
And undiscover'd come to me again,
And given me notice of their villainies.
This ever ready man, to do a statute:
For that John Mortimer, which nonsense is dead,
In face, in guilt, in speech, he doth resemble;
By thus I shall perceive the commons' mind,
How they shall reflect the house and home.
Say, he be taken, rack'd, and tortured:
I know, no pain, they can inflict upon him,
Will make him say—I mov'd him to those arms.
Say, they shall thrive, as's great like he will,
Why then from Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd:
For Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart, the next for me.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Bury. A Room in the Palace.

Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

1 Mur. Run to my lord of Suffolk; let him know,
We have the duke's body commanded to.
2 Mur. O, that it were to do!—What have we done?
Didst ever hear a man so penitent?

Enter Suffolk.

1 Mur. Here comes my lord.
Suf.

1 Mur. Now, sirs, have you
Dispatch'd this thing?
2 Mur. Ay, my good lord, he's dead.
Suf. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my house.
I will reward you for this venturous deed.
And the king and all the peers are here at hand:
—Have you hith fair the bed! are all things well,
According as I gave directions!
1 Mur. 'Faith, my good lord.
Suf. Away, gone!—

[Exit Murderers.

A violent gust of wind.
A Moor in a morris dance.

Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Cardinal
Beaufort, Somerset, Lords, and others.

K. Hen. Go call my uncle to our presence straight.
Say, we intend to try his grace to-day,
If he be guilty, as 'tis published.
Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord. [Exit.
K. Hen. Masters, take your places;—And, I pray
you all,
Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Gloster,
Than from true evidence, of good esteem,
He affirmed it in the practice culpable.
Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail,
That faultless may condemn a noblesman!
Pray God, he may acquit him of suspicion!
K. Hen. I thank thee, Margaret; these words content me much.—

Re-enter Suffolk.

How now? why look'st thou pale? why tremblest
 thou?
Where is our uncle? what is the matter, Suffolk?
Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloster is dead.
Q. Mar. Marry, God forego him!
Car. God's secret judgment,—I did dream to-night,
The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.

Enter The King.

Q. Mar. How fares my lord?—Help, lords! the king is dead.
Suf. Hear, hear his body; wring him by the nose.
Q. Mar. Marry, he'll help, help,—O, Henry, one thine eyes!
Suf. He doth revive again,—Madam, be patient.
K. Hen. O heavenly God!—
Q. Mar. How fares my gracious lord?
Suf. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, comfort!
K. Hen. Why, what doth my lord of Suffolk comfort
me?
Came he right now to sing a raven's note,
Whose dismal tune bend my vital powers;
What, is he, that the chiming of this bell,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first-conceived sound?
Hole not thy poison with such sugar'd words,
Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say;
Their touch affrights me, as a serpent's sting.
Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!
Upon thy eye-balls murderous tyranny
Sits in thy majesty, to fright the world;
Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding;
Yet do not go away,—Come, banish,
And let the innocent fairy gaze with thine eye.
For in the shade of death I shall find joy!
In life, but double death, now Gloster's dead.
Q. Mar. Why do you rate my lord of Suffolk
thus?
Although the duke was enemy to him,
Yet he, most christian-like laments his death:
And for myself,—see as he was to me.
Might liquid tears, or heart-dilating groans,
Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,
I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,
Look pale as primeval, with blood-drinking sighs,
And all to have the noble duke alive.
What know I how the world may deem of me?
For it is known, we were but hollow friends;
It may be judged, I made the duke away;
Soon shall I know, who was the man bound,
And princes' courts be till'd with my reproach.
This get I by his death;—Ah me, unhappy!
To a queen, and crown'd with infamy!
K. Hen. Ah, woe is me for Gloster, wretched man!
Q. Mar. Be woe for me, more wretched than that.
What, dost thou turn away, and hide thy face?
I am no worthless leper, look on me.
What, art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf?
He puts his ear, and kill thy lord and queen.
Is all thy comfort shut in Gloster's tomb?
Why, then dame Margaret was ne'er thy joy;
Erect his statue then, and worship it,
And make mine image but an alter-sign.
Was I, for this, such wretched' upon the sea;
And twice by awkward wind from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime?
What boded this, but well-warreng wind
Scene II.
KING HENRY VI.

War.  See how the blood is settled in his face
Oil, have I seen a timely-parted ghost;
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the limping heart;
Who, in the conflict that holds with death,
Attracts the same name for violence against the shame,
Which with the heart there-cools and ever returneth
To blush and beauty the cheek again.
But, see, his face is blosted, and his blood decays;
His eyes ball, turn out farther than he liv'd,
Staring full ghastly like a strangled man:
His hair upright, his nostrils stretch'd with struggle,
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd
And tug'd for life, and was by strength subdued.
Look on the sheets, his hair, you see, is sticking;
His neck is crown'd with murder's bloody billiard,
Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodge'd.
It cannot be, but he was murder'd here;
The least of all these signs were probable.

Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke
To death!

Myself, and Beaufort, had him in protection;
And we, I hope, sit, are no murderers.
War. But both of you were vow'd duke Humphrey's foes;
And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep;
'Tis like, you would not least him like a friend;
And thus I think he was murder'd.

Q. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these noblemen
As guilty of duke Humphrey's timeless death.
War. That was no doubt, at first, to discern;
But now I find the better dead, and bleeding fresh.
And sees last by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect, twas he that made the slaughter!
Who linger'd in the prison in the prince's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbleached blood.
Even so suspicious is this tragedy.

Q. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk? where's your kith!
Is Beaufort term'd a kite? where are his talons?
Suf. I sect with those who make the slaughter!
But here's a vengeful sword, rusted with ease,
That shall be scor'd in his remorseless heart.
That shadrers me with murder's crimson badge;
Say, if thou dost, proud lord of Warwick's hire,
That I am faulty in duke Humphrey's death.

[Exit CARDINAL SOMERLEY, and others.

War. What doth not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him?
Q. Mar. He doth not dare his continuance in spirit
Nor cease to be an arrogant controller.
Though the next day, from twelve to two or three times.
War. Madam, be still; with reverence may I say;
For every word, you speak in his behalf,
Is slander to your royal dignity.
Suf. Unwrought lord, ignoble in demeanor!
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was worth with eras-trous'p; whose fruit thou art,
And never of the Nevill's noble race.

War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers thee,
And I should rob the deathswain of his ice,
Quitting the treasure of thy thousand shames,
And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild,
I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech,
And say 'tis that they were thy better that thy self,
That thou thyself wast born in bastardy;
And, after all this false hommage done,
Give thee the hire, and send thy soul to hell.

Pertinacious butcher of sleeping men!
Suf. Thou shalt be waking, I sheld thy blood,
If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.
War. Away, even now, or I will drag thee hence.
Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee,
And do some service to duke Humphrey's ghost.

[Exit SUFFOLK AND WARWICK.

K. Hen. What stronger breastplate than a heart
Untainted!
Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked, though look'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with indignation is corrupt.

[A noise within.

*The body of one who had died a natural death.
Q. Mar. What noise is this?

Re-enter Suffolk and Warwick, with their weapons drawn.

Here in our presence! dare you be so bold?

Why, what tumultuous clamor have we here?

Suf. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of Bury.

Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Noise of a Crowd within. Re-enter Salisbury.

Sul. Sirs, stand apart; the king shall know your mind.

[Speaking to those within.]

Dread lord, the commons send you word by me, Unless false Suffolk straight be done to death, Or let fair England's territories,

They will by violence tear him from your palace,

And torture him with grievous lingering death.

They say, by him the good duke Humphrey died;

They say, in him they hear your highness' death;

And mere insistence of love, and loyalty,

Free from a stubborn opposite intent.

As being thought to contrive your liking,

Makes them thus forward in his blasphamish,

They say, in care of your most royal person,

That, if your highness should intend to sleep,

And when I swear, it is irrevocable.

Yet notwithstanding such a strat exercise,

Were there a serpent seen, with torch'd tongue,

That swiftly glided towards your majesty.

It were but necessary, you were waked;

Lost, being suitor'd, in that harmless slum;

The man of war might make the deep eternal;

And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,

That they will guard you, who'er you will, or no.

From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is;

We will these curse-crowned and fatal stings,

Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,

They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commans. [Within.] An answer from the king,

To the lord of Suffolk.

Suf. To think the commons' rude unpardonable

Could send such message to their sovereign:

But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,

To show how quaint an orator you are:

But all the honor Salisbury hath won,

Is that he was the lord ambassador,

Sent from a host of tunkers to the king.

Commans. [Within.] An answer from the king,

Or we'll break in.

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,

I don't pretend for them to take their care:

And had I not been 'setted so by them,

Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;

For sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy

My home unto my sovereign by Suffolk's means.

And therefore,—by his Majesty I swear,

Whose fair unworthy deputy I am,—

He shall not breathe infection in this air

But three days longer, on the pain of death.

[Exits Salisbury.

Q. Mar. O Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolk.

K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk.

No more, I say; if thou dost plead for him,

Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.

Had I but said, I would have kept my word;

But when I swear, it is irrevocable.

If, after three days' space, thou here be'st found

On any ground that I am ruler of,

That any, not without my warrant, may be

Come, Warwick, come good Warwick, go with me:

I have great matters to impart to thee.

[Exit K. Hen. Warwick, Lords, &c.

Q. Mar. Mischiefe, and sorrow go, and sorrow along with you!

Heart's discontent and sour affliction,

Be fellowes to keep you company! There's two of you; the devil make a third!

And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!

Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these excreations, And where thy Suffolk take his heavy peace.

Dexterous.

Company.

Q. Mar. Fye, coward woman, and soft-hearted wretch! Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemies! Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse them?

Would curses kill, as doth the madman's groan,

I would invent as biting-searching phras,

As cruel, as harsh, and horrible to hear.

Delver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,

With full as many signs of deadly hate,

As lecherous E_mutex, in her lascivious cave.

My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words

Mighty eyes should sparklie like the beaten flint;

My hair be 'nx'd on end, as one distract;

Ay, every point should seem to curse and ban:

And even now my burden'd heart would break;

Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink! Gull, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste! Their sweetest shade shall be a grove of bitter trees:

Their choicest prospect, murdering巴士heaks!

Their softest touch, as sharp as lizard's stings!

Their music, fright their serpent's hiss!

And bloody vengeful owls make the concert full.

All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell—

Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st thyself;

And those dread curses,—like the sun 'gainst glass,

Or like an overcharged gun— recoil,

And turn the force of them upon thyself.

Suf. I am made melancholy; and will you had me leave! Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,

Well could I curse away a winter's night,

Though standing nank on a mountain top. Where, if cold eyes would never leaves grow,

And think it but a minute spent in sport.

Q. Mar. O let me entreat thee, cease! Give me thy hand.

That I may dwell it with my mournful tears;

Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,

To wash away my woeful monuments,

O, could this kiss be printed in thy hand! [Kisses his head.

That thou mightst think upon these by the seal,

Through whom a thousand signs are breath'd for thee!

So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;

'Tis not surmise's doth whilst thou art standing by.

As one that surfeits thinking on a want.

I will repeat thee, or, be well assur'd,

Adventure to be banished myself:

And banished I am, if but from thee.

Go, speak not to me; even now be gone.

O, go not hence! Even thus two friends condemn'd Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand leaves,

Leather a hundred times to part than die.

Yet now farewell! and farewell live with thee!

Suf. Go, I am poor Suffolk ten times banish'd.

Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee.

'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou hence;

A wilderness is populous enough.

So Suffolk had thy seven times connayy.

For were thou art, there is the world itself,

With every pleasure in the world;

And where thou art, desolation.

I can no more—live thou to joy thy life;

Myself no joy in nought, but that thou liv'st.

Easter Vaux.

Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news I pr'ythee?

Vaux. To signify unto his majesty,

That cardinal Beaufort is at point of death.

For suddenly a great and sudden sickness took him,

That makes him gasp, and stare, and catch the air,

Blessing him, and cursing men on earth. Sometimes, he talks as if two Humphrey's ghost

Were by his side; sometimes, he calls the king,

And whispers to his pillow, as to him, The secret of his overcharged soul:

And I am to tell him this majesty.

That even now he cries aloud for him.

Q. Mar. Go, tell this heavy message to the king.

[Exits Vaux.

Ah me, what is this world? what news are these?

But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss, omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure? Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,

And with the southern clouds content in tears?
KING HENRY VI

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Kent. The Sea-shore near Dover.

Firing heard at Sea. Then enter a boat a Captain, a Master, a Master's Mate, Walter Whitmore, and others; with them Suffolk and other Gentlemen, Prisoners.

Cap. The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day is crept into the bosom of the sea; And now loud-bellowing waves arouse the jades That drag the tragic melancholy night; Who with their drowsy, slow, and slumbering wings Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty jaws, Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air. Therefore, bring forth, the soldiers of our prize; For, whilst our pinions' anchors in the Downs, Here shall they make their ransom on the sand, Or with their blood slaim this discon'd shore.— Master, this prisoner freely give I thee; And those that are his mate, make bent of this;— The other, [Pointing to Suffolk.] Walter Whitmore, is thy share.

1 Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me know. Most. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head. Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes the prize.

Cap. What, think you much to pay two thousand crowns, And bear the name and part of gentleman?— Cut through the veins of their throats—for die you shall: The lives of those which we have lost in sight, Cannot be counterpois'd with such a petty sum. 1 Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life. 2 Gent. And will I, and write home for it straight.

Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard, And therefore to revenge it, shall thou die; And so should these, if I might have my will. Cap. Be not so rash; take ransom, let him live.

[Whereas.  Pitiful. A ship of small burden,

Cer. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's treasure. Enough to purchase such another island, So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain. K. Hen. Ah, what a sign, it is of evil life, When death's approach is seen so terrible! War. Be it so, Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee. Cer. Bring me unto my trial when you will. Died he not in his bed? where should he die? Can I make men live, or they will not or no?— O! torture me no more, I will confess. Alive again! then show me where he is; I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him,— He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them. Comb down his hair! look! look! it stands upright, Like time-wings set to catch my winged soul.— Give me a draught of water, and let the apothecary Bring the strong poison that I bought of him. K. Hen. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens, Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch! O, beat away the busy meddling fiend, That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul, And from his bosom purge this black despair! War. See how the pangs of death do make him grin. Sal. Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably. K. Hen. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasures be! Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss, Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope,— He dies, and makes no sign; O God, forgive him. Whit. Who had a death argues a monstrous life. K. Hen. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all,— Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close; And let us all to meditation. [Exeunt.]
SECOND PART OF

ACT IV.

This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf,
And therefore shall it charm thy hated tongue.
Whit. Speak, captain, shall I stab the traitor swain?

Cap. First let my words stab him, as he hath me.

Suf. Round sheave! thy words are blunt, and so art thou.

Cap. Convey him hence, and on our long-boat's side
Strike off his head.

Suf. Thou dar'st not for thy own.

Cap. Ay, Poole! Poole?

Suf. Poole? sir Poole? lord? Ay, kennel, puddle, sink; whose filth and dirt Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.

For thousands have thy yarrow vawned,
For swallowing the treasure of the realm;

Thy lips, that kiss'd the queen, shall sweep the ground;

And thou, that split'st at good duke Humphrey's death,

Against the senseless winds shall grin in vain,
Who, in content, shall hiss at thee again:

And wellest be thou to the hags of hell.

For daring to ally
Unto the daughter of a worthless king,

Hast thou either subjected, wealth, or freedom.

By devilish policy art thou grown great,

And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorged
With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart.

By the sword thou dost advance thy name, and say to France:
The false revolting Normans, thorough thee,

Disdain to call us lord; and Picardy
Hath slain their governors, surplis'd our forts,

And, making the ragged wounded home
The princely Warwick, and the Nevils all—

Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain—

As laving thee, are rising up in arms:

And now the house of York—thrust from the crown,
By shameless murder of a guiltless king,

And lusty proud encroaching tyranny—

Burns with revenging fire; whose hopeful colors

Advance our half-faced son, still to remain shine,

Under which is writ—Jovis nobius.

The commons here in Kent are up in arms:

And, conclude, reproach and beggary

Is crept into the palace of our king:

And all by thee—Away! convey him hence.

Suf. O that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder
Upon these palace, servile, adjures drones!

Small things make base men proud; this villain here,

Being captain of a prance, threatens more

Than Baggush the strong Hyrian pirate.

Danger not this bloody, oft-revenged race:

It is impossible, that I should die

By such a lowly assail my self.

Thy words move rage, and not remorse, in me:

I go no further from the queen to thy king;

I charge thee, wait me safely cross the channel.

Cap. Walter,

Whit. Come, Poole, I must warth thee to thy death.

Suf. Non tam timor occupat artus: his I fear.

Whit. Thou shalt have cause to fear, before I leave thee.

What, are ye daunted now? now will ye stoop?

1 Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him, speak him fair.

Suf. Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,

So that I am bound, unask'd, to account to my favor.

Far be it, we should honor such as these.

With humble suit: no, rather let my head

Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any

Save to the God of heaven, and to my king;

And sooner dance upon a bloody pole,

Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar grooms.

True nobility is exempt from fear—

More can I bear, than thou dare execute.

Cap. Hale him away, and let him talk no more.

Suf. Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye can;

That may my death never may be forgot!

Great men of die by the hands of

A Roman swordier and banditof slave,

Murder'd sweet Tully; Brustus' bastard hand

Shall shake his head, with glaring Cesar; savage standers,

Pomey the great: and Suffolk dies by pirates.

Exit. [See Whit. and others.

Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,
It is our pleasure one of them depart—

Therefore come you with us, and let him go. [Exit all but the first Gentleman.

Re-enter Whitmore, with Suffolk's Body.

Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie;

Until the queen his mistress bury it.
[Exit.

I Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle!

His body will I bear unto the king:

If he revenge it not, yet will my friends;

So will the queen, that living held him dear.

[Exit, with the Body.

SCENE II.—Blackheath.

Enter George Bevis and John Holland.

Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a hallow staff, thou mayst have been up these two days.

John. They have the more need to sleep thus now.

Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade the clother means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new map upon it.

John. So he had need, for 'tis threadbare. Well, I say, it was never merry work in England, since gentlemen came up.

Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handymen's.

John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather apparel.

Geo. Nay more, the king's council are no good workmen.

John. True; And yet it is said,—Labor in thy vocation, and it is much to thy advantage; —let the magistrates be laboring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.

Geo. Thou hast hit it: for there's no better sign of a blessing than a hard hand.

John. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son, the tanner of Wingham.

Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies, to make good his head, and habiliments.

John. And Dick the butcher.

Geo. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and iniquity thrust out like a calf.

John. And Smith the weaver.

Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun.

John. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Dram. Enter Cade, Dick the Butcher, Smith the Weaver, and others in great number.

Cade. We, John Cade, so termed of our supposed father.

Dick. Or rather, of stealing a cackle of herring. [Aside.

Cade.—for our enemies shall fall before us, inured to the spirit of putting down kings and princes,—Command silence.

Dick. Silence! Cade. My father was a Mortimer.

Dick. He was an honest man, and a good bricklayer.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet.

Dick. I knew her well; she was a midwife.

Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies.

Dick. She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter, and sold many laces.

Smith. But, now of late, not able to travel with her turred pack, she washes b lackes here at home.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honorable house.

Dick. Ay, by my faith, the field is honorable;

And there was he born, under a hedge; for his father had never a house, but the cage.

Cade. Valiant, and Smith. A must needs; for beggary is valorant.

Cade. I am able to endure much.

Dick. No question of that; for I have seen him slide three market days together.

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is of thick leather.

Dick. But, methinks he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt in the hand for stealing sheep.

Cade. Be brave, then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be, in England, seven halfpenny leaves sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make

A barrel of herrings.
it felony, to drink small beer; all the realm shall be in common, and in Cheapside shall my pulsey go to grass. And, when I am king, (as king I will be)

All. God save your majesty!

Cade. I thank you, good people,—there shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me lord.

Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that at the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment be used to write upon a man? Some say, the bee stingt; but I say, 'tis the bee's wax: for I did but seat once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since. How now! who's there?

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham.

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read, and cast account.

Cade. O monstrous!

Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.

Cade. Here's a villain!

Smith. He's a book in his pocket, with red letters in't.

Cade. Nay, then he is a conjurer.

Dick. Nay, he can make obligations, and write and seal.

Cade. I am sorry for't: the man is a proper man, on mine honor; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die.—Come hither, sirrah; I must examine thee. What is thy name?

Clerk. Emmanuel.

Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters; 'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone.—Bost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk. Sir, I think God, I have been so well brought up, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confessed: away with him; he's a villain, and a traitor.

Cade. Away with him, I say: hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck.

[Execute some with the Clerk.

Enter MICHAEL.

Michael. Where's our general!

Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

Michael. Fly, fly, sir! Humphrey Stafford and his brother are far by, with the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll tell thee down; he shall be encountered with a man as good as himself: he's but a knight, is 'a?

All. No, so.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently;—Rise up, sir John Mortimer. Now have at him.

Enter Sir HUMPHREY STAFFORD and WILLIAM his Brother, with Drum and Fores.

Staff. Rebellion holds the fifth and second of Kent, Mark'd for the gallows,—by your weapons down, Home to your cottages, forsake this gage;—The king is merciful, if you revolt.

W. Staff. But angry, wrathful, and inclin'd to blood, If you go forward: therefore yield, or die.

As for these silken-crested shafts, I pass not; If you dare, good people, then I will take you, O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign; For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

Staff. Villain, thy father was a platerer; All that thyself a wear, Art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

W. Staff. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this;—Edmund Mortimer, earl of March,

Married the duke of Clarence' daughter; Did he not?

Cade. Ay, sir.

Staff. By her, he had two children at one birth.

All. Staff. This false.

Cade. Ay, there's the question, but, I say, 'tis true; The elder of them, being put to nurse, Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away; And an ignorant man of the boy that I should embrace, Became a bricklayer, when he came to age: His son am I; deny it, if you can.

* I say them no regard.

Dick. Nay, 'tis too true; therefore he shall be king.

Smith. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore deny it not.

Staff. And will you credit this base drudge's words?

That speaks he knows not what!

All. Ay, marry, will we; therefore get ye gone.

W. Staff. Jack Cade, the duke of York hath taught you false.

Cade. He lies; for I invented it myself. [Aside. —Go to, sirrah. Tell the king from me, that— for his father's sake, Henry the Fifth, in whose time he went to span-counter for French chamber, an content he shall reign; but I'll be protector over him.

Dick. And, furthermore, we'll have the lord Say's head for setting the dukedom of Maine.

Cade. And good reason; for thereby is England maimed, and kin to go with a start, but that my presence holds it up. Fellow knaves, I tell you, that that lord Say hath gilded the commonwealth, and made it an emnuch: and more than that, he can speak French, and therefore he is a traitor.

Staff. O gross and miserable ignorance!

Cade. Nay, answer if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go to, then, I ask but this; Can he, that speaks with the tongue of an enemy, be a good counsel, or no?

All. No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.

W. Staff. Well, see, gentle words will not prevail, Assault them with the army of the king.

Staff. And, throughout every town, Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade; That those, which fly before the battle ends, May, even in their wives' and children's sight, Be hang'd up for a sample at their doors.

And you, that be the king's friends, follow me.

[Execut the two Staffords, and Forces.

Cade. And you, that love the commons, follow us.

Now show yourselves men, 'tis for liberty.

We will not leave one lord, one gentleman:

Spare none, but such as go in clouted shoon; For they are very thrify, honest men, and such.

As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

Dick. They are all in order, and march toward us.

Cade. But there are we in order, when we are most out of order. Come, march forward. [Execute.

SCENE III.—Another part of Blackheath.

Alarums. The Two Parties enter and fight, and both the Staffords are slain.

Cade. Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

Dick. Here, sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou behavest thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house; therefore thus will I reward thee. I command thee, that shall he as soon as it is; and thou shalt have a license to kill for a hundred lacking one.

Dick. I desire no more.

Cade. And, though thou deservest no less, This monument of the victory will I bear; and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse's heels, till I do come to London, where we will have the mayor's sword to hold us up.

Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.

Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come, let's march towards London. [Execute.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, reading a Supplication; the Duke of Buckingham and Lord Say with him:—at a distance, Queen Margaret, mourning over Suffolk's Head.

Q. Mar. Oft have I heard—that grief softens the mind.

But when I saw it, it was more full of dejection;

Think therefore on revenge, and cease to weep. But who can cease to weep, and look on this!

Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast: But when I think of the body that I must punish, I buy. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supplication?

* Shoes.
SECOND PART OF

ACT IV.

K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop to entreat:
For God forbid, so many simple souls
Should perish by the sword! And I myself,
Rather than bloody war should cut them short,
Will parley with Jack Cade their general.—
But stay, I'll read it over once again.
Q. Mar. Ah, barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Laid, like a wandering planet, over me;
And could it not enforce them to relent,
That were unworthy to behold the same!
K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have they keep.
Say. Ay, but hope, your highness shall have his.
K. Hen. How now, madam! Still longing
And mourning over Suffolk's death?
I fear, my love, that I had been dead,
Thou wouldest not have mourn'd so much for me.
Q. Mar. My love, I should not mourn, but die
For thee.

Enter a Messenger.

thon in such haste!
Mess. The rebels are in Southwark; Fly, my lord!
Jack Cade proclaims himself lord Mortimer,
Descended from the duke of Clarence' house:
And calls your grace usurper, openly,
And vows to crown himself in Westminster.
His army is a nagged multitude
Of kings and peasants, rude and merciless;
Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death
Both grieving them heart and courage to proceed:
All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen,
They call—false caterpillars, and intend their death.
K. Hen. 0 graceless men! they know not what they do.
Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Kenelworth,
Unpretentiou5 be content to put them down.
Q. Mar. Ah! were the duke of Buckingham now alive,
These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd.
K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee,
They mean to be avenged to us at Kenelworth.
Say. So might your grace's person be in danger;
The sight of me is odious in their eyes:
And therefore in this city will I stay,
And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London-bridge;
the citizens
Fly and forsake their houses:
The trusty people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor; and they jointly swear,
To spoil the city, and your royal court.
Buck. Then linger not, my lord away, take horse.
K. Hen. Come, Margaret; God, our hope, will succor us.
Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceased.
K. Hen. Displeas'd with me? (To Lord Say.) I trust not the Kentish rebels.
Buck. Trust nobody, for fear you be betray'd.
Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and resolute. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The Tower.

Enter Lord Scales, and others, on the Walls.
Then enter certain Citizens, below.
Scales. Now how! is Jack Cade slain?
1 Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for the rebels, by the bridge, killing all those that withstand them: The lord mayor craves aid of your honor from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.
Scales. Such aid as I can spare, you shall command;
But I am troubled here with them myself.
The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower,
But yet you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And that I will send you Matthew Gough:
Fight for your king, your country, and your lives;
And so haste you, for I must hence. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Cannon Street.

Enter Jack Cade, and his Followers. He strikes his Staff on London-stone.

Cade. Norr is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, sitting upon London-stone and command, that of the city's cast, the passing-conduct run not matter but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now, henceforward, it shall be treason for any that calls me other than—lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!
Cade. Knock him down there. [They kill him.
Scales. Oh, how is your grace here, Sir John? if ever you call Jack Cade more; I think he hath a very fair warning.
DICK. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.
Cade. Come then, let's go fight with them: But, first, go and set London-bridge on fire; and if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Smithfield.

Alarum. Enter, on one side, Cade and his Company; on the other, Citizens, and the King's Forces, headed by Matthew Gough. They fight; the Citizens are routed, and Matthew Gough is slain.
Cade. So, sirs:—Now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the masts of court; with down with them all.
DICK. I have a suit unto your lordship.
Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that wood.
DICK. Only that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.
John. Mass, I'll be sure law, then; for he was thirsty after the mouth with a spear, and it's not whole yet. [Aside.
Smith. Nay, John, it will be stinking law; for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese.
Cade. I have thought upon it; it shall be so.
Away, burn all the records of the realm; my mouth shall be the parliament of England.
John. Then we are like to have being statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out. [Aside.
Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my price, a price! here's the lord
Say, which sold the townsmen in France; he that made us pay one and twenty fifteens a, and one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy.

Enter GEORGE BREVY, with the LORD SAY.
Cade. Well, he shall be hecules'd for it ten times.
Ah, thou say; thou sergey, say, thou buckram lord! now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty, for giving up of Normandy unto monarch Basauri, and the spoiling of France? But up, and unto thee by these presence, even the presence of lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art.—Thou basauri traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm, in creating a grammar-school; and whereas, before our fore-fathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun, and a verb; and such abominable words, as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison, and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them; when indeed, only for that cause they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride on a foot-bolt, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?
Cade. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men rather than thou go in their hose and doublets.
DICK. And work in their shirt, too; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.
Say. You, then, speak out.

DICK. What say you of Kent?

2 A fifteen was the fiftieth part of all the movables or personal property of each subject.
3 Say, or rather, of a large and command, that of the city's last, the passing-conduct run not matter but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now, henceforward, it shall be treason for any that calls me other than—lord Mortimer.
4 i.e. Because they've not claim the benefit of clergy.
5 A kind of housing which covered the body of the horse.
SCENE VIII.  KING HENRY VI.

Say. Nothing but this: Tis houa terra, mata gens.
Cade. Away with him, away with him! he speaks Latin.
Say. Hear me but speak, and be me where you will.
Kent, in the commentaries Caesar writ,
Is term'd the devil's last place in all this isle:
Sweet is the country, because it doth cherish;
The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy;
Which makes me hope you are not void of pity.
I sold to Maino, I lost not mine.
Yet to recover them, would lose my life.
Justice with favor have I always done;
Prayers and tears have mov'd me, life could never.
Where my good lady is? What now? What now?
Dare any be so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill?
[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Southwark.

Abarum. Enter Cade, and all his Rabblement.
Cade. Up Fish-street! down Saint Magnus' corner! kill and knock down! throw them into Thames!—[A Parley sounded, then a Retreat.]
Buck. Away, they be that dare and will disturb thee:
Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king
Unto the common sheathed, who thou hast murdered;
And here pronounce free pardon to them all,
That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.
Cif. What say ye, country men? I will ye recant,
And yield to mercy, whilst ye solicit you;
Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths?
Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon,
Rising up to his auxiliary—god save his majesty!
Who hath him, and honors not his father!
Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake,
Shake his weapon at us, and pass by.
Cif. God save the king! God save the king!
Cade. What, Buckingham, and Chilpord, are ye so brave!—And you, base peasants, do ye believe him! will ye nobles be hang'd with your pardons
About your necks? hath thy sword therefore broke through London gates, that thou should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark! I thought, ye would never have given out these arms, till you had recover'd your ancient freedom; but you are all recreants, and dastards; and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your locks with burdens, take your horses over your heads,
 Modules, before your faces before your faces:
For me,—I will make shat for one; and so—God's curse light upon you all!
All. We follow Cade, we'll follow Cade.
Cif. Is Cade the son of Henry the Fifth,
That thus do you exclaim,—you'awl go with him!
Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
And make reconciliations? you ears and dukes!
Alas, he hath no home, no place to fly to!
Nor knows how to live, but by the spoliol,
Unless by robbing of your friends, and us.
Cade. I'll tell ye no such story.
Say. Strick the valor, and strike his head!
Cade. Where are you? most that ye seek my death!
These hands are fere from guiltless blood-shedding.
This blood came not from his father's bloodshedding thoughts.
Let me live!
Cade. I feel remorse in myself with his words:
but I'll bide it; he shall die, an it be but for peace!
Away with him! he has a hampden cape, and the pap of a hatchet.
Duck. Why dost thou quiver, man?
Say. The palsey, and not fear, provoceth me.
Cade. Say, he nods at us; as who should say,
—I'll be even with you. I'll see if his head will stand steadily on a pole, or no: Take him away, and believe me.
Say. Tell me, wherein I have offended most?
Have I affronted wealth, or honor? speak!
Are my chest full'd up with extorted gold?
Is my apparel sumptuous to behold?
Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death?
These hands are fere from guiltless blood-shedding.
This blood came not from his father's bloodshedding thoughts.

SCENE IX.—Kenilworth Castle.

Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, and SIR JOHN SOMERSET on the Terrace of the Castle.

K. Hen. Was ever king that joy’d an earthly throne, And could command no more content than I? No sooner was I crested out of my cradle, But I was made a king at nine months old: Was never subject born d to be a king, As I do long and wish to be a subject.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and CLIFFORD.

Buck. Health, and glad tidings, to your majesty! K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor, Cade, Or is he but retir’d to make himself strong?

Enter, below, a great number of Cade’s Followers, with Hollers about their Necks.

Clif. He’s fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield; And humbly thus, with hollers on their necks, Expect your majesty’s doom of life, or death.

K. Hen. Then, heaven, set ope thy everlasting gates To enter in my vows of thanks and praise! Soldiers, this day have you redeem’d your lives, And shew’d how well you love your prince and country.

Continued still in this so good a mind, And Henry, though he be unfortunate, Assure yourselves, will never be unkind: And so, with thanks and pardon to you all, I do dismiss you to your several countries.

All, God save the king! God save the king! Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Please it your grace to be advertised, The duke of York is newly come from Ireland: And with a puissant, and a mighty power, Of gallows-knaves, and stout kerns,* Is marching hitherward to my royal array; And still proclameth, as he comes along, His arms are only to remove from thee. The duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

K. Hen. Thus stands my state, Twixt Cade and York distress’d:

Like to a ship, that, having escape’d a tempest, Is straightway calm’d and boarded with a pirate; But now* is Cade driven back, his men dispers’d; And now is York in arms to second him.— I pray thee, Buckingham, go forth and meet him; And let me know, as soon as thy report, Tell him, I’ll send duke Edmund to the Tower;— And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither, Until his army be dismiss’d from him.

My lord, I’ll yield myself to prison willingly, Or unto death, to do my country good.

K. Hen. In any case, be not too rough in terms; For he is fierce, and cannot brook hard language. Buck. I will, my lord; and doubt not so to deal, As all things should redound unto your good.

K. Hen. Come, with, let’s in, and learn to govern

For yet may England curse my wretched reign.

SCENE X.—Kent. Iden’s Garden.

Enter CADE.

Cade. Fye on ambition! fye on myself; that have a sword, and yet am ready to finish! These five days have I lab’d in these woods; and durst not peep out; for all the country is hay’d for me; but now am I so hungry, that if I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years, I could stay no longer. Wherefore, on a brick-wall I have climbed into this garden; to see if I can eat grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man’s stomach this hot weather. And, I think, he that was able to do me good for, many a time, but for a sallet,* a kind of helmet.

* Two order’d of foot soldiers among the Irish.

 Only just now.

= A kind of helmet.

had been cled with a brown bill; and, many a time, while I did feel dry, and breasts, and brat, murrning, it hath serv’d me instead of a quart-pot to drink int: and now the word sallet must serve me to feed on.

Enter Iden, with Servants.

Iden. Lord, who would live tarnished in the

And may enjoy such quiet walks as these! This small inheritance, my father left me, Conteth me, and is worth a monarch’s joy. I seek and wax great by others’ waning; Or rather wealth, I care not with what envy; Sufficeth, that I have maintained my state, And sends not poor well pleased to my gate.

Cade. Here’s the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Ah, villain, thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand crowns of the king for carrying my head to him; but I’ll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pie ere thou and I.

Iden. Why, rascal companion, whatso’er thou be, I know thee not; why then should I betray thee? Is’t not enough, to break into my garden, And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds, Climbing my walls in spite of me, the owner? But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms!

Cade. Brave thee! ay, by the best blood that ever was brood’d, and heard thee too. Look on me well! I have not eat no meat these five days; yet, come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door-nail, I pray God, I may never be so loose to two men as ever.

Iden. Nay, let it never be said while England stands, That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent, Took ods to combat a poor famish’d man, Oppose thy steadfast-swinging eyes to mine, See if thou canst outface me with thy books, Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser; Thy bush is but a twigs, and the wind too. Thy leg a stick compared with this truncheon; My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast; And if mine arm be heated in the Air, Thy brave is digg’d already in the earth. As for more words, whose greatness answers words.

Let this thy sword report what speech forbeareth.

Cade. By my valor, the most complete champion that ever I heard,—Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the barby-boned clown in chimes of beef and fowl, then leap at me; by the hair of God on my knees, thou may’st be turned to holnails. [They fight. CADE falls.] O, I am slain! famine, and no other, hath slayn me; let ten thousand devils in my stead, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I’ll defy them all. Wither, garden: and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquer’d soul of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is’t Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor! Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed, And song; and the noise of my tomb when I am dead: Ne’er shall this blood be wiped from thy point; But thou shalt wear it as a herald’s coat, To embalm the honor that thy master got.

Cade. Iden, Irewed of thee! and beheld of thee victory: Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and exhort all the world to be cowards; for I, that never failed any, am vanquish’d by far, not by valor.

Iden. How much thou wrong’st me, heaven be my judge, Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare thee! And as I thrust thy body in with my sword, So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell, Henceforth, I say, I dragst thy headlong into the ditches, Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave, And there cut oft thy most ungracious head; Which I will bear in triumph to the king, Leaving thy trunk for crowns to feed my Exit, dragging out the Body.

KING.

The King's Camp on one side. On the other, enter York, attended, with Drum and Colors: his Forces in the Distance.

York. From Ireland thus comes York, to claim his right,
And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:
King, bell, abbot; burn, boutiques, clear and bright,
The uncertain great England's lawful king.
Ah, sancta majestas! who would not buy thee dear?
Let them obey, that know not how to rule!
This hand was made to handle明亮 but gold:
I cannot give due action to my without his leave,
Except a sword, or sceptre, balance it.
A sceptre shall it have, have a soul;
On which I'll toss the slower-duce-of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me.
The king hath sent him, sure; I must dissemble.

Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I'll greet thee with York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.

Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?

Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege,
To know the reason of these arms in peace;
Or why, thou being a subject as I am—
Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn,
Shall I oppose so great a power without his leave, or dare to bring thy force so near the court?
York. Sure can I speak, my choler is so great;
O, I could bow up rocks, and fight with lint,
I am so angry at these abject terms;
And now, like Ajax Telamonius,
on sleep or even could I spend my fury!
I am far better born than the king;
More like a king, more kindly in my thoughts:
But I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.

Buck. That is much presumption on thy part;
But if my arms he to no other end,
The king hath yielded unto thy demand;

York. Then Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers—

Buck. Soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves;
Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field,
You shall have pay, and every thing you wish.

York. I know them. I am your sovereign, virtuous Henry,
Command my eldest son,—nay, all my sons,
As pledges of my frailty and love,
I'll send them all as willing as I live;

Buck. That is his use, so Somerset may die.

York. On thine honor, is he prisoner!
Buck. Upon mine honor, he is prisoner.

York. Then Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers—

Buck. And we twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter King Henry, attended.

K. Hen. Buckingham, doth York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm?

York. In all submission and humility,
York doth present himself unto your highness,
K. Hen. Then what intend these forces thou dost bring?

York. To have the traitor Somerset from hence;
And fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter Cade, with Cade's Head.

Iden. If one so rude, and of so mean condition,
May pass into the presence of a king.
Lc, I present you grace a traitor's head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.
K. Hen. The head of Cade!—Great God, how just art thou!
O, let me view his visage being dead,
That living wrought me such exceeding trouble.
Tell me, a friend, art thou the man that slew him?
Iden. I was, an't like your majesty.
K. Hen. Thou art thus call'd and what is thy degree?
Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name;
A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.
Buck. So please it you, my lord, twere not amiss
He were created knight for his good service.
K. Hen. Iden, Iden, kneel down! [He kneels.]
Rise up a knight.
We give thee for reward a thousand marks;
And will, that thou henceforth attend on us.
Iden. May I live to merit such a bounty,
And never live but true unto his liege.

K. Hen. See, Buckingham! Somerset comes with the queen;
Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

Enter Queen Margaret and Somerset.
Q. Mar. Thus all the thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head,
But boldly stand, and front him to his face.
York. How now! Is Somerset at liberty?
Then York, though thy long-envy'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart,
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?—
False king! why hast thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse?
King did I call thee? no, thou art not king;
Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
Which I will not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor.
That head of thine doth not become a crown;
Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff,
And not to grace an awful princely sceptre.
That gold must round enrich these brows of mine;
Whose smart and crown, like to Achilles' spear,
Is able with the change to kill and cure.

Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up,
And with the same to act controlling laws.
Give place; by heaven, thou shalt not more
O'er him, whom heaven created for thy ruler.

Som. 0 monstrous traitor!—I arrest thee, York,
Of capital treason against the king and crown;
Buck. Observe, audacious traitor; kneel for thy treason.
York. Wouldn'st have me kneel! first let me ask of thee,
If they can brook I bow a knee to man,—
Strath, call in my sons to be my bail.

[Exit an Attendant.

I know, ere they will have me go to ward,
They'll pawn their swords for my confinement.
Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come to me.
To say, it that the bastard boys of York
Shall be the surety for their traitor father.
York. O blood-bespotted Neapolitan,
Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge!
The sons of York, thy better in this earth,
Shall be their father's bail; and bane to thee
That for my surety will refuse the boys.

Enter Edward and Richard Plantagenet, with Forces, on one side; and the other, with Forces also, old Clifford, and his son.

See, where they come; I warrant they'll make it good.
Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deny their bail.
Clif. Let Henry and all happiness to my lord the king.
York. I thank thee, Clifford: Say, what news with thee!
Nay, do not fright us with an angry look.

[Exit an Attendant.

York. What true and true and true is not true
Our reason is, and true is true and true.

Costly, confinement.
We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again;
For thy mistaking me, we pardon thee.
Cliff. This is my king, York, I do not mistake;
But at this first, and thence doth all begin:
To Bedlam with him! is the man grown mad?
K. Hen. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humor
Makes him oppose himself against his king.
Cliff. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,
And chop away that lascivious pate of his.
Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey;
But he will give their words for him.
York. Will you not, sons?
Edw. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve.
Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall.
Cliff. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here?
York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so;
I am thy king, and thou a false-heat-traitor.—
Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
That, with the very shaking of their chains,
They may astonish these fell lurking curs;
Bid Salisbury, and Warwick, come to me.

Drams. Enter Warwick and Salisbury, with Forces.

Cliff. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And muzzle the bear-wards in their chains;
If thou dar'st bring them to the bait-place.
K. Hen. Or have I seen a hot o'erwarming cur
Run back and bite, because he was withheld;
Who, being suffer'd with the bear's fell paws,
Had marked both his tail between his ears, and cried:
And such a piece of service will you do,
If you oppose yourselves to match lord Warwick.
Cliff. Hence, hear of wrath, fool indigested lump,
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape!
York. Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly anen.
Cliff. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn yourselves.
K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot to bow?
Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy braun-sick son!—
What wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,
And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles?
O, where is faith? where, where is loyalty?
If it be bash'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbor in the earth?
Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,
And shame thine honorable age with blood
Why art thou old, and want'st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,
That bows unto the grave with mickle age.
Salisbury, lord, I have considered thyself
The title of this most renowned duke;
And in my conscience do repute his grace
The rightful heir to England's royal seat.
K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?
Sat. I have.
K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such an oath?
Sat. It is great sin, to swear unto a sin;
But greater sin, to keep a sinful oath.
Cliff. Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To receive the orphan of his patrimony,
To win from his father's favor a right;
And have no other reason for this wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?
Q. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.
K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself.
York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou hast.
I am resolved for death or dignity.
Cliff. The first I warrant thee, if dreams prove true.
War. You were best to go to bed, and dream again,
To keep thee from the tempest of the field.
Cliff. I am resolved to bear a greater storm,
* The Nevils, earls of Warwick, had a bear and vagracy staff for their crest.
* Bear-keeper.

Then any thou canst conjure up to-day;
And that I'll write upon thy burgonet,
Might it but know thee by thy household badge.
War. Now, by my father's badge, old Neville's crest,
The rampant bear chair'd to the ragged staff,
This day I'll wear about my burgonet,
(As in a mountain-top the cedar shows,
That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,
Even to almighty thee with the view thereof).
Cliff. And from thy burgonet I'll rend thy bear,
And tear off thy face, without all conceit.
Despite the bear-ward that protects the bear.
Y. Cliff. And so to arms, victorious father,
To quell the rebel, and undo their complices.
Rich. Fee! charity, for sake! speak not in spite,
For you shall sup with Jesus Christ to-night.
Y. Cliff. Foul stigmatic, that's more than thou canst tell.
Rich. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell.
[Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—Saint Alban's.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Warwick.
War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls!
And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
Now,—when the angry trumpet sounds alarm,
And every man's crease doth fill the empty air,
Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me!
Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.

Enter York.
War. Of one or both of us the time is come.
York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other combatant.
For I myself must hunt this deer to death.
War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou fight'st:
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unsaddled! [Exit Warwick.

Cliff. What seest thou in me, York! why dost thou pause!
York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy.
Cliff. York, should thy prowess want praise and esteem,
But that's shown ignobly and in treason.
York. So let it help me now against thy sword,
If I in justice and right express it in.
Cliff. My soul and body on the action both!—
York. A dreadful lay!—address thee instantly.
[They fight, and Clifford falls.

La fin commence les œuvres.
War. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.
Peace with his soul, Heaven, if it be thy will! [Exit.

Enter Young Clifford.

Y. Cliff. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout,
Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O war, thou son of hell
Whom angry heavens do make thy minister,
Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
Hot coals of vengeance.—Let no soldier fly:
He that is truly dedicated to war,
Hath no self-love; nor he that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valor.—O, let the vile world end,
[Seeing his dead Father.
And the precocious flames of the last day
Burnt and have been together?
Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities and petty sounds.
To cease!—Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,
* Foul.stigmatic.
* One on whom nature has set a mark of deformity, a stigma.
* A dreadful wager, a tremendous stake.
* Sent before their time.
KING HENRY VI.

To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve
The silver livery of advised age;
And in thy reverence, and thy chair-days, thus
To die in youthful battle!—Even at this sight,
My heart is turned to stone; and, while I die mine,
It shall be stony. Yorik not our old men spaces;
No more will his babies: tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclains,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and daz.
Henceforth, I will not have to do with pity:
Meet I an instant of the house of York,
Into as many goblets will I cut it,
As wild Medea young Absyrtus did:
In cruelty will I seek out my fame.
Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house;
As did Aeneas old Anchises bear,
So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders;
But then Aeneas bare a living load,
Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine. [Exit.

Enter Richard Plantagenet and Somerset, fighting, and Somerset is killed.

RICK. So be thou there!—
For, underneath an alcoine's paltry sign,
The Castle in Saint Alban's, Somerset
Hath made the wizard famous in his death,—
Sword, hold thy temper: heart, be wrathful still:
Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. [Exit.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, and others, retreating.

Q. Mar. Away, my lord! You are slow; for shame,
A. Mar. Can we outrun the heavens! good Margaret,
stay.
Q. Mar. What are you made of! you'll not fight,
now fly.
Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To give the enemy way: and to secure us
By what we can, which can no more but fly.
[Alarum off.

If you be taken, we then should see the bottom
Of all our fortunes: but if we happily escape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect,) We shall to London get; where you are lov'd;
And while this breath, now in our fortunes made,
May readily be stopp'd.

Enter Young Clifford.

Y. Cliff. But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly;
But if you must; uncurable discount.

Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.
Away. for your relief! and we will live
To see their day, and then our fortune give:
Away, my lord, away! [Exit.

SCENE III.—Fields near Saint Alban's.

Alarum: Retreat. Flourish; then enter York, Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, and Soldiers, with Drum and Colors.

York. Of Salisbury, who can report of him;
That winter, who, in race, forgets
Aged contusions and all brush of time?
And, like a gallant in the brow of youth,
Repairs him with occasion! this happy day
Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.

RICK. My noble father,
Three times to-day I help him to his horse,
Three times bestrid him, thrice I led him off,
Persuaded him from any further act:
But still, while danger was, still there I met him.
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body,
But, noble as he is, look, where he comes.

Enter Salisbury.

SAL. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day:
By the mass, so did we all.—I thank you, Richard,
God knows, how long it is I have to live;
And it hath pleas'd him, that three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death.—
Well, lords, we have not got that which we have:
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repairing nature.
I know, our safety is to follow them;
For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament.
Let us pursue him, ere the wins go forth:
What saves lord Warwick? shall we after them?
War. After them? nay, before them, if we can.
Now by my faith, lords, 'twas a glorious day:
Saint Alban's battle, won by famous York,
Shall be eternal'd in all ages to come—
Sound, drums and trumpets—and to London all:
And more such days as these to us befall! [Exit.

1 For parliaments. 2 i. e. The gradual detrition of time, 3 i. e. The height of youth; the brow of a hill is its summit.

5 i. e. We have not secured that which we have acquired.
6 i. e. Being enemies that are likely so soon to rally and recover themselves from this defeat.

ACT I.

Deus. Some Soldiers of York's party break in.
Then enter the Duke of York, Edward, Richard, Norfolk, Montague, Warwick, and others, with white Roses in their Hats.
War. I wonder how the King escaped our hands.
York. While we pursued the horsemen of the north.
He slyly stole away, and left his men:
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland, Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat, Cheered up the drooping army; and himself, Lord Clifford, and Lord Stafford, all a-breast, Charged our main battle's front, and, breaking in, Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.
Edw. Lord Stafford's father, Duke of Buckingham, Is either slain, or wounded dangerous: I cleat his beaver with a downright blow; That this is true, father, behold his blood.

[Showing his bloody Sword.
Mont. And, brother, here's the earl of Wiltshire's blood.
[To York, showing his.
Whom I encounter'd as the battle join'd.
Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did.
[Throwing down the Duke of Somerset's Head.
York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons:—
[What is your gene dead, my Lord of Somerset?—

Norf. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt!
Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henry's head.
War. And so do I.—Victorious prince of York, Before I see thee seated in that throne Which now the house of Lancaster usurps, I vow by heaven, these eyes shall never close. This is the palace of the leal King:— And this the regal seat; possess it, York: For this is thine, and not king Henry's heirs. York. Assist me then, sweet Warwick, and I For hither we have broken in by force. Norf. We'll all assist you; he that thee, shall die. York. Thanks, gentle Norf.,—Stay by me, my lords!— And, soldiers, stay, and lodge by me this night. War. And, when the king comes, offer him no violence, Unless he seek to thrust you out by force.

[They retire. York. The queen, this day, here holds her parliament, But little thanks we shall be of her council: By words, or blows, here let us win our right. Rich. And as we are, let's stay within this house. War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd:— Unless Plantagenet, duke of York, be king:
KING HENRY VI

Scene I

And bashful Henry's, whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.
York. They leave me not, my lords; be resolute;
I must have the possession of my right.
War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
The protest he that holds up Lancaster,
Dies in a wing, if Warwick shake his bell.
I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares—
Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English crown.
[War. leaves York to the Throne, who seats himself.

Flourish. Enter King HENRY, CLIFFORD, NORTHUMBERLAND, WESTMORELAND, EXETER, and others, with red roses in their HATS.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits,
Even in the chair of state! belike, he means,
(Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer,)
To aspire unto the crown, and reign as king—
Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father;
And thee, Lord Chorlton; and you both have vow'd
On him, his sons, his favorites, and his friends.
North. If I be not, heaven be revenged on me!
Cly. The hope thereof makes Chilford mourn in velvet.
West. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him down:
My heart for anger burns, I cannot brook it.
K. Hen. Be patient, gentle earl of Westmoreland.
Cly. Patience is for politians, and such as he;
He durst not sit there had your father liv'd.
My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let them be used the family of York.
North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin; be it so.
K. Hen. Ah, know you not, the city favours them,
And they have troops of soldiers at their beck!—
Exe. But when the duke is slain, they'll quickly fly.
K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's
To make a shambles of the parliament-house!
Cousin of Exeter, trowns, words, and threats,
Shall be the war that Henry means to use—
[They advance to the DECK.
Thou factious duke of York, descend my throne,
And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet;
I am thy sovereign.
York. Thou art deceiv'd, I am thy prince.
Exe. For shame, come down; he made thee duke of York.
York. I was my inheritance, as the carkid was.
Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown.
War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown,
In following this usurping Henry.
Cly. Whom should he follow, but his natural king?
War. True, Clifford; and that's Richard, duke of York.
K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne?
York. It must and shall be. Content thyself.
War. Be duke of Lancaster, let him be king.
West. He is both king and duke of Lancaster;
And the lord of Westmoreland shall be king.
War. And Warwick shall dispise it. You forget,
That we are thine, which chas'd you from the field,
And slew your fathers, and with colors spread
Marched through the city to the palace gate.
North. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;
And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.
West. Plantagenet, of thee, and these thy sons,
Thy kin, and thy friends, I'll have more lives
Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.
Cly. Urg'te it no more; lest that, instead of words,
A sudden Warwick, such a messenger,
As shall revenge his death, I, before I stir.
War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats!
York. Will you, or shall we show our title to the crown?
If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.
K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?
Thy father was, as thou art, duke of York:
Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, earl of March;
Hawks had sometimes little bells hung on them, perhaps to drape the birds; that is, to fright men from rising.

I am the son of Henry the Fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop,
And send'd upon their towns and provinces.
War. Didst thou not, traitor, think to have raised it all?
K. Hen. The lord protector last it, and not I;
When I was crown'd, I was but nine months old.
Rich. You are old enough now, and yet methinks you
Father, fear the crown from the usurper's head.
Edw. Sweet father, do; set it on your head.
Mont. Good brother, [To York] as thou lov'st crown;
Let's fight it out, and not stand cavilling thus.
Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king will.
York. Sons, peace! K. Hen. Peace thou! and give king Henry leave to speak.
War. Plantagenet shall speak first:—hear him, lords,
And be ye silent and attentive too.
For he, that interrupts him, shall not live.
K. Hen. Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,
Wherein my grandsire, and my father, sat?
No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;
Ay, and all her colors,—often borne in France;
And now in England, to our heart's great sorrow,—
Shall be my winding sheet. Why haunt you, lords! My title's good, and better than his.
War. Heaven grant it, Henry; and thou that shalt be King.
K. Hen. Henry the Fourth by conquest got the crown.
York. 'Twas by rebellion against his king.
War. That was not what to say my title's weak.
Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?
K. Hen. What then?
K. Hen. An it he may, then am I lawful king.
For Richard, in the vessel of many lords,
Resign'd the crown to Henry the Fourth;
Whose heir my father was, and I am his.
York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,
And makes pretensions to his crown per se.
War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstr'd,
Think you, 'twere prejudicial to his crown?
Exe. No! for he could not so resign his crown, but that his next heir should succeed and reign.
K. Hen. Art thou against us, duke of Exeter?
Exe. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.
York. Why whipper you, my lords, and answer not?
Exe. My conscience tells me, he is lawful king.
K. Hen. All will revolt from me, and turn to him.
North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,
Think not, that Henry shall be so depos'd.
War. I do possess he shall be, in despite of all.
North. This art deceiv'd: 'tis not thy southern power
Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent.—
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud.—
Can set the duke up in despite of me.
Cly. King Henry, by thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence;
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!—
K. Hen. 0 Clifford! how thy words revive my heart:
York. Henry of Lancaster, resign thy crown:—
What thing dost thou, or what claim expresseth thee?
War. Do right unto this princely duke of York: Or I will fill the house with armed men.
And over the chair of state where now he sits,
Write up his title with usurping blood.
[He stamps, and the soldiers show themselves.
K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, hear me but one word:
Let me know my life-time, reign as king.
York. Confirm the crown to me, and to mine heirs,
And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou livest.
K. Hen. In an content: Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.
Cly. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?
War. What good is this to England and himself?
West. Base, earl, and despairsing Henry!
Cly. How hast thou injur'd both thyself and us.
West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.
North. Nor I.
Cliff. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.

West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king,
In whose cold blood no spark of honor bides!

North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,
And die in bonds for this unmanly deed!
Cliff. To wreak that dreadful war mayst thou be overcome!
Or live in peace, abandon'd and despis'd?

[Exeunt Northumberland, Clifford, and Westmoreland.]

War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not.
Exe. They seek revenge, and therefore will not yield.

K. Hen. Ah, Exeter!
War. Why should you sigh, my lord?
K. Hen. Not for myself, lord Warwick, but my son,
Whom I unjustly shall disinherit.
But, be it as it may—I here entreat
The crown to thee, and to thine heirs for ever;
Conditionally, that here thou take an oath
To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,
To honor me as thy king and sovereign;
And neither by treason, nor hostility,
To seek put me down, and reign by thyself.
York. This oath I willingly take, and will perform.
[Coming from the Throne.]
War. Long live king Henry—Plantagenet, cousin.
K. Hen. And long live thou, and these thy forward sons!
York. Now, York and Lancaster are reconcil'd.
Exe. Accord'd be he, that seeks to make them base.
[The Lords come forward.]
York. Farewell, my gracious lord; I'll to my castle.
War. And I'll keep London, with my soldiers.
Nor. And I to Norfolke, with my followers.
Mont. And I into the sea, from whence I came.
[Exeunt York, and his Sons, Warwick, Norfolk, Montague, Soldiers, and Attendants.

Enter Queen MARGARET, and the PRINCE OF WALES.

Exe. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray her anger,
I'll steal away:
K. Hen. Exeter, so will I.

Q. Mar. Nay, so from me, I will follow thee,
K. Hen. In pity, gentle queen, and I will stay
Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremes? Arial, wrethet man! would I had died a maid.
And never seen thee, never borne thee son.
Seeing thou hast prov'd so unmindful of thy father
Hath he deserv'd to loose his birthright thus!
Hadst thou but lov'd him half so well as I;
Or felt that pain, which I did for him once;
Or nourish'd him, as I did with my blood;
Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood there,
Rather than made that savage duke thine heir,
And disinherited thine only son.

Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me:
If you be king, why should I not succeed?
K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet son;
The earl of Warwick and the duke enforced me.
Q. Mar. Enforced thee! art thou king, and wilt be forced?
I shan't be heard, speak. Ah, timorous wretch!
Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me;
And given unto the house of York such head,
As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance.
To entail him and his heirs into the crown,
What is it, but to make thy sepulchre,
And creep into it far, and slumber there.
Warwick is chancellour, and the lord of Calais;
Sterl Falconbridge commands the narrow seas;
The duke is made protector of the realm;
And yet shall thou and thy son lose thy lands
The trembling lamb, environ'd with wolves.
Had I been there, which was a silly woman,
The soldiers have sold thee; go on their pikes,
Before I would have granted to that act.

But thou priferr's thy life before thine honor:
And seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself,
Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,
And that act of parliament be repeal'd,
Whereby my son is disinherited.
The northern lords, that have forsworn thy colors,
Will follow mine, if once they see them spread;
And, when they shall be to thy foul disgrace,
And utter ruin of the house of York,
Thus do I leave thee:—Come, son, let's away;
Our army's ready; come, we'll after them.
K. Hen. Ah, stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak.
Q. Mar. Then hast spoke too much already; get thee gone.
K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me!
Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.
Princes. When I return with victory from the field,
I'll see your grace: till then, I'll follow her.
Q. Mar. Come, son, away; we may not linger thus.

[Exeunt Queen MARGARET and the PRINCE.

K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me, and to her son
Hadst thou not broke out into terms of rage!
Revenge may she be on that hateful duke!
Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire,
Will cost my crown, and, like an empty eagle,
With the fresh flesh of sincere men, and of my son;
The loss of those three lords torments my heart;
I'll write unto them, and entreat them fair;
—Come, cousin, thou shalt be the messenger.
Exe. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all.

SCENE II.—A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield, in Yorkshire.

Enter EDWARD, RICHARD, and MONTAGUE.
Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.
Edw. No, I can better play the orator.
Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter York.
York. Why, how now, sons and brother, at a strife?
What is your quarrel? how began it first?
Edw. No quarrel but a slight contention.
York. About what?
Rich. About that which concerns your grace, and us.
The crown of England, father, which is yours.
York. Mine, boy! not till king Henry be dead.
Rich. Your right depends not on his life, or death.
Edw. Now you are hear, therefore enjoy it now:
By grace of God, and of Lancaster, and of York,
It will outrun you, father, in the end.
York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign.
Edw. But, for a kingdom, any oath may be broken;
I'll break a thousand oaths, to reign one year.
Rich. No; God forbid, your grace should be forsworn.
York. I shall be, if I claim by open war.
Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak.
York. Thou canst not, son; it is impossible.
Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took
Before a true and lawful magistrate,
That hath authority over him that swears;
Henry had none, but did usurp the place;
Then, seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,
Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.
There is no harm, and, father, do but think,
How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown;
Within whose circuit is Elysium,
And all that poets reign of bliss and joy.
Why do we hinder thee? I cannot guess.
Until the white rose, that I wear, be dyed
Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart.
York. Come, Richard, enough; I will be king, or die.—Brother, to shalt unto London prostrate,
And what on Warwick to this enterprise.—
Thou, Richard, shalt unto the duke of Norfolk,
And tell him privily of our intent.—
You, Edward, shall unto my lord Cobham, With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise: In them I trust; for they are soldiers, Wise and well-disposed; and, as I hear, full of spirit.— While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more, But that I seek occasion how to rise; And yet the king not privy to my drift, Nor any of the house of Lancaster, Enter a Messenger.

But, stay; What news! Why com'st thou in such post!

Mess. The queen, with all the northern earls and lords, Intend here to besiege you in your castle: She is hard by with twenty thousand men; And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.

York. What, with thy sword! What, think'st thou, That fear we them!—

Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me;— My brother Montague shall post to London; Let noisè Warkes, Cobham, and the rest, Whom we have left protectors of the king, With powerful policy strengthen themselves, And trust not simple Henry, nor his oaths.

Mont. Brother, I go. I'll win them, fear it not: And thus most humbly do I take my leave.[Exit.

Enter Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer.

York. Sir John, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles,

You are come to Sandal in a happy hour: The army of the queen may be seen in force. Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the field.

York. What, with five thousand men?

Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.

A woman's general; what should we fear?

Enter. I hear their drums; let's set our men in order; And issue forth, and bid them stand straight.

York. Five men to twenty!—though the odds be great, I doubt not, uncle, of our victory. Many a battle have I won in France, When as the enemy hath been ten to one: Why should I not now have the like success?

[Alarm. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains near Sandal Castle.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Rutland, and his Tutor.

Rut. Ah, whither shall I fly to scape their hands! Ah, tutor! look, where bloody Clifford comes!

Enter Clifford, and Soldiers.

Cliff. Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life.

As for the brat of this accursed duke, Whose father slew my father,—he shall die.

Tut. And I, my lord, will bear him company.

Cliff. Soldiers, away with him.

Tut. Ah, Clifford! murder not this innocent child, Lest thou be hated both of God and man. [Exit; forced by Soldiers.

Cliff. How now! is he dead already! Or is it fear, That makes him close his eyes? [To Tutor.

Rut. So looks the pent-up hon o'er the wretch That trembles under his devouring paws: And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey; And when he comes, to rend him to pieces,— Ah, gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword, And not with such a cruel threatening look.

Sweet Chaplain, hear me speak before I die;— I am too mean a subject for thy wrath, Be thou revenged on men, and let me live.

Cliff. In vain thou speakest, poor boy; my father's blood

Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should enter.

Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again; He will revive, and Clifford, come, revile him.

Cliff. And I by thine brethren here, their lives, and thine Were not revenge sufficient for me;

No, if I died up thy forefathers' graves, And hung their rotten collars up in chains, It could not make mine ease, nor ease my heart.

The sight of any of the house of York

Is as a fury to torment my soul;

And till I foot out their accursed line, And leave not one alive, I live in hell.

Then Clifford, lift up mine hand,

Rut. O, let me pray before I take thy death;— To thee I pray; Sweet Clifford, pity me!

Cliff. Such pity as my rapier's point affords.

Rut. I know not how to bid thee harm; Why will thou slay me!

Cliff. Thy father hath.

Rut. But 'twas ere I was born. Thou hast one son, for his sake spare me;

Lost in revenge thereof,—sith God is just,— He be as miserably slain as I.

Ah, let me live in prison all my days; And when I give occasion of good

Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.

Cliff. No cause!

Thy father slew my father; therefore, die.

[Cliff. pull him.

Rut. But this thy son's blood cleaning to my blade, Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood, Conceal'd with this, do make me wipe off both.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same.

Alarums. Enter York.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field: My uncles both are slain in rescuing me; And all my followers to the eager foe Turn back, and fly, like ships before the wind, Or lambs pursued by hungry-starved hounds, My sons,—God knows what has bechanc'd them: But this I know—they have demean'd themselves Like men born to renown, by life or death.

Three times do Clifford make a lunge to meet me, And thrice cried,—Courage, father! fight it out!

And full as off came Edward to my side, With purple falcon, painted to the full, In blood of their enemies that encountered him: And when the hardiest warriors did retire, Richard cried,—Charge! and give no foot of ground! And cried,—A crown, or else a glorious tomb!

A scep'rule, or an earthly sepulchre!

With this, we charged again: but, out, alas! We bodged; again: as I have seen a swan With bootless labor swim against the tide, And spend her strength with overmatching waves. [A short Alarum within.

Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue: And I am math, and cannot fly their fury.

And were I strong, I would not shun their fury: The saucy are number'd that make up my life; Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter Queen Margaret, Clifford, Northumberland, and Soldiers.

Come, bloody Clifford,—rough Northumberland,— I dare your quenchless fury to more rage I am your batt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Cliff. Ay, to such mercy, as a heartless arm.

With downright payment, show'd unto my father, Now Phantos hath tumbled from his car;

And made an evening at the noontide pack.

York. My ashes, as the thornax, may bring forth

A bird that will revenge upon you all:

And, in that hope, I throw mine eyes to heaven, Soorning and praying, that he may affer more

Why come you not! what! multitudes, and fear?

Cliff. So cowards fight, when they can fly no further;

So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons;

So despairs the brave, that hopeless are their lives, Breathe out invectives against the oligers.

York. O Clifford, but bethink thee once again,

And in thy thought o'er-run thy former time;

And, if thou canst not slay, take thy reward;

And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice.

Whose feast hath made thee faint and fly ere this.

Cliff. I will not, nor will I see thee with the coward.

But buckle with thee blows twice two for one.

[Drums.

* Heaven grant that this may be your greatest boast!

* Obed. Edict.

* E. W. boggle'd, falled.

* Yeavind point on the dial.
Q. Merv. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes,
I would prolong awhile the traitor's life—
Wraith makes him deaf: speak thou, Northumberland.
North. Hold, Clifford; do not honor him so much,
To pick thy finger, though to wound his heart!
What value were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spare him with his foot away?
It is war's prize to take all vantages;
And ten to one is no impediment.
[They lay hands on York, who struggles.
Cliff. Ay, ay, so strives the woodcock with the gin.
North. So doth the common-styled in the net.
[York is taken prisoner.
York. So triumph thieves upon their conquered booty;
So true to wary wolves, with robbers so e'er matched.
Q. Merv. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,
Come make him stand upon this molehill here,
That rauft on mountains with outstretched arms,
Yet parted but the shadow with his hand,—
What! was it not that would be England's king?
Was't you that revel'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent?
Where are your mess of sons to back you now?
The way's Edward, and the lawful George?
And where's that valiant crook-back prodigy,
Dicky, your boy, that with his grumbling voice,
Was you to cheer his dad in mutiny?
Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?
Look, York; I stain'd this napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his rapier's point,
Made is from the bosom of the fury.
And, if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.
Ah, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,
I should have preyed upon the miserable state
I pry'thee, grieve, to make me merry, York;
Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.
What, hath thy fiery heart so much thine entraids,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad;
And, I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.
Then would'st thou be fed, I see, to make me sport;
York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown,—
A crown for York; and, lords, how low to him—
Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on—
Putting a paper Crown on his Head.
Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!—
This is he that took king Henry's chair;
And this is he was his adopted heir,—
But how is it that great Plantagenet's
Is dipp'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?
As I think, he was not fit to be king,
Till our king Henry had shook hands with death.
And, when you bare your head in Henry's glory,
And robb'd his temples of the diadem,
Now in his lie, against your holy oath?
O, 'tis a fault too, unpardonable!
Off with the crown; and with the crown, his head;
And, whilst we breathe, take time to do him dead.
Cliff. That is my office, for my father's sake.
Q. Merv. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he Wilt take.
York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France,
Whose tongue more poison than the adder's tooth! How that declining is it in thy sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian trull,
Upon their woes, whom fortune captivates!

But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanged.
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would assay, proud queen, to make the blush:
To tell the face thou canst, of whom d'vrest,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.
Thy father bears the type of kind of Naples,
Of both the Sibyl, and Jerusalem.
Yet not so worthy as an English yeoman.
Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?
It needs not, nor it boote thee not, proud queen;—
Unless the adage must be verified,—
That beggars, mounted, run their horse to death.
'Tis beauty that doth oft make women proud;
But, Cliff, thou know'st, that share them but a small;
'Tis virtue, that doth make them most admired;
The contrary doth make thee wondering at;
'Tis government, that makes them see divine;—
The want of wives thee about unclesable;
Thou art as opposite to every good,
As the Antipodes are unto us,
Or as the south to the septpuration.
O, tiger's heart, wrap'd in a woman's hide,
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child,
To bid the father wipe his eyes within,
And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and weak;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.
Bid'st thou me rage? why, now thou hast thy wish:
Would'st have me weep? why, now thou hast thy wish.
For raging wind blows up incessant showers,
And, when the race allays, the rain begins.
These clouds may effect Rutland's obsequies;
And every drop cries vengeance for his death,—
'Gainst thee, tell Clifford,—and thee, false Frenchwoman.
Northward, be me, but his passions move me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.
York. That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd his face.
But you are more inhume, more inexcusable,
O, ten times more,—than tigers of Hyrcania.
Sicciis, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth thou dipp'dst in blood of my sweet boy,
And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go hoist of this:
[He gives back the Heuvelchif.
And if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;
Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say,—Alas, it was a pitious deed;
There, take the crown, and with the crown, my curse;
And, in thy need, such comfort come to thee.
As now at the too cruel edict of our land;
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world;
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads!
North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my kin,
I should not for my life but weep with him,
To see how many sorrow graspeth his soul.
Q. Merv. What, weeping rife, my lord Northumberland;
Think but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.
Cliff. Here's for my oath, here's for my father's oath.
Q. Merv. What, here's and here's to right our discontented king.
[Stabbing him.
York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!—
My soul flies through these wounds to seek out ease.
[Dies.
Q. Merv. Off with his head, and set it on York gates;
So York may overlook the town of York. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. — A Plain near Mortimer's Cross in Hertfordshire.

Drama. Enter Edward and Richard, with their Forces, marching. —

Edw. I wonder, how our princely father 'scape
Or whether he 'scape away or no.
[Reaches. * Impale, encircle.

From Clifford's and Northumberland's pursuit;
Had he been on't, we should have heard the news;
Had he been slain, we should have heard the news;
Had he been taken, we should have heard the news;
The happy tidings of his good escape.—
How fares my brother? why is he so sad?

To weep, is to make less the depth of grief.

 Tears, for the habes, for remorse, and love for me?—

 Richard, I bear thy name, I'll venge thy death,
 Or die renowned by attempting it.

 Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with his dukedom and his chair with me is left,
 I think, it is no more. How fair lords!—

 Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,
 Show then the stand of all by gazing against thee:
 For chair and dukedom, throne and majestious sound:
 Or that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

 March. Enter Warwick and Montague, with Forces.

 War. How now, fair lords! What fare! what news?

 Great Lord of Warwick, if we should recount our baleful news, and, at each word's deliverance, stab poor foolish flesh till all were told,
 The words would add more anguish than the wounds.

 O valiant lord, the duke of York is slain.

 Edw. O Warwick! Warwick! that Plantagenet
 Which held thee dearly, as his soul's redemption,
 Is by the stern lord Columbia done to death.

 War. Ten days ago I drownd these news in the tears and joy.

 And now, to add more measure to your woes,
 I come to tell you things since then befell us.
 After the victory by Wakefield fought,
 Where your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,
 Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run,
 Were brought me of your loss, and his depart.
 I then in London, keeper of the city spoke,
 Muster'd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of men,
 And very well appointed, as I thought,
 March'd towards Saint Albans to intercept the queen,
 Bearing the king in my behalf along:
 For by my scouts I was advertised,
 That she was coming with a full intent
 To dash our late decrees, in part revenge,
 Touching king Henry's oath and your succession.

 Short tale to make,—we at Saint Albans met:
 Our battles joined, and both sides fiercely fought:
 But, whether twas the coldness of the king,
 Whose look'd full gently on his warlike queen.
 That robb'd my soldiers of their hated sprey;
 Or whether twas report of her success;
 Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigor,
 Who thunders to his captives—blood and death,
 I cannot judge; but, to conclude with truth,
 Their way was the lightest gazing camp and hunt;
 Our soldiers—like the night's—lift light sleep;
 Or like a lazy thrasher with a tail—
 Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends,
 I cheer'd them on with justice of victory,
 With promise of high pay, and great rewards:
 But all in vain; they had no heart to fight,
 And we, in them, no hope to win the day,
 So that we fled the king unto the queen;
 Lord George your brother, Norfolk, and myself,
 In haste, post-haste, are come to join you;
 For in the marches here, we heard you were,
 Making another head to fight again.

 Edw. Where is the duke of Norfolk, gentle
 Warwick?

 And when came George from Burgundy to England?

 War. Some six miles off the duke is with the soldiers:
 And for your bearer, he was lately sent
 From your kind aunt, duchess of Burgundy,
 With aid of soldiers to this needful war.

 Rich. Twas odds, belike, when valiant Warwick brake.
 Of late I have heard his praises in pursuit,
 But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire.

 War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou hear.
 For thou shalt know this strong right hand
 of mine,
 Can pluck the diadem from saint Henry's head,
 And write the awful sceptre from his hand;
 Were he as famous and as bold in war;
 As he is famed for mildness, peace, and prayer.

 Rich. I know it well, lord Warwick; blame me not;
Third Part of

Third Part of

Enter, Montague. Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen, with Clifford, and the haughty Northumberland, and of their feather many more proud birds, how that their eyes melting like wax, he swore consent to your succession, his oath enrolled in the parliament; and now to London all the crew are gone, to frustrate both his oath, and what beside may make against the house of Lancaster. Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong: now, if the help of Norfolk, and myself, with all the friends that thou, brave earl of March, amongst the loving Welshmen canst procure, will but amount to five-and-twenty thousand, Why, fair to London will we march again, and once again besride our lading steeds, and once again cry—Charge upon our foes! But never once again turn back and fly. Rich. Ay, how, methinks, I hear great warwick speak: Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day, that cries—Retire, if Warwick bid him stay. Edu. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean; and when thou fall'st, (as God forbid the hour!) Must Edward fall, which peril heaven forbid! War. No longer earl of March, but duke of York; the next degree is, England's royal throne; for king of England shalt thou be proclaimed in every borough as we pass along; and he that throws not up his cap for joy, shall for the fault make forfeit of his head. King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,—stay we no longer dreaming of renown, but sound the trumpets, and about our task. Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel. (As thou dost show it flinty by thy deeds,) I come to pierce it, or to give thee mine. Edu. Then strike up, drums;—God, and saint George, for us! Enter a Messenger War. How now! what news! Jess. The duke of Norfolk sends you word by me, the queen is coming with a puissant host; and craves your company for speedy counsel. War. Why then it sorts! brave warriors! Let's away. [Exeunt.]

Scene II.—Before York. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, the Prince of Wales, Clifford, and Northumberland, with Forces. Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York. Wonder'd he that seed-encumbr'd with your crown: Dost not the object cheer your heart, my lord? K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their own. To see this sight, it irks my very soul.—Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault, not withstanding I have intrusted my vow. Grace is gracious base, this too much lenity, And harm'd by party, and by blood. To whom do men cast their gentle looks? Not to the beast that would usurp their dun. When base is that the forest borrow'd lack? Not him, that spoils her young before his face. Who 'scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting! Not he, that sets his foot upon her back. That princely eagle, now will turn, now hooded on; And doves will peck, in safeguard of their brood. Ambitious York did level at thy crown, Thou smiling, while he knit his angry brows:—

* Why then this are as they should be.

He butt a duke, would have his son a king, And raise his issue, like a loving sire: Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son, Dost thou not show the majesty of thine reigns? Which argued thee a most unloving father. Unreasonable creatures feed their young: And though man's face be fearful in their eyes, If for the last, say—Ay, and to no other: Warr. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek you out; And therefore comes my brother Montague.

Enter Edward, George, Richard, Warwick, Norfolk, Montague, and Soldiers. Edu. Now, perjur'd Henry! wilt thou kneel for And set thy diadem upon my head; or bite the mortal fortune of the field! Q. Mar. Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting boy! Becoming thee to be thus bold in terms, Before thy sovereign, and thy lawful king! Edu. I am his king, and he should bow his knee; I was adopted heir by his consent. Since then his son, mine was broke: for this I hear, you—that are king, though he do wear the crown— Have caused him, by new acts of parliament, To blot me out, and put his own son in. Cill. And reason too: Who should succeed the father, but the son? Rich. Are you there, butcher!—I, O, I cannot speak! Tilg. Ay, crook-hack; here I stand to answer thee, and be the professed cutty of thy son. Rich. Twas you that kill'd young Rutland, was it not?—)

* Foolishly. 4. i.e. Arrange your order of battle.
Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfied.
Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight.
War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield the crown?
Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongued Warwick! When you and I met at Saint Albas last, your legs did better service than your hands. War. Then 'twas my turn toily, and now'tis thine. Clif. I said so much before, yet you red.
War. Twas not your valor, Clifford, drove me thence.
North. No, nor your manhood, that durst make a stay.
Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reverently;—
Break off the parole: for scarce I can refrain
The execution of my big sconia heart
Under that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.
Clif. I slew thy father: Call'st thou him a child?
Rich. Ay, like a dartast, and a treacherous coward,
As thou didst kill our tender brother Rutland; But ere sunset, I'll make thee curse the deed.
K. Hen. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak.
Q. Mar. Defy them then, or else hold close thy lips.
K. Hen. Yet thee, give me no limits to my tongue: I am a king, and privileged to speak.
Clif. My leges, the wound, that bred this meeting here,
Cannot be cured by words; therefore be still.
Rich. Then, executioner, unsheathe thy sword: By Him that made us all, I am resolv'd,
That either manhood helps thy language.
Edw. Say, Henry, shall I have thy right, or no?
A thousand men have broken their oaths to-day;
That ne'er shall done, unless thou yield the crown.
War. If thou deny, their blood upon thy head.
For York in justice puts his armor on.
Prince. If that be right, which Warwick says is right.
There is no wrong, but every thing is right.
Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother stands:
For, well I wot, thou hast thy mother's tongue.
Q. Mar. But thou art neither like thy sire, nor dam;
But like a foul mis-shapen spectres, Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
As venom loads, or lizards' dreadful stings.
Whose father bears the title of a king,
(As if a channel should be call'd the sea,) Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extract'd.
To let thy language detect thy base-born heart?
Edw. A wise of straw were worth a thousand crowns,
To make thee shameless call'd! know her self—
Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,
Although thy husband may be Menechus;
And 'er was Aegamemnon's brother wrong'd
By this base woman, this king by thee.
His father revell'd in the heart of France,
And tamed the king, and made the dauphin stop;
And had he match'd according to his state,
Had he the kept that glory to-day: But, when he took a beasr to his bed,
And grace thy poor sire with his bridal day;
Even then that sunshine brew'd a shower for him,
That washed his father to give him his crown of France,
And heap'd sedition on his crown at home.
For what hath brook'd this tumult, but thy pride!
Hast thou been meek, our title still had slept;
And in pity of them gentle ladies,
Had spipp'd our claim until another age.
Geo. But, when we saw, our sunshine made thy spring,
And that thy summer bred us no increase,
We set the axe to thy usurping root:
And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,
Yet, know thou, since we have begun to strike,
We will have heart to make this gentleman's blood.
Edw. And, in this resolution, I defy thee;—
Not willing any longer conference,
Since we are brought about in your house to speak—
Sound trumpets!—let our bloody colors wave!—
And either victory, or else a grave.

Edw. No, wrangling woman; we'll no longer stay; These words will cost ten thousand lives to-day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Field of Battle between Tewton and Saxton in Yorkshire.

Alarms. Excursions. Enter Warwick.
War. Forspent with toil, as runners with a race, I lay me down in a little while to hide my heart.
For strokes receiv'd, and many blows repaid,
Have rob'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,
And, spite of spine, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter Edward, running.
Edw. Sing, gentle heaven! or strike, ungentle death.

For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.
War. How now, my lord! what hap! what hope of good!

Enter Grosvenor.
Geo. Our hap is loss; our hope but sad despair;
Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us:
What counsel give you, whither shall we fly?
Edw. Bootless is flight, they follow us with wings; And weak we are, and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter Richard.
Rich. Ah, Warwick, why hast thou withdrawn thyself?—
Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Breach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance:
And in its very pangs of death, he crède,—
Like to a distant chaser heard from land,
Warwick, revenge brother, revenge my death! So underneath the belly of their steeds,
That signal weep the timbers in his smoking blood.
The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.
War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood;—
I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
Wailing our losses, whiles the foe doth rage?
And look upon, as if the tragedy
Were played in jest by country victors?—
Here on my knees I vow to God above,
I'll never pause again, never stand still,
Till either death hath clo'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge.

Edw. at Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine;—
And, in this vow, do chain my soul to thine;—
And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face,
I throw my bands, mine eyes, my mouth to thee,
Thou sett'st up and pluck'st down of kings,
Beseeching thee,—if with thy will it stands,
That to my foes this body must be prey,—
Yet that my brazen gates of hearty blood close up,
And give sweet passage to my sinful soul!—
Now, lords, take leave until we meet again,
Where'er it be, in heaven or on earth.
Rich. My brother, give me thy hand;—and, gentle Warwick,
Let me embrace thee in my weary arms:—
1. that did never weep, now meet melt with woe,
That winter should cut off our spring-time so.
War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords, farewell.
Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops,
And give this leaf to fly that will not stay:—
And call them pillars, that will stand to us;—
And if we strive, promise them such rewards
As victors wear at the Olympian games;
This may plant courage in our quailing breasts;
For yet is hope of life, and victory,—
Forsake no longer, make we hence again. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. THE same. Another Part of the Field.

Excursions. Enter Richard and Clifford.
Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone: Suppose, this arm is for the duke of York,
And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,
Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.
Clif. Nay, that is hard, thou know'st what thou alone;—
This is the hand that stabb'd thy father York;—
And this the hand that stabb'd thy brother Rutland;—
And here's the heart that triumphs in their death,
Third Part of Act II.

And cheer these hands, that slew thy sire and brother,
To execute the like upon thyself;
And so have at thee.

[ Fight. Warwick enters; Clifford flies.

Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase; For I myself will hunt this wolf to death. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field. Aalarum. Enter KING HENRY.

K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning’s war,
When dying clouds contain with growing light;
What time the shepherd, blowing of his pipes,
Call’d to the gate; night, as it might,
Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea,
Forced by the tide to combat with the wind:
Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea
Forswear by the virtue of the west wind:
Sometime, the flood prevails; and then, the wind;
Now, one the better; then, another best;
Both tugging to be victors; breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered:
So is the equal pace of this fell war.
Here on this molehill will I sit me down,
To whom God will, there be the victory!
For Margaret, my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chide me from the battle; swearing both,
They prosper best of all when I am lane.
When time, in God’s good will so far:
For what is in this world, but grief and woe?
O God! methinks, it was a happy life,
To be no better than a honest swain;
To end my days in mirth, and to how,
To carve out dials quaintly, point by point,
Therby to see the minutes how they run:
How many make the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day?
How many days will musher up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live.
When this is known, then to divide the times:
So many hours must I tend my book;
So many hours must I take my rest;
So many hours must I contemplate;
So many hours must I sport myself;
So many days my eyes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor tools will wear;
So many years ere I shear the fleece;
So minutes, hours, days, weeks, months, and years,
Pass’d over to the end they created.
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.
Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely!
Gaunt! how thy handeworn such a dower’s badge
To shepherds, looking on their silly sheep,
Than doth a rich embroider’d canopy
To kings, that fear their subjects’ treachery.
Oh, what a life! a thousand-fold it was;
And to conclude,—the shepherd’s homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather boote,
His wondert sleep under a fresh tree’s shade,
All which secure and sweetly he enjoy’d;
Is far beyond a prince’s delicats,
His viands sparkling in a golden cup,
His body couched in a curious bed,
When care, mistrust, and treason, wait on him.

Aalarum. Enter a Son, that has killed his Father,

Thy brother and the dead Duke.

Son. Ill blows the wind, that profits nobody—
This man, whom hand to hand I slew in light,
May be possess’d with some store of crowns; And may yet haply take them from his hand.
May yet ere night yield both my life and thee
To some man else, as this dead man doth me.—
Who’s this?—O God! it is my father’s face,
Witness how much I resemble him and kill’d
0 heavy times, breasting such events!
From London by the king I was press’d forth;
My father, being the earl of Warwick’s man,
Carried the part of York, press’d on this master;
And I, who at his hands receiv’d my life,
Have by my hands of life bereav’d him.—
Pardon me, God, I know not what I did;
And if I have, I ask, or I know not why.
Alas! my tears shall wipe away these bloody marks;
And no more words, till they have flow’d their fill.
K. Hen. What pretends us bloody times?
While lies his war, and battle for his deities,
Poor unarmed hands abide their cunnry.—
Weep, wretched man, I’ll aid thee fear for fear;
And let our hearts and eyes, like civil war,
Be blind with tears, and break o’er charg’d with grief.

Enter a Father, who has killed his Son, with the Body in arms.

Path. Thou that so sternly hast resisted me,
Give him back, if thou hast any
For I have bought it with an hundred blows,—
But let me see,—is this our father’s face?—
Ah, no, no, no, it is mine only son!—
Ah, boy, if any lie be left in thee,
Throw up thine eye; see, see, what showers arise,
Blown with the windy tempest of my heart,
Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!—
O, pity, pity, gentleman, have mercy!—
Path. What stratagems, how hell, how butchery,
Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural.
This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!—
Boy, if I fall, let thy mother come with thee.
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late!—
K. Hen. Woe above woe! grief more than common grief!—
O, my son, would you have thought so long to have stood these ruthless deeds!—
O, pity, pity, gentle heaven, pity!—
The red rose and the white are on his face,
The total colors of our suffering houses:
The one, his purple blood right well resembles; The other, his pale cheeks, methinks, present: Wither one rose, and let the other flourish! If you contend, and ever live, I must watch.
Son. How will my mother, for a father’s death,
Take on with me, and ne’er be satisfied?
Path. How will my wife, for slaughter of my son,
Shed tears upon a hill, as ne’er before. K. Hen. How will the country, for these woful chances.
Methinks the king, and not be satisfied!—
Son. Much is your sorrow; mine, ten times so much.
Son. I bear thee hence, why should I weep my fill?—
[Exit with the Body.]
Path. These arms of mine shall be thy whining-wax.
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre;
For from my heart thine image ne’er shall go.
My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
And so obsequious’ will thy father be;
Sad for the loss of thee, having no more,
As Priam was for all his valiant sons.
I’ll bear thee hence; and let them light that will,
For I have murder’d with my own hand.
[Exit with the Body.]

K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much overcome with care,
Here sit, being more woful than you are.

Aalarum: Excursions. Enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE OF WALES, and EXETER.

Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,
And Warwick rages like a chained bull;
Away! for death doth hold us in pursuit.
Q. Murt. Mark you, my lord, towards Berwick post a man;
Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds,
Having the fearful flying hare in sight,
With angry eyes, springing for very wrath,
And bloody steel grasp’d in their irclful hands,
Are at our backs; and therefore hence amain.
Exeunt. Warwick’s vengeance comes upon them:
Nay, stay not to expostulate, make speed,
Or else come after, I’ll away before.
K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exeunt;
Not that I fear to stay, but love to go
Whither the quinquirs contend. Forward! away!—

SCENE VI.—The same.

A loud Aalarum. Enter Clifford, wounded.

Cliff. Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which while it lasted, gave kindling-light.
O, Lancaster! I fear thy overthrow,
More than my body’s parting with my soul.
My love, and fear, glued many friends to thee;
And so I fall, thy truest companions met.
Imperial Henry, strong in musk-proud York,
* i.e. Dreadful events.
* careful of obsequies, or funeral rites.
Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,
And his illbeseeming haggetts
Shall fall and fade, and make no more his cry.
And who shall know but Henry's enemies!
O Phæbus! hadst thou never given consent
That Phæton should check thy fertil streams,
The earth had never had sweet showers to feed:
And Henry, hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
Or as thy father, and his father did,
Give none to gouge unto the house of York!
They never thought they came like summer flies;
I, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,
Had left no mourning widows for our death,
And thou this day hast kept thy chair in peace.
For what doth cherish weeds but gentle air?
And what makes robbers bold, but too much lenity!
Bootsless are plaints, and curseless are my wounds;
No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight:
The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much of blood doth speak the words—
Come, York, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest;
I stabb'd your father's bosoms, split my breast,
[He faints.]

Act III. Scene I.

KING HENRY VI.

The common people swarm like summer flies;
And whether they flit east, or west, or north,
And who shines now but Henry's enemies!
O Phæbus! hast thou never given consent
That Phæton should check thy humpy streams,
The earth had never had sweet showers to feed:
And Henry, hast thou sway'd as kings should do,
Or as thy father, and his father did,
Give none to gouge unto the house of York!
They never thought they came like summer flies;
I, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,
Had left no mourning widows for our death,
And thou this day hast kept thy chair in peace.
For what doth cherish weeds but gentle air?
And what makes robbers bold, but too much lenity!
Bootsless are plaints, and curseless are my wounds;
No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight:
The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much of blood doth speak the words—
Come, York, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest;
I stabb'd your father's bosoms, split my breast,
[He faints.]

Enter two Keepers, with Cross-bows in their hands.

1 Keep. Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves.
For through this haunt anon the deer will come;
And in this covert will we make our stand,
Calling the principal of all the deer.

2 Keep. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.
1 Keep. That cannot be; the noise of this cross-bow
Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.
1 Keep. Here comes a man, let's stay till he be past.

King Henry, disguised, with a Prayer-book.

K. Hen. From Scotland am I, sultan, even of pure love,
To greet mine own land with my wishful sight.

No, Harry, Harry, 'tis no land of thine;
Thy place is ill-fid, thy sceptre wrong from thee,
Thy balm wash'd o'er, wherewith thou wast anointed;
No bending knee we can all thee Corpus stand,
No humble suitors press to speak for right,
No, not a man comes for redress of thee,
How canst thou help them, and not myself?

1 Keep. Ay, here's a deer whose skin's a keeper's live:
This is the quadratum king; let's seize upon him.

K. Hen. Let me embrace these sore adversities:
For wise men say, it is the wisest course.
2 Keep. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon him.

K. Hen. I hear aBah! we'll hear a little more,
K. Hen. My queen and son, are gone to France for aid;
And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick
Is thither gone to crave the French queen his sister
To wife for Edward: If this news be true,
Poor queen and son, your labor is but lost;
For Warwick is a subtle orator,

* Sour words: words of asperity,
And Lewis a prince soon won with moving words.
By this account, then, Margaret may win him;
For she's a woman to be pitied much:
Her sighs will make a battery in his breast;
Her tears will make a more sad heart;
The tiger will be mild, while she doth mourne;
And Nero will be taint with remorse.
To hear, and see, her plaints, her brimful tears.
Ay, Lewis, but come to be elsewise alive.
Sue, on his left side, cravvng and for Henry;
He, on his right, asking a wife for Edward.
She weeps, and says—her Henry is deposed;
Her Edward says—his Edward is dead.
That she, poor wretch, for grant can speak no more:
Whites Warwick tells his titles, smooths the wrong,
Inference arguments of mighty strength;
And, in conclusion, wins the king from her,
With promise of his sister, and what else,
To strengthen and support king Edward's place.
0, Lewis, thus 'tis said; but, thou, poor soul,
Art thus forsaken as thou went'st a land.
2 Keep. Say, what art thou, that talk'st of kings and queens?
K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than 1 was born to:
A man at least, for less I should not be;
And men may talk of kings, and why not I?
2 Keep. But thou sitt'st in thy crown.
K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind; and that's enough.
2 Keep. But if thou be a king, where is thy crown?
K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my head:
Not deck'd with diamonds, and Indian stones,
Not seen; my crown is call'd, content;
A crown it is, that seldom kings enjoy.
2 Keep. Well, if you be a king crown'd with content,
Your crown current, and you, must be contented
To go along with us: for, as we think,
You are the king, King Edward hath deposed;
And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,
Will not be his enemy when he is crown'd.
K. Hen. But did you never swear, and break an oath?
2 Keep. No, never such an oath, nor will not now.
K. Hen. Why, whilst you dwell, when I was king of England!
2 Keep. Here in this country, where we now remain.
K. Hen. I was anointed king at nine months old;
My father and my grandfather, were kings;
And you were sworn true subjects unto me:
And tell me then, have you not broke your oaths?
2 Keep. No, never.
For we were subjects but while you were king.
K. Hen. Why, am I dead? do I not breathe a soul?
Ah, simple men, you know not what you swear.
Look, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,
Obeis with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greater gust;
Such is the lightness of you common men:
But do not break your oaths; for, of that sin
My mild entry shall not make you guilty.
Go where you will, the king shall be command'd;
And you his kings, command, and I'll obey.
1 Keep. We are true subjects to the king, king Edward.
K. Hen. So would you be again to Henry,
If he were seat'd as king Edward is.
1 Keep. We charge you in God's name, and in the king's.
To go with us unto the officers.
K. Hen. In God's name lead; your king's name be obey'd:
And what God will, then let your king perform;
And what he will, I humbly yield unto.
|Scene II.—London. A Room in the Palace.|

Enter King Edward, Glover, Clarence, and Lady Grey.
K. Edw. Brother of Glover, at Saint Albots' field
This lady's husband, Sir John Grey, was slain,
His lands then seiz'd on by the conqueror;
Her suit is now, to repossess those lands;
Which we in justice cannot well deny,
Because in quarrel of the house of York
The world more meanly did lose his life.
Glo. Your highness shall do well to grant her suit;
It were dishonour, to deny it her.
K. Edw. It were no less; but yet I'll make a pause.
Glo. You call it so I see, the lady hath a thing to grant,
Before the king will grant her humble suit,
Glo. Speak on, my prince, the game: How true he keeps the wind?
K. Edw. Silence! [Aside.]
K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit;
But come no longer time, to know our mind.
L. Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay:
May it please your highness to resolve me now;
And know that your pleasure is, shall satisfy me.
Glo. [Aside.] Ay, widow! then I'll warrant you all your lands,
An if it please him, shall please you;
Right close my wayes; for good faith, you'll catch a blow.
Clar. I fear her not, unless she chance to fall.
Glo. God forbid that! for he'll take vantages.
Clar. I think, he means to beg a child of her.
Glo. Nay, with me then; he'\'ll rather give her two.
L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.
Glo. You shall have four, if you be ruled by him.
K. Edw. Twoe pity they should lose their master's land.
L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then.
K. Edw. Lords, give us leave; I'll try this widow's suit.
Glo. Ay, good leave have you; for you will have leave,
Till youth take leave, and leave you to the crutch.
[Clar. and Clarence retire to the other side.]
K. Edw. Now tell me, madam, do you love your children?
L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.
K. Edw. And would you not do much to do them good?
L. Grey. To do them good, I would sustain some harm.
K. Edw. Then get your husband's lands, to do them good.
L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.
K. Edw. Tell you how these lands are to be got,
L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness' service.
K. Edw. That service will thou do me, if I give them?
L. Grey. What you command, that rests in me to do.
K. Edw. But you will take exception to my boon.
L. Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.
K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst not do what I mean to ask.
L. Grey. Why, then I will do what your grace commands.
Glo. He pleases her hard; and much rain wears the marble.
Clar. As wet as fire! may, then her wax must melt.
L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?
K. Edw. No easy task: 'tis but to love a king.
L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject.
K. Edw. The king, thy husband's lands I freely give thee.
L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand thanks.
Glo. To whose wish is made; she seals it with a curtisy.
K. Edw. But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of love I mean.
L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving lady.
K. Edw. Ay, but, I fear me, in another sense.
What love, think'st thou, I saw so much to get?
L. Grey. My love till death, my humble thanks,
That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants.
K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.
L. Grey. Why then you mean not as I thought you meant.
K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive my mind.
L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I perceive your highness as at, if I am right.
K. Edw. To tell thee plain, I am to lie with thee.
L. Grey. To tell thee plain, I had rather lie in prison.
K. Edw. Why, then thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.
L. Grey. Why, then mine honesty shall be my flower.
For by that loss I will not purchase them.
K. Edw. Therin thou wrong'st thy children mightily.
L. Grey. Herein your highness wrongs both them and me.
But, mighty lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadness of my suit;
Please you, dismiss me, either with ay, or no;
K. Edw. Ay; if thou wilt say ay, to my request:
Not if thou dost say no, to my demand.
L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.
Glo. The widow likes him not; she knits her brows.
[Aside.
Clare. He is the bluest wooer in Christendom.
[Aside.
K. Edw. [Aside.] Her looks do argue her repeate with modesty;
Her words do show her wit incomparable;
All her perfection challenges sovereignty;
Ay, as much or more as her complexion.
And she shall be my love, or else my queen.—
Say, that king Edward take thee for his queen?
L. Grey. The better said than done, my gracious lord.
I am a subject fit to jest withal,
But far unfit to be a sovereign.
K. Edw. Yet widow, by my state I swear to thee,
I speak no more than what my soul intends;
And that is to enjoy thee for my love.
And that no more than I shall yield unto:
I know, I too mean to be your queen;
And yet too good to be your concubine.
K. Edw. You civil widow, did I mean your queen.
L. Grey. Twill grieve your grace, my son should call you—father.
K. Edw. No more, than when thy daughters call thee mother.
Then to a widow, and thou hast some children; And, by my god's mother, I, being but a bachelor,
Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing
To be the father unto many sons.
Another no more, for thou shalt be my queen.
Glo. The ghostly father hath done his devi.
[Aside.
Clare. When he was made a shaver, 'twas for shift.
K. Edw. Brothers, you must what we two have had.
Glo. The widow likes it not, for she looks sad.
K. Edw. You'd think it strange if I should marry her.
Clare. To whom, my lord?
K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself.
Glo. That would be ten days' wonder, at the least.
Clare. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
Glo. By so much the wonder in extremes.
K. Edw. Wilt, jest on, brothers, I can k2! you both.
Her suit is granted for her husband's lands.
Enter a Nobleman.
Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken, And brought your prisoner to your palace gate.
K. Edw. Save me that he be convey'd unto the Tower,— And go we, brothers, to the man that took him, To question of his apprehension.—
Widow, go you along and write, use her honorable,
Glo. Ay, Edward will use women honorably.
'Would he were wasted, narrow, bones, and all, That from his looks no hopeful branch may spring, To cross me from the golden time I look for.
And yet, between my soul's desire and me, (The lustful Edward's title buried.)
Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward, And all the issue of that race of bodies, To take their rooms, ere I can place myself: A cold premeditation for my purpose!
Why, then I do but dream on sovereignty;
Like one that stands at a cross-roads,
And spares a far-off shore where he would tread, Wishing his foot were equal with his eye;
And chides the sea; that sends him from thence, Saying—'tis not safe for me to have his way:
So do I wish the crown, being so far off; And so I chide the means that keep me from it; And so I'll cut the causes off,
Flattering me with impossibilities.
My eye's too quick, my heart overweeneth too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them.
Yet, well, say, I have no kingdom then for Richard; What other pleasure can the world afford?
I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap, I'll deck my body in gay ornaments, And watch sweet ladies with my words and looks. O miserable thought! and more unlikely,
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns! Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb: And, for I could not deal in her son's laws, She did corrupt frail nature with some braze To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub; To make an ensiven mountain on my back, Where sick-dercity to mock my body. To shape my legs of an unequal size;
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or an unkind bear-shelph, That carries nothing like his own form. And am I then a man to be belov'd?
O, monstrous fault, to harbor such a thought! Then, since this earth affords no joy to me, But to command, to check, to o'erstrict such. As are of better person than myself, I'll make my heaven—to dream upon the crown; And, whiles I live, to account this world but hell, Until my golden thought, that begetteth me, Be round impaled with a glorious crown. And yet I know not how to get the crown, By many, or many can stand between me and home: And—like one lost in a thorny wood. That rents the thorns, and is rent with the thorns; Seeking a way, and straying from the way;
Not knowing how to find the open air, But toiling desperately to find it out,
Torment myself to catch the English crown: And from that torment I will free myself, Or have my mind out with a bloody sword. Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile; And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart, And wet my eyes with artificial tears, And force my face to wear a livid occasion. I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall; I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk; I'll play the orator as well as Nestor, Deceive more princes than Machiavel to school, Can I do this, and cannot get a crown? Tut! were it further off, I'd pluck it down. [Exit.

SCENE III.—France. A Room in the Palace.
Flourish. Enter Lewis the French King, and Lady Bona, attended; the King takes his state. Then enter Queen Margaret, Prince Edward her Son, and the Earl of Oxford.
K. Lew. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret, Sit down with us; if ill behits thy state, And birth, that thou shouldst stand, while Lewis doth sit.
Q. Mar. Most mighty king of France; now Margaret Must strike her sail, and learn to serve, Where king doth command. I was, I must confess, Great Alphonse's queen in former golden days; But now mischance hath trod my title down, And with dishonor laid me on the ground, Where I must take like seat unto my fortune, And to my humble seat conform myself. [Exeunt.
K. Lew. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?
Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears and my heart with sorrow,
And stops my tongue, while heat is drown'd in cares,
K. Lew. Whate'er it be, be thou still like thyself,
And sit by thee; yea, I yield not thy neck.
[Seats her by him.]
To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
Still be a shield the truth over all men's heads;
Be plain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas'd, if France can yield her grief.
Q. Mar. Those gracious words revive my drooping thoughts,
And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave to speak.
Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,—
That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
Is, of a king, become a banish'd man,
And forced to live in Scotland a forlorn;
While proud ambitious Edward duke of York,
Usurps the regal title, and the seat
Of England's true-annointed lawful king.
This is the cause, that I, poor Margaret,—
With this my son, prince Edward, Henry's heir,—
Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
And, if thou dost us, all our hope is done:
Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
Our people and our peers are both misled,
Our treasures seiz'd, our soldiery put to flight,
And, as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight.
K. Lew. Renowned queen, with patience calm the storm,
While Orpheus means to break it off.
Q. Mar. The more we stay, the stronger grows our sorrow.
K. Lew. The more I stay, the more I'll succor
Q. Mar. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow;
And see, where comes the breeder of my sorrow.
Enter Warwick, attended.
K. Lew. What's he, approacheth boldly to our presence?
K. Lew. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings you hence to France?
[Descending from his state. Queen Margaret rises.]
Q. Mar. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;
For this is news that both shall put to flight.
War. From worthy Edward, king of Albion,
My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,
I come,—in kindness, and unquenched love,—
First, to your presence, and the royal person;
And, then, to crave a league of amity, and,
Lastly, to confirm that amity
With mutual knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That worthy lady Bona, thy fair sister,
To England's king in lawful marriage.
Q. Mar. If that go forward, Henry's hope is done.
War. And, gracious madam, [To Bona] in our king's behalf,
I am commanded, with your leave and favor,
Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart,
Where fate, late entering at his beclouded eyes,
Hath placed thy beauty's image, and thy virtue.
Q. Mar. King Lewis—and Lady Bona,—hear me speak,
Before you answer Warwick. His demand
Springs not from Edward's well-mean'd honest love,
But from deceit, bred by necessity.
For how can tyrants safely govern home,
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?
To prove him true, this reason may suffice,—
That he hath made the people, and enfranchis'd,
Yet here prince Edward stands, king Henry's son.
Look therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage
Thou draw not on thy danger and dishonor:
For though usurpers sway the rule awhile,
Yet heaven's are just, and time suppresseth wrong.
War. Injurious Margaret, this.
Prince. And why not queen?
War. Because thy father Henry did usurp;
And thou no more art prince, than she is queen.
Oxf. Then Warwick displays great John of Gaunt,
Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain;
And after this his crown, Henry the fourth,
Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;
And, after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth,
Who by his prowess conquer'd all France:
From hence our Henry manfully descended.
War. Oxford, how haps it, in this smooth discourse,
You told not, how Henry the Sixth had lost
All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten?
Methinks, these peers of France should smile at that,
But for the best,—You tell a pedigree
Of three-score and two years; a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom's worth.
Oxf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against Whom thou obeyest thirty-and-six years,
And not bewray thy treason with a blush?
War. Can Oxford, that did ever hence the right,
Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree?
For shame, leave Henry, and call Edward king.
Oxf. Call him my king, by whose injuries doom
My elder brother, the lord Aubrey Vere,
Was done to death, and mine English father,
Even in the downfall of his meiow'd years,
When nature brought him to the door of death!
No, Warwick, no; while life upholds this arm,
The house of Lancaster shall not be checquered.
War. And I the house of York.
K. Lew. Queen Margaret, prince Edward, and Vouchsafe, at our request, to stand aside,
While I use further conference with Warwick.
Q. Mar. Heaven grant that Warwick's words be with him not?
[Retiring with the Prince and OXFORD.]
K. Lew. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,
Is Edward thy true king? for I were loath,
To link with him that were not lawful chosen.
War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honor.
K. Lew. But is he gracious in the people's eye?
War. I'll say, that Henry was unfortunately,
K. Lew. Then further,—all dissembling set aside,
Tell me for truth the measure of his love
Unto our sister Bona.
War. Such is it seems,
As may beseen a monarch like himself.
Myself have often heard him say, and swear,—
That he to all his love, and outward plant,
Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue and good,
The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun;
Exempt from envy, but not from disdain,
Unless the lady Bona, quit his lawful female.
K. Lew. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve.
Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine.
Yet I confess, [To WAR.] that often cre this day,
When I did overhear your king's love, so pronounced,
Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.
K. Lew. Then, Warwick, thus,—Our sister shall be Edward's!
And now with this shall articles be drawn
Touching the jointure that your king must make,
With which her dowry shall be counternom'd:
Draw near, queen Margaret; and be a witness,
That henceforth she be his lawful wife to the English king.
Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king.
Q. Mar. Decentful Warwick! it was thy device
By thee thou wast to make void my suit;
Before thy coming, Lewis was Henry's friend.
K. Lew. And still is friend to him and Margaret;
But if thy title to the crown be weak,—
As may appear by Edward's good success,
Then 'tis but reason that I be releas'd.
From giving aid, which late I promised,
Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand.
That you may have the crown of England.
War. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his ease;
Where having nothing, nothing he can lose.
And as for you yourself, our quadrant queen,—
You have a rather able to maintain your suit.
And better were you troubled than France.
Q. Mar. Peace, impudent and shameless Warwick, peace!
 Proud serpent, and puller-down of kings!
I will not hence, till with my talk and tears,
Both full of truth, I make king Lewis behold
ACT IV. SCENE I.  KING HENRY VI.

Thy sly conveyance, and thy lord's false love; For both of you are birds of self-same feather.

K. Lew. Warwick, this is some post to us, or thee.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, Warwick, these letters are for you;

Sent from your brother, marquis Montague. These from our uncle, marquis of Somerset.

And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not.

To MARGARET. They all read their Letters. Oft. I hear say, that our fair queen and mistress Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his.

Prince. Nay, mark, how Lewis stamps as he were nettled; I hope all's for the best.

K. Lew. Warwick, what are thy news? and yours, fair queen?

Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhoped joys.

War. Mine, full of sorrow, and heart's discontent.

K. Lew. What! has your king married the lady Grey?

And now, to soothe your fury and his, Sends me a paper to persuade me patience! Is this the alliance that he seeks with France! Dare I presume to second you in this match? Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before: This proved Edward's love, and Warwick's honesty.

War. To my uncle Lewis, I protest, in sight of heaven, And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss,— That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's; No more my king, for he doth dishonors me; But most himself, if he could see his shame.— Did I forget, that by the house of York My father came unhurt to his death? Did I let pass the abuse done to my niece? Did I impale him with the regal crown? Did I put Henry from his native right? And am I guardian'd at the last with shame? Shame to me, and my desert for my desert! And to repair my honor lost for him, I here renounce him, and return to Henry: My noble queen, let former grudges pass, And friends with me, I am thy true servitor; I will revenge his wrong to lady Bona, And replace Henry in his former state.

Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn'd my hate to love; And I forgive and quite forget old faults, And joy that thou becom'st king Henry's friend.

War. So much his friend, ay, his unenfeigned friend, That, if king Lewys vouchsafe to furnish us With some new bands of chosen soldiers, I'll undertake to lend them on our coast, And force the tyrant from this seat by war.

'Tis not his new-made bride shall succor him: And as for Clarence,—as my letters tell me, He's very likely now to fall from him; For matching force for wanton lust than honor, Or than for strength and safety of our country. Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be revenged, But by thy help to this distressed queen?

Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry live. Unless thou rescue him from soul despair? Bona. My quarrel, and this English queen's, are one.

War. And mine, fair lady Bona, joins with yours.

K. Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Margaret's. Therefore at last, I firmly am resolv'd, You shall have aid.

Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once.

K. Lew. When England's messenger, return in post;

And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,— That Lewis of France is sending over maskers, To revel it with him and his new bride: Thou seest what's past, go hear thy king withal. Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly, I'll wear the silken garland for his sake.

Q. Mar. Tell him, My mourning weeds are laid aside, And I am ready to put armor on. War. Tell him from me, That he hath done me wrong;

And therefore I'll uncrown him ere't be long.

There's thy reward: begone! Thou art—

[Exit Mess. K. Lew. But, Warwick, thou, And Oxford, with five thousand men, Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle: And, as occasion serves, this noble queen And prince shall follow with a fresh supply. Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt:— What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty? War. This shall assure my constant loyalty:— That if our queen and this young prince agree, I'll join mine eldest daughter, and my joy, To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.

Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion:—

Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous, Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick: And, with this hand, thy faith irrevocably. That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it; And here to pledge my vow, I give my hand.

[He gives his hand to WarwicK. K. Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levied, And thou, lord Hastings, our high admiral, Shall wait them over with our royal fleet.— I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance, For mocking marriage with a dame of France. [Exeunt all but Warwick. War. I came from Edward as ambassador, But I return his sworn and mortal foe: Host of marriage was the charge he gave me, But dreadful war shall answer his demand, Had he none else to make a stake? but me! Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow. I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown, And I'll be chief to bring him down again: Not that I pity Henry's misery, But seek revenge on Edward's mockery. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. A Room in the Palace. Enter GLOSTER, CLARENCE, SOMERSET, MONTAGUE, and others.

Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you Of this new marriage with the lady Grey?

Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?

Clar. Alas, you know, 'tis far from hence to France; How could he be till Warwick made return? Soon. My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the king.

Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD, attended; LADY GREY, as QUEEN; PEMBROKE, STAFFORD, HASTINGS, and others.

Glo. And his well-chosen bride.

Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.

K. Edw. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you our choice? That you stand passive, as half malcontent! Clar. As well as Lewis of France, or the earl of Warwick; Which are so weak of courage, and in judgment, That they'll take no offence at our abuse.

* Frighten.  * A walking-horse, a jest.
Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them.

What answer makes king Lewis unto these letters? Mess. My sovereign liege, no letters; and few but such as without your special pardon, dare not relate. K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee: therefore, in confidence.

Tell me, your majesty, whom you shall have for your queen.

And, which shall it be? K. Edw. Lewis, so brave a helme, he thinks me Henry. But what said lady Bona to my marriage? Mess. Those were her words, uttered with mild dissemblance.

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly, I'll wear the widow garnish for his sake. K. Edw. I'll blame not her, she could say little less.

She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen? For I have heard that she was there in place. Mess. We, in more secret and familiar conference, Warwick's letters are done, and I am ready to put armor on.

K. Edw. Behold, she minds to play the Amazon. But what said Warwick to these importunities? Mess. He, more incensed against your majesty Than all the rest, discharged me with these words: Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong; And therefore, I'll usurp him, I'll be done. K. Edw. Ha! burst the traitor breathe out such proud words! Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd: They shall not hazard me, nor pay for their presumption.

But stay, is Warwick friends with Margaret? Mess. Ay, gracious sovereign, they are so link'd in their affections.

That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter. Clar. Behold, the elder; Clarence will have the younger. Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast, For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter; That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage I may have love without the danger to yourself. You, that love me and Warwick, follow me.

Exit CLARENCE, and SOMERSET follows.

Glo. Not I; My thoughts had it in a further matter: I Stay not for love of Edward, but the crown. [Aside. K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick! Yet and against the worst can happen; And haste is needful in this desperate case.— PEMBROKE, and STAFFORD, you in our behalf Go levy men, and make prepare for war; They are ready, or, quickly will be landed; Myself in person will straight follow you. [Exeunt PEMBROKE and STAFFORD.]

But, ere I go, I must see Clar. and Montague.— Resolve my doubt. You twain, of all the rest, Are near to Warwick, by blood, and by alliance; Tell me, if you love Warwick more than me! If it be so, I'll both depart to him; I rather wish you foes than hollow friends; But if you mind to hold your true obedience, Give me assurance with some friendly vow, That I shall never have you in suspect.

Mont. So God help Montague, as he proves true! [Aside. K. Edw. As, hast and Hastings, as he favors Edward's suit. Glo. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand it. K. Edw. Why so? then am I sure of victory. Now therefore let us hence; and lose no hour, Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power. [Exeunt]
SCENE I.—A Plain in Warwickshire.

Enter Warwick and Oxford, with French and other Forces.

War. Trust me, my lord, all Hithergo goes well;
The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter Clarence and Somerset.

But, see, where Somerset and Clarence come;—
Speak suddenly, my lords, are we all friends!

Cl. No, my lord, I have not an embassy From You, and I have not ambassador,
Nor how to be contented with one wife;
Nor how to use your brothers brotherly;
Nor how to study for the people's welfare;
Nor how to shroud myself.

K. Edw. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here too?

But, then, for Your mind's be Edward England's king:

Takes ey' his crown.

But here, now shall wear the English crown,
And be true king indeed; then say in his name—
My lord of Somerset, at my request,

Warwick! See that forthwith duke Edward be convey'd

Unto my brother, archbishop of York.
When I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows,
I'll follow you, and tell what answer

Lewis, and the lady Bona, send to him:
Now, for a while, farewell, good king of York.

K. Edw. What later impose, that men must needs abide;
It boots not to resist both wind and tide.

Enter King Edward, led out; Somerset with him.

Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort:
For Warwick and his friends, God and saint George!

[Exit.

SCENE III.—Edward's Camp near Warwick.

Enter certain Watchmen, to guard the King's Tent.

Watch. Come, on, my masters, each man take his stand;
The king, by this, is set him down to sleep.

Watch. What, shall we lie to bed?

Watch. Why, no: for he hath made a solemn vow Never to be and take his natural rest.
Till Warwick, or himself, be quite emphasi'ed.

Watch. To-morrow then, ye all, shall be the day,
If Warwick be so near as men report.

Watch. But say, I pray, what not-leman is that, That makes the king here rest on his tent?

Watch. Tis the lord Hastings, the king's chiefest friend.

Watch. O, is it so? But why commands the king,
That his chief followers lodge in towns and hamlets, While he himself keepeth in the cold field?

Watch. Tis the more honor, because more danger.

Watch. Ay: but give me warship and quietness,
I like it better than a dangerous honor.

Watch. Warwick knew in what estate he stands,
Tis to be doubted, he would waken him.

Watch. Unless our habillets did shut up his passage.

Watch. Ay, wherefore else guard we his royal tent, But to defend his person from night-goes?

Enter Warwick, Clarence, Oxford, Somerset, and Forces.

War. This is his tent; and see, where stands his guard.

Cl. Courage, my masters; honor now, or never!

War. Follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

Watch. Who goes there?

Watch. Stay, or thou diest.

War. Warwick! and the rest, cry all—Warwick! Warwick! and set upon the guard; who fly, crying—Arm! Arm! Warwick! and the rest, following them.

The Drum beating, and trumpets sounding, re-enter Warwick, and the rest, bringing the king out in a gown, sitting in a Chair; Glaston and Hastings fly.

Som. What are they that fly there?

War. Richard, and Hastings: let them go; here's the duke.

K. Edw. The duke! why, Warwick, when we parted last,

Thou call'st me king.
Leaf out to wonder why I drew you hither,
Into this chiepest thicket of the park.
Thus stands the case: You know, our king, my brother,
Is prisoner in the bishop's house, at whose hands
He hath good usage and great liberty;
And often, but attended with weak guard,
Comes hunting this way to disport himself.
I have dethroned him by secret means.
That if about this hour, he make this way,
Under the color of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends, with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity.

Enter King Edward, and a Huntsman.

Hunt. This way, my lord; for this way lies the game.

K. Educ. Nay, this way, man; see, where the huntmen stand.—
Now, by the blissful, glorious Hastings, and the rest,
Stand you thus close, to steady the bishop's deer!
Glo. Bishop, the brother, and case requir'd haste;
Your horse stands ready at the park corner.
K. Educ. But whither shall we then?
Hun. To Lyon, my lord, and ship from thence to Flanders.
Glo. Will, I do indeed, believe me; for that was my meaning.

K. Educ. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness.
Glo. But wherefore stay we? 'Tis no time to talk.
K. Educ. Huntsman, what say'st thou? will thou go along?
Hunt. Better do so, than tarry and be hang'd.
Glo. Come then, away; 'tis have no more ado.
K. Educ. Bishop, Farewell; shield thee from Warwick's crown;
And pray that I may repossess the crown. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—A Room in the Tower.

Enter King Henry, Clarence, Warwick, Somerset, Young Richmond, Oxford, Malcolm, Lieutenants of the Tower, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Master lieutenant, now that God and friends
Have shaken Edward from the regal seat;
And turn'd my captive state to liberty,
My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys;
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?
Lieut. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns;
But, if an humble prayer may prevail,
I then crave pardon of your majesty.

K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me?
Nay, be thou sure, I'll well requite thy kindness,
For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure;
Ay, 'tis a pleasure to be in thy grace.
Conceive, when, after many moody thoughts,
At last, by notes of household harmony,
They quite forget their loss of liberty.—
But, Warwick, after God, thou seest me free,
And chieflly therefore I thank God and thee.
He was the author, thou the instrument.
Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite,
By living low where fortune cannot hurt me;
And that the people of this blessed land
May not be punished with my thwarting stars;
Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,
I here resign my government to thee.
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

War. Your grace hath still been favored for virtues;
And now may seem as wise as virtuous,
By suff'ring and avoiding fortune's malice,
For few men rightly temper with the stars?
Yet in some thing let me blame your grace,
For choosing me, when Clarence is in place;—
Clare. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heavens, in thy nativity,
Adjoin'd an olive branch, to thy crown.
As likely to be blest in peace, and war;
And therefore I yield thee my free consent.

War. And I choose Clarence only for protector.
K. Hen. Warwick, and Clarence, give me both your hands;
Now join your hands, and with your hands, your hearts,
That no dissension hinder government:
Two men confirm their temper to their destiny.
Present.

I make you both protectors of this land;
While I myself will lead a private life,
And in devotion spend my latter days,
To sin's rebuke, and my Creator's praise.

How answers Clarence to his sovereign's will?

Clare. That he consents, if Warwick yield content:
For on that condition I repose myself.

War. Why then, though loath, yet must I be content;
We'll make together, like a double shadow
To Henry's body, and supply his place:
I mean in bearing weight of government,
While he enjoys the honor and his ease.
And, Clarence, now it is more than needful,
Forthwith that Edward be pronounced a traitor,
And all his lands and goods be confiscate.

Clare. What else? and that succession he deter from.

War. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his part.

K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief
Let me entreat, (for I command no more,)—
That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,
Be sent to France, to learn from France with speed:
For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear
My joy of liberty is half eclips'd.

Clare. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all speed.

K. Hen. My lord of Somerset, what youth is that,
Of whom ye seem to have so tender care?

Som. My father, my lord, it is young Henry, earl of Richmond.

K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope: If secret powers
Lay his head on his head, and suggest but truth to my divining thoughts.
This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss. His looks are full of peaceful majesty; his head by nature framed to wear a crown, His heart and mind to wield a sceptre; and his temper
Likely, in time, to bless a regal throne.

War. Make much of him, my lords; for this is he,
Must help you more than you are hurt by me.

Enter a Messenger.

War. What news, my friend!—
Mess. That Edward is escaped from your brother,
And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.

War. Un savory news: but how made he escape?
Mess. He was convey'd by Richard duke of Gloster,
And the lord Hastings, who attended him.
In secret ambush on the forest side,
And from the bishop's huntsman he was rescu'd.
For hunting was his daily exercise.
War. My brother was too careless of his charge;
But let us, my sovereign, to provide
A salve for any sore that may beude.
[Exeunt King Henry, War., Clare., Li eut.,
And Attendants.

Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's;
For, doubtless, Burgundy will yield him help;
And we shall have more wars, before's be long.
As Henry's late preposing prophesy
Dul glad my heart, with hope of this young Richard's mind;
So doth his heart misgive me, in these conflicts
What may befall him, to his harm, and ours:
Therefore, lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
Forthwith we'll send him hence toBrittany,
Till storms be past of civil enmity.

Oxf. Ay, for, if Edward repossess the crown,
'Tis like that Richmond with the rest shall stand.
Som. It shall be so; he to Brittany;
Come therefore, let us without a day—

SCENE VII.—Before York.

Enter King Edward, Gloster, Hastings, and Forces.

K. Educ. Now, brother Richard, lord Hastings, and the rest;
Yet shall your fortune make us amends.
And says—that once more I shall interchane
My wasted state for Henry's regal crown.

—Afterwards Henry VII.
SCENE VIII.  KINGS HENRY VI.

Well have we pass'd, and now repass'd the seas,
And brought desired help from Burgundy;
What then remains, we being thus arriv'd
From Ravenspurg haven before the gates of York,
But that we enter, as into our dukedom!
Glo. The more's the fact—Brother, I like not this;
For man to man, that stumbe at the threshold,
Are well foretold—that danger lurks within.
K. Edw. Tush, man! abominations do now
By fair or foul means we must enter in,
For hither will our friends repair to us.
Hast. My liege, I'll knock once more to summon them.

Enter on the Walls, the Mayor of York, and his Brethren.

May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,
And shut the gates for safety of ourselves;
For now we owe allegiance unto Henry.
K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your king,
Yet Edward, at the least, is duke of York.
May. And my good lord; I know no more.
K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my dukedom;
As being well content with that alone.
Glo. But when the fox hath once got in his nose,
He'll soon tind means to make the body follow.

Answer. Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?

Open the gates, we are King Henry's friends.
May. Ay, say you so! the gates shall then be [Exeunt from above.

Glo. A wise stout captain, and a persauded soon.
Hast. The good old man would fain that all were well,
So 'were not long of him; but, being enter'd,
I doubt not, 1, but we shall soon perceade
Both him and all his brothers unto reason.

Re-enter the Mayor and two Aldermen, below.

K. Edw. So, master mayor: these gates must not be shut,

But in the night, or in the time of war,
What! fear not man, but yield me up the keys;

[The Mayor and Aldermen present the keys.

For Edward will defend the town and thee,
And all those friends that desire to knowe.

Drum. Enter MONTGOMERY and FORGES, trumpeting.

Glo. Brother, this is Sir John Montgomery,
Our trusty friend, unless I be deceiv'd.
K. Edw. Welcome, sir John! But why come you now?
Mont. To help king Edward in his time of storm,
As every loyal subject ought to do.
K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery. But we now lordship,

Our title to the crown; and only claim
Our dukedom, till God please to send the rest.
Mont. Then fare you well, I will orise again
I came to serve a king, and not a duke,—
Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.

[March begun.

K. Edw. Nay, stay, sir John, a while; and we'll debate,

By what safe means the crown may be recover'd.
Mont. What, talk you of debating? in few words,
If you'll not here proclaim yourself our king,
I'll serve you to your soule, and be gone;
To keep them back that come to succour you;
Why should we fight, if you pretend no title?
Glo. Why, brother, wheresoeever stand you on nice
K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll make our claim:
Till then, his wisdom to conceal our meaning.
Hast. Way with scrupul's with! new arms must rule.
Glo. And fearless minds climb soonest unto

K. Edw. Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand;
The breach thereof will bring you many friends.
K. Edw. Then be it as you will: for 'tis my right,
And Henry but usurps the diadem.
Mont. AV, I now my sovereign speakeh like myself;
And now will I be Edward's champion.

Enter HASTINGS, Sound, trumpet; Edward shall be here proclaim'd.
Come, fellow-soldier, make thy proclamation.

[Give's him a paper. Flourish.

Sold. [Reads.] Edward the Fourth, by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, &c.
Mont. And whose'ever gainsays king Edward's right,
By this I challenge him to single fight.

[ Throws down his Gauntlet.

All. Long live king Edward the Fourth!
K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery; and them unto you all.
If fortune serve me, I'll requite this kindness.
Now, for this night, let's harbor here in York:
And, when the morning sun shall raise his car
 above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick, and his mates;
For, well I wot, that Henry is no soldier.—
Ah, forward Clarence!—how evil it becometh thee,
To flatter Henry, and forsake thy brother!
Yet, as we may, we'll meet both the and Warwick,
Come on, brave soldiers; doubt not of the day;
And that, once gotten, doubt not of large pay.

SCENE VIII.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Warwick, Clarence, Montague, Exeter, and Oxford.

War. What council, lords! Edward from Belisia,
With haste and armed, and holp unto this end
Hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas,
And with his troops doth march aman to London;
And many, many people flock to him.
Exef. Let many men, and cast him back again.
Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out;
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.
War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends;
Not mutiny in peace, yet bold in war;
Those will I musteur up—and thou, son Clarence,
Shalt stir, in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent.
The kinging of gentlemen to come with thee:
Thou, brother Moutague, in Hertfordshire,
Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find
Men well inclin'd to hear what thou command'st:
And thou, brother Oxford, and others well belov'd,
In Oxfordshire shall muster up thy friends.

—My sovereign, with the loving citizens,—
Like to this island, girt in with the ocean,
Or modest Duna, circled with her nymphs;
Shall rest in London, till we come to him.
Fair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply.—
Farewell, my sovereign.
K. Hen. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy's true hope.
Clar. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness' hand.
K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate!
Shout, TQUENCY!—O lord! and so take my leave.
Ozj. And thus: [Kissing Henry's hand.] I seal
my truth, and bid adieu.
K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague,
And all at once, once more a happy farewell.
War. Farewell, sweet lords; let's meet at Coventry.
K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest a white,
Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship-up?
Methinks, the power that Edward hath in field,
Should not be able to encounter mine.
Exe. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.
K. Hen. Methinks it's not my fear, my mour'd hath got me fame.
I have not stop'd my mine ears to their demands,
Nor posted off their suits with slow delays:
My youth hath been balm to heal their wounds,
My mildness hath alloy'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dry'd their water-floiving tears:
I have not been deguised of their wealth,
Nor much oppress'd them with great subsidies,
Nor forward of revenue, though they much err'd;
Then why should they love Edward more than me?
No, Exeter, these are not the challenge grace:
And, when the lion fawns upon the lamb,
The lamb will never cease to follow him.

[Sound behind. A Lancaster! A Lancaster! Exe. Hurrah! Lord! what should these be?

Enter King Edward, Gloster, and Soldiers.

K. Edw. Seize on the shame-faced Henry, bear him hence,
A pack of cards was formerly termed a deck of cards.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Coventry.

Enter upon the Walls, Warwick, the Mayor of Coventry, two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford? How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow? 1 Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward. War. How far off is our brother Montague? Where is the post that came from Montague? 2 Mess. By this at Daintree, with a praiseful friend.

Enter Sir John Somerville.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son? And, by the guess, how high is Clarence now? Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces, and do expect him here some two hours hence. War. Then Clarence is at hand; hear his drum. Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies; the drum your honor hears, marcheth from Warwick. War. Who should that be? believe, unlock'd for friends. Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

Drums. Enter King Edward, Glover, and Forces, marching.

K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle. Glo. See, how the sly Warwick mans the wall. War. O, unbrid spirit! is sportful Edward come? Where slept our scouts, or how are they seduced, that we could hear no news of his repair? K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou open the city gates? Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee!—Call Edward—king, and at his hands beg mercy, and he shall pardon thee these outrages. War. Nay, rather wilt thou draw thy forces hence, confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down!—Call Warwick—patron, and be pacient, and thou shalt still remain the duke of York. Glo. I thought, at least, he would have said the king; or did he make the jest against his will? War. Is not a dudelor, sir, a goodly gift? Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give; I'll do thee service for so good a gift. War. Twas I, that gave the kingdom to thy brother. K. Edw. Why, then, 'tis mine, if but by Warwick's gift. War. Though I set my Atlee for so great a weight; and, whiles he thought to steal the single ten, The king was shily finger'd from the deck! You left poor Henry at the bishop's palace, and, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower. K. Edw. I troth I was even so; yet you are Warwick still.

Glo. Come, Warwick, take the time, kneel down, kneel down; Nay, when I sit now, or else the iron cools. War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,

And with the other fling it at thy face,
Than hear so low a saw, to strike to thee.

K. Edw. Sait how thou canst, have wind and tide thy friend;
This hand, last wound about thy coal-black hair,
Shall, when the head is warm, and now cut off,
Write in the dust this sentence with thy blood.—
Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more.

Enter Oxford, with Drum and Colors.

War. O cheerful colors! see where Oxford comes.

[Oxford and his Forces enter the City. Glo. The gates are open, let us enter too.

K. Edw. So other sides may set upon our backs;
Sotion in good array; for they, in our doubt,
Will issue out again, and bid us battle;
If not, the city, being but of small defence,
We'll quickly rouse the traitors in the same.

Enter Montague, with Drum and Colors.

Mont. Montague, Montague, for Lancaster! He and his Forces enter the City. Glo. Thou and thy brother both shall buy this treason

Even with the dearest blood thy bodies bear.

K. Edw. The harder match'd, the greater victory;
My mind presageth happy gain, and conquest.

Enter Somerset, with Drum and Colors.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster! He and his Forces enter the City. Glo. Two of thy name, both dukes of Somerset, Have sold their lives unto the house of York; And thou shalt be the third, if this sword hold.

Enter Clarence, with Drum and Colors.

War. And lo, where George of Clarence sweeps along;
Of force enough to bid his brother battle:
With whom an upright zeal to right prevails,
More than the nature of a brother's love—
Come, Clarence, come; thou wilt, if Warwick calls, Cler. [To Warwick] Warwick, know you what this means?

Taking the red rose out of his Cap.

Look here, I throw my enemy at thee:
I will not run my father's hand,
Who gave his blood to line the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Why, trow'st thou, Warwick,
That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, unnatural,
To bend the fatal instruments of war
Against his brother, and his lawful king?
Perhaps, thou wilt object my holy oath;
To keep that oath, were more impolicy
Than Jephtha's, when he sacrificed his daughter
I am so sorry for my trespass made,
That to deserve well of my brother's hands,
I here profess myself thy mental father.
With resolution, where'er I meet thee,
[As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad.] To plague thee for thy soul misleading me,
And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee,
And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.
Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends;
And, Richard, do not drown upon my faults.
For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more below'd,

Than if I should but deserv'd our hate.
Glo. Welcome, good Clarence; this brother-like,

Inensible.
War. O passing traitor, perjure, and unjust!

Warwick. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the good and fair land?

War. Alas, I am not cooped here for defence; I will away towards Barnet presently, and bid farewell to Edward, if thou dost not.

K. Edu. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way—

Lords, to the field; saint George, and victory. [March. Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Field of Battle near Barnet.

[Enter King Edward, Warwick, and Montague; and Warwick and Montague fight; the former wounds and slays the latter.]

War. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, friend, or foe, and tell me, who is victor, York, or Warwick? Why ask I that? my manaced body shows, my blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shows, That I must yield my body to the earth, And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe. Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge, Whose strength, to save shelter to the wandering eagle, Under whose shade the ramping lion slept; Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree, And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind. These eyes that now are dimm'd with death's black veil, Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun, To search the secret treasures of the world: The wrinkles in my brows, now filled with blood, Were Ienk'd to no kingly sepulchres; For who lov'd king, but I could dig his grave! And who durst smile, when Warwick bent his brow? Lo, now my glory smarr'd in dust and blood! My parks, my walks, my manors that I had, Even now forsook me: and, of all my lands, Is nothing left me, but my body's length. Why, what is pump, rule, reign, but earth and dust! And live we how we can, yet die we must.

[Enter Oxford and Somerset.]

Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick!wert thou as we are, We might recover all our loss again! The queen from France hath brought a puissant power; Even now we heard the news: Alas, couldst thou die!

War. Why, then I would not die.—Ah, Montague, If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand, And with thy lips keep in my soul a while! Thou lovest me not; for, brother, if thou didst, Thy tears would wash this cold concealed blood, That glues my lips, and will not let me speak. Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead.

Som. Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last; And to the latest gasp, cried out for Warwick, And said, Command me to my valiant brother. And more he would have said; and more he spoke, Which sounded like a cannon in a vault, That might have beaten strongest; but at last, I well might hear delivered with a groan,— O, farewell, Warwick!

War. Sweet rest to his soul! — Fly, lords, and save yourselves: for Warwick dies. You all farewell, to meet again in heaven.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.

[Enter King Edward in triumph; with Clarence, Gloucester, and others.]

K. Edu. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course, And we are graced with wreaths of victory. But in the midst of this bright-shining day, I spy a black, suspicion, threatening cloud, That will encounter with our glorious sun, Ere he attains his eastern bed. I mean, my lords,—those powers that the queen Hath rais'd in Gallia, have arriv'd our coast. And, as we hear, march on to fight with us. [chorus. A cloud will soon disperse that cloud, And blow to the source from which it came: Thy very beams will dry those vapors up; For every cloud engenders not a storm. Holofernes is valued thirty thousand strong, And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her: If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd, H[is] faction will be as strong as ours. K. Edu.] War. But who can he that is advanc'd by so many friends, That they do hold their course towards Tewksbury? We, having now the best at Barnet field, Will thither straight, for willingness ride way; And, as we see, our strength will be augmented in every county as we go along,— Strike up the drum; cry—Courage! and away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewksbury.

March. Enter Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Soldiers.

Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wail the loss; But cheerly seek how to redress their harms. What though the mast be now blown over-board, The cable broke, the holding anchor lost, And half our sailors scarr'd in blood! Yet lives our pilot still: I' th' meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearless lad, With tearful eyes add water to the sea, And give more strength to that which hath too much: Whiles, in his crew, the ship splits on the rock, Which industry and courage might have sav'd! Ah, what a soul is this! had a task of this! Say, Warwick was our anchor; What of that! And Montague our top-mast; What of him! Our slaughtered friends the tackles; What of these! Why, is not Oxford but our brother? And Somerset another godly mast! The friends of France our shrouds and tackling's! And, though unskill'd, why not Ned and I! For once allow'd the skilful pilot's charge! We will not from the helm, to sit and weep; But keep our course, though the rough wind say—

From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck, As good to chide the waves as speak them fair. And what is Edward, but a ruthless sea? What Clarence, but a quirk and pleasant scent? And Richard, but a ragged fatal rock? All these the enemies to our poor bark. Say, you can swim after, be the tide aneath! Tread on the sand; why there you quickly sink: Beside the rock; the tide will wash you off, Or else you perish, that's a thousand death. This speak I, lords, to let you understand, In case some one of you would fly from us, That there's no hope—no mercy with the brothers, More than with ruthless waves, with sands, and rocks. Why, courage, then! what cannot be avoided, 'Twere childish weakness to lament or fear.

Prince. Methinks, a woman of this valiant spirit Should, if she hear her master say these words, Infuse his breast with mancanimity, And make him, naked, bold a man at arms. I speak not this as doubting any here: For, did I but suspect a fearful man, He should have leave to go away betimes; Lost, in our need, he might infect another, And make him of like spirit to himself. If any such be here, as God doth permit, Let him depart, before we need his help.

Som. Women and children of so high a courage! And warrour's heart! And valiant! And perpetual shame,— O, brave young prince! thy famous father Both live again in thee; Long mayst thou live, To bear his image, and renew his glories! Som. And he, that will not light for such a hope, Go home to bed, and, like the owl by day, If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at.
Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset;—sweet Oxford, thanks.
Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.
         Enter a Messenger.
Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand, Ready to fight; therefore he resolve.
Oxf. I thought no less; it is his policy, To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.
Som. But he's deceiv'd, we are in readiness.
Q. Mar. This cheers my heart to see your forwardness.
Oxf. Here pitch our battle, hence we will not budge.
March. Enter at a distance, King Edward, Clarence, Gloster, and Forces.
K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which by the heaven's assistance, and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
I need not add more fuel to your fire,
For, well I wot, ye blaze to burn them out:
Give signal to the light, and to it, lords.
Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say,
My tears gainsey; for every word I speak,
Ye see, I drink the water of mine eyes,
Therefore no more but this—Heny, your sovereign,
Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd;
His house, his house, his house; his servants slain,
His statutes cancelled, and his treasure spent;
And yonder is the wolf that makes this spoil.
You light in justice: then, in God's name, lords,
Be valiant, and give signal to the light!
[Exeunt both Armies.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the same.

Alarums: Excursions: and afterwards a Retreat.
Then enter King Edward, Clarence, Gloster,
And Forces; with Queen Margaret, Oxford,
And Somerset, Prisoners.
K. Edw. Nor here a period of tumultuous broils,
Away with Oxford to Hamnes' castle straight:
For Somerset, off with his guilty head.
Go, bear them hence: I will not hear them speak.
Oxf. For my part, I'll not trouble thee with words.
Som. Nor; but stop with patience to my fortune.
[Exeunt Oxford and Somerset, guarded.
Q. Mar. So part we safely in this troublous world,
To meet with joy in a sweet Jerusalem.
K. Edw. Is proclamation made,—that, who finds Edward,
Shall have a high reward, and he his life?
Glo. It is known, where youthful Edward comes.
Enter Soldiers, with Prince Edward.
K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant, let us hear him speak:
What! can so young a thane begin to prick?
Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make,
For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,
And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?
Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York!
Suppose that I am now my father's mouth;
Resign thy chair, and, where I stand, ined them,
Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee,
Which, traitor, thou wouldest have me answer to.
Whence is the work, that thy father had been so resolv'd?
Glo. That thou mightest still have worn the petticoat,
And ne'er have stol'n the breech from Lancastre.
Prince. Let Essex fail in a winter's night;
His currish riddles sort not with this place.
Glo. By heaven, brat, I'll plague you for that word.
Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague to men.
Glo. For God's sake take away this captive scold.
Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-back rather.
K. Edw. Peace, willful boy, or I will charm your tongue.
Prince. Untutor'd, thou art too malapert.
Prince. I know my duty; you are all undutiful;
Lascivious Edward,—and thou perjur'd George,—
* Know,
A castle in Percy.
The prince calls Richard, for his crookedness, Essex.

And thou mis-shapen Dick,—I tell ye all,
I am your better, traitors as ye are;—
And thou usurp'd my father's right and mine.
K. Edw. Take that, the likeness of this racer here
[Stab him.
Glo. Swear'st thou can take, that end thy agony.
[Stab him.
Clar. And there's for twitting me with perjury.
[Stab him.
Q. Mar. O, kill me too!
Glo. Yes, and shall.
[Offers to kill her.
K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, lor we have done too much.
Glo. Why should she live, to fill the world with wrong?
Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king my brother;—
I'll hence to London on a serious matter.
Ere ye come there, be sure to hear some news.
Clar. What! what!
K. Edw. To overthrow the Tower! [Exit.
Glo. Q. Mar. O, Ned, sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy!
Canst thou not speak!—O traitors! murderers!—
They that stab'd Caesar, shed no blood at all,
Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame.
If this foul deed were by, to equal it.
He was a man: this, in respect, a child;—
And I will swear what is my heart may burst.
What's worse than murder, that I may name it?—
No, no; my heart will burst, an I speak;—
And I will speak, that this my heart may burst;—
Butchers and villains, bloody ey'd, bloody
How sweet a plant have you untimely cropp'd?
You have no children, butchers! if you had,
The thought of them would have stirr'd up premonish:
But, if you ever chance to have a child,
Look in his youth to have him so cut off,
As, deathmen, you have bid this sweet young
K. Edw. Away with her; go bear her hence perforce.
Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, despacht me
Here, beneath thy sword, I'll pardon thee my death:
What! wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, do it thou.
Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much case.
Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do, sweet Clarence, do thou do it.
Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear, I would not do it?
Q. Mar. Nay, but thou usest to forgery thyself;—
'Twas sin before; but now 'tis charity.
What! wilt thou not? where is that devil's butcher,
Hard-favor'd Richard? Richard, where art thou?
Thou prince, and sends: Murder is thy all-embrace;
Petitioners for blood thou ne'er put'st back.
K. Edw. Away, I say; I charge ye bear her hence,
Q. Mar. What! came to you, and yours, as to this prince!
[Exit, led out forcibly.
K. Edw. Where's Richard gone!
Clar. To London all in post: and, as I guess,
To make a bloody supper in the Tower.
K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his head.
Now march we hence: discharge the common sort
With pay and thanks, and let's away to London,
And see if mechanic queen how well she fares;—
By this, I hope, she hath a son for me.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—London. A Room in the Tower.
King Henry is discovered sitting with a Book in his hand, the Lieutenant attending. Enter Gloster.
Glo. Good day, my lord! What, at your book so serious?
K. Hen. Ay, my good lord: My lord, I should say rather;—
'Tis said to father, good was little better;
Good Gloster, and good devil, were alike,
And both postreverent; therefore, not good lord.
Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must con-
fer. [Exit Lieutenant.
K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf:
So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat into the butcher's knife.
What scene of death hath Roscius now to act!
Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind:
The thief doth fear each blush an officer.
* She alludes to the desertion of Clarence.
K. Hen. The bird, that hath been lined in a bush,
With trenchets warm, which doth make every bush; And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where in the poor young was lined, was caught, and fled.

Glo. Why, what a peevish fool was that of Crete,
That taught his son the office of a wolf!
And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd.
K. Hen. I, Dedalus; my poor boy, Learus; Thy father, Mimos, that deniéd our course;
The sun, that saw'd the wings of my sweet boy,
Thy brother Edward; and thyself, the sea,
Whose curious gulf did swallow up his life.
Ah, kill me with thy weapon, not with words!
My breast can better brook thy dagger's point,
Than can my eyes that tragic history.
But wherefore dost thou come! is't for my life?
Glo. Think'st thou, I am an executioner!
K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art; 1
If murdering innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner.

Glo. Thy son I kill'd, for his presumption.
K. Hen. Had'st thou been kill'd, when first thou
Hadst not liv'd to kill a son of mine, and thus propheisy,—that many a thousand,
Which thou hast join'd to the mangled fear; And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's,
And many an orphan's water-standing eye;
Men for their sons', wives for their husbands' fate,
And parents for their parents' timeless death,— Shall see the hour that ever thou wast born.
The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
The night-crow cried, abounding luckless time;
Dogs howl'd, and feline lances shot down trees;
The raven rook'd her on the chimney's top,
And chattering pies in dismal discords sung,
That mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit,—an indigest deformed lump,
Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree.
Teeth harder than in thy head, when thou wast born,
To signify,—thou canst not but the world:
And, if the rest be true which I have heard, This canst do.
Glo. I'll hear no more;—Die, prophet, in thy speech;
Stabs him. [Aside.]
For this, amongst the rest, was I ordain'd.
K. Hen. And, for such more slaughter hereafter, O God! forgive my sins, and pardon thee! [Dies.]
Glo. What, will the aspiring blood of Lancaster Sink in the ground! I thought it would have Seem, how my sword weeps for the poor king's death! O, may such purple tears be always shed;
From those that wash the downfall of our house!— If I have mark of his body yet remain,
Down, down to hell;—and say,—I sent thee thither.

[Stabs him again.]
I that have neither pity, love, nor fear,— Indeed, 'tis true, that Henry told me of; As I have often heard my mother say,
I came into the world with my legs forward:
Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste,
And seek their ruin that ha'p'd our right? The midwife wonder'd; and the women cried,
O, Jesus bless us, he is born with teeth;
And so I was, which plainly signified,— That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.
Then since the heavens have shap'd my body so,
Let hell make crook'd my mind to answer it.
I have no brother, I am like no brother;

* Childish
  To seek signified to lodge on any thing,
And this word—love, which grayheards call divine, Be residing more the one and other.
And not in me; I am myself alone.—
Clarence, beware; thou keep'st me from the light;
But I will sour a patchy day for thee:
For I will buy abroad such prophecies,
That Edward shall be fearful of his life:
And then, to purge his fear, I'll be thy death.
King Henry, and the prince his son, are gone:
Clarence, Ned, for this I have another, and best; Counting myself but bad, till I be best.—
I'll throw thy body in another room.
And triumph, Henry, in thy day of doom. [Exit.]

SCENE VII.—A Room in the Palace.
KING EDWARD is discovered sitting on his Throne;
QUEEN ELIZABETH with the infant Prince. CLAIDENCE, GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and others, near him.
K. Edw. Once more we sit in England's royal throne,
Re-purchas'd with the blood of enemies.
What valiant foo-men, like to autumn's corn,
Have we now'd down, in tops of all their pride?
Three dukes of Somerset, threefold renown'd
For hardy and undoubted champions.
Two Chidors, as the father and the son,
And two Northumberlands; two braver men
Never spair'd their courser's at the trumpet's sound;
With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Montague,
That in their chains fetter'd the kindly lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roa'd.
Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstock of security.—
Come, hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy;
Young Ned, for this I have another, and the rest,
Have in our arms watch'd the winter's light;
Went all a-foot in summer's scalding heat;
That thou might'st reposest the crown in peace.
And of our labors thou shalt reap the gain.
Glo. I'll blast his harvest, if your head were laid;
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This shoulder was ordain'd so thick, to heave;
And heave it shall some weight, or break my back.— Work thou the way,—and thou shalt execute.

K. Edw. Clarence and Gloster, love my lovely queen;
And kiss thy princely nephew, brothers both.
Clar. The duty, that I owe unto thy majesty,
I seal on the lips of this sweet babe.
K. Edw. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother,
Brother, thanks.
Glo. And, that I love the tree from whence thou
stamn'st,
Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit;—
To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his master;
And cried—\(\text{aside}^\)—when as he meant—
\(\text{all harm;}\)
K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights,
Having my country's peace, and brothers' loves.
Clar. What will your grace have done with Margare?
Reignier, her father, to the king of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,
And father have they sent for it her reason.
K. Edw. Away with her, and wait her hence to France.
And now what rests, but that we spend the time
With stately triumphs, nuptial comic shows,
Such as beset the pleasures of the court?—
Sound, drums, and trumpets!—farewell, our army! For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy. [Exit.]

SCENE.—England.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds, that low’d upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;
Our stern alarums changed to merry meetings;
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Grim-visaged war hath smooth’d his wrinkled front;
And now,—instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,—
He capes mildly in a lady’s chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a hale
But I,—that am not shaped for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp’d, and want love’s ma-

That dogs bark at me as I halt by them;—
Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time;
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity;—
And therefore, since I cannot prove a lover,
To entertain these fair well-spoken days,—
I am determined to prove a villain,
And hate the idle pleasures of these days,—
Plots have I laid, inducements dangerous,
By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
To set my brother Clarence, and the King,
In deadly hate the one against the other;
And, if King Edward be as true and just
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew’d up;
About a prophecy, which says—that G
Of Edward’s heirs the murderer shall be.
Dare, thoughts, down to my soul! here Clarence comes.

Enter Clarence, guarded, and Brackenbury.

Brother, good day; What means this armed guard
That waits upon your grace?

Clar. His majesty,
Tendering my person’s safety, hath appointed
This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

* Preparations for mischief.
Scene II. King Richard III.

Enter Hastings.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord!

Glo. As much unto my good lord chamberlain! Well are you welcome to this open air.

Hast. How bath your lordship brook'd imprisonment?

With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must;

But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks,

That we are the force of my imprisonment.

Glo. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too.

For they, that were your enemies, are his,

And have prevail'd as much on him as you.

Hast. More pity that the eagles should be mow'd,

White kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Glo. What news abroad?

Hast. Nay, news so good to report, as this at home;

The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy.

And his physicians fear him mightily.

Glo. Now, by all Paul, this news is bad indeed.

Hast. His lord, the wretch, and his physician,

And over-much consumed his royal person;

Tis very grievous to be thought upon.

What, is he in his bed?

Hast. He is.

Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you. [Exit Hastings.

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die,

Till George be prick'd with post-haste to heaven.

I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence.

With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments;

And, if I fail not in my deep intent,

Clarence hath not another day to live:

Which done, God take king Edward to his mercy,

And leave the world for me to bustle in!

For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter:

What thou wilt do of her husband and her father;

The readiest way to make the wench amends,

Is—To become her husband, and her father;

The which should I: not all so much I love,

As for another secretly to invent,

By marrying her, which I must reach unto,

But yet I run before my horse to market:

Clarence doth breathe; Edward still aives, and reigns;

When they are gone, then must I count my gains.

[Exit.

Scene II.—Another Street.

Enter the earl of King Henry the Sixth, borne in an open sight; gentleman bearing Hatherell, to guard it; and lady Anne as mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honorable load;

It honor may be shrouded in a hearse:

Whilst I a while obsequiously lament

The uniting full of virtues done Lancaster;

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Then bloody remainder of that royal M'd;

Be it lawful that I invoke the thy ghost!

To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,

Thy wife to Edward, to thy slaughtered son,

Shabb'd keep thine ail-same hand that made these wounds!

Lo, in these windows, that let forth thy life,

I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes:

O, cursed be the hands that made these holes!

Cursed the heart, that had the heart to do it!

Cursed the blood, that let this blood from hence!

More direful hap beenad be that wretched,

That makes us wretched by the death of thee,

Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads.

Or any creeping venom't thing that lives!

If ever he have child, abortive be it,

Prodigies, and unutterably brought to light,

Whose ugly and unnatural aspect

May fright the hopeful mother at the view;

And that be her to unhappiness!

If ever he have wife, let her be made

More miserable by the death of him,

Than I am made by my young lord, and thee—

Come, now, toward Chester with your holy load.

Taken from Paul's secret chambered city;

And still, as you are weary of the weight,

Rest you, white I lament king Henry's horse.

[The Bearer's take up the corpse, and advance.

Enter Gloucester.

Glo. Stay you that bear the corpse, and set it down

With becoming reverence for the dead.
Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To make such horrible and charitable deeds?
Glo. Villains, set down the curse; or, by saint Paul, I'll make a curse of him that disobeys.
I'ent. My lord, stand back, and let the confine pass.
Glo. Unhappy dog! stand then when I command:
Advance thy halberd higher than my breast,
Or, by saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot,
And spur upon thee, beggar, for thy belonging.
[The Beavers set down the Coffin.
Anne. What, do you trouble? are you all afraid?
Alas, I blame you not; for you are mortal,
And mankind eyes cannot endure the devil. —
Avant, thou dreadful minister of hell!
Thou hast but power over his mortal body,
Heart, soul, will, and understanding; not have; yet have not: become.
Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curt.
Anne. Foil devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not;
For thou hast made this unhappy heart fly,
Ful'd it with cursing cares, and deep execrations.
If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,
Behold this pattern of thy butcheries: —
Glo. Gentlemen, see, see! dead Henry's wounds,
Open their concealed mouths, and bleed afresh! —
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity;
For 'tis thy presence that exalts this blood
From cold and empty veins, where blood doth dwell;
Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural,
Provokes this deluge most unnatural.
O God, which this blood mad'st, revenge thy death!
O God, which this blood drained, shed thy death!
Either, Heaven, with lightning strike the murderer dead;
Or, earth, open wide, and eat him quick;
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered!
Glo. Lady, you know no rules of charity,
Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses.
Anne. Villain, thou know'st no law of God nor man;
No beast so fierce, but knows some touch of pity.
Glo. Beast? no; a woman, and therefore am no beast.
Anne. O wonderful, when devils tell the truth!
Glo. More wonderful, when angels are so angry. —
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed evils, to give me leave,
By circumstance, but to acquit myself.
Anne. Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to excuse thy cruelty.
Glo. Fainter than tongue can name thee, let me have
Some patient leisure to excuse myself.
Anne. Foul'er than heart e'en think thee, thou estake make
No excuse current but to hang thyself.
Glo. By such despair, I should do thee mine.
Anne. And, by expiring, shalt thou stand excused;
For doing worthy vengeance on thyself,
That didst unmercifully slaughter upon others.
Glo. Say, that I slew them not?
Anne. Why, then, they are not dead:
But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee.
Glo. I did not kill your husband.
Anne. Then, why, he is alive.
Glo. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand.
Anne. In thy soul's throat hast thou heat: queen
Marlet saw
Thy murd'rous faction smoking in his blood;
The which thou once didst bend against her breast,
But that thy brothers bore it, and sometime
Glo. I was provoked by her sand-turning tongue,
That laid his guilt upon my guiltless shoulders.
Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind,
That thou didst bend against her heart; but butcheries
Dost thou not think this king?
I grant ye.
Glo. Anne. Dost grant me, hedgehog? then God vouchsafe
Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed.
O, he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.
Glo. The inferior of the kingdom of heaven that hath him.
Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never come.
Glo. Let him thank me, that help to send him
For he was fitter for that place, than earth.

— Act I.

Anne. And thou unfit for any place but hell.
Glo. Anne. Place else, if you will hear me name it.

Anne. Some dungeon.
Glo. Anne. Your bed-chamber.
Anne. 'Tis set beside the chamber where thouliest!
Glo. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.
Anne. I hope so.
Glo. Anne. I know so.—But, gentle lady Anne,—
To leave thee this keen encounter of our wars,
And fall somewhat into a slower method, —
Is not the cause of the timeless deaths
Of these Plantagenets, Henry and Edward,
As hangmen as the executioner.
Anne. Thou wast the cause and most accru'd effect.
Glo. Anne. Thy beauty was the cause of that effect;
Your beauty which did haunt me in my sleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom.
Anne. It is not your duty to be here, I fear thee, Herculean. These nails should rend that beauty from my checks.
Glo. Anne. These eyes could not endure that beauty's

You should not bless me if it I stood by:
As all the world is cherish'd by the sun,
So by that; it is my day, my life.
Anne. Anne. I might overshad'y this thy day, and death thy life!
Glo. Anne. Curse not thyself, fair creature; thou art both.
Glo. Anne. This is not true, to be, that I am ever on thee.
Glo. Anne. It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be revenged on him that loveth thee.
Anne. Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,
To be revenged on him that kill'd my husband.
Glo. Anne. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,
Did it to help thee to a better husband.
Anne. Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the breath.
Glo. Anne. He lives, that loves you better than he could.
Anne. Anne. Name him.
Anne. Anne. Why, that was he.
Glo. Anne. The self-same name, but one of better nature.
Anne. Anne. Where is he?
Glo. Anne. Here: [She spits at him.] Why
dost thou spit at me?
Anne. Anne. 'Twould be mortal poison, for thy sake!
Glo. Anne. Never came poison from so sweet a place.
Anne. Anne. Never hang poison on a fouler toad,
Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.
Glo. Anne. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.
Anne. Anne. Why, could they be bashfuls, to strike thee dead!
Glo. Anne. I would they were, that I might die at once;
For now they kill me with a living death.
These eyes of thine from mine hate draw salt
tears,
Shamed their aspects with store of childish drops:
These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear; —
Nor when my father's heart and Iward wept,
To hear the piteous man that Rutland made,
When black-faced Clifford shook his sword at him;
Nor when thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death;
And twenty times made pause, to sob and weep,
That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks,
Like meek children, wept with them. in the day time,
My manly eyes did scorn a humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not hence exhaile,
Thy beauty hath, and made them blind with Weeping.
I never sued to friend, nor enemy;
My tongue could never learn sweet soothing word,
But how thy beauty is propos'd my heart,
My proper dream on, and groan'd with a tongue to speak.
She looks sorrowful at him,
Teach not thy lip such scorn; for it was made
For kissing, lady, not for such contempt.
If thy revenge ye want cannot forgive,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;
Which it thou please to hide in this true breast,
And the soul for that, that Desire thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly stroke.
And humbly beg the death upon my knee.
[He breaks his Breast open; she offers it with his Steward.
* Pitying.
Scene III. King Richard III.

Nay, do not pause; for I did kill King Henry;—
But 'twas thy beauty, that provoked me.
Nay, how couldst thou speak so? I that stabb'd young Edward—
She again offers at his Breast.
But 'twas thy heavenly face that set me on.

[She is full the Sword.

Take up the sword again for me.

Anne. Arise, desuncler; though I wish thy death. I will not be thy executioner.

Glo. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.

Anne. I have already.

Glo. That was in thy rage,
Speak it again, and, even with the word, This hand, which for thy love, did kill thy love, Shall, for thy love, kill a far truer love,
To both their deaths shalt thou be accessory.

Anne. I would, I knew thy heart.

Glo. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue.

Anne. I fear me, both are false.

Glo. Then man was never true.

Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.

Glo. Say thou, my peace is made,
Anne. That shall you know hereafter.

Glo. But shall I live in hope?

Anne. All men, I hope, live so.

Glo. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.

Anne. To take, is not to give.

[She puts on the Ring.

Glo. Look, how this ring encompasseth thy finger
Even so thy breast encompasseth my poor heart;
Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.
And if thy proud servant may but beg one favor at thy gracious hand,
Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.

Anne. What is it?

Glo. That it may please you leave these sad disasters
To him that hath more cause to be a mourner,
And presently repair to Crosby-place?
Where—after I have solemnly interred,
At Chelsey monastery this noble king,
And wet his grave with my repentant tears,—
I will with all expedient duty see you.
For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you,
Grant me this boon.

Anne. With all my heart; and much it joys me too,
To see you become so penitent.

Tressel, and Berkley, go along with me.

Glo. Bid me farewell.

Anne. 'Tis more than you deserve;
But, since you teach me how to flout you,
Imagine I have said farewell already.

[Exit Lady Anne, Tressell, and Berkley.

Glo. Take up the corpse, Sirs,
Towards Chetsey, noble lord;—

God. No, to White Frars; there attend my coming.

[Exit the rest, with the Corpse.

Was ever woman in this honor won?
Was ever woman in this honor won?
I'll have her,—but I will not keep her long.

What! that he'll kill her husband, and his father,
To take her in her heart's extremest hate;
With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,
The bleeding witness of her hatred by;

With God, her conscience, and these bars against me,
And no friends to back my suit withal,
But the plain devil and desuncler looks,
And yet to win her,—all the world to nothing!

But that she forgo'd already that brave prince,
Edward, her lord, whom I some three months since
Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury!
A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,—
Freaded in the person of his love,
Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,—
The spacious world cannot again afford:
And will she yet abuse her eyes on me?
That clasp'd the golden prince of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woful bed?

On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety!
On me, that halt, and am misshapen thus!
My dukesdom to a beggary deriner,8
I do mistake my person all this while:
Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,

* In Bishopsgate-street.
8 A small French edn.

Myself to be a marvellous proper man.
I'll beat charges for a looking-glass;
And entertain a score of two of tailors,
To study fashions to adorn my body;
Since I am crept in favor with myself,
I will maintain it with some little cost,
But, first, I'll turn you low in his grave;
And then return lamenting to my love.—
Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass,
That I may see my shadow as I pass.

[Exit.

Scene III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth, Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey.

Ric. Have patience, madam; there's no doubt his majesty
Will soon recover his accustomed' health.

Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse.

Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort,
And cheer his grace with quick and merry words.

Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would betide of me?

Grey. No other harm, but loss of such a lord.

Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harms.

Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly son,
To be your comforter, when he is gone.

Q. Eliz. Ah, he is young; and his minority
Is put unto the trust of Richard Glositer,
A man that loves not me, nor honour well.

Ric. Is it concluded, he shall be protector?

Q. Eliz. It is determin'd, not concluded yet;
But so it must be, if the king miscarry.

Enter Buckingham and Stanley.

Grey. Here come the lords of Buckingham and Stanley.

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace.

Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been!

Q. Eliz. The countess Richmond, good my lord of Stanley,
To your good prayer will scarcely say amen.
Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And lovers not you, be you, good lord, assur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Stan. I do beseech, either not believe
The envious slanders of her false accusers;
Or, if she be accus'd on true report,
Boar with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds
From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.

Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my lord of Stanley?

Stan. But now the duke of Buckingham, and I,
Are come from visiting his majesty.

Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lord?

Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully.

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer
With him?

Buck. Ay, madam, he desires to make atonement
Between the duke of Glositer and your brothers,
And between them and my lord chamberlaine;
And sent to warn them to his royal presence.

Q. Eliz. Would all were well!—But that will never be:—
I fear, our happiness is at the height.

Enter Glositer, Hastings, and Dorset.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it.

Who are they, that complain unto the king,
That I, forsorth, am stern, and love them not?
By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly.
That fill his ears with such dissonant rumors.
Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French moss, and aspish courtesy,
I must be held a rancious enemy.
Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm,
But thus his simple truth must be abus'd
By silken, sly, insinuating Jacks?9

Grey. To whom, in all this presence speaks your grace?

Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor grace.
When have I injur'd thee? when done thee wrong?

* Low follows.
LIFE AND DEATH OF

Act I.

Or thee!—or thee!—or any of your faction! A plague upon you all! His royal grace.—Whom God preserve better than you would wish! Can you not, in a breath, dispense with it? But must you trouble him with i' the court complaints.

Q. ELIZ. Brother of Gloster, you must take the charge.

The king, of his own royal disposition, And provok'd by no such suitor else: Aiming, belike, at your inferior hatred, That it may drive your own outward show off, Against my children, brothers, and myself, Makes him to send; that thereby he may rather The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.

Q. ELIZ. Gist!—The world is grown so bad, That wrens may prey where eagles dare not perch. Since every Jack become a gentleman, There's many a genteel person made a Jack.

Q. ELIZ. By him that rais'd me to this careful height From that contented hap which I enjoy'd, I never demean'd his majesty Against the duke of Clarence, but have been An earnnest advocate to plead for him. My lord, you do me shameful injury. Falsely to draw me in these vile suspicions. GLO. You may deny that you were not the cause Of my lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Rich. She may, my lord; I know not.

Glo. She may, my lord, Rivers!—why, who knows not so? She may do more, sir, than denying that: She may declare how she helps you in your enterprises; And then deny her aiding hand therein. And lay those honors on your high desert. What may she not? She may!—say, marry may she.

Rich. What, marry, may she be?

Glo. What, marry, marry she may! marry with a king, A bachelor, a handom-strapping too; I will be such a husband to you and a match for his. Q. ELIZ. My lord of Gloster, I have too long borne Your blunt upbraiding, and your bitter scoffs: By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty, Of these bold tutors I often have immur'd. I had rather be a country servant-maid, Than a great queen with this condition— To be hoot'd, scold'd, ad, and spurn'd! Small joy have I in being England's queen.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, behind.

Q. MAR. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech thee!

Thy honor, state, and seat, is due to me. Glo. What! threat ye me with telling of the king? Tell him, and spare not: look, what I have said I will avouch, in presence of the king; I will adventure to send to the monarch at play.

Rich. To sin, to speak, my pains are quite forgot. Q. MAR. Out, devil! I remember them too well! Thou kill'dst my husband Henry in the Tower, And left me, with my son, to perish, at Peckham. Glo. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband kingly, I was a jack-horse in his great affairs; A freed-man of his enemies and adversaries, A liberal rewarder of his friends; To royalize his blood, I split mine own.

Q. MAR. Ay, and much better blood than his, or his.

Glo. In all which time, you, and your husband sly, Were factious for the house of Lancaster:— And, Rivers, so were you;— was not your husband In Marguerite's battle at Saint Alban's slain? Let me put in your minds, if you forget, † Rojo, ignorant. * A error rated at 68. ‡ Think. What you have been ere now, and what you are; Within, what I have been, and what I am.

Q. MAR. A murd'rous villain, and so still thou art. Glo. To light on Edward's party, for the crown; And, for his need, poor lord, he is new't up! I would to God, my heart were shut like Edward's, Or Edward's heart, and pitiful, like mine own. I am too childish-foolish for this world.

Q. MAR. Hee thee to hell for shame, and leave this world.

Thou couldst not banish; there thy kingdom is. Rich. My lord of Gloster, in those busy days, Which here you urge to prove us enemies, We follow'd then our lord, our lawful king; So did you, and yours should be our king.

Glo. I'll be should be! I had rather be a pedlar: Far be it from my heart, the thought thereof! Q. ELIZ. A little joy, my lord, as you suppose You should enjoy, were you this country's king; As little joy you may suppose in me, That I enjoy, being the queen thereof. For I am she, and altogether joyless.

I can no longer hold me patient. [Advancing.] Hear me, you wrangling prates, that fall out So sharply that I have put it to your mouth: Which of you trembles not, that looks on me; It not, that I, being queen, how you look; Yet that, by you deposed, you quake like rebels!— All, all, you prates, do not turn away. Glo. Fool wrinkle witch, what mak'st thou in my sight! That market repetition of what thou hast marr'd; That will I have, before I let thee go.

Glo. Wert thou not banished on pain of death? Q. MAR. I was; but I do find more pain inishment, Than death can yield me here by my abode. A husband, and a son, thou ow'st to me,— And thou a kingdom;—all of you allegiance: This scorn I shall with right good content with thee; And all the pleasures you usurp are mine.

Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee, When thou didst crown his warlike head with paper, And with the word, the name, draw new streams from his eyes; And then to dry them, gav'st the duke aulent, Steep'd in the infault blood of pretty Rutland;— His curses, then from bitterness of soul For their confounded abominations, are all fall on thee; And God, not we, hath plighted thy bloody deed. Q. ELIZ. So just is God, to right the innocent. Hadst thou the foulest deed to say that babe, And the most merciful, that ever was on thee; Rich. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported. Dost thou now, unbridled by right revenge for it. Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it.

Q. MAR. What! were you snarling all, before I came.

Ready to catch each other by the throat, And turn you all your hatred now on me? Did York's deep stead cause prevail so much with heaven, That I could die, my lovely Edward's death, Their kingdom's loss, my woful banishment, Could all but answer for that peevish brat!— Thyself, I saw thee in the clouds of my curses pierce the clouds, and enter heaven?—Why, that is hate, thus many dill, cloud, to my quick curses!— Though not by war, by surfeite die thy king, As our last murder, to make him a crown, Edward, thy son, that now is prince of Wales, For Edward, my son, that was prince of Wales, Die in his youth, by like unimine violence! Thyself, I saw thee, for that was war, revenge, Ottive thy glory like my wretched self! Long mayst thou live, to wait thy children's loss; And see another, as I see thee now. Dost thou think, that neck, as thou art stol'n in mine! Long die thy happy days before thy death; And after many lengthen'd hours of grief, Die neither mother, wife, nor England's queen!— Rivers, and Dorset, if you were sisters, Dost thou think, that neck, as thou art stol'n in mine! And so wast thou, lord Hastings,— when thy son Was stab'd with bloody daggers; God, I pray him, * Corrupt devil. † Pillagel.
That none of you may live your natural age,
But by some unklow'd accident cut off!
Glo. Have done thy charm, thou handlewither'd ha;
Q. Mar. and leave out thee: stay, dog, for thou
Halt hear me.
If heavens have any treausre plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,
Let them keep it, till thy sins be ripe,
And let thy pride go down their indignation.
On thee, the troubles of the woorl'd peace's
The worm of conscience still be gnaw thy soul!
Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou liv'st,
And seek deep traitors for thy dearest friends.
No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be while some tormenting dream
Afores thine with a hell of ugly devils.
The foolish-small-ard, abortive, holk dog
Thou that wast scald'd in thy nativity.
The slave of nature, and the son of hell!
Thou slander of thy mother's heavy wond's
Our afores buildeth in the father's top!
Thou raz of honor: thou destitute—
Glo. Margaret.

Q. Mar. Richard;

Q. Mar. Ha!

Q. Mar. I call thee not.

Glo. I cry thee mercy then; for I did think,
That thou hadst call'd me all these bitter names.
Q. Mar. Why, so I did: but for no reply;
O, let me make the pened to my curse.
Glo. 'Tis done by me; and ends in—Margaret.
Q. Exeunt
This have you breath'd your curse against yourself.
Q. Mar. Poor painted queen, vain flourish of my fortune
Why strav'sh thou sugar on that botteld spider
Whose deadly web oersareth thee about?
Foot, food! thou whet'st a knife to kill thyself.
The day will come, that thou shalt wish for me
To relish this peace this nought-hunch-back'd head.
Fust. False-bodning woman, end thy frantic curse;
Lest, to thy harm, we move our patience.
Q. Mar. Foolish shame upon you! you have all
Riv. Were you well serv'd, you would be taught your duty.
Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do me duty,
Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects:
Glo. I, and much more: but I was born so high,
Our awny buds in the father's top.
And duffle with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade; alas! alas!
Witness, my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness fold'd up.
Your airy buildeth in our airy's nest—
Glo. God, that seizt it, do not sue it any more.
Q. Mar. Peace, master marquis, you are nullapart;
Your fire-new stamp of honor is scarce current.
Q. That, your young nobility could judge,
Which might have lost some or miserable
They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them:
And, if they, tall they dress themselves to pieces.
Glo. Good counsel, marry;—learn it, learn it,
marquis.
Dors. It touches you, my lord, as much as mine.
Glo. Ay, and much more: but I was born so high,
Our awny buds in the father's top.
And duffle with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade; alas! alas!
Witness, my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness fold'd up.
Your airy buildeth in our airy's nest—
Glo. God, that seizt it, do not sue it any more.

Your fire-new stamp of honor is scarce current.
Q. That, your young nobility could judge,
Which might have lost some or miserable
They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them:
And, if they, tall they dress themselves to pieces.
Glo. Good counsel, marry;—learn it, learn it,
marquis.
Dors. It touches you, my lord, as much as mine.
Glo. Ay, and much more: but I was born so high,
Our awny buds in the father's top.
And duffle with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade; alas! alas!
Witness, my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness fold'd up.
Your airy buildeth in our airy's nest—

Q. Mar. Peace, master marquis, you are nullapart;

Q. That, your young nobility could judge,
Which might have lost some or miserable
They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them:
And, if they, tall they dress themselves to pieces.

marquis.
Dors. It touches you, my lord, as much as mine.
Glo. Ay, and much more: but I was born so high,
Our awny buds in the father's top.
And duffle with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade; alas! alas!
Witness, my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness fold'd up.
Your airy buildeth in our airy's nest—
Glo. God, that seizt it, do not sue it any more.
Q. Mar. Peace, master marquis, you are nullapart;
Your fire-new stamp of honor is scarce current.
Q. That, your young nobility could judge,
Which might have lost some or miserable
They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them:
And, if they, tall they dress themselves to pieces.
Glo. Good counsel, marry;—learn it, learn it,
marquis.
So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,
That as I am a Christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though I should traverse the world of happy days;
So full of dismal terror was the time.

Brack. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you, tell me,

Clare. I thought that I had broken from the Tower,
And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;
And, in my company, my brother Gloster:
With all the rest of my attendants and me,
I tempted me to walk
Upon the hatches; thence we look'd toward England,
And cired up a thousand heavy tunes.

During the wars of York and Lancaster
That had befaln us. As we paced along,
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Mark how the foster stumbled; and, in falling,
Struck me, that thought to stay his board,
Into the tumbling bowls of the main.

O heaven! methought, what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of water in mine ears!
What sights of ugly death within strange eyes!
Methought, I saw a thousand fearful wounds;
A thousand men, that fires shone up on;
With a sight of gold, great pinches, kaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels,
All scattered in the bottom of the sea.
Some lay in dead men's skulls; and, in those holes
Where e'er did once inhabit, there came crept
(As were in scorn of eyes) reclining gems,
That would the sly bottom of the deep,
And mark'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Brack. Had you no such lesse to make of mine death,
To gaze upon these secrets of the deep?

Clare. Methought, I had; and often did I strive
To rend the ghost; but still the carousal flood
Kept in my soul; and would not let it forth
To seek the empty, vast, and winding air;
But another of its own Return did rise
With a, purpose to be seek'd in the sea.

Brack. Awak'st thou not with this sore agony?

Clare. O, no, my dream was lengthen'd after late;
O, they began the tempest to my soul,
I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman which poes write of,
Usurping the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did meet my strange soul,
Was my great bath-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who cry'd afraid—What scarege for perjury
Can this dark moment afford?—afford false Clarenc-
And so he vanish'd: Then came a view by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood; and he shriak'd out aloud.—
Clarence, deceitful, false, fleeing, perjur'd Clarenc-

That slabb'd me in the field by Tacksworthes;
Seize on him, fires, take him to your tormentors,
And brand him in the streets of London:
Sound'st up his name, and how the legions soul
Finds environd, and howling at mine ears,
Such hideous cries, that, with the very noise,
I trembling wak'd, and, for a season after,
Could scarce believe but that I was in hell;
Such terrible impression made my dream.

Brack. No marvel, lord, that it affrighted you;
I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clare. O, Brakenbury, I have done these things—
That now give evidence against my soul,—
For Edward's sake; and, see how he requisites
But—

God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be avenged on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone—
O, spare my guiltless wife, and my poor children—

I pray thee, gentlekeeper, stay by me;
My soul is heavy, and I think would sleep.

Brack. I will, my lord; God give your grace good rest!—

Clarence repose himself on a chair.

Sorrow bereav'd me, and repose, it seems,
Makes the night morning, and the day night.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honor and an inward toil;
And for such dispensations,
They often feel a world of restless cares:
So but between their titles, and low name,
There's nothing differs but the outward name.
ACT II. SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING EDWARD, [died in sick], QUEEN ELIZA-BETH, DORSET, RIVERS, HASTINGS, BUCKINGHAM,
GRAY, and others.

K. Edw. [To DORSET, RIVERS, HASTINGS, BUCKINGHAM,
GRAY, and others]: Why, so—now have I done a good day's work?—
You peers continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassage
From my Redeemer to redeem me hence;
And more in peace my soul shall part to heaven,
Inquest, jury, on the part.

K. Edw. If you do love my brother, hate not me:
I am his brother, and I love him well.
If you are bared for meed; go back again,
And I will send you to my brother Gloster;
Who shall reward you better for my life:
Than Edward will for tiding of my death.
2 MURD. You are deceived; your brother Gloster hates you.

K. Edw. O, no; he loves me, and he holds me dear:
Go you to him from me.

Both MURD. Ay, so we will.

K. Edw. Tell him when that our princely father York
Bless'd him from his three sons with his victorious arm,
And armed him from his charge to look to each other,
He little thought of this divided friendship:
Bid Gloster think on this, and he will weep.

MURD. Ay, mull-stones; as he bade us to work.

MURD. O, do not slander him, for he is kind.

MURD. Right, as snow in harvest—Come, you deceive yourself;
'Tis he that sends us to destroy you here.

K. Edw. It cannot be; for he bewept my fortune,
And hugged me in his arms, and swore, with sohs,
That he would labor my delivery.

1 MURD. Why so doth he, when he delivers you
From this earth's thraldom to the joys of heaven.

2 MURD. Make peace with God, or you must die,
my lord.

K. Edw. He holds that holy feeling in thy soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And art thou yet to thy own soul so blin.
That thou wilt war with God, by my railing me?

Ah, sir, consider, he that set you on.
To do this deed, wilt thou for the deed.

K. Edw. What shall we do?

1 MURD. Relent, and save your souls.

2 MURD. Relent, and save your souls.

1 MURD. Relent! 'tis cowardly, and womanish.

2 MURD. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, devi.

Which of you, if you were a prince's son,
Being sent from liberty, as I am now,—
If two such murderers as yourselves came to you,—
Would not entreat for life?—

MURD. My friend, I spy some pity in th' looks;

if thine be not,

Come thou on my side, and entreat for me,
As you would beg, were you in my distress,
A begging prince what begetteth pities hot!

1 MURD. Look behind you, my lord.

1 MURD. Take this, and that; if all this will not do,
I'll drown you in the malmsey-butt within.

[Exit with the body.

2 MURD. A bloody deed, and desperately des.

spatch'd! How soon, like Pilato, would I wash my hands
Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Re-enter first Murderer.

1 MURD. How now? what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not?

By heaven, the duke shall know how shack
you have been.

2 MURD. If you had knew, that I had sav'd his brother!

Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say
For I repeat me that the duke is slain.

Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole,
Till that the duke give order for his burial:
And while I have my meed, I will away;
For this will out, and then I must not stay.

[Exit.

LIFE
Come, this
I will pray thee, Hastings;—I will never more remember
Our former hatred; so thrive, and mine,
K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him,—Hastings, love
lord marquis.
Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest,
Upon my part shall be inviolable.
Hast. Then, Ebrampes Dorsett.
K. Edw. Now princely Buckingham, seal thou
this league,
With thy embraces to my wife’s allies,
And make me happy in thy undertaking.
Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate
Upon your grace, [To the QUEEN,] but with all loving kindness,
Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most love!
When I have most need to employ a friend,
And most assured that he is a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherons, and full of guile,
Be he unto me! this do I beg of heaven,
When I am cold in love to you or yours.
[Enter RIVERS, &c.]
K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham,
Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart?
There wanteth now our brother here,
To make the blessed period of this peace.
Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble duke.

Enter GLOSTER.
Glo. Good morrow to my sovereign king, and your proud lords;
And, princely peers, a happy time of day!
K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day:
The brother, we have done deeds of charity:
Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate.
Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers.
Glo. A blessed labor, my most sovereign liege,—
Among this princely heap, it any here,
By false intelligence, or wrong surmise,
Hold me a foe; if unwittingly, or in my rage,
Have thought committed that is hardly borne
By any in this presence, I desire
To reconcile me to his friendly peace
This, so death to me to speak of enmity?
I hate it, and desire all good men’s love.
First, madam, I entreat true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my dutieous service;—
Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham.
If ever any grudge were lodg’d between us;
Of you, lord Rivers,—and, lord Grey, of you,
That all without desert have frown’d on me—
Dukes, ears, lords, gentlemen; indeed, of all.
I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night.
I thank my God for my humility.
Q. Eliz. A holy-day shall this be kept hereafter.
I would to God, all strifes were well compounded.—
My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness
To take our brother Gloucester to your goodness,
Glo. Why, madam, have I offered love for this,
To be so flouted in this royal presence?
Who knows not, that the gentle dukes are dead?
I thank my God for my humility.

Bade me rely on him, as on my father.

And he would love me dearly as his child.

Duck. Ah, that deceit should steal such gentle shapes.

And with a virtuous visor hide deep vice!

He is my son, ay, and therein my shame.

Yet from my dog he did not this deceit.

Son. Think you, my uncle did dissemble, grandam?

Duck. Ay, boy.

Son. I cannot think it. Hark! what noise is this!

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, distractedly; RIVERS and DESIER, following her.

Q. Eliz. Ah! who shall hinder me to walk and weep!

To chide my fortune, and torment myself!

I'll join with black despair against my soul,

And bless myself become an arrant fool.

Duck. What means this scene of rude impatience?

Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence:

Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?

Whither not the leaves, that want their sap?

If you will live, lament; if die, be brief;

That our swift-winged souls may catch the king's;

Or, like obedient subjects, follow him.

To his new kingdom of perpetual rest.

Duck. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sorrow,

As I had title in thy noble husband.

I loved not a worthy husband's noble death,

And 'd look on his images:

But now two mirrors of his princely semblance

Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death;

And for comfort have but one false glass.

That grieves me when I see my shame in him.

Thou art a widow: yet thou art a mother,

And hast the comfort of thy children left thee:

But death hath snatch'd all my happiness in my arms,

And plac'd two crutches from my feeble hands,

Clarence and Edward. O, what cause have I,

That am not being but a misery of my grief,

To over-go thy plants, and drown thy cries!

Son. Ah, aunt! you wept not for our father's death;

How can we weep with you and our kindred tears?

Duck. Our fatherless distress was left unmourn'd,

Your widow-dolor likewise be unwept!

Q. Eliz. Give me no help in lamentation,

I am not barren to bring forth laments:

All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,

That I, being governed by the watry moon,

May send forth pleurant tears to drown the world!

Ah! no, my dear Edward!

Chil. Ah, for our father, for our dear lord Clarence!

Duck. Alas, for both, both mine, Edward and Clarence!

Q. Eliz. What stay had I, but Edward? and he's gone.

Chil. What stay had we, but Clarence? and he's gone.

Duck. What stays had I, but they? and they are gone.

Q. Eliz. Was never widow, had so dear a loss.

Chil. Were never orphans, had so dear a loss.

Duck. Was never mother, had so dear a loss.

Alas! I am the mother of these griefs;

That I am more parcelf'd! more mine general.

She for an Edward weeps, and so do I;

For a Clarence weep, doth not she not:

These bebes for Clarence weep, and so do I:

For in Edward weep, so do they not.

Alas! thee three, on me, thrice-glid distress'd,

Pour all your tears; I am your sorrow's nurse,

And I will pump it with lamentations.

Dor. Comfort, dear mother; God is much displeas'd,

That you take with unthankfulness his doing.

In common worldly things, 'is called—ungrateful,

With duties and kindness to repay a debt.

Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;

Much more to be thus opposite with heaven,

For it requires the royal debt it lent you.

God, and thank you, like a careful mother,

Of the young prince you've son; send straightfor him,

Let him be crown'd; in him your comfort lives;

And desperate sorrow in death Edward's grave,

And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Divided.

'Eliz. A parlous boy: Go to, you are too shrewd.

Arch. Now, by my troth, if I had been remember'd, I could have given my uncle's grace a fleat.

To touch his growth, nearer than he touch'd mine.

Duch. How, my young York? I pr'ythee, let me know it.

York. Marry, they say my uncle grew so fast, that he could gnaw a crust at two hours old;

I was full two years ere I could get a tooth.

Grandam, this would have been a good jest.

Duch. I pr'ythee, pretty York, who told you this?

York. Grandam, his nurse.

Duch. His nurse? why, she was dead ere thou wast born.

York. If'twere not she, I cannot tell who told me.

Q. Eliz. A parlous boy: Go to, you are too shrewd.

Arch. A good madam, be not angry with the child

Q. Eliz. Pitches have ears.

Enter A Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger: What news?

Mess. Such news, my lord, as gives me to unbold.

Q. Eliz. How doth the prince?

Mess. Well, madam, and in health.

Duch. What is thy news?

Mess. Lord Rivers, and lord Grey, are sent to Pomfret,

With them sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners.

Duch. Who hath committed them?

Mess. The mighty dukes Gloster and Buckingham.

Q. Eliz. For what offence?

Mess. The sum of all I can I have disclosed;

Why, or for what, the notices were committed,

is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ah me, I see the rumour of my house!

The terror now hath seized the gentile kind:

Insulting tyranny begins to jot

Upon the innocent and awless throne:

Welcome destruction, blood, and massacre!

I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Duch. Accursed and unworthy, wrangling days!

How many of you have mine eyes beheld:

My husband lost his life to get the crown;

And often up and down my sons were lost,

For me to joy and weep, their gain and loss:

And being seated, and domestic broods

Clean over-thrown, themselves, the conquerors,

Make war upon themselves; brother to brother.

Blood to blood, self'gainst self'—o, preposterous

And frantic courage, end thy damned spleen!

Or let not your head still come on death's branch!

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy, we will to sanctuary.

Madam, farewell.

Duch. Stay, I will go with you.

Q. Eliz. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lady, go, (To the Queen.

And thither bear your treasure and your goods.

For my part, I'll resign unto your grace

The seal I keep; And so betide to me,

As well I lender you, and all of yours!

Come, I'll conduct you to the sanctuary. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Street.

The Trumpets sound. Enter the Prince of Wales, Gloster, Buckingham, Cardinal Borough, and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to

Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sover-

reign:

The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Prince. No lady; but our crossway on the way

Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy:

want more uncles here to welcome me.

Glo. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your years

1 KNOWN. 2 CONVERS.
Scene I.

Prince. I thank you, good my lord—and thank you all.—[Excuse Mayor, &c.]
I thought my mother, and my brother York, Would long ere this have met us on the way:
For is't not true, as Hastings says, that he comes not To tell us, whether they will come, or no.

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. In good time, here comes the sweating lord.

Prince. Welcome, my lord; What, will our mother come?

Hast. On what occasion, God he knows, not I.
The queen your mother, and your brother York,
Have sign'd a treaty; therefore may the tender prince
Would run have come with me to meet your grace,
But by his mother was perforce withhold.

But he, and you, who can instruct and peevish course
Is this of hers!—Lord cardinal, will you persuade
The prince to send the duke of York,
Unto his princely brother presently!
If the double lord Hastings, go with him,
And from her jealous arms pack him perforce.

Card. My lord of Buckingham, if my weak oratory Can from his mother win the duke of York,
Anon expose him here; But if she be obdurate
To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid,
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of blessed sanctuary! not for all this land,
Would be guilty of so deep a crime.

You are too senseless-obstinate, my lord,
Too ceremonious, and traditional.

Though the greatness of this age,
You break not sanctuary in so slight a case;
The benefactor of the state, is ever granted.

To those whose declaims have deserved the place,
And those who have the wit to claim the place;
The prince hath neither claimed it, nor deserved it.
And therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it;
Then, taking him from thence, that is not there,
You break no privilege nor charter there.

On love I heard of sanctuary in desert
But sanctuary children, never till now.

Card. My lord, you shall o'er-rule my mind for Come on, lord Hastings, will you go with me?

Hast. I go, my lord.

Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you can,
[Excuse Cardinal and Hastings.]

Say, uncle Gloucester, if our brother come,
Where shall we sojourn till our coro:ation?

How if it be true unto your royal self,
I may counsel you, some day or two,
Your highness shall repose you at the Tower;
Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit
For your best health and recreation.

But you do not live the Tower for any place:—
Did Julius Caesar build that place, my lord!

Glo. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place:
When, since, succeeding ages have re-edified

Is it upon record I? or else reported
Successively from age to age he built it?

Buck. Upon record, my gracious lord.

Buck. For my lord, I were not registered
Methinks, the truth should live from age to age,
As were retail'd to all posterity,
Even to the general all-ending day.

Glo. I see now so young, they say, do ne'er live long.

Prince. What say you, uncle?

Glo. I say, without characters, fame lives long.
That makes the honest man, for all a son.

Prince. That Julius Caesar was a famous man;
With what his valor did enrich his wit,
His wit set down to make his value;
Death makes no compact of this conqueror;
For he lives in fame, though not in his.
I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham,—

Buck. What, my gracious lord!

Prince. An I live till I be a man,
I'll win our ancient right in France again,
Or the soldier, as I liv'd a king.

Glo. I hear summerly, winterly, have a forward spring.

Enter YORK, HASTINGS, and the Cardinal.

Buck. Now, in good time, here comes the duke of York.

Prince. Richard of York! how fares our loving brother!

York. Well, my dread lord; so must I call you now.

Prince. Is not my brother; to our grief, as it is yours;
Too late! he died, that might have kept that title,
Which by his death hath lost much majesty.

Glo. How fares our cousin, noble lord of York!

York. Alas! by y'our grace, should I speak this?
You said, that idle weeds are fast in growth;
The prince, my brother, hath outgrown me far.

Glo. He hath, my lord.

York. And therefore is he idle?

Glo. O, my fair cousin, I must not say so.

York. Then he is more beheld to you than I.

Glo. He may command me, as my sovereign;
But you can power me, as in all that's right.

York. I pray you, uncle, then, give me this dagger.

Glo. My dagger, little cousin! with all my heart.

Prince. Good brother, beggar, in light?

York. Of all the uncle's, that I know will give;
And being but a toy, which is no grief to give.

Glo. A greater gift than that! I'll give my cousin.
York. A greater gift! O, that's the sword to it!

Glo. Ay, gentle cousin, were it light enough.

York. O then, I see, you'll part but with light gits;
In weeping things you'll say a beggar, may.

Glo. It is too weighty for your grace to wear.

York. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.

Glo. What, would you have my weapon, little lord?

York. I would, that I might thank you as you call me.

Glo. How, York, and uncle?

Prince. My lord of York will still be cross in talk—

Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with him.

York. He mean to bear, not to bear with me—

Uncle, my brother mocks both you and me;
Because I am little, like an ape,

He thinks the soul should bear with our shoulders.

Buck. With what a sharp-pointed wit!
To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himself.

So cunning, and so wise, is wonderful.

Glo. My gracious lord, will you please you pass along?

Myself, and my good cousin Buckingham,
Will to your mother; to entertain her,
To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

York. What, will you go unto the Tower, my lord?

Prince. My lord protector needs will have it so.

York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, sir, what should you fear!

York. Marry, there is my uncle Clarence' ghost;
My grandam told me, he was murder'd there.

Prince. I fear no undone dead.

Glo. Nor none that live, I hope.

Prince. And if they live, I hope, I need not fear.
But come, my lord, and, with a heavy heart,
Thinking on them, go I unto the Tower.

[Evacue Prince, YORK, HASTINGS, Cardinal, &c.]

Buck. Think you, my lord, this little prating York
Was not increased: by his subtle mother,

To tam'st the desire, thus oppressibly?

Glo. No doubt, no doubt: O, his counsellors boy;
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all his mother's, from the top to toe.

Buck. Well, let them rest.—

Come hither, gentle Catesby; thou art sworn
As deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceal what we impart:
Thou know'st our reasons urged upon the way,—

What think'st thou, is it not an easy matter
To make William lord Hastings of our mind,
For the instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle?

Cates. He for his father's sake loves the prince,
That he will not be won to aught against him.

Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley? will not he?

Cate. He will do all in all as Hastings doth.

Buck. Well then, no more but this: Go, gentle Catesby,

* Ladies.

* Interl.

* Intellig.

* Commonly.
And, as it were far off, sound thou lord Hastings,
How he doth stand affected to our purpose;
And summon him to-morrow to the Tower,
To tell about the coronation.
If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be headen, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so bold and so break off the talk,
And give us notice of his inclination:
For we to-morrow hold divided councils,
Wherein thyself shalt highly be employ'd.
Glo. Come, Benjamin, to lord William: tell him,
Catesby,
his ancient knot of dangerous adversaries.
To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret-castle;
And I'll friend thee, and thou shalt hear of it;
Give mistresse Shore one gentle kiss the more.
Buck. Good Catesby, go, effect this business soodly.
Cale. My good lords both, with all the heed I can.
Glo. Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we sleep?
Cale. You shall, my lord.
Glo. At Crosby-place, there shall you find us both.
[Exit Catesby.
Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do, if we receive Lord Hastings will not yield to our compacts?
Glo. Chop off his head, man—somewhat we shall
And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me
The cardinal of Hereford, and all the moveables
Whereof the king my brother was possessed.
Buck. I'll call on that promise at your grace's hand.
Glo. And look to have it yielded with all kindness,
Come, let us sup betimes; that afterwards
We may digest our compætions in some form.
[Exeunt.
SCENE II.—Before Lord Hastings's House.
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. My lord, my lord,—
[Knocking.
Hast. [Within] Who knocks?
Mess. One from lord Stanley.
Hast. [Within] What is o'clock?
Mess. Upon the stroke of four.
[Enter Hastings.
Hast. Cannot thy master sleep the tedious nights?
Mess. So it should seem by that I have to say.
First he commends him to your noble lordship.
Hast. And then?
Mess. And then he sends you word, he dreamt
To-night the boar had rased off his helm:
Besides are two crows held;
And that may be determined at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at the other.
Therefore he sends to know your lordship's pleasure,
If presently, you will take horse with him,
And with all speed post with him toward the north.
To shun the danger that his soul dines,
Hast. Go, fellow, go, return unto thy lord.
But him not fear the separated counsellors:
His honor, and myself, are at the one;
And, at the other, is my good friend Catesby;
Where nothing can proceed, that toucheth us,
Whereof I shall not have intelligence.
Tell him, his ears are shallow, warning instances:
And let what dreams—what wonders sound,
To trust the mockery of men's slumber:
To fly the boar, before the boar pursues,
Were to incense the boar to follow us,
And make pursuit, where he did mean no chase.
Go, but thy master rise and come to me;
And we will both together to the Tower,
Where he shall see, the boar will use us kindly.
Mess. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say.
[Exit.
Enter Catesby.
Cale. Many good morrows to my noble lord!
Hast. Good morrow, Catesby; you are early Starting.
What news, what news, in this our tottering state!
Cale. It is a rebel world, indeed, my lord;
And you believe, will never stand upright,
Till Richard wear the Garland of the realm.
—Separate.
Example.
Weak.
L. Glover, who had a boar for his arms.
Hast. How! wear the Garland! dost thou mean the crown?
Cale. Ay, my good lord.
Hast. I'll not wear a crown of mine cut from my shoulders,
Before I'll see the crown so foul misplaced.
But trust thou guess that he doth aim at it!
Cale. I'll burn my eye; and hopes to find you forward
Upon his party, for the gain thereof;
And thereupon, he sends you this good news,—
That, this same very day, your enemies,
The Kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.
Hast. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news,
Because they have been still my adversaries:
But that he give me voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows, I will not do, to the death.
Cale. I'll keep your lordship in that gracious mind.
Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelve-month hence.
That they, who brought me in my master's hate,
I live to look upon their tragedy,
Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older,
I'll send some packing, that yet think not on.
Cale. Then, I'll not be out of this world till
Good morrow; you shall have this thing to die, my good lord,
When men are unprepared, and look not for it.
Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so settle it
With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey: and so 'twill do
With both these wits, who think themselves as safe
As thou, and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear
To prouder Richard, and to Buckingham.
Cale. The princes both make high account of
For they account his head upon the bridge.
[Aside.
Hast. I know, they do; and I have well deserv'd it!
[Enter Stanley.
Stain. Come on, come on, where is your boar-spear, man!
Fear you the boar, and so go unprovided!
Hast. My lord, good morrow; and good morrow,
Catesby:—
You may jest on, but, by the holy rood!
I do not jest these several counsellors,
Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as yours;
And never, in my life, I do protest,
Was more precious to me than 'tis now:
Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am!
Stain. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from London,
Were jocund, and supposed their states were sure,
And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust;
But yet, you see, how soon the day doth cast,
This storming state: beauer I cannot tell,
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!
What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.
Hast. Come, come, have with you.—Wot you on,
My lord!
To-day, the lords you talk of are beleaguered.
Stain. They further their truth, might better wear their hands,
Than some, that have accus'd them, wear their hats.
But come, my lord, let's away.
[Enter a Pursuivant.
Hast. Go on before, I'll talk with this good fellow.
[Exit Stanley and Catesby.
How now, sirrah, how goes the world with thee!
Purs. The better that your lordship please to ask.
Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now,
Than when thou met'st me last where now we meet:
Then was I going prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the queen's allies;
But now I tell thee, (keep it to thyself.)
This day those enemies are put to death,
And I a better state than ever I was.
Purs. God hold it, to your honor's good content!
Hast. Gramercy, fellow; There drink that for me.
[Exit Purs.
Purs. I thank your honor.
[Exit Pursuivant.
Enter a Priest.
Fr. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honor.
Hast. I thank thee, good sir John, with all my love.
I am in your debt for your last exercise;
Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.
—Cross.
Know.
Enter Buckingham.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain! Your friends at Pomfret? they do need the priest.
Your honest lord, with a no shriving work in mind.

Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,
The men you talk of came into my mind.

But do you toward the Tower?

Buck. To do, my lord, but long I cannot stay there: I shall return before your lordship thence.

Hast. Nay, like enough, for I shall dine there.

Buck. And supper too, although thou knewst it not. [Aside.]

Come, will you go?

Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Pomfret. Before the Castle.

Enter Ratcliffe, with a Guard, conducting Rivers, Grey, Ely, and Vaughan, to Execution.

Rat. Come, bring forth the prisoners.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliffe, let me tell thee this—
To-day, thou beheld a subject die,
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.

Grey. God keep the prince from all the pack of you!
A knot you are of damned blood-suckers.

Vaugh. You live, that shall cry woe for this here-

Rat. Despotic; the limit of your lives is out.

Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody priest,
Fatal and ominous to noble peers!
Within the guilty closure of thy walls,
Richard the second here was as had to death;
And, for more slander to thy dismal seat,
We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink.

Grey. Now Margaret's curse is tall upon our heads.
When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I.

Riv. To stand by when Richard stab'd his son.
Grey. You said she Hastings, curst she Buckingham.

Then curs'd she Richard:—O, remember, God,
To hear her prayers for them, as now for us.
And let my prayers for thee, my dear friend, be satisfied, dear God, with our true bloods,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt!

Hast. Make haste, the hour of death is expir'd.

Riv. Come, Grey,—come, Vaughan,—let us here embrace:

Farewell, until we meet again in heaven. [Exeunt.

Buckingham, Stanley, Hastings, the Bishop of Ely, Catesby, Love, and others, sitting of a Table: tears of joy and weeping on every side.

Hast. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met Is—to determine of the coronation: In God's name speak, when is the royal day?

Buck. Are not things ready for that royal time?

Stam. They are:—and wants but one of two.

Ely. To-morrow, then, I judge a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind?

Who is most inward with the noble duke?

Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind.

Buck. We know each other's faces; for our hearts—

He knows no more of mine, than 1 of yours; Yet, of his, my lord, you know of mine:—
Lord Hastings, you and I are near in love.

Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well;
But, for his purpose in the coronation, I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd His gracious pleasure any way therein: But you, my noble lord, may name the time;
And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice, Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

Exit Glos ter.

Ely. In happy time, here comes the duke himself.

Glos. My noble lords and cousins, all good morrow;
I have been long a sleeper; but, I trust, My absence doth neglect no great design, Which by your presence might have been concluded.

Buck. Had you not come upon your own accord, William lord Hastings had pronounced your part,—

I mean, your voice,—for crowning of the king.

Glos. Than my lord Hastings, no man might be bolder:—

His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.—
My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn, I saw good strawberries in your garden there; I do beseech you, send for some of them. Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart. [Exit Ely.

Glos. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

Buck. To the best advise.—
Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our business; And finds the testify gentleman so hot, That he will lose his head, ere give consent, In his master's child, which is happily his terms, Shall lose the royalty of England's throne.

Buck. Withdraw yourself awhile, I'll go with you. [Exeunt Glos ter and Buck ingham.

Stam. We have not yet set down with what advantage in To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden;
For I myself am not so well provided, As else I would be were the day proling'd. [Exit.

Re-enter Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my lord protector? I have sent For these strawberries.

Hast. His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning:
There's some prospect? or other likes him well, When he doth bid good morrow with so much spirit. I think, there's me a man in Christendom, Can lessee hide his love, or hate, than he; For by his very straight course shall I keep my heart.

Stam. What of his heart perceive you in his face, By any likelihood he shold to-day?

Ely. Marry, that with no man here he is offender; For, were he be, he had showed some head. [Exit Stam. Re-enter Glos ter and Buck ingham.

Glos. I pray you all, tell me what you deserve, That do conspire with your death with devilish plots Of damned witchcraft; and that have prepar'd Upon my body with their hellish charms!

Hast. The tender lover I hear your grace, my lord, Makes me most forward in this noble presence To doom the offenders: Whoso'er they be, I say, my lord, they have deserved death.

Glos. Then be your eyes the witness of their evil, Look how I am bewitch'd; behold mine arm Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up;

And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch, Consorted with that hag, strapenter Shore, That by their witchcraft thus have marked me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my noble lord,—

Glos. If: thou protector of this damned strapenter, Talk'st thou to me of this?—Thou art a traitor:

Oil with his head:—now, by saint Paul I swear, I will not done unless I see the same,

Lovel, and Catesby, look that it be done:
The rest that love me, raise, and follow me. [Exeunt Council, with Glos ter and Buck ingham.

Hast. Woe, woe, for England! not a wish for me; For I too fond, might have prevented this: Stanley did dream, the bear did raise his helm; But I disdain'd it, and did scorn to fly.

Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumble, And started, when he look'd upon the Tower, As kest to bear to the slaughter-house.
O, now I want the priest that spoke to me: I now repent I told the pursuivant,
As too triumphing, how mine enemies
To-day at Pomfret bloody were butcher'd, And I myself sure was in grace and glory; O, Margaret, Margaret, how thy heavy curse Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head.

date. Despair, my lord, the duke would be at any way.

Make a short shrift, he longs to see your head.

Hast. O, momentary grace of mortal men, Which we more hunt for than the grace of God! Who builds his hope in any of your looks, Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast;— Ready, with every nod, to tumble down In the fatal presently of the death's charge.

Lor. Come, come, despatch: its bootless to explain.

Hast. O, bloody Richard!—miserable England! I prophesy he hearer be to the tidings: That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.—

Come, lead me to the block, bear him my head, They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead. [Exeunt.
Scene V.—The Tower Walls.

Enter Gloster, and Buckingham, in rusty Armor, with meagreous all-favor'd.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quake, and change thy color?
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,—
And then begin, and stop thy song again.

As if thou wast distraught, and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak, and look back, and pry on every side,
That breath should start at wagging of a strand.
Intending deep suspicion: ghastly looks
Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in your offices,
Alas, as sorry to grace my stragglers.

But what, is Catesby gone by?

Glo. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Lord Mayor and Catesby.

Buck. Let me alone to entertain him.—Lord mayor,

Glo. Look to the draw-bridge there.

Buck. Har, har! a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord mayor, the reason we have sent for you.

Glo. Look back defend thee, here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocence defend and guard us!

Enter lovell and Ratcliff, with hasting's head.

Glo. Be patient, they are friends; Ratcliff, and Lovell.

LoR. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,

The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glo. So dear I lov'd the man, that I must weep.
I took him for the plainest harmless creature,
That breath'd a better air than could be found;
Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded
The history of all her secret thoughts:
So smooth he gave his vice with show of virtue,
That I have missed my truest.

He was the open guilt of all the world,
I mean, his conversation with Shore's wife;—
He liv'd from all attainer of suspect.

Buck. Well, well, he was the covert's shelter'd traitor,
That ever liv'd. — Look you, my lord mayor,
Would you imagine, or almost believe,
(Were't not, that by great preservation
We live to tell it you,) the subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council-house
To murder me, and my good lord of Gloster?

May. He had no cause to fear so.

Glo. What! think you we are Turks, or infidels,
Or that we would, against the form of law,
Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death;
But the extreme peril of the state,
The peace of England, and our persons' safety,
Enforced us to this execution!

May. Now, fair rebel you! he deserv'd his death;
And your good graces both have well proceeded,
To warn false traitors from the like attempts.
I never look'd for better at his hands,
After he fell in with mistress Shore.

Buck. Yet had we not determin'd he should die,
Until your lordship came to see his end:
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Somewhat against our meaning, both prevented.

May. But our old friends have well signified the same.
Unto the citizens, who, haply, may
Misconstrue us in, and will his death.

May. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall serve;
As well as I had seen, and heard him speak;
And do not doubt, right noble princes both,
Will acquaint our duties so.

With all our just proceedings in this case.

Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship here,
To avoid the censures of the censoring world.

May. But since you came too late to have our note,
Yet witness what you hear we did intend;
And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

[exit Lord Mayor.

Glo. Go after, after, cousin Buckingham.

The mayor towards Guildhall lies him in all post—

*Pretending.

There, at your metest vantage of the time,
Inter the bastardry of Edward's children:
Tell them, how Edward put to death a citizen,
Only for saying,—he would make his heir
Himself, the crown; misusing indeed his house,
Which, by the sign thereof, was termed so.

Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,
And bêteal appetite in change of lust;
Which, if you could undo their servants, daughters, wives,

Even where his raging eye, or savage heart,
With execrable lust, would make it ruin;

Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person —
Tell them, when that my mother went with child
Of that inestimable Edward, noble York,
My princely father, then had him in France; And, by just computation of the time,
Found, that the issue was not his begot;
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke my father:
Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere far of old:
Because, my lord, you know, my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord, I'll play the orator,
As if the golden age, for which I plead,
Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu.

Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's castle;
Where they shall find me well accompanied,
With reverence friends, and well-leaund bishops.

Buck. I go; and, towards three or four o'clock,
Look for the news that the Guildhall holds.

[Exit Buckingham.

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to doctor Shaw,—
Go thou to Cat's; to Esher Penker,—bend them both
Meet me, within this hour, at Baynard's castle.

[Exit Lovel and Catesby.

Now will I, in take some privy order
To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight;
And to give notice to no man that person
Have, any time, recourse unto the prince.

Scene VI.—A Street.

Enter a Servicener.

Serv. Here is the indictement of the good lord Hastings;
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd,
That it may be to-day read o'er in Paul's,
And mark how well the sequent fates together:—Eleven hours I have spent to write it over,
For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me;
The precedent was to say so long a doing;
And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd,
Untainted, unexamined, free, at liberty.
Here's a good world the while!—Who is so gross,
That not to see this palpable deed:
Yet who so bold, but says—he sees it not?
Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
When such bad dealing must be seen in thought.

Scene VII.—Court of Baynard's Castle.

Enter Gloster and Buckingham, meeting.

Glo. How now, how now! what say the citizens?
Buck. Now by the holy mother of our Lord,
The citizens are mum, say not a word.

Glo. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's children?
Buck. I did; with his contract with lady Lucy,
And his contract by deputy in France:

The insalubri greeness of his desires,
And his enforcement of the city wards;
His tyranny for tribes; his own bastardy,—
As being got, your father then in France;
And his resemblance, being not like the duke.

What did I infer out your lineaments?
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind;
Laid open all your victories in Scotland,
Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace,
Your bounty, virtue, fair humanity;
Indeed, left nothing, fitting for your purpose,
Untouch'd, or slightly handled, in discourse.
And when since you grew to so great age,
I bade them, that did love their country's good,
Cry—God save Richard, England's royal king!

But did they so?

Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or breathless stones,
Scene VII.  King Richard III.

Star'd on each other, and look'd deadly pale.
When, with all heart, I drank to their healths;
And ask'd the mayor, what men said this wise fellow?
His answer was,—the people were not us'd
To be spoke to, but by the recorder.
Then he reply'd (as I understood him) again:
Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke inferred it;
But nothing spoke in warrant from himself.
When he had done, some followers of mine own,
At a lower end of the hall, burst up their caps,
And some ten voices cried, God save king Richard!
And thus I took the vantage of those few,—
Thanks, gentle citizens, and friends, quoth I;
The general applause, and cheerful shout,
Argues your wisdom, and your love to Richard;
And even here brake off and came away.
Glo. What was that wordless block? were they would Not they speak not?
Will not the mayor then, and his brethren, come?
Buck. The mayor is here at hand: intend'some
Be not you spoke with, but by mighty suit:
And look you, get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll make a holy descent;
And be not easily won to our requests;
Play the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.
Glo. I go; and if you plead as well for them,
As you can say nay to your prayers,
No doubt we'll bring it to a happy issue.
Buck. Go, go, up to the leads; the lord mayor knocks.

Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord; I dance attendance here;
I think the duke will not be spoke withal—

Enter from the Castle, Catesby.

Now, Catesby, what says your lord to my request?
Cate. He doth entreat your grace, my noble lord,
To visit him to-morrow, or next day:
He is within with two right reverend fathers,
Immediately went to meditation:
And in no worthy suit would he be mov'd,
To draw him from his holy exercise.
Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious duke,
Tell him, my self, the may or, as myself,
In deep designs, in matter of great moment,
No less importing than our general good,
Are come to have some conference with your grace.
Cate. I'll signify so much unto him straight—

Buck. Ah, ha, my lord, this prince is not an Edward.
He is not dwelling on a lawn day-bred,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtiers,
But meditating with two deep divines;
Not lingering to engross his idle thoughts,
But prayer to enrich his watchful soul.
Happy were England, would this virtuous prince
Take on himself the sovereignty thereof?
But, sure, I fear, we shall nor win him to it.
May. Marry, God defend, his grace should say us nay!
Buck. I fear, he will: Here Catesby comes again.

Re-enter Catesby.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace?
Cate. He wond'ring to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him;
Himself never being there before.
He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him.
The mayor, therefore, should be answer'd;
If you, my lord, the contrary.
Buck. Sorry am I, my noble cousin should Suspect me, that I mean no good to him;
By heaven, we come to him inperfect love;
And so once more return and tell his grace.

Re-enter Catesby.

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their heads, I must drudge them thence;
So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter Gloster, in a gallery above, between two Bishops.  Catesby returns.

May. See, where his grace stands between two clergymen.

Buck. Two props of virtue for a christian prince,
To stay him from the fall of vanity:
And, see, a book of prayer in his hand;

* Pretend.

True ornaments to know a holy man—
Famous Plaists, and reverend English prince,
Lend favorable ear to our requests.
And pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion, and right-Christian zeal.
Glo. My lord, the matter is not due to apology;
I rather do beseech you pardon me,
Who, earnest in the service of my God,
Neglect the visitation of my friends.
But, leaving them, what is your grace's pleasure?

Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above,
And all good men of this unworl'dly isle.
Glo. Else wherefore breathe I in a christian land?
Buck. Know, then, it is your fault, that you resign
The supreme seat, the throne regal, majestic,
The sceptred office of your ancestors,
Your state of fortune, and your due of birth,
The lineal glory of your royal house
To the corruption of a blemish'd stock:
Whilst, in the midst of your sleep, thoughts,
(Whence here we waken to our country's good,) The noble peace of your posterity
Her face defaced with scars of inanity,
Her royal state gait with ignoble plants,
And almost should't in the swallowing gulf
Of dark forgetfulness and deep oblivion.
Which to recure, we heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kindly government of this your land:
Not as protector, steward, sustainer,
Or loosely fanner for another's gain:
But as successively, from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empyre, your own.
For this, consorted with the citizen,
Your very worshipful and loving friends,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace.
Glo. I cannot tell, let it depart in silence,
Or bitterly to speak in your reproof.
Best suiteth my degree, or your condition:
If to answer,—you might haply think,
Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded
To hear the golden yoke of sovereignty,
Which fondly you would here impose on me;
It to reprieve you for this suit of yours,
So season'd with your faithful love to me,
Then, on the other side, I check'd my friend.
Therefore—speak, and to avoid the first:
And, then in speaking, not to incur the last,—
Definitely to answer you.
Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert
Inamenable, stuns your high request.
First, it is all obsequious that aunt;
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe revenue and due of birth;
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty, and so many my defects,
That I would rather hide me from my greatness,—
Being a bark to brook no mighty sea,—
Than in my greatness covet to be hid,
And in the vaper of glory snuff'd硕.
But, God be thanked, there is no need of me;
(And much I need'd, to help you, if need were:)
The royal tree hath lost us royal fruit,
Which, were it not being by the remembrance of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay what you would lay on me,
The right and lawful heir has barbarities—
Whither, God defend, that I should bring from him!
Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your grace.
But the less its effect are nie; and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.
You say, that Edward is your brother's son;
So say we too, but not by Edward's wife:
For he was content to lady Bolingbroke;
Your mother lives a witness to his vow;
And afterwards by substitute bestowed
To Bonaventure a son of the prince.
These both put by; a poor petitioner,

* Thrust into.

Thrice, Receiver.

* Empire.

Minutes.
A care-craz'd mother to a many sons,
A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,
Made price and purchase of her wanton eye,
Seduced the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base decension and loath'd bigotry:
By her, in his unlawful bed, he got
This Edward, whom our manners call—the prince.
More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,
I give a sparing limit to my tongue;
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This proffer'd benefit of dignity:
If not to bless us and the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the eruption of abusing time,
Unto a local true-derived course.
May, Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat,
Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love.
Cate. O make them joyful, grant their lawful
Glo. Alas, why would you heap those cares on me?
I am unfit for state and majesty:
I do beseech you, take it not amiss;
I cannot, nor I will not, yield to you.
Buck. If you refuse it,—as in love and zeal,
Loath to depose the child, your brother's son;
As well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse,
Which we have noted in you to your kindred,
And equally, indeed, to all estates.—
By these, who'd you, who're your accept or no,
Your brother's son shall never reign our king;
But we will plant some other in your throne,
To the disgrace and downfall of your house.

And, in this resolution here we leave you;
Come, citizens, we will entreat no more.

Exeunt Buckingham and Citizens.

Cate. Call them again, sweet prince, accept their suit;
If you deny them, all the hand will rue it.
Glo. Will you enforce me to a world of cares?
Well, call them again; I am not made of stone.
But penetrable to your kind entreaties, [Exeunt Cate.
Albeit against my conscience and my soul.—

Re-enter Buckingham and the rest.
Cousin of Buckingham,—and sage, grave men,—
Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To bear her burden, who'rt I will, or no,
I must have patience to endure the load;
But if black scandal, or foul-faced reproach,
Attend the sequel of your impositions,
Your name and person shall acquittance me
From all the impure blasts and stains thereof:
For God he knows, and you may partly see,
How far I am from the desire of this.
May, God bless your grace; we see it, and will say it.
Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.
Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title:
Long live king Richard, England's worthy king!
All. Amen.
Buck. To-morrow may it please you to be well;
Glo. Even when you please, since you will have it so.
Buck. To-morrow then we will attend your grace.
And so, with joyfulness we take our leave.
Glo. Come, let us to our holy work again.—
To The Bishops.
Farewell, good cousins—farewell, gentle friends.—
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before the Tower.

Enter, on one side, Queen Elizabeth, Duchess of York, and MARGARET of DOSSET; on the other, ANNE, Duchess of Glorost, leading LADY MARGARET PLANTAGENET, CLARENCE'S young Daughter.

Duch. Who meets us here—my most Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Glorost!
Now, fair night, she's wandering by the Tower;
On pure heart's love to greet the tender prince—
Daughter, well met.

Anne.

Q. Eliz. God give your graces both
A welcome and a joyful time of day!
Q. Eliz. As much to you, good sister! Whither away?
Anne. No further than the Tower; and, as I guess, I join the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
Q. Eliz. Kind sister, thanks; we'll enter all togethertogether:
[Enter BUCKINGHAM.

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes.—
Master Lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How doth the prince, and my young son of York?
Brok. Right well, dear madam; By your patience,
I may not suffer you to visit them;
The king hath strictly charged the contrary.
Q. Eliz. The king! who's that?
Brok. I mean the lord protector,
Q. Eliz. The Lord protect him from that knotty title
Hath he set round between their love, and me!
I am their mother, who shall bar me from them?
Brok. No, madam; angy your father's mother will see them,
Anne. Their aunt I am in law, in love their mother;
Then bring me to their sights; I'll hear thy blame,
And take thy offer from thee, on thy peril.
Brok. No, madam, no, I may not leave it so;
I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me.

[Exit BUCKINGHAM.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence,
And I'll salute your grace of York as mother.
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.

Boy.—

_Pager._ My lord,

-K.Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting cold
Would tempt unto a close exploit of death?

_Pager._ I know a discontented gentleman,

Whose heart is as the upstart's wife's to his naughty mind:

Gold were as good as twenty orators, and

Will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.

-K. Rich. What is his name?

_Pager._ It is Sir John Fastolf.

-K. Rich. I partly know the man; go, call him forth, boy.

_Exit Page._

The deep-revolving witt's Buckingham.

No more shall be his neighbor to my counsels:

Hast he so long held out with me until,

And stops he now for breath?—well, be it so.—

_Enter STANLEY._

How now, lord Stanley! what's the news!

-Stan. Know, my loving lord, The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled

To Richmond, in the parts where he abides,

-K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby; rumor it abroad,

That Anne, my wife, is very grievous sick;

I will take order for her keeping close.

-Inquire me out some mean-born gentleman,

Whom I will marry straight to Clarence' daughter:

That boy, I think, and, I fear not him.

Look, how thou dream'st!—say again, give out,

That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:

About it; for it stands me much upon

To stop all hopes, whose growth may damage me.—

_Exit Catesby._

I must be married to my brother's daughter,

Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:

Murder those brothers, and then marry her! I

Uncertain way of gain! But I am in

So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin.

Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.—

_Re-enter Page, with TYRREL._

Is thy name Tyrrel?

_Tyr. James Tyrrel, and your most obedient suject._

-K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?

_Tyr. K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine

_Tyr. Please you; but I had rather kill two enemies

-K. Rich. Why, then thou hast it; two deepencies!

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,

Are they that I have thee dealt upon;

Tyrrel, I see those bastards in the Tower.

_Tyr._ Let me have open means to come to them,

And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.

-K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, come _later, Tyrrel;

Go, by this token:—Rise, and lend thine ear:

There is no more but so:—Say, it is done,

And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.

_Tyr._ I will despatch it straight.

_Re-enter Buckingham._

Buck. My lord, I have considered in my mind

The late demand that you did sound me in.

-K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond.

Buck. I hear the news, my lord.

_K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son:—Well, I

Buck. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by promise.

For which your honor and your faith is pawn'd

The cause of Henry, and the movables,

Which you have promised I shall possess.

_K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife; if she convey

Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

Buck. What says your highness to my just request?

_K. Rich. I do remember me,—Henry the sixth

Did prophesy, that Richmond should be king,

When Richmond was a little preemie boy.

_Aside._ A king!—perhaps?

-Buck. My lord,—

* Secret act.

* Cuning.

* It is of great consequence to my designs.

* Act.

* Foolish.
K. Rich. How chance, the prophet could not at that time
Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?
Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom.
K. Rich. Richmond!—When last I was at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy show'd me the castle,
And said it—long-Mongre; at which name, I started;
Because a bard of Ireland told me once,
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord,—
K. Rich. Ay, what's o'clock?
Buck. I am thus bold
To do your grace in mind of what you promised me.
K. Rich. Well, but what is o'clock?
Buck. Upon the stroke
Of ten.
K. Rich. Well, let it strike.
Buck. Why, let it strike?
K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack, thou keep'st
The stroke.
Betwixt thy begging and my meditation.
I am not in the giving vein to-day.
Buck. Why, then resolve me wherewith you will,
or no.
K. Rich. Thou troublest me; I am not in the vein.

[Exeunt KIng Richard and Train.
Buck. And is it thus! repays he my deep service
With such contempt? made I him lord for this!
O, let me think on Hastings; and become
To Brecknock, while my fearful head is on. [Exit.

SCENE III. — The same.

Enter Tyrell.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of pitious massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.
Dighton and Forest, whom I did suborn
To do this piece of ruthless butchery,
Albeit they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,
Malign with tenderness and mild compassion,
Went like two children, in their death's sad story.
O Trees, quoth Dighton, lay the genteel babes,—
Thus, thus, quoth Forest, girding one another,
With the irremissible innocent arms:
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
Which in their summer beauty kiss'd each other,
A book of pleasures on their pillow lay,
Wich once, quoth Forest, almost changed my mind,
But, O, the devil—there the villain stopp'd;
When Dighton thus told on,—we pondered
The most repinient sweet work of nature,
That, from the prime creation, ere she framed.
Hence both are gone with conscience and remorse.
There could not speak, and so I follow both,
To bear these tidings to the bloody king.

Enter King Richard.

And here he comes:—All health, my sovereign lord!
K. Rich. Kind Tyrrell! am I happy in thy news?
Tyr. If I have done the thing ye gave in charge
Receiv your happiness, he happy then.
For it is done.
K. Rich. But didst thou see them done?
Tyr. I did, my lord.
K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrell?
Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried them;
But where, to say the truth, I do not know.
K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrell, soon, at after supper,
When thou shalt tell the process of their death.
Mean while, I cannot think how I may doe thee good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.
Farewell, till then.

Tyr. I humbly take my leave. [Exeunt.
K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I pent'up close;
His daughter meanly have I match't in marriage;
The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom; And Wallis, whom I love but little, am I in his good-night. Now, for I know the Bretagne Richmond aims At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter, And, by that knot, looks proudly on the crown, To her gidd'd, a jolly thriving weaver.

A Jack of the cloack-house is an image like those at St. Dunstan's church in Fleet street, and then a common appellation to cloacks.
[His castle in Wales.
The country in which Richmond had taken refuge.

Enter Catesby.

Cats. My lord,—
K. Rich. Good news, or bad, that thou com'st in so late a hour? Cats. Bad news, my lord: Mortimer's fled to Richmond;
And Buckingham, back'd with the hardy Welshmen,
Is in the field, and still his power increaseth.
K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more near,
Than Buckingham and his rash-levied strength.
Counce, I have receiv'd, that fearful commingling
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-paced beggary;
Then sorry expedition be my wing.
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king!
Go, master men: My counsel is my shield;
We must be brief, when traitors brave the field.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — Before the Palace.

Enter Queen Margaret.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.
Here in these confines sly have I lurk'd,
To watch the waning of mine enemies.
A dire induction am I witness to,
And will to France; hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragic.
With broken heart, wretched Margaret! Who comes here?

Enter Queen Elizabeth and the Duchess of York.

Q. Eliz. Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, now-apparing sweets!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation!
Q. Mar. However about her; say, that right for right.
Hath dimm'd your infant morn to aged night.
Duck. So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
The tongue of whose is yet unblown; and to you;
To Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?
Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet.
Edward for Edward pays a dying debt.
Q. Eliz. Well thou, 0 God, from such gentle limbs,
And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?
When didst thou sleep, when such a deed was done?
Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet son,
Duck. Dead life, blind sight, poor mortal-living
The second, to the world's shame, grave's due, by life usurpt,
Brief abstract and record of tedious days,
Rest thy mirest on England's Whatsapp earth,
Sitting down.
Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood!
Q. Eliz. Ah, that thou wouldst as soon afford a grave,
As thou canst yield a melancholy seat;
Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here!
Ah, who hath any cause to mourn, but we?
Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
Give mine the benefit of seniory,
And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.
It sorrow can admit society.

[Sitting down with them.

Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine:
I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
I had a husband, till a Richard kill'd him; Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
Thou hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.
Duck. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill
I had a Rutland too, thou holp'st to kill him.
From forth the kernel of thy wond'rous chest
A hell-bound that doth hunt us all to death:
That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,
To worry limbs, and lap their guilty blood;
That foul defacer of God's handy-work;
[Exeunt.
Scene IV.  King Richard III.

That excellent grand tyrant of the earth,
That reigns in guilty eyes of weeping souls,
Thy] womb let loose to chase us to our graves.—
Q. unp: right, just, and true-disposing God,
How do I thank thee, that this cursed power
Presves the issue of his mother’s body.
And makes her pew-fellow with others’ moon!
Duch. O, Harry’s wise, triumph not in my woes;
God’s vengeance will upon you, for again
Thy last attempt to quit my purpose.
Q. Mar. Bear with me, I am hungry for revenge.
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill’d my Edward;
Thy other Edward dead to quit your cause.
Young York he is but hoot, because both they Match not the high perfection of my loss.
Thy Clarence he is dead that stabb’d my Edward;
And I do meet with others of this tragic race.
The adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,
Untimely smother’d in their dusky graves.
Richard yet lives, hell’s black intelligence;
Only respect’d in their sector to his end,
And send them thither: But at hand, at hand,
Ensues his pitious and mispitiful end.
Earth gaps, hell burns, floods rear, saints play;
To have him suddenly convey’d from hence:
Cancel his bond of life, dear God, I pray,
That I may live to say, The dog is dead!
Q. Eliz. O, thou didst prophesy the time would come
That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bolted spider, that soul burn’d-back’d toad.
Q. Mar. I call’d thee then, vain flourish of my fortune:
I call’d thee then, poor shadow, painted queen;
The presentation of but what I was.
The warring index of a dastard heart,
One head’s a high, to be hurl’d down below:
A mother only mock’d with two fair faces;
A dream of what thou wast, a garish bag,
That was the sim of every dangerous shot;
A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene,
Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?
Where be thy sons? where be thy dowry?
What joy, Wsoes, and kocks, and says—God save the queen!
Where be the boding peers that flatter’d thee?
Where be the thronging troops that foll’d thee? Decline all this, and see what now thou art.
For happy wife, a most distressed wifid;
For joyful mother, one that wails the name;
For one being sued to, one that humbly susses;
For queen, a very caitty crown’d with care;
For one that scorn’d at, now scorn’d of me;
For one being fear’d of all, now fearing one;
For one that smar’d, now smir’t;
Thys hath the course of justice wheel’d about,
And left thee but a very prey to time:
Having no more but thought of what thou wert,
That black with rage, be, being what thou art.
Thou didst usurp my place; and dost thou not
Unsuppress the just proportion of my sorrow?
Now thy proud neck is half my burden’s yoke;
From which even here I stip my worried head,
And leave the burden of it all on thee.
Farewell, York’s wife,—and queen of sad miseries.

These English woes shall make me smile in France.
Q. Eliz. O thou well skill’d in curses, stay awhile,
And teach me how to curse mine enemies!
Q. Mar. No; for bear to the sleep the night, and last the day.

Compare dead happiness with living woe;
Think that thy babes were fairer than they were,
And that thou didst, fairer than thou art:
Bettering thy loss makes the bad-cause worse;
Revolving this will teach thee how to curse.
Q. Eliz. My words are dull, O quicken them
Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and pierce like lance.  [Exit Q. Mar.]

Duch. Why should calamity be fall of words?
Q. Eliz. Only they are more in their client woes;
Aire succeedes of intestine joys.
Poor breathing orators of miseries;
Let them have scope; thence what they do impart
Help them else, yet to do they or the heart.
Duch. Also, then he not tongue-tied: go with me, •Companions. •Thrown into the bagain. •Placing.

And in the breath of bitter words let’s smother
My damned son, that thy two sweet sons smother’d, [Drum within.

I hear his drum,—be copious in exclaims.

Enter King Richard, and his Train, marching.

K. Rich. Who intercepts me in my expedition?
Duch. O, she, that might have intercept thee,
And eternize me, I stand weep to see thee,
From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done.
Q. Eliz. Hailst thou that loadewed with a golden crown,
Where sorrow was hearsed, if that right were right,
The slaughter of the prince that ow’d that crown;
And the dire death of my poor sons and brothers! Tell me, thou villain-slave, where are my children?
Duch. The load, where is thy brother Clarence?
And little Ned Plantagenet, his son?
Q. Eliz. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan,
Duch. Where is kind Hastings?
K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets! Strike alarum, drums!
Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women
Rail on the Lord’s annointed: Strike, I say,— [Flourish. Alarums.
Either be patient, and entreat me fair,
or with the clamorous report of war,
Thus will I drown your ejaculations.
Duch. Art thou my son?
K. Rich. Ay; I thank God, my father, and yourself.
Duch. Then patiently hear my impatience.
K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your contagion.
That cannot brook the accent of reproof.
Duch. O, let me speak.
K. Rich. Do, then; but I’ll not hear.
Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my words.
K. Rich. And brief, good mother; for I am in haste.
Duch. Art thou so hasty! I have stand for thee
God knew in torment and in agony.
K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?
Duch. No, by the holy rood, thou know’st it well,
Thou canst on earth to make the earth my hell.
A grievous burden was thy birth to me;
Teetch’d and wayward was thy infancy;
Thy school-days, frightful, desperate, wild, and furious;
Thy prime of manhood, daring, bold, and various;
Thy age confirm’d, proud, subtle, sly, and bloody,
More mild, but yet more harmful, kind in hatred:
What comfortable hour canst thou content me,
That ever grace’d me in thy company?
K. Rich. ‘Faith none, but Humphrey Hour, that call’d thy grace.
To breakfast once, forth of my company.
If I be so disgraceful in your sight,
Let me march on, and not offend you, madam—
Strike up the drum.
Duch. Grey; I pray’thee, hear me speak.
Duch. Hear me a word,
For I shall never speak to thee again.
Duch. Either thou wilt die, by God’s just ordinance
Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror:
Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish,
And never look upon thy face again.
Therefore, take with thee my most heavy curse;
Which, in the day of battle, tire thee more,
That and thy accursed arm that thou warst!
My prayers on the adverse party fight;
And there the little souls of Edward’s children
Whisper the spirits of thine enemies,
And promise them success and victory,
Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end;
Shame serves thy life, and doth thy death attend.
Q. Eliz. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse
Abides in me; I say amen to her.
[Going.
K. Rich. Stay, madam, I must speak a word with
Q. Eliz. I have no more sons of the royal blood,
• Owned. •Disposition. •Cross. • Touchy, fretful.
Q. Eliz. Send to her, by the man that slew her brothers,
A pair of burning hearts; thereon engrave, Edward, and York; then, haply, will she weep.
Therefore present to her,—as sometime Margaret Did to her father, steep'd in Rutland's blood,—
A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain
The purple sap from her sweet brother's body,
And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withal.
And if this present be but a very little love,
Send her a letter of thy noble deeds;
Tell her, thou mad'st away her uncle Clarence,
Her uncle Rivers; ay, and for her sake,
Mad'st thy wife, in conveyance with her good aunt Anne.

K. Rich. You mock me, madam; this is not the way to win your daughter.

Q. Eliz. There is no other way; Unless thou couldst put on some other shape,
Nor be it Richard that hath done all this.

K. Rich. Say, that I did all this for love of her!
Q. Eliz. Nay, then indeed, she cannot choose but have thee,
Having bought love with such a bloody spoil.

K. Rich. Look, what is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvised sometimes,
Which others' dooms give them leisure to accept.
If I did take the kingdom from your sisters,
To make amends, I'll give it to your daughter.
If I have kill'd the issue of your womb,
To quicken her miscarriage, I will give
Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter.
A grandam's name is little less in love,
Than is the doing title of a mother!
They can as children, as one side below,
Even of your mettle, of your very blood;
Of all the price, —save for a name of griefs
Endur'd by her, for whom you bid it chance,
Your children's loss; vexation to your youth,
But mine shall be a comfort to your age,
The loss you have, is but—a son being king,
And, brief as it is, your daughter is made queen
I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore accept such kindness as I can.
Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul,
Leads disordered steps in fond and rash adventure,
This air alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions and great dignity:
The king, that calls your beauteous daughter—wife,
Familiarly shall call thy Dorset—brother;
Again shall you be mother to a king,
And all the ruins of distressful times,
Repair'd with double riches of content.
What's there have more, in a good day's hope? —The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again, transformed to orient pearl;
Advancing their lean, with interest.
Of ten-times double, tincture of happiness.
Go, then, my mother, to thy daughter go;
Make bold her basest years with your experience,
Prepare her ears to hear a wiser's tale;
Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame
Of golden sovereignty; acquaint the princess
With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys:
And when this arm of mine hath established
The petty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham,
Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed!
To whom shall I will return my conquered tile;
And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar.

Q. Eliz. What were I best to say? her father's brother?
Would he be lord? Or shall I say, her uncle?
Or, he that slew her brothers and her uncle's?
Under what title shall I woo thee,
That God, the law; may honor, and her love,
Can make seem pleasant to her tenuring years:
K. Rich. Infer fair England's peace by this alliance.
Q. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still lasting
K. Rich. Tell her, the king, that may command
Q. Eliz. That at her hands, which the king's king
K. Rich. Say, she shall be a high and mighty queen.

Perhaps. In the Levitical Law, chap. xviii. 14
Q. Eliz. To wait the title as her mother doth.
K. Rich. Say, I will love her everlastingly.
Q. Eliz. But how long shall that title, ever, last, K. Rich. Most generally in such times her fair life's end.
Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last?
K. Rich. As long as heaven, and nature, lengthens it.
Q. Eliz. As long as hell, and Richard, likes of it.
K. Rich. Say, I, her sovereign, am her subject low.
Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, laiths such soveriegnity.
K. Rich. Be eloquent, in my behalf, to her.
Q. Eliz. An honest tale swegian best, being plain.
K. Rich. Then, in plain terms tell me your loving tale.
Q. Eliz. Plain, and not honest, is too harsh a style.
K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow, and too quick.
Q. Eliz. O no, my reasons are too deep and dead.
K. Rich. Harp on that string, madam, that is past.
Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I tell heartstrings break.
K. Rich. Now, by my George, my mother, and my crown—
Q. Eliz. Prophan'd, dishonor'd, and the third usurp'd.
Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath.
The George, profan'd, hath lost his holy honor.
The garter, hemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue.
The crown, usurp'd, disgraced his kingly glory.
If something thou wouldst swear to be believed,
Swear then what something that I am not wrong'd.
K. Rich. Now, by the world,—
Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy soul wrongs.
K. Rich. My father's death,—
Q. Eliz. Thy life hath that dishonor'd.
K. Rich. Then, by myself—
Q. Eliz. Thyself is self-misused.
K. Rich. Why then, by God—
Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all.
If thou hast fear'd to break an oath by him,
The unity, the king thy brother made,
Had not been broken, nor my brother slain;
If thou hast fear'd to break an oath by him,
The imperial metal, circling now thy head,
Had grace'd the tender temples of my child;
And both our princes had been breathing here,
Where now, two tender bed-fellows for dust,
Thy broken faith hath made a prey for worms.
What cause thou swear by now?
K. Rich. I belly. The time by the come.
Q. Eliz. That thou hast wronged in the time o'erpast;
For I myself have many tears to wash
Hereafter time, for time past, wrong'd by thee.
The children live, whose parents thou hast slaughtertaed,
Unswen'd youth, to wait it in their age:
The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher'd,
Old barren plants, to wait it in their age:
Swear not by time to come; for that thou hast
Misused his years, by times illused o'erpast.
K. Rich. As I intend to prosper and repent,
So thrive I in my dangerous attempt
Of hostile arms! myself myself confound!
Heaven of fortune, far me happy hours;
Day yield me not thy light; nor might, thy rest!
Be opposite all planets of good luck
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
Immune devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter:
In her consists my happiness, and thine;
Without her, follows to myself, and thee,
Heaven, earth, the land, and many a christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay;
It cannot be avoided, but by this;
It will not be avoided, but by this;
Therefore, dear mother, (I must call you so,) Be the attorney of my love to her.
Dead what I will be, not what I have been;
Not my deserts, but what I will deserve:
*The endings of the Order of the Garter.

Urge the necessity and state of times,
And be not peevish! bound in great designs,
Q. Eliz. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus?
K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt thee to do good.
Q. Eliz. Shall I forget myself to be myself?
K. Rich. Ay, if yourself's remembrance wrong yourself.
K. Rich. But in your daughter's womb I bury them:
Where, in most of spicery, they shall breed
Selves of themselves, to your recompence.
Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter thy will?
K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.
Q. Eliz. —Write to me very shortly,
And you shall understand from me my mind.
K. Rich. Bear her my true love's kiss, and so farewell, [Kissing her. Exit Q. Eliz.
Relenting soul, and shallow, changing—woman!
How now! what news!

Enter RATTLEF; Catesby following.
Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast
Rideth a pavanT army: to the shore
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back:
'Tis thought that Richmond is their admiral;
And there they hall, expecting but the aid
Of Buckingham, to welcome them in force.
K. Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the duke of Nortbof—
Rattlef, thyself,—or Catesby: where is fie?
Cate. Here, my good lord.
Cate. I will, my lord, with all convenient haste.
K. Rich. Rattlef, come hither: Post to Salisbury;
When thou com'st thither,—Dull unnecessary villain,
To Catesby.
Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the duke?
Cate. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness' pressure,
What from your grace I shall deliver to him.
K. Rich. O, true, good Catesby,—bid him levy
The greatest strength and power he can make,
And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.
Cate. I go.
[Exit. Rat. What, may it please you, shall I do at Salisbury?
K. Rich. Why, what wouldst thou do there, before
I go I?
Rat. Your highness told me, I should post before

Enter STANLEY.
K. Rich. My mind is changed.—Stanley, what news
with you?
Stan. None good, my liege, to please you with the hearing:
Nor none so bad, but well may be reported.
K. Rich. Heyday, a riddle! neither good nor bad!
What need'st thou run so many miles about,
When thou mayst tell thy tale the nearest way?
Once more, what news?
Stan. Richmond is on the seas.
K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the seas on him.
White-livered runagate, what doth he there?
Stan. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess.
K. Rich. Well, as you guess!
Stan. Nord'd up by Dorset, Buckingham, and Mortimer.
He makes for England, here to claim the crown.
K. Rich. Is the chair empty? is the sword un
The is king dead! the empire unpossess'd!
What heat of York is there alive, but we!
And who is England's king, but great York's heir?
Then let the truth, bely kin'd, and like he upon the seas?
Stan. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess.
K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be thy liege,
You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman comes.
Stan. Well, I will think, and fly to him, I fear.
Stan. No, mighty liege; therefore mistrust me not.
K. Rich. Where is thy power then, to beat him him
Where be thy tenants, and thy followers?
Are they not now by the western shore,
Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships?
* Foolish.
* The phonix's nest.
Enter another Messenger.

4 Mess. Sir Thomas Lovel, and lord marquis of Exeter.
'Tis said, my liege, in Yorkshire are in arms.

But this good comfort bring I to your highness,—
The Bretagne navy is dispers'd by tempests;
K. Rich., in Dorsetshire, sent out on a boat.
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,
If they were his assistants, yea, or no;
If not, and here, they came from Buckingham.
Upon his party: he, mistrusting them,
Held safe, and made his course again for Bretagne.

K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up in arms;
If not to fight with foreign enemies,
Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.

Enter CATHERBY.

Cat. My liege, the duke of Buckingham is taken,
That in my news; That the earl of Richmond
Is with a mighty power landed at Milford,
Is colder news, but yet they must be told.
K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury; while we rea-

Here.

A royal battle might be won and lost;—
Some one take order, Buckingham be brought To Salisbury;—the rest march on with me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A Room in Lord Stanley's House.

Enter STANLEY, and SIR CHRISTOPHER URSWICK.

Stan. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me:

That, in the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is frankly in hold;
If I revolt, off goes young George's head.
The fear of that withholdst my present aid.
But, tell me, where is princeley Richmond now?

Chris. At Pembroke, or at Harfod-west, in Wales.
Stan. What men of name resort to him?

Chris. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
Sir Gilbert Talbot, sir William Stanley;
Oxford, redoubled Pembroke, sir James Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant crew;
And many other of great fame and worth;
And towards London do they bend their course,
If by the way they be not sought withal.

Stan. Well, lie thee to thy lord; command me to him;
Tell him, the queen hath heartily consented
He shall espouse Elizabeth her daughter.
These letters will resolve him of my mind.

Farewell. [Gives Papers to Sir CHRISTOPHER.]

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Hath turned my feigned prayer on my head,
And gives me ears wherewith I can but hear.
Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men
To turn their own points on their masters' bosoms;
Thus Margaret's curse falls heavy on my neck—
When he, quoth she, shall spill thy heart with sorrow,
Remember Margaret was a prophetess.—
Come, sirs, convey me to the block of shame,
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.

[Exeunt Buckhurst, &c.]

SCENE II.—Plain near Tamworth.

Enter, with Drum and Colors, RICHARD, OXFORD, SIR JAMES BLUNT, SIR WALTER HERBERT, and others, with Forces, marching.

Richm. Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny,
Thus far into the bowels of the land
Have we march'd on without impediment;
And here receive we from our father Stanley
Lines of fair comfort and encouragement.
The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoild your summer fields, and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his [Chaplain to the countess of Richmond.

[1 fank is a sty in which hogs are fattened
In your embow'di bosoms, this foul swine
Lies now even in the centre of this isle,
Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn:
Friar Tuck, the worth of thither, is but one day's march.
In God's name, chereely on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
By this one bloody trial of sharp war.
[Exit.]

What is my beaver easier than it was—
And all my armor laid into my tent!
[Cafe. It is, my bege; and all things are in readiness.
K. Rich. Good Norfolk, lie thee to thy charge;
Use careful watch, choose trusty sentinels.
Nor. I go, my lord.
K. Rich. With the dark to-morrow, gentle Norfolk.
Nor. I warrant you, my lord.
[Exit.]
K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant at arms
To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring air power
Before supersising, lest his son George fall
Into the blind ease of sullen night.
Fill me a bowl of wine.—Give me a watch.—
[Saddle white Surrey for the field to-morrow.—
Look that my staves be sound, and not too heavy.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Bosworth Field.

Enter King Richard, and Forces; the Duke of Norfolk, Earl of Surrey, and others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tents, even here in Bosworth field.
My lord of Surrey, why look you so sad?
Sure, my heart is ten times lighter than my looks.
K. Rich. My lord of Norfolk, why look you so sad?
Nor. Here, most gracious heer.
K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have no tears. Ha! we must not eat:
Nor. We must both give and take, my loving lord.
K. Rich. Up with my tent; here will I be tonight.
[Soldiers begin to set up the King's tent.]
But where, to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that.—
Who hath descried the number of the traitors?
Nor. Six, or seven thousand is their utmost power.
K. Rich. Why, our battle trebles that account:
Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,
Which they upon the adverse faction want.
Up with the tent.—Come, noble gentlemen,
Let us not colour the victory of ground—
Call for some men of sound directions.
Let's want no discipline, make no delay;
For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day.
[Exeunt.]

Enter, on the other side of the Field, Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and other Lords.

Some of the Soldiers pitch Richmond's Tent.

Rich. The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And left the bright track of his ardent heart,
Gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.—
Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard;
Give me some ink and paper in my tent;
'Heart you to the form and model on myrtle,
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small power.
My lord of Oxford, you, Sir William Brandon,—
And you, Sir Walter Herlington, stay with me:
The earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment;
Good captain Blunt, bear my good night to him,
And by the second hour in the morning
Desire the earl to see me in my tent:
Yet one thing more, good captain, do for me;
Where is lord Stanley quarter'd, do you know?
Blunt. Upon my honour, my lord, I'll undertake it;
And so, God give you quiet rest to-night.
Rich. Good night, good captain Blunt. Come, gentlemen,
Let us not be to-morrow's business
In to my tent, the air is raw and cold.
[They withdraw into the Tent.]

Enter, to his Tent, King Richard, Norfolk, Ratcliff, and Catesby.

K. Rich. What is't o'clock?
Cafe. It's supper time, my lord:
K. Rich. It's nine o'clock.
K. Rich. I will not sup to-night;
Give me some ink and paper,—
...
KING RICHARD III.

Act V.

Be cheerful, Richmond; for the wronged souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf;
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comfort thee.

The Ghost of KING HENRY THE SIXTH rises.

Ghost. When I was mortal, my appointed body
By thee was punched full of death's knife.
Think on the Tower, and me; Despair, and die!
Harry the Sixth bids thee despair, and die,—

Virtuous and holy, be thou conquer'd,

King Richard.

Harry, that prospers thou shalt be King,
Both cometh thee in thy sleep; Live, and flourish!

The Ghost of CLARENCE rises.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

I, that was wash'd to death with Gallic wine,
Poor Clarence, by thy guilty betrayer to death!
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fill thy edgeless sword; Despair, and die!—

Then ophining of the house of Lancaster.

The wronged heirs of York do pray for thee;
Good angels guard thy battle; Live, and flourish!

The Ghosts of RIVERS, GREY, and VAUGHAN rise.

Rice. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow.

Rivers, that died at Pomfret; Despair, and die!
Grey. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair!

Vaughan. Think upon Vaughan; and, with guilty fear,

Let fall thy lance! Despair, and die.—

All. Awake! and think, our wrongs in Richard's bosom
Will conquer him;—Awake, and win the day!

The Ghosts of HASTINGS rise.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty, guilty awake!—

And in a bloody battle end thy days!
Think on lord Hastings; and despair, and die!—

Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake!—

To Richmond.

Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake!

The Ghosts of the two young Princes rise.

Ghosts. Dream on thy cousins smother'd in the Tower;
Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard,
And weep thee down to ruin, shame, and death!
Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair, and die.—

Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angel's guard thee from the bane's annoy!
Love, and begat a happy race of kings
Edward's unhappy souls do bid thee flourish.

The Ghost of QUEEN ANNE rises.

Ghost. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne,
thy wife,
That never slept a quiet hour with thee,
Now fills thy sleep with perturbations;
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; Despair, and die!—
Thou, quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet sleep.—

To Richmond.

Dream of success and happy victory;
Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

The Ghost of BUCKINGHAM rises.

Ghost. The first was I, that helped thee to the crown
King Richard.

The last was I, that felt thy tyranny;
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness.
Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and death;
Fainting, despair, despairing, yield thy breath!—
I died for hope, ere I could lend thee aid:—

To Richmond.

But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd;
God, and good angels, fight on Richard's side;
And Richard falls in height of all his pride.

The Ghosts rise again. King Richard starts out of his dream.

K. Rich. Give me another horse,—bind up my wounds,—
Have mercy, Jesus!—Soft; I did but dream,—

O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me:—
The lights burn blue,—It is now dead midnight.
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
What do I do myself? Here's none but I by:
Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.
Is there a murderer here? No;—Yes; I am:—
Then fly,—What, from myself! Great reason was

Lest I revenge. What? Myself on myself?
I love myself. Wherefore? for any good,
That I myself have done unto myself!—
O no; alas, I Rather hate myself,
For hateful deeds committed by myself,
I am a villain: Yet I lie, I am not,
Fool, of thyself speak well,—Fool, do not flatter.
My conscience hath a thousand several tortures,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale confounds me for a villain.
Peery, perjury, in the high'st degree,
Murder, stern murder, in the direst degree;
All several sins, all used in each degree,
Through to the bar, crying all,—Guilty! guilty! I shall despair. There is no creature loves me;
And, if I die, no soul will pity me:—
Nay, wherefore should they? since that I myself
Find in myself no pity to myself.

Method! the souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent: and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter RALCIF.

Rat. My lord,—
K. Rich. Who's there?—
Rat. Ratcliff, my lord; 'tis I. The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn;
Your friends are up, and buckle on their armure.
K. Rich. O, Ratcliff, I have dream'd a fearful dream!—
What thinkest thou? will our friends prove all true?
K. Rat. No doubt, my lord.
K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-might Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers,
 Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.
It is not yet near day. Come, go with me;
Under our tents I'll play the coves-dropper,
To hear, if any mean to shrink from me.

[Exeunt King Richard and Ratcliff.

RICHMOND wakes. Enter Oxford and others.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond.
Rich. Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentle-
men,
That you have 'em a tardy sluggard here.

Lords. Have you slept, my lord?—
Rich. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boded dreams,

That even wear'd in a drowsy head.
Have I since your departure had, my lords,
Met thought, their souls, whose bodies Richard murther'd?
Come to my tent, and cried,—On! victory!
I promise you, my heart is very joyous
In the remembrance of so fair a dream.
How far into the morning is it, lords?
Lords. Upon the stroke of four.

Rich. Why, then 'tis time to arm, and give direction,—

[He advances to the Troops.

More than I have said, loving countrymen.
The brave and enforcement of the times,
Forbids to dwell on: Yet remember this,—
God, and our good cause, fight upon our side;—
Although the pride of holy saints, and wrong'd souls,
Like a speechward'd halvard, stand before our face;
Richard except, those, whom we fight against,
Had rather have us win, than them inlay.
Baron! you see? I say:—
Baron, you see?—truly gentlemen,
A bloody tyrant, and a homicide;—
One rais'd in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
One that made means to come by what he had,
And should be'd those that were the means to help him:
A base foist stone, made precious by the foil
Of England's chair, where he is falsely set;
One that hath ever been God's enemy:
Then, if you fight against God's enemy, God will, in justice, ward you as his soldiers; if you do sweat to put a tyrant down, you sleep in peace, the tyrant's head will be yours; if you do fight against your country's foes, your country's fate will pay your pains the hire; if you do fight in safeguard of your wives, your wounds or died wounds can wipe your tears; if you do free your children from the sword, your children's children quit it in your age. Then, in the name of God, and all these rights, advance your standards, draw your willing swords: For me, the raiment of my bold attempt shall be this cold corpse upon the earth's cold face; But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt. The least of you shall share his hero's cheer. Sound, drums and trumpets, boldly and cheerfully; God, and Saint George! Richmond, and victory! [Exeunt.

Re-enter K. Rich. Ratcliff, Attendants, and Forces. K. Rich. What said Northumberland, as touching Richmond? Rat. That he was never trained up in arms. K. Rich. He said the truth: And what said Surrey then? Rat. He swall'd and said, the better for our purpose. K. Rich. He was the right; and so, indeed, it is. Clock strikes. Tell the clock there.—Give me a calendar.—Who saw the sun to-day? Rat. Not I, my lord. K. Rich. Then he disclaims to shine; for, by the book, he should have braved the east an hour ago: A black day will it be to somebody.—

Ratcliff. Rat. My lord! K. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day; The sky doth frown and lower upon our army. I will, my noble lord, to-morrow draw my dewy tears from the ground. Stone, stone! Why, what is that to me? More than to Richmond! for the self-same heaven, That frowns on me, looks sadly upon him. Enter Norfolk. Nor. Arm, arm, my lord; the foe vaunts in the yard, and bids the day. K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle;—Caparison my horse;—

Call up lord Stanly, bid him bring his power: I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain, And thus my battle shall be ordered. My forward shall be drawn out all in length, Consisting equally of horse and foot; Our array shall be placed in the midst: John duke of Norfolk, Thomas earl of Surrey, Shall have the leading of this foot and horse. They thus directed, we ourselves will follow In the main battle; whose passage on either side Shall be well winched with our chiefest horse. This, and Saint George to boot!—What think'st thou, Norfolk? Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign. This found I on my tent this morning. [Giving a Scroll. K. Rich. Jacky of Norfolk, be not too bold; [Reads, 'What's more than I have? and who is master is bought and sold.' A thing devised by the enemy,—

Go, gentleman, every man unto his charge: Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls: Conscience is but a word that cowards use, Devised at first to keep the strong in awe; Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law. March on, join bravely, let us to 'till pell-mell; If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell. What say you more than I have? and who is master is bought and sold.]

[Reading.] Remember whom you are to cope withal;— A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and run-aways, A scum of Britains, and base huckey peacocks, With scattered arms, and with faint hearts, To desperate ventures and assured destruction. You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest; You have not lands, and bless'd be the women, They would restrain the one, distrust the other.

Guard.

* The undesirability of Richard.

Company, And who doth lead them, but a paltry fellow, Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost! A milk-sop, one that never in his life Felt to the very core of shoes to know! Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again; Lash hence these over-weening rags of France, These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives; Who, but to slumber in this fond exploit, For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd them selves: If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us, And not these bastard Bretons; whom our fathers Have in their own hand beaten, bob'd, and thump'd, And, on record, left them the heirs or shame. Shall these enjoy our lands? be with our wives! Ravish our daughters!—Hark, I hear his drum. [Drum afar off. Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen! Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head!—

Spur you, head hard, and breast well bold; Amaze the welkin with your broken staves!

Enter a Messenger. What says lord Stanley? I will he bring his power! Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come. K. Rich. Oft instantly with his son George's head. Nor. My lord, the enemy is pass'd the marsh; Abc the drum, let George Stanley strike. K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom: Advance our standards, set on to our foes; Our answer word of courage, fair and true, Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons! Upon them! Victory sits on our helmets. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field. Alarums: Excursions. Enter NORFOLK, and FORCES; to him CATSBEY. Cate. Rescene, my lord of Norfolk, rescue! The king enacts more wonders than a man During an opposite to every danger; His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights, Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death: Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost! Alarums. Enter K. Rich. K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!—

Cate. Withdraw, my lord. I'll help you to a horse. K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast, And I will stand the hazard of the die; I think there be six Richmonds in the field; Five have I slain to-day instead of him: A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! [Exeunt. Alarums. Enter K. Rich and Richmond; and exact fighting. Retreat, and Flourish. Then enter RICHMOND, STANLEY bearing the Crown, with divers other Lords, and Forces. Richm. God, and your arms, be prais'd, victorious friends! The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead. Stan. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquitted thee! Lo, here, this long-look'd for royalty, From the chief temples of this bloody wretch Have I pluck'd off to grace thy brows withal; Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it. Richm. Great God of heaven, say, amen, to all! But, tell me first, is young George Stanley living? Stan. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town, Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw us Richm. That men of name are slain on either side! Stan. John duke of Norfolk, Walter lord Ferrers Sir Robert Brackenbury, and sir William Brabant Richmond, and all their bands as they may; whose breath Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers dead, That in submission will return to us; And, then, as we have ta'en the sanctuary, We will unite the white rose with the red; Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction. That long haf'd frown'd upon their enmity!— What traitor hears me, and says not—Amen! England hath long been mad, and scar'd herself; The brother blindly shed the brother's blood, The father rashly slaughter'd his own son.
The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire;
All this divided York and Lancaster,
Divided, in their dire division.—
O, now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,
The true successors of each royal house,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together!
And let their heirs, (God, if thy will be so,)
Enrich the time to come with smooth-faced peace,
With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days!

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,
That would reduce these bloody days again,
And make poor England weep in streams of blood!
Let them not live to taste this land's increase,
That would with treason wound this fair land's peace!
Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again:
That she may long live here, God say—Amen.

[Exeunt.]

PROLOGUE.

I come no more to make you laugh; things now,
That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it. Such as give
Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too. Those, that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree,
The play may pass; if they be still and willing,
I'll undertake, may see away their shining
Richly in two short hours. Only they,
That come to hear a merry, bawdy play,
A noise of targets; or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd; for, gentle hearers, know,
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and light is, beside forgetting
Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring,
(To make that only true we now intend,)
Will leave us never an understanding friend.
Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known
The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad, as we would make ye: Think, ye see
The very persons of our noble story,
As they were living; think you see them great,
And follow'd with the general throng, and sweat,
Of thousand friends; then, in a moment, see
How soon this bigness needs misery!
And, if you can be merry then, I'll say,
A man may weep upon his wedding day.

ACT I.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, at one door; at the other the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Abbergaveny.

Buck. Good morrow, and well met. How have you done,
Since last we saw in France?

Noe. I thank your grace;
Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer
Of what I saw there.

Laced.

Buck. An untimely age
Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when
Those suns of glory, those two lights of men?
Met in the vale of Arde.

Noe. Twixt Guynes and the Arde:
I was then present, saw them salute on horseback;
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they chung
In their embracement, as they grew together;
Which had they, what four thron'd ones could have weight'd
Such a compounded one!

Stead. Henry VIII. and Francis I. king of France
Buck. All the while time
I was my chamber's prisoner.
Nor. Then you lost
That view of earthly glory: Men might say,
Till this time, pomp was single but now married
To one above itself. Each following day
Became the next day's master, till the last
Made former wonders its: To-day, the French,
All clinquant, at last in ill, ill he did go.
Shone down the English: and, to-morrow, they Made Britain, India: every man that stood,
Stood like a man. This dwarfish pages were
As cherubim, all gilt: the master too,
Not used to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labor
Was to them a painting now a book
Was cry'd incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool, and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst,
As fate did present them; and, still,
Still him in praise; and, being present both,
Twas said, they saw but one; and no discern Durst wag his tongue in censure. When these

(For so they phrase them) by their herals challenged

The noble spot to arms, they did perform
Beyond thought's compass; that former fabulous story,

Being now seen possible enough, got credit,
This liev'd was bellev'd.
Buck. O, you go far.
Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honor honestly, the tract of every thing;
What were a good course less would have
Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal;
To the disposing of it nought rebel'd,
Order gave each thing view; the office did
Dignify his full function.
Buck. Who did guide, I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess!
Nor. One certes' that promises no elements
In such a business.
Buck. Nor. I pray you, who, my lord?
Nor. All this was, by the good discretion
Of the right reverend cardinal of York.
Buck. The devil sped him! no man's pie is fre'd
From his ambitious finger. What had he
To do in these fierce vanities? I wonder,
That such a keech can with his very bulk
Take up the mays of the beneficient sun,
And keep it from the earth.

Surely, sir,
There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends:
For, being not prop'd by ancestry, (whose grace Children, their say,) nor could upon
For high feats done to the crown; neither allied
To eminent assistance, but, spider-like,
Ou't of his self-drawing web, he gives us note,
The force of his own merit makes him way.
A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys
A place next to the king.

Buck. I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him, let some graver eye
Pierce through into that; but I can see his pride
Through each part of him: Whence he has that!
If not from hell, the devil is a naggard;
Or has given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himself.

Anger. Why the devil,
Upon this French going-out, took he upon him,
Without the privy o' the king, to appoint
Who should attend on him! He makes up the

File

Of all the gentry; for the most part such
Too, whom as great a charge as little honor
Hath he to lay upon; and his own letter,
The honorable board of council out,
Must fetch him in the papers.

Aber. I do know
Known of mine, three at the least, that have
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly.

Glittering, shining. In opinion, which was most noble,
Sir John, an old restored. In a certain Practice.

Sets down in his letter without consulting the council.

Buck. Of many
Have broke their backs with laying manors on them
For this great journey. What did this vanity,
But minister communication of
A most poor issue?

Nor. Griefing I think
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it.
Buck. Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
A thing inspir'd: and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy.—That this tempest,
Dushts the garment of this peace, abode
The sudden breach on't.

Nor. Which is lugged but;
For France hath flaward the league, and hath at-

Ach. Our merchants' goods at Borderaux.

Is it therefore
The ambassador is silenced?

Nor. Marry, is't.
Ach. A proper title of a peace; and purchas'd
At a superlative rate!

Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carried.

Nor. 'Like it, your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Between you and the cardinal. I must say
(And take it from a heart that wishes towards you Honour and plentiful safety,) that you read
The cardinal's malice and his potence
Together: to consider further, this
What his high hatred would effect, wants not
A minister in his power: You know his nature,
A most revengeful; and, I know, his sword
Hath a sharp edge; its long, and, it may be said,
It reaches far; and where 'twixt will not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel,
You'll find it wholesome. Lo, where comes that rock,
That I advise your shunning.

Enter Cardinal Wolsey, (the Pope borne before him,) certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with Papers. The Cardinal in his passage frock his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham on his eye full of wisdom.

Wol. The duke of Buckingham's surveyor! ha?
Where's his examination?

1 Ser. Here, so please you.
Wol. Is he in person ready?
2 Ser. Ay, please your grace.
Wol. Well, we shall then know more; and Buckingham shall lessen this big look.

Exeunt Wolsey, and Train.

Buck. This butcher's ear is venom-mouth'd, and
And I have on him the power to muzzle him: therefore best
Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book
Out-worths a noble's blood.

Nor. What, are you chaf'd?
Ask God for temperance; that's the appliance only,
Which your disease requires.

Buck. I read in his looks
Matter against me; and his eye revil'd
Me, as his abject object: at this instant
He bore'st me with some trick: he's gone to the king;

I'll follow, and out-stare him.
Nor. Stay, my lord,
And let your reason with your choleric question
What 's us you go about: To climb steep hills
Requires slow pace at first: Anger is like
A full-hot horse; who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Not a man in England
Can advise me like you; be to yourself
As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll to the king,
And from a mouth of honor quite cry down
This Iwipwich fellow's insolence; or proclaim,
There's difference in no persons. Be advis'd:

Heat not a furnace for your be so hot
That it do singe yourself: We may out-run,
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Know you not,
The fire, that mounts the liquor till it run o'er,
In seeming to augment it, wastes it? Be advis'd.
I say again, there is no English soul

9 Conducted. Wolsey was the son of a butcher. Stats.
Scene II.  KING HENRY VIII.

More stronger to direct you than yourself; it with the sap of reason you would quench, Quench all play, the fire of passion.

Buck.

Sir, I am thankful to you; and I'll go along with your prescription:—but this top-prond fellow, (Who came from the bow of ship; name but From sincere motions,) by intelligence, And proos as clear as sounds in July, when We see each grain of gravel, I do know To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor.  Say not, treasonous.

Buck.  To the king I'll say 't; and make you vouch

As shore of rock.  Attend.  This holy fox, Or wolf, or both, (for he is equal ravens, As he is suble; and as prone to mischist, As able to think.) Indicating another, yea, reciprocally) Only to show his pomp as well in France As here at home, suggests—kneel the king our master To this last costly treat, the interview, That swallow'd so much treasure, and, like a glass, Did break 't the rising.

Nor.  Faith, and so it did.

Buck.  Pray, give me favor, Sir.  This coming cardinal

The articles of the combination drew, And all they pleado; and they were ratifit, As he cried, Thus let be: to as much end, As give a crutch to the dead: But our count-cardinal has doth this, and 'us well; for worthy Wolsey, Who cannot err, he did it.  Now this follows, (Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy To the old dam, treason,)—Charles the emperor, Under pretence to see the queen his aunt, (For 'twas indeed, his color; but he came To whisper Wolsey,) here makes visitation: His feats were, that the interview, betwixt England and France, might, through their anity, Breed him some prejudice, for from this league Peep'd arms that menaced him: He privily Deals with our cardinal, and, as I know, Which I do well; for, I am sure, the emperor Pard cr he promised; whereby he is granted, Ere it was ask'd;—but when his way was made, And he did what gold, the emperor thus desire:— That he would promise to alter the king's course, And break the abroad peace.  Let the king know, (As soon she shall be,) that thus the cardinal does buy and sell his honor as he pleases, And for his own advantage.

I am sorry To hear this of him; and could wish, he were Something mistak'd in't.

Buck.  No, not a syllable; I do pronounce him in that very shape, He shall appear in proof.

Enter Brandon; a sergeant-at-arms before him, and two or three of the guards.

Bran.  Your office, sergeant; execute it.

Serg.

Sir, My lord the duke of Buckingham, and earl

Of Hertford, Stafford, and Northampton, I arrest thee of high treason, in the name Of our most sovereign king.

Buck.  Lo you, my lord, the net has fallen upon me; I shall perish Underside and practice.

I am sorry To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on This business present: 'Tis his highness' pleasure You shall to the Tower.

Buck.  It will help me nothing, To please mine innocence; for that dye is on me, Which makes my whitest part black.  The will of heaven

Be done in this, and all things!—I obey.—

O my lord Abergavenny, fare you well.

Bran.  Nay, he must bear your company.—The king

Is pleased, you shall to the Tower, till you know How he determins further.

Buck.  As the duke said, The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure

By me obey'd.

Excuses.

* Unfair strategem.

Buck.  Here is a warrant from The king, to attach lord Montague; and the bodies Of the duke's confessors, John de la Court, One Gilbert Peck, his chancellor,—

Buck.  So, so; These are the limbs of the plot: no more, I hope.

Buck.  A monk o' the Chartreux.

He.  Buck.  My surveyor is false; the o'er-great cardinal

Hath show'd him gold: my life is spann'd already; I am the shadow of poor Buckingham; Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on, By dark hing my clear sun.  My lord, farewell.

—Exeunt.
Perforce be your acquaintance. These exactions, Which we impose, were, and are, the best, as Most pestilent to the hearers: and to bear them, The back is stiffer to the load. They say, They are devi'd by you; or else you suffer Toleration, an exclamation. Still exaction!

K. Hen. The nature of it? In what kind, let's know, Is this exaction?

Q. Kath. I am much too venturous in tempting of your patience; but am bolden'd. Under your promis'd pardon. The subject's grief Comes through commissions, which compel from each. The sixth part of his substance, to be levied Without delay; and the presence for this Is naught but wars in France: This makes bold mouths: Tongue'spout their dutes, and cold hearts freeze

Allegiance in them; their curses now Lay where their prayers did; and it's come to pass, That tractable obedience is a slave

To each incensed will. I would your highness Would give it quick consideration, for There's no prime business. By my life,

K. Hen. This is against our pleasure

And for me, I have no farther gone in this, than by A single voice; and that not pass'd me, but By learned approbation of the judges. If that is change's, which neither know My humility, nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doings:—let me say, 'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake That virtue must go through. We must not stint Our necessary actions, in the fear To cope' malicious censurers; which ever, As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow That is new trimm'd; but benefit no farther Than vainly longing. What we oft do best, By sick interpreters, one' weak ones, is Not ours, or not allow'd? what worst of all, Hence quality, is cursed:

For our best act. It shall stand still, In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at, We shall take not here where we sit, or sit State statutes only.

K. Hen. Things done well, And with a care, exempt themselves from fear; Things done without example, in their issue Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent Of this commission? I believe, not any. We must not read our subjects from our laws, And from them in our will still. Exist not each? A trembling contribution! Why, we take, From every tree, hop, bark, and part of the timber; And though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd, That it may never spring. To our country, Where this is question'd, send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denied The force of this commission: Pray, look to't;

I tell you to your ear. And I am sure,

Wol. A word with you. To The Secretary. Let there be letters writ to every shire, Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd commons

Hardly conceive of me; let it be nois'd,

That, through our intercession, this revokement And every thing shall amount to you.

Further in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.

Enter Surveyor.

Q. Kath. I am sorry that the duke of Buckingham Is run in your displeasure.

K. Hen. It grieves many;

The gentleman is learn'd, and a rare speaker, To talk more noise more loud; his transage such, That he may furnish and instruct great teachers, And never seek for aid out of himself. Yet I see, When these so noble benefits shall prove Not well dispos'd, the mind growing once corrupt, They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly Than ever they were. This is so compar'd, Who was enrol'd amongst wonders, and when we, Almost with ravish'd listening, could not find His hour of speech a minute; he, my holy, * More important. * Thicket of thorns. * Remember. * Sounded. * Approved. Hath into monstrous habits put the grace That ever were hers, and is become a black. As if beseech'd in hell. Sit by us: you shall hear (This was his gentleman in trust) of him Things to strike honor sad. Bid him recount The forgot expedients; whose hearken. We cannot feel too little, hear too much. Wol. Stand forth; and with bold spirit relate what you. Most like a careful subject, have collected, Out of the duke of Buckingham.

K. Hen. Speak freely.

Surf. First, it was usual with him, every day It would infect his speech. That if the king Shoul'd without issue die, he'd carry it so To make the sceptre his: These very words I have peruse'd, and hid to his son-in-law Lord Aberuay: by whom, to oath he menac'd Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note

This dangerous conception in that court.

K. Hen. How know'st thou this?

Surf. Not long before your highness spied to France, The duke being at the Rose, within the parish Saint Paulinay Grenville, did of me demand What was the speech amongst the Londoners Concerning the French journey: I replied, Men fear'd, the French would prove pernicious, To the English danger. Presently the duke Said, 'Twas fear, indeed; and that he doubted, Would prove the verity of certain words Spoke in a holy manner; That he could not, The high seat to seat, wishing me to pervert John de la Cour, my chaplain, a choice hour To hear from him a matter of some moment: When other under the confessor's seat He solemnly had sworn, that what he spoke, My chaplain to no creature living, but To me, should utter, with demands confidence. This posture was caus'd,—Neither the king, nor his heirs, (Tell you the duke) shall prosper; bid him strive To gain the love of the commons: the duke Succeedeth England.

Q. Kath. If I know you well, You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office On the complaint of the tenants: Take good heed, You dare not go in thine apparel again, And spoil thy nobler soul! I say, take heed; Yes, heartily beseech you.

K. Hen. Let him on:—

Go forward. On my soul, I'll speak but truth. I told my lord the duke, By the devil's illusions The more he comes, I stand for'd; and that 'tis dan gerous for him,

To ruminate on this so far, until It forg'd him some design, which, being belief'd, It was much like to do: He answered, 'Tush! It can do me no damage; adding further, That, had the king in his last sickness fail'd, The cardinal's and sir Thomas Lovell's heads Should have gone down with him. But on this

K. Hen. Ha! what, so rank? Ah, ha! There's mischief in this man;—Canst thou say Further?

Surf. I can, my liege.

K. Hen. Proceed.

Surf. Being at Greenwich, After our highness had reprovd the duke About sir William Blomery,

K. Hen. I remember, Of such a time—being my servant sworn, The duke would had him in his. But on what hence?

* Now Merchant Taylor's School.
SCENE IV.  KINa HENRY VIII.

Surv. If, quoth he, I this for this hath been committed, As to the Tower, I thought—I would have play'd The part of the father meant to act upon The usurper Richard: who, being of Salisbury, Make suit to come in his presence; which if granted, As he made sentancer of his duty, would Have put his knife into him.

K. Hen. A giant traitor!

Wol. Now, madam, may his highness live in freedom, And this man out of prison?

Q. Koth. God mend all!

K. Hen. There's something more would out of these: What say'st thou?

Surv. Aho!—the duke his father,—with the knife,—

He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,

Another spread on his breast, mounting his eyes,

He did discharge a horrible oath whose tenor

Was,—Were he evil used, he would outgo

His father, by as much as a performance

Depend upon a resolute purpose.

K. Hen. There's his period,

To shew his knife in us. He is attach'd;

Call him to present trial; if he may

Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none,

Let him not seek of us. By day and night,

He's traitor to the height.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, and Lord Sands.

Cham. Is it possible, the spells of France should juggle

Men into such strange mysteries?

Sands. New customs,

Though they be never so ridiculous,

Nay, let them be unnaturally, yet are follow'd.

Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English

Have got by the late voyage, is but merely

A fit or two o' the face; but they are shrewd ones;

For when they hold them, you would swear directly

Their veins had been channel'd with the French.

To Pepin, or Clotharius, they keep state so

Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones;

That never saw them pace before, the spavin,

A springhal'd reign'd among them.

Cham. Death! my lord,

Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too,

That, sure, they have worn out christianhood.

How now!

What news, sir Thomas Lovell?

Enter Sir Thomas Lovell.

Lor. 'Faith, my lord,

I hear of none but the new proclamation

That's clapp'd upon the court-gate.

Cham. What is't for?

Lor. The reformation of our trave'll'd gallants,

That till the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.

Cham. I am glad, 'tis there; now I would pray

Our mount-servants

To think an English charter may be wise,

And never see the Louvre!

Lor. They must either

(For so run the conditions) leave these remnants

Of fool, and feather, that they got in France,

With all their honorable points of ignorance,

Pertaining thereunto, (as lights, and fireworks;

Abusing better men than they can be,

Our to a foreign wisdom,) renewing clean

The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,

Short hispter'd breeches, and those types of travel,

And understand again like honest men;

Or pack to their old playfellows: there, I take it,

They may, cum privilegio, wear away

The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at.

Sands. No time to give them physic, their diseases

Are grown so catching.

Cham. What a loss our ladies

Will have of these trim vanities!

Lor. Ay, marry,

There will be wo烦 indeed, lords; the silly whoresons

Have got a speedy trick to lay down ladies;

A French song, and a fiddle, has no flaw.

Sands. The devil fiddled them! I am glad, they're going;

*Grinace.

* With authority.

(For, sure, there's no converting of them!) now

An honest country lord, as I am, beaten

A long time out of play, may bring his plans

And have an hour of hearing; and, by'r-lady,

Held current music too.

Cham. Well said, lord Sands,

Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.

Sands. No, my lord;

Nor shall not, while I have a stump.

Cham. Sir Thomas,

Whither were you a going?

Lor. To the cardinal's,

Your lordship is a guest too.

Cham. O, 'tis true:

This night he makes a supper, and a great one,

To many lords and ladies; there will be

The beauty of this kingdom. I'll assure you.

Lor. That gentleman bears a bounteous mind indeed,

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;

His dow's fall everywhere.

No doubt, he's noble;

He had a black mouth, that said other of him.

Sands. He may, my lord, he has wherewithal;

in him.

Sparing worse shall show a worse sin than ill doctrine;

Men of his way should be most liberal,

They are set here for examples.

Cham. True, they are so;

But few now give so great ones. My large stays:

Your lordship shall along.—Come, good sir Thomas

We shall be late else: which I would not be,

For I was spoke to, with sir Henry Guildford,

This night to be comptrollers.

Sands. I am your lordship's.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Presence-Chamber in York-Place.

Hautboys. A small Table under a Slate for the Cardinal, a longer Table for the Guests. Enter at one door Anne BULLEN, and divers Ladies. Lords.

Sands. Let me see Anna, or Guisets; at another door, enter Sir Henry GUILDORD.

Guild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace

Salutes ye all: This night he dedicated

To fair content, and you: none here, he hopes,

In all this noble being has brought with her

One care abroad; he would have all as merry

As first-good company, good wine, good welcome,

Can make good people—O, my lord, you are Ltardy!

Enter Lord Chamberlain, Lord SANDS, and Sir Thomas LOVELL.

The very thought of this fair company

Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, sir Harry Guildford.

Sands. Sir, Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal

But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these

Should find a running banquet ere they rested,

I think, would better please them: By my life,

They are a sweet society of fair ones.

Lor. O, that your lordship were but now confessor

To one or two of these!

Sands. I would I were;

They should find easy penance.

Lor. 'Faith, how easy!

Sands. As easy as a down-bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit! Sir

Harry.

Place you that side, I'll take the charge of this:

His grace is ent'ring.—Nay, you must not freeze;

Two women placed together makes cold weather:—

My lord Sands, you are one will keep them wakings;

Pray, sit between these ladies.

Cham. By my faith,

And thank your lordship.—By your leave, sweet

ladies.

[Seizes himself between Anne BULLEN and another Lady.

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;

I had it from my father.

Anne.

Was he mad, sir?

* Company.
SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. Whither away so fast?

2 Gent. O, God save you! Even to the ball, to hear what shall become Of the great duke of Buckingham.

1 Gent. I'll save you That labor, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony Of bringing back the prisoner. Were you there?

2 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.

1 Gent. Pray speak, what has happened?

2 Gent. Choose my game.

KING.

Act II.

Scene I.—A Street. Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You may guess quickly what.

2 Gent. Is he found guilty?

1 Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemned upon it.

2 Gent. I am sorry for't.

1 Gent. So are a number more.

2 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?

1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke came to the bar; where, to his accusations, he pleaded still not guilty, and alleged many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney, on the contrary, urged on the examinations, proofs, confessions, of divers witnesses; which the duke desired.

1 Gent. For my little cure, let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter Cardinal, Wolsey, attended; and takes his state.

Wol. You are welcome, my fair guests; that noble lady, or gentleman, that is not freely merry, is not my friend: Thus, to confirm my welcome: And to you all good health.

1 Gent. What's that?—Enter a Servant.

Wol. What! What like voice!

Cham. Look out there, some of you.

[Exeunt Servants.]

Cham. How now! What isn't serv.

Wol. A table troop of strangers; for so they seem: they have left their lute, and landed;

And call me, as great ambassadors From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain.

Go, give them welcome, you can speak the French tongue;

And, pray, receive them nobly, and conduct them into our presence, where this heaven of beauty Shall shine at full upon them.—See me attend.—[Exit Chamberlain, attendant. All arise, and tables remove.]

You have now a broken banquet: but we'll mend it.

A good digestion to you all: and, once more, I shower a welcome on you:—Welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the King, and twelve others, as Maskers, habited like Shepherds, with sixteen Torch-bearers; ushered by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the Cardinal, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures?

Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they pray'd.

To tell your grace:—That, having heard by fame Of this so noble and so fair assembly

This night to meet here, they could do no less,

Out of the great respect they bear to beauty,

But leave their locks; and, under your fair conduct,

Crown leave to view these ladies, and entertain

An hour of revels with them.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain.

They have done their poor house grace; for which I pass them A thousand thanks, and pray them take their pleasures.

[Ladies chosen for the Dance. The King enters; and BULKE.

K. Hen. The fairest hand I ever touched! O beauty,

Till now I never knew thee. [Music. Dance. Wol. My lord,

Cham.—Your grace!

Wol. Pray tell them thus much from me:

There should be one amongst them, by his person, More worthy this place than myself: to whom, If I but knew him, with my love and duty I would surrender it.

Cham. I will, my lord.

[Cham. goes to the Company, and returns.

Wol. What say they?

Cham. 'Tis one, they all confess, There is indeed; which they shall have your grace Find out, and he will take it.

Wol. Let me see, then.—[Comes from his state.]

By all you good levees, gentlemen,—Here I'll make my royal choice.

K. Hen. You have found him, cardinal:

[Unmasking.

You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord:

You are a churchman, or, I'll tell you, cardinal,

I should judge now unhappily.

Wol. Am I glad Your grace is grown so pleasant.

K. Hen. My lord chamberlain, Pr'ythee, come hither: What fair lady's that?

Cham. Ain't please your grace, sir Thomas Bulken's daughter, The viscount Rochfort, one of her highness's women.

K. Hen. By heaven, she is a damsel one—Sweetheart, I were unmanfully to take you out,

And not to kiss you. A health, gentlemen, Let it go round.

Wol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready I the privy chamber?

Low. Yes, my lord.

Wol. Your grace, I bear with dancing is a little heated.

K. Hen. I fear too much.

Low. There's fresher air, my lord,

In the next chamber. K. Hen. Lead in your ladies, every one.—Sweet partner,

I must not yet forsake you: Let's be merry:—Good my lord cardinal, I have half a dozen healths To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure To lead them once again; and then let's dream Who's best in favor.—Let the music knock it.

[Exeunt, with Trumpets.

1 Gent. You may guess quickly what.

2 Gent. Is he found guilty?

1 Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemned upon it.

2 Gent. I am sorry for't.

1 Gent. So are a number more.

2 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?

1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke came to the bar; where, to his accusations, he pleaded still not guilty, and alleged many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney, on the contrary, urged on the examinations, proofs, confessions, of divers witnesses; which the duke desired.
Scene I.  King Henry VIII.

To him brought. bird rose, to his face:
All these accused him strongly; which he
Would not deny from him, but, indeed, he could not:
And so his peers, upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high treason. Much
Hate, and learnedly. For life: but all
Was either pitied in, or forgotten.

2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself?

1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar,—
To hear his knell rung out, his judgment,—he was starr'd
With such an agony, he sweated extremely,
And a muttering spoke in choler, ill and hasty:
Such as the axe falls, if be not further.
In all the rest show'd a most noble patience.

2 Gent. I do not think he fears death.

1 Gent. Sure, he does not;
He never was so womanish: the cause
He may a little grieve at.

2 Gent. Certainly,
That pensive is the end of this.

1 Gent. 'Tis likely,
By all conjectures: First, Kildare's attainer,
Then Deputy of Ireland; who remov'd,
Easenroy, which was sent thither, and in haste too,
Lost he should help his father.

2 Gent. That trick of state
Was a deep envious one.

1 Gent. At his return,
No doubt, he will require it. This is noted,
And generally; whoever the king favors,
The cardinal instantly will find employment,
And far enough from court too.

2 Gent. All the commons
Hate him perniciously, and 'o' my conscience,
Wish him ten fathom deep; this duke as much
They loath; had a note on; call him, bounteous Buckingham,
The mirror of all courtesy:—

4 Gent. I am so sorry. Stay there, sir,
And see the noble'ni'd man you speak of.

Enter Buckingham from his Arraignment; Tipl stances before him, the Axe with the Edge to wards him; Halberds on each side; with him
Sir Thomas Lovell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir
William Sandys, and Constable Banister.

2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.

Buck. All good people,
You that thine far have come to pity me,
Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me.
I here to-day receiv'd a trau'matic judgment.
And by that name must die; yet, heaven hear witness,
And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me.
Even to the axe which stands before me.
The law I hear no malice for my death,
It has done, upon the premises, but justice:
But those that sought it, I could wish more Christian.
Be what they will, I heartily forgive them:
Yet let them look they glory not in mischief.
Not hire their evils, nor the graves of great men;
For then my countless blood must rise against them.
For further he in this world I ne'er hope,
Nor will I sue, although the king have merities
More than I dare make faults. You know that love me
And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham,
His noble friends, and fellows, whom to leave
Is as my misery to him, my dying.
Go, with me, like good angels, to my end;
And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And his soul to heaven.—Lead on, o' God's name.

Lor. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.
Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven; I forgive all;
There cannot be those numberless offences
Gainst me, I can't take peace with: no black envy
Shall make a man's heart away from his grace.
And, if the speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him,
You met him half in heaven: my vows and prayers
Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake me,
Shall cry to heaven for blessings on him. May he live
Longer than I have time to tell his years!
Ever below'd, and loving, my rule be he!
And, when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness, and he fill the same moments
Lor. To the water side I must conduct your grace;
Then give my charge up to sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who undertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there,
The duke is coming: see, the barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture, as suits
The greatness of his person.

Buck. Nay, sir Nicholas,
Let it alone: my state now will but mock me.
When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now, poor Edward Bohun:
Yet I am richer than my base accusers,
That never knew what truth meant: I now seal it;
And with that blood will make them one day groan for.

My noble father, Henry of Buckingham,
Who first rais'd head against usurping Richard,
Flying his terror to his servant 1st Harry,
Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd,
And without trial fell; God's peace be with him.
Henry the seventh succeeding, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd me to my honors, and, out of ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Now his son,
Henry the Eighth, life, honor, name, and all
That make me happy, at some expense as certain:
First ever from the world. I had my trial,
And, must needs say, a noble one; which makes me
A little happier than my wretched father;
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes:—Both
Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most;
A most unnatural and faithless service!
Heaven has an end in all: yet, you that hear me,
This from me, how you perceive as certain:
Where you are liberal of your loves, and counsels,
Beware, you be not loose; for those you make friends,
And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again
But where they mean to sink ye. All good people,
Pray for my release, if that is the least forsake ye;
the last hour of my long weary life is come upon me.

Farewell:
And when you would say something that is sad,
Speak hast farewells I have done; I will forgive me:

[Exeunt Buckingham and Train.]

1 Gent. O, this is full of pity!—Sir, it calls,
I fear, too many curses on their heads,
That we have the author.

2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
'Tis full of wo: yet I can give you unking
Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.

1 Gent. Good angels keep it from us!
Where may it be? you do not doubt my faith, sir!

2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, will require
A strong faith to conceal it.

Lor. I make him safe;
I do not talk much.

2 Gent. I am confident
You shall sir; Did you not of late days hear
A buzzing, of a separation
Between the king and Katherine?

1 Gent. Yes, but it held not;
For when the king once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the lord mayor straight
To stop the rumor, and alay those tongues
That durst disperse it.

2 Gent. But that slander, sir,
Is found a truth now: for it grows again
Fresher than e'er it was; and held for certain,
The king will vent it straight. Either cardinal,
Or some about him near, have, out of malice
To the good queen, possess'd him with a scruple
That will undo her: To cophrin this too,
Cardinal Campeius is arrest'd, and lately:
As all think, for this business,

1 Gent. *'Tis the cardinal;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
The Three Physician of Toldeo, this is purposed.

2 Gent. I think, you have hit the mark: but it's not cruel,
That she should feel the smart of this? This Cardinal Will have his will, and she must fall.

1 Gent. We are too open here to argue this;
Let's think in private more.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a Letter.

Lord chamberlain. Cham. My lord,—The horses your lordship sent for, I have had care to have them furnished, rid-don, and furnished. They were young and handsome; and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission, and main poor, look'd 'em from me; with this reason,—His master would be served before, if not before the king: which stop'd our mouths, not, I fear, to no avail: Indeed; well, let him have them:
He will have all, I think.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk and Suffolk.

Nor. Well met, my good Lord chamberlain.

Cham. Cham. Good day to both your graces.

Nor. Sup. How is the king employ'd?

Cham. Cham. I left him private,

Nor. Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. Cham. What's the cause?

Cham. Cham. It seems, the marriage with his brother's wife has crept too near his conscience.

Nor. Sup. No, his conscience has crept too near another lady.

Nor. Cham. This is the cardinal's doing, the cardinal!
That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune,
Turns what he lists. The king will know him one day.

Nor. Sup. Pray God, he do! he'll never know himself.

Nor. How holily he works in all his business!
And with what zeal! For, now he has crack'd the league
Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew,
He dives into the king's soul; and there scatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience.
Fears, and despairs, and all these for his marriage:
And, out of all these to restore the king,
He counsels a divorce. a loss of her,
That, like a jewel, has hung so near
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre:
Of her, that loves him with that excellence
That, the noblest men with seven of her
That, when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
Will bless the king: And is not this course pious?

Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel! 'Tis most mad.

These news are everywhere; every tongue speaks
them,
And every true heart weeps for 't. All, that dare
Look into these affairs, see this main end—
The French king's sister. Heaven will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
This bold bad man

Nor. Sup. And free us from his slavery.
Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance;
Or this impious man will work us all
From princes into pages; all men's honors
Lie in one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what path he please.

Nor. For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed:
As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
If the king please: his curses and his blessings
Fare to his breath, they are alike,
I know him, and I know him; so I leave him
To him, that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in;
And, with some other business, put the king
From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon him—

Cham. My lord, you'll bear us company?

Nor. Excuse me;
The king hath sent me other-where: besides,
You'll find a most unit time to disturb him:

Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.

[Exit Lord Chamberlain.

NORFOLK TURNS a Folding-door. The king is discovered sitting and reading pensively.

Suf. How sad he looks! sure, he is much afflicted.
K. Hen. Who is there? ha!

Nor. Pray God, he be not angry.
K. Hen. Who's there, I say? How dare you

Nor. I would you knew the time of business:
Is this an hour for temporal affairs? ha—

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Wol. The quest of my wounded conscience,
Thou art a cure fit for a king!—You're welcome,

Cam. To Campeius.

Most learned reverend sir, into our kingdom;
Use us, and it—My good lord, have great care
I be not found a talker

Wol. Sir, you can and may well. I would your grace would give us but an hour
Of private conference.

K. Hen. We are busy; go.

[To NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.

Cam. Nor. This priest has no pride in him?

Wol. Not to speak of;

Nor. But this cannot continue.

Wol. If it do,
I will once more be at him.

Cam. Another.

[Exeunt NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.

Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wis-

K. Hen. Above all princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voice of Christiani;
Who can be angry now? what envy reach you!
The Spaniard, tied by blood and favor to her,
Must now confess, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble. All the clergies,
I mean, the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms,
Have their free voices; Rome, the nurse of judgment,
Invited by your noble self, hath sent
One cardinal alone gone up with us, this good man
This just and learned priest, cardinal Campeius,
Whom, once more, I present unto your highness,
Your grace:—

you come,
And thank the holy conclude for their loves;
They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd for.

Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers' loves,
You are so noble: To your highness' hand
I tender my commission; by whose virtue,
This court of learning, commanding in my lord
Cardinal of York, are join'd with me their servant,
In the impartial judging of this business.

K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted
With what you come:—Where's Gardner?
Wol. I know your majesty has always lov'd her
So dear in heart not to deny her that.
A woman of less place might ask by law,
Scholars, allow'd freely to argue for her.
K. Hen. Ay, and the best she shall have: and my
To him that does best; God forbid else. Cardinal,
Pr'ythee, call Gardner to me, my new secretary;
I find him a fit fellow.

[Exit WOLSEY.

Re-enter WOLSEY, with GARDNER.

Wol. Give me your hand: much joy and favor
You are the king's now:

Cam. As sick as he is proud.
KING HENRY VIII.

Scene III.

Gard. But to be commanded For ever by your grace, whose hand has rais'd me. [Aside.]

K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner. [They converse apart.

Cam. My lord of York, was not one doctor face In this man's place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

K. Hen. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes, How, surely.

Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread Ev'n of yourself, lord cardinal.

Wol. How! of me! Cam. They will not stick to say you envied him; And, fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous, Kept him a foreign man-still; which so grieved him, That he ran mad, and died.

Wol. Heaven's peace be with him! That's christian care enough; for living murmurers, There's places of reproof. Verily a fool; For he would needs be virtuous: That good fellow, If I command him, follows my appointment; I will have none so near clos. Learn this, brother, We live not to be grasped by meaner persons.

K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen.

[Exit Gardiner.

The most convenient place that I can think of, For such receipt of letters, is Black-Friars: There ye shall meet about this weighty business— My Wolsey, see it furnish'd.—Oh my lord, Would it not grieve an able man, to leave So sweet a soul is: but, conscience, conscience— O, 'tis a tender place, and I must leave her. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—An Ante-chamber in the Queen's Apartments.

Enter ANNE BULLENS, and an old Lady.

Anne. Not for that nother;—Here's the pang that pinches;
His highness having liv'd so long with her: and she So much, that her tongue could ever Pronounce dishonor of her.—by my life, She never knew harm doing;—Oh now, after So many courses of the sun entruth'd; Still growing in a majesty and power,—the which To leave is a thousand-fold more bitter, than 'Ts sweet at first to acquire,—after this process, To give her the avowal! it is a pity Would move a monster.

Old L. Hearts of most hard temper Melt and lament for her.

Anne. O, God's will! much better; She never had known poor; though it be temporal, Yet, if that quarrel fortune, divorce do come It from the bearer, 'tis a suffrance, panging As soul and body seveng;

Old L. Alas, poor lady! She's a stranger now again.

Anne. So much the more Mercy drop upon her. She swear, 'tis better to be lovely born, And range with humble lives in content, Than to be perky'd up in a glistening grief, And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content Is our best having.

Anne. By my troth, and maidenhead, I would not be a queen.

Old L. Beshrew me, I would, And venture maidenhead for 't, and so would you, For all this space of your by-poesie: You, that have so fair parts of woman on you, Have too a woman's heart; which ever yet Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty; Which, to say sooth, are blessings; and which gift, (God be your portion,) the capacity Of your soft cheverel: conscience would receive, If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth,— Old L. Yes, troth, and troth,—You would not be a queen?

Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.

Old L. The strange, a three-pence bow'd would hire me.

Old as I am, to queea it: But, I pray you,

[Out of the king's presence.

What think you of a doress? have you limbs To that bear that title of.

Anne. No, in truth.

Old L. Then you are weakly made: Pluck off a little.

I would not be a young count in your way, For more than blushing comes to: if your buck Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak Ever to get a boy.

Anne. If you how do talk! I swear again, I would not be a queen For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England You'd venture an emulating: I myself Would for Carnarvonshire, although there 'long'd No more to the crown but that. Lo, who comes here!

[Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were't worth The secret of your confidence?—

Anne. My good lord, Not your demand; it values not your asking: Our mistress' sorrows we were pitting.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming The action of good women: there is hope, All will be well.

Anne. No. Now, I pray God, amen! Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings Follow each creature. That you may, fair lady, Perceive, speak sincerely, and hath note's Ta'en of your many virtues, the king's majesty Commends his good opinion to you, and Doth promise honor to you so less flowing Than marchioness of Pembroke; to which title A thousand pound a year, annual support, Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know. What kind of my obedience I should render: More than my all is nothing: nor my prayers Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes More work'd in empty vanities; yet prayers, and wishes, Are all I can return. Beseech your lordship, Vouchsafe to speak my thanks, and my obedience, As from a blemishing handker, to his liegesness; Whose health, and royalty, I pray for. Cham. Lady, I shall not fail to approve the fair concept The king hath of you,—I have perus'd her well; [Aside. Beauty and honor in her are so mingled, That they have caught the king: and who knows yet, But from this lady may proceed a gern. To lighten all this exile!—I'll to the king, And say, I spoke with you.

Anne. My honor'd lord. [Exit Lord Chamberlain.

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see! I have been begging sixteen years in court, (And yet a courtier beggarly,) nor could Come put betwixt the early and too late, For any suit of pounds: and you, (O fate!) A very freshish here, (By eye, by eye) This convent'd fortune! have your mouth fill'd up, Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me.

Old L. How tastes it! is it bitter! forty pence, no. There will be no lady once, 'tis an old story, That would not be a queen, that would she not, For all the mud in Egypt.—Have you heard it! Anne. Come, you are pleasant.

Old L. With your theme, I could O'er-mount the lark. The marchioness of Pembroke! A thousand pounds a year! for pure respect; No other location; By my life, That promises more thousands: Ifonore's train Is longer than his feriskirt. By this time, I know, your back will bear a doress;—Say, Are you not stronger than you were.

Anne. Good lady, Make yourself mirth with your particular fanny, And learn't are nothing? Would I had no being, If this salute my blood a jot; it faints me, To think what follows.

The queen is comeluckt, and we forgetful

[Opinion.
In our long Absence: Fray, do not deliver
What here you have heard, to her.

SCENE IV.—A Hall in Black-Friars.
Trumpets, Serenades, & Cornets. Enter two Gentlemen, with short silver Tabs; next them,
Two Seraphs, in the habit of Doctors; after them
The Archbishop of Canterbury, alone; after him,
The Bishop of Lincoln, Ely, and Herefort, and Saint Asaph; next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman, bearing the Purse, with the great Seal, and a Cardinal's Hat; then
Two Priests, bearing each a silver Cross: then a Gentleman-Usher bare-headed, accompanied with a Sergeant-at-Arms bearing a silver Mace;
then two Gentlemen, bearing two great Pillars;
after them, side by side, the two Cardinals, Wolsey, and Campester; two Noblemen with the Sword and Mace. Then enter the King and Queen, and their Train. The King takes place under the Cloth of Estate; the two Cardinals sit under him as Judges. The Queen takes place at some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on one side, two of a Constable; between them, the Seraphs. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The Crier and the rest of the attendants stand in convenient order about the stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read,
Let silence be commanded.

k. Hen. What's the need? It has already publicly been published;
And on all sides the authority allow'd;
You may then spare that time.

Wol. Be'to.—Proceed.

Ser. Say, Henry king of England, come into the court.

k. Hen. Here.

Ser. Say, Katharine queen of England, come into court.

(The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the court, comes to the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.)

Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you do me right and justice;
And to bestow your pity on me; for
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominion, the villains to
No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas, sir,
In what have I offended you? what cause
Hath my behavior given you to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceed to put me off,
And take your good grace from me! Heaven witness,
I would have been to you a true and humble wife,
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike.
Yea, subject to your countenance; glad, or sorry,
As I was inclin'd. When was the hour,
I ever contradicted your desire,
Or made it not mine too? Or which of your friends
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine enemy: what friend of mine
That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I
Continue in my hating? nay, gave notice
He was from thence discharg'd! Sir, call to mind
That I was ever by your wife, in the obedience,
Upward of twenty years, and have been let
With many children by you: If, in the course
And process of this time, you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honor ought,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty
Against your sacred person, in God's name,
That you may know: and let the foulest contempt
Shut door upon me, and so give me
To the sharpest kind of justice. Please you, sir,
The king, your father, was reputed for
A prudence most prudent, of an exact
And unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand,
My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one
The wisest prince, that there had reign'd by many
And like me: it is not to my heart,
That they had gather'd a wise counsel to them
Of every realm, that did dispute this business,

Fleansh on records.

Ensigns of dignity carried before cardinals.

Who deem'd our marriage lawful: Wherefore I humbly
Beseach you, sir, to spare me, till I may be by my friends in Spain adviz'd; whose counsel
I will not more: If you know the name of God,
Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

Wol. You have here, lady, (And of your choice,) these reverend fathers; men
Of singular piety and learning.
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause: It shall be therefore best,
That longer you desire the court; as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king.

Cam. His grace

Hath spoken well and justly: Therefore, madam,
It's fit this royal session do proceed;
And that, without delay, their arguments
Be now produced and heard.

Lord cardinal,—
To you I speak.

Wol. Your pleasure, madam?

Q. Kath. Sir,
I am about to weep; but, thinking that
We are a queen, (or long have dream'd so,) certain
The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
I'll turn to sparks of fire.

Wol. Be patience yet.

Q. Kath. I will, when you are humble; nay, before,
Or God will punish me. I do believe,
Induced by potent circumstances, that
You are an enemy, and make me the challenge,
You shall not be my judge: for it is you
Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me,—
Which is my chief concern.—Therefore, I say again,
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul,
Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once more,
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.

Wol. I do profess

You speak not like yourself; who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects
Of divine goodness; and of wisdom,
O'er-topping woman's power. Madam, do you me
wrong:
I have no speech against you; nor injustice
For you or any: how far I have proceeded,
Or how far further shall, is warranted
By a commission from the consistory,
Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge me,
That I have blown this coal: I do deny it:
The king is present: if it be known to him,
That I cannot say my deed, how may he wound,
And, without my full extenuation of such a
Wrong, as you have done my truth. But if he know,
That I am free of your report, he knows,
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
I lie before me; and the cure is in him
Remove those thoughts from you: The which Before
His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to withhold your speaking,
And to say so no more.

K. Kath. My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. You are meek, and Blemish-mouth'd;
You sign your place and calling, in full seeming,
With meekness and humbleness; but your heart
Is crook'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride.
You have by fortune, and his mightiness' favors,
Gone slightly o'er low steps; and now are mounted
Where others are your retainers: and your words,
Domestics to you, serve your will, as't please
Yourself pronounce their office. I must tell you,
You deface your person's honor, than your High profession spiritual: That again
I do refuse you for my judge; and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope,
To bring my whole cause face to his holiness,
And to be judged by him.

[She Excuses to the King, and offers to Depart]

Cam. The queen is obstinate, Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse
And Displeasant to be try'd by it; its not well.
She's going away.

K. Hen. Call her again.
Crier. Katherine, queen of England, come into the court!
Griz. Madam, you are call'd back.
Q. Kath. What need you note it! pray you, keep your way;
When you are call'd! 'tis turn.—Now the Lord help,
They vex me past my patience!—Pray you, pass on;
I will not tarry: no, nor ever more,
Upon this business, my appearance make
In any other courts.

[Exeunt Queen, Griffith, and her other Attendants.]

K. Hen. Go thy ways, Kate: That is the world which shall receive him;
A better wife, let him in now hunte'd be trusted,
For speaking false in that: Thou art, alone,
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
That excellence saint-like, wise-like government,—
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out.)
The queen of earthly queens—She is noble born;
And like her true nobility, she hath
Carried herself towards me.

Vol. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare in hearing
Of all these ears, (for where I'm robb'd and bound,
There must I be unlock'd; although not there
At once and fully satisfied,) whether ever I
Did broach this business to your highness; or Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on it! or ever
Have you, but—'tis the danger which my soul
For such a royal lady,—make one the least word, might
Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person!

K. Hen. My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you, yea, upon mine honor,
I free you from. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village eurs,
Bark when their fellows do: by some of these
The queen is put in anger. You are exceed'd:
But you can do more justly! you ever
Have well, the speech is end'd, if you never Deard't it to be still'd; but oft have hinder'd or
The passages made towards it:—on my honor, I
Speak'd, my good lord cardinal, to this point,
And thus far clear me. Now, what mov'd me to 't,
I will be bold with time and your attention:—
Then mark the inducement. Thus it came;—give heed to't.
My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness,
Scrople, and prack, on certain speeches uttered
By the Bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador,
What had been hither sent on the report of
A marriage, 'twixt the duke of Orleans and
Our daughter Mary; I the progress of this business,
Ere a determinate resolution, he
I mean, the bishop did require a respite:—
Wherein he might the king his lord advise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our marriage with the dowager,
Sometime our brother's wife; their children
The bosom of my conscience, enter'd me,
Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast; which forced such way,
That many mad, considerations did throng,
And press'd in with this caution. First, methought,
I stood not in the smile of heaven; who had
Commanded nature, that my lady's womb,
If it conceiv'd a male child by me, should
Do no more offices of life: I felt
The grave does to the dead; for her male issue
Or died where they were made, or shortly after
This world, as I understand: but I heeke,
I took a thought that was a judgment on me;—that my kingdom,
Well worthy the best heir o' the world, should not
Be blasted in it by me: Then follows, that
I weigh'd the danger which my soul stood in,
By this my issue fail'd; and that gave to me
Many a groaning thought. Thus hailing
In the wild sea of my conscience, I did steer
Toward this remedy, whereby upon we are
Now present here together: that's to say,
I meant to rectify my conscience,—which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,—
By all the reverend fathers of the land,
And doctors learn'd:—First, I began in private
With you, my lord of Lincoln; you remember
How under my oppression I did reck,
When I first mov'd you. Very well, my liege.
K. Hen. I have spoke long; be pleas'd yourself to say
How far you satisfied me.
Lin. So please your highness,
The question did at first so stagger me,—
Hearing a state of mighty moment in t, and consequence of danger,—that I committed
The daring't counsel which I had, to doubt; and did entreat your highness to this course,
Which you are running here.
K. Hen. I then mov'd you,
My lord of Canterbury; and got your leave
To make this present summons:—Unsolicited
I leav'd no reverse person in this court;
But by particular consent proceeded,
Under your hands and seals. Therefore, go on:
For no dislike I the world against the person
Of the godly queen, and all the points of
My alleged reasons, drive this forward:
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life,
And kindly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come, with her
Katherine our queen, before the prouest creature
That's paragon'd o' the world.

Can. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, it a necessary business,
That we adjourn this court till further day:
Meanwhile must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen, to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness.

[They rise to depart.]
K. Hen. I may perceive, [Aside.
These cardinals trifle with me; I abhor
This disloyalty, and tricks of Rome.
My leard and well-beloved servant, Cranmer,
Pr'ythee return! with thy approach, I know,
My counsel comes along. Break up the court:
I say, set on.

[Exeunt, in manner as they entered.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Palace at Brindwell. A Room in the Queen's Apartment.

The Queen, and some of her Women at Work.
Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles;
Sing, and dispense them, if thou canst: leave working.

* SONG.
Orpheus with his lute made breez,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze.
Blew themselves, when he did sing:
To his music, plants, and flowers,
Ever sprang; so sun, and snows,
There had been a lasting spring.
* Closed, or fastened.

Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by,
In sweet music is such art:
Killing care, and grief of heart,
Full asleep, or, hearing, die.

Enter a Gentleman.
Q. Kath. How now! Gent. An't please your grace, the two great car dinals
Wait in the presence? Q. Kath. Would they speak with me? Gent. They will'd me say so, madam.
Q. Kath. Pray their graces
* Flowing without guidance. * Waste, or wear away.
* Without, or missing chamber.
To come near. [Exit Gent.] What can be their business
With me, a poor weak woman, fall’n from favor? I
But they may know their cunning, mercy think on’t.
They should be good men; their affronts are righteous;
But all hoods make not monks.

Enter Wolsey and Campeius.

Wol. Peace to your highness! Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of an hour ago; I would be all, against the worst may happen.
What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords? Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw into your private chamber, we shall give you The full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here; there’s nothing I have done yet, but conscience, Deserves a corner: ’ Would all other women Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!
My lords, I care not (so much I am happy Above a number) if any actions Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw them, Envy and base opinion set against them, I know my life so even: If your business Shall turn out, and there I come, out with it boldly; Truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est ergo te menda integritas, rege sincerissimi. Q. Kath. (O, good my lord, no Latin! I am not such a truant since my coming, As not to know the language I have liv’d in: A strange tongue makes my cause more strange, suspicious:
Pray, speak in English: here are some will thank you, If you speak truth, for their poor mistresses’ sake; Believe me, she has had much wrong: Lord cardinal, The willing’st sin I ever yet committed, May be absolv’d in English.

Wol. Noble lady, I am sorry, my integrity should breed (And service to his majesty and you) So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant. We have got not by the way of accusation To tant that honor every good tongue blesses: Nor to betray you any way to sorrow; You have too much, good lady: but to know How you stand minded in the weighty difference Between the king and you; and to deliver, Like free and honest men, our just opinions, And comforts to your cause.

Cun. Most honor’d madam, My lord of York,—out of his noble nature, Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace; And was like a good man, you may be sure; Both of his truth and him, (which was too far,)— Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace, His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. To betray me. [Aside.]
My lords, I thank you both for your good wills, Ye speak like honest men, (pray God ye prove so!) But how make you suddenly an answer, In such a point of weight, so near mine honor, (More near my life, I fear,) with my weak wit, And to such men of gravity and learning, In truth, I know not, I was set at work
And by my hand, the little woman, God knows, looking Either for such men, or such business. For her sake that I have been, (for I feel The last act of my greatness,) good your graces, Let me have time, and counsel for my cause; Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless. Wol. Madam, you wrong the king’s love with these fears;
Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Q. Kath. In England, But little for my profit: Can you think, lords, That this madman dare give you counsel? Or else known friend, ’gainst his highness’ pleasure (Though he be grown so desperate to be honest), And live a subject! Nay, forsooth, my friends, They may but sell my confusions, They that my trust must grow to, live not here; They are, as all my other comforts, far hence, In mine own country, lords.

Wol. I would, your grace Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir? Cam. Put your main cause into the king’s protection; He’s loving, and most gracious; ’twill be much Both for your honor better, and your cause; For, if the trial of the law o’ertake you, You’ll part away disgraced.

If. He tells you rightly.

Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my ruin: Is this your christian counsel? out upon ye! Heaven is above all ye; there sits a Judge, That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us.

Q. Kath. The more shame for ye; holy men I think ye.

Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues; But cardinal sins, and hollow hearts, I fear ye: Mend them for shame, my lords. Is this your coming?
The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady! A woman lost among ye, laugh’d at, scorn’d! I will not wish ye half my miseries, I have more charity: But say, I wrougt ye;
Take heed, for heaven’s sake, take heed, lest at once The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, there is a mere help between you, You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing! Woe upon ye, And all such false professors? Would ye have me (If ye can, let this party give it me, I do) If ye be any thing but churchmen’s habits) Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me? Alas! he has banish’d me his bed already; His love’s too long ago: I am old, my lords, And all the fellowship I hold now with him Is only my obedience. What can happen To me, above this wretchedness? all your studies Make me a curse like this.

Cam. Your fears are worse.

Q. Kath. Have I liv’d thus long,—let me speak myself.
Since virtue finds no friends—a wife, a true one! A woman (I dare say, without vain-glory) Never yet branded with suspicion Have you with all my fault all-earthened me? Still met the king? lov’d him next heaven? obey’d him? Been, out of fondness, superstitious to him? Always forgot my prayers to content him! And am I thus rewarded? ’tis not well, lords, Bring me a constant woman to her husband, One that ne’er dream’d a joy beyond his pleasure; And to that woman, when she hath brought forth, Yet will I add an honor,—a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the goodusat. Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty.
To give up willingly that noble title Your master wed me to; nothing but death Shall never divorce my dignities.

Wol. Pray, hear me.

Q. Kath. Would I had never trod this English earth, Or felt the flatteries that grew upon it! Ye have angels’ faces, but heaven knows your hearts.

What will become of me now, wretched lady! I am a madman, that unhappy woman living! Alas! poor wenches, where are now your fortunes! [To Her Woman.

Shipwright, upon a kingdom, where no pity, No friend, no hope; no kindred weep for me, Almost no grace allow’d me,—like the lady, That once was mistress of the field, and flourish’d, I’ll hang my head and perish.

Wol. If your grace Could but be brought to know, our ends are honest, You’d feel more comfort: why should we, good lady, Groan in the dust, where all our children are, Grow from the king’s acquaintance, by this carriage, The hearts of princes kiss obedience, So much they love it; but, to stubborn spirits, They swell, and grow as terrible as storms. I know, you have a gentle, noble temper, A soul as even as a calm: Pray, think us
SCENE II.—Ante-chamber to the King's Apartment.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints, and to[22] them with a constancy, the cardinal cannot stand under them: if you omit the order of the time, I cannot pretend, but that you shall sustain more new disgraces, with these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful To meet the least occasion, that may give me Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke, To be revenged on him.

Sur. Which of the peers Have uncontem'd gone by him, or at least Strangely neglected? when did he regard The stamp of nobleness in any person, Out of himself?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures: What he deserves of you and me, I know; What we can do to him, (though now the time Of his absence is past,) I match fear; If you not Bar his access to the king, never attempt Any thing on him; for he hath a witchcraft Over the king in his tongue.

Nor. Fear not him; His spell in that is out: the king hath found Matter against him, that for ever mars The bourn of his language. No, he's settled, Not to come off, in his displeasure. Sir, I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true. In the divorce, his contrary proceedings Are all unfolded; wherein he appears, As I could wish mine enemy. How came His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Suf. O, how, how?

Suf. The cardinal's letter to the pope miscarried, And came to the eye of the king; wherein was read, How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness To take his judgment of the divorce: For if It did take place. I do, quoth he, perceive My king is tangle'd in affection to A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bulen. Suf. Has he the king this?

Suf. Believe it.

Suf. Will this work?

Cham. The king in this perceives him how he coasts, And hedges, his own way. But in this point All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic After his patient's death: the king already Hath married his fair lady. "Would he had!"

Sur.

Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord!

Suf. For procures, you have it. Now all my joy

Trace the conjunction!

Suf. My amen to't!

Nor.

Suf. There's order given for her coronation: Marry, the toy is yet young, and may be left To some ears unaccounted.—But, my lords, She is a gallant creature, and complete In mind and feature: I persuade me, from her Will fall all the piety to this land, which shall In it be memor'd?

Suf. But, will the king Digest this letter of the cardinal's!

The Lord forbid!

Suf. No, nor; There be more wasps that buzz about his nose, Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius Is stolen away to Rome; hath ta'en no leave; Has left the cause of the king unhanded; and Will stand for his own cause, as the post, as the agent of our cardinal, To second all his plot. I do assure you, The king cry'd, ha! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him, And let him cry, ha, louder!

Nor. But, my lord, When returns Cranmer!

Suf. He is return'd, in his opinions; Which have satisfied the king for his divorce, Together with all famous colleges Almost in Christendom: shortly, I believe, His second marriage shall be publish'd, and His coronation. A cardinal's!

Nor. Shall be null'd queen; but princess-dowager, And widow to prince Arthur.

Suf. This same Cranmer's A worthy fellow, and hath taken much pain In the king's business.

Suf. Has; and we shall see him For it, an archbishop.

Suf. So I hear.

Nor. The cardinal—

Enter Wolsey and Cromwell.

Wer. Observe, observe, he's moody.

Wol. The packet, Cromwell, gave it you the king?

Crom. To his own hand, and in his bed-chamber.

Wol. Look'd he o'er the inside of the paper!

Crom. Presently He did unfold them; and the first he view'd, He did it with a serious mind; a deed Was in his countenance: You lie bade Attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready To come abroad?

Crom. I think, by this he is.

Wol. Leave me a while.—[Exit Cromwell. It shall be to the duchess of Alenon, The French king's sister: he shall marry her—

Anne Bulen! No! I'll no Anne Bulens for him: There is more in it than fair visage.—Bullen! No, we'll no Bulens.—Speedily I wish To hear from Rome.—The machiavel of Pembroke!

Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. May be, he hears the king Does what his anger to him. Sharp enough, Lord, for thy justice!

Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman; a knight's daughter. To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's queen!— This candle burns not clear: 'tis must snuff it; Then, out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous, And well-deserving? yet I know her For a spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to Our cause, that she should be the bosom of Our hard-cul'd king.—Again, there is sprung up A heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one Hath crawled'd into the favor of the king, And is his oracle. He is vex'd at something.

Suf. I would, 'twere something that would fret the string, The master of our heart's heart!

Enter the King, reading a Schedule; and Lovel.

Sur. The king, the king.

K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumu-

Suf. To his own portion! and what expense by the hour

* Made memorable.
Seems to flow from him! Now, 'tis the name of Christ, Does he rake this together!—Now, my lords; Say you the cardinal! Nor, or no. My lord, we have Stood here observing him: Some strange commotion Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts; Stoops, as a sudden rock upon his mind. Then, lays, his finger on his temple; straight, Springs out into fast gait; then, stops again, Strains his breast hard; and anon, he casts His eye against the moon: in most strange postures We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen. It may well be;
There is a mutiny in his mind. This morning Papers of state, set in his hand to peruse; As I required; and wot you, what I found; There; on my conscience, put unwittingly! Forget, the heavens, thus importuning.—
The several parcels of his state, his treasure, Rich stuffs and ornaments of household; which I find at such proud rate, that it outspeaks Possession of a subject.

Nor. It's heaven's will; Some spirit put this paper in the packet, To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen. If we did think His contemplation were above the earth, And 'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings: but, I am afraid, His thoughts are below the moon, not worth His serious considering.

[He takes his seal, and whiskers Lovell, who goes to Wooton.]

Wal. Ever God bless your highness! K. Hen. Good, my lord, You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inventory Of your best graces in your mind; the which You are now running over; you have scarce time To keep from spiritual leisure and desert To keep your earthly audit: Sure, in that I deem you an ill husband; and am glad To have you therein my companion.

Wal. Sir, For holy offices I have a time; a time To think upon the part of business, which I bear't the state; and nature does require Her times of preservation, which, perforce, I, her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal Must give my tendance to.

K. Hen. You have said well. Wal. And ever may your highness yoke together As I will lead you cause, my dong well With my well sayings! K. Hen. 'Tis well said again: And 's a kind of good deed, to say well: And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd you: He said, he did; and with his deed did crown Himself upon you. Since I find my office, I have kept you next my heart, have not alone Employ'd you where high profits might come home, But paid my present having, to bestow My honours upon you. What should this mean? Wal. Stirs. The Lord increase this business! [Aside. K. Hen. I have not made you The prime man of the state! I pray you, tell me, If what I now pronounce, you have found true: And, if you may conke's it, say whith, If you be bound to us, or no. What say you? Wal. My sovereign, I confess, your royal graces, Shouter'd on me daily, have been more than could My studied purposes require; which went Beyond all that ye have bound me by my endeavors Have ever come too short of my desires, Yet, fill'd with my abilities: Mine own ends Have been mine so, that even this more they pointed to the foot of your majesty, and And the profit of the state. For your great graces Heap'd upon me, poor undeserter. I cannot boast render but alienant thanks; My prayers to heaven for you; so rivalry, Which ever has, and ever shall be growing, Till death, that winter, kill it.

K. Hen. Fairly answer'd; A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated: The honor of it

Wal. Does pay the act of it; as, 't is the contrary, The foulness is the punishment. I presume, That, as my hand has open'd bounty to you, My heart dropp'd love, my power radi'd honor, More on you, than any; so your hand, and heart, Your brain, and every function of your power, Should makes him manifest that your bond of duty, As 'twere in love's particular, be more To me, your friend, than any.

Wal. Do profess, That your highness good I ever labor More than mine own; that am, have, and will be, Though all the world should crack their duty to you And throw it from their soul: though perils did About my path, as thought could not suspect, and Appear in forms more horrid; yet my duty, As doth a rock against the chiding flood, Should the approach of this wild river break, And shall unshaken yours.

K. Hen. Tis nobly spoken: Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast, For you have seen him open.—Read o'er this; Giving him Papers And, after this: and then to breakfast, with What appetite you have.

K. Hen. Hearing upon CARDINAL WOLSEY: the nobles throng after him, smiling and whiskerizing.

Wal. What should this mean? What sudden anger is this? How do I reap it! He parted now-morning from me, as if ruin Leap'd from his eyes: So looks the chafed lion Upon the daring huntsman that has gait'd him: There is a thing not thinking. I must read this paper: I hear, the story of his anger.—'Tis so; This paper has undone me:—'Tis the account Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom, And tee my friends in Rome. O negligence, Fit for a fool to fall by! What cross devil Made this the main secret in the packet I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this? No new device to beat this from his brains! I know, 'twill stir him strongly; yet I know A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune Will bring me off again. What's this?—To the Pope? The letter, as I live, with all the business I writ to his holiness. Nay then, farewell! I have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness; And, from that full meridian of my glory, I haste now to my setting: I shall fall Like a night exhalation in the evening, And no man see me more.

Re-enter the DUDES of NORFOLK and SUFFOLK, the EARL of SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal; whocommand you To render up the great seal presently Into our hands; and to confine yourself To Asher-House, my lord of Winchester's, Till you hear further from his highness.

Wal. Where's your commission, lords? words cannot carry Authority so weighty.

Staf. Who dare cross them? Baring the king's will from his mouth expressly! Wal. Tell I find more than will, or words, to do, (In these my master's), I know, other lords, I dare, and must deny it. Now I feel Of what coarse metal ye are moulded—envy. How eagerly ye follow my disgraces, As if it did yet! and how sleek and content Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin. Follow your curious courses, men of malice: You have but warrant for them, and, no doubt, In time will find their fit rewards. That seal, You ask with such a violence, the king (Mine own your master) with his own hand gave me: Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honors, During my life; and, to confirm his goodness, Take my letters patent. Now, who'll take it! Nor. The king, that gave it. Wal. It must be himself then

1 Ether in Surrey
Suf. Thou art a proud priest, traitor.

Wol. Proud lord, thou hast:
Within these forty hours, Surrey and I meet better
In York a more than bright and morning.

Suf. Thy ambition, that's the wound thou hast.

Wol. Then, that's the wound thou hast.

Suf. Thy sin, rob'd this bewitching hand
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law:
The heads of all thy brother cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together,
Which not a hair of the realm's the more)
Of all the kingdom. Many more there are;
Which, since they are of you, and odious,
I will not touch my mouth with

Cham. O my lord,

Wol. Nor, by your power legimate within this kingdom,

Cham. To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways

Wol. You have for dignities; to the more undying

Cham. Of all the kingdom. Many more there are;

Wol. Which, since they are of you, and odious,

Cham. I will not touch my mouth with

Suf. That therefore such a writ be sued against you;
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Cham. And, whatsoever, and to be

Wol. Out of the king's protection. This is my charge

Cham. Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations

Wol. To live better. For your stubborn answer,

Cham. About the giving back the great seal to us.

Suf. The king shall know it, and no doubt, shall thank you.

Wol. So fare you well, my little lord cardinal.

Cham. Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness!

Wol. This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honors thick upon him:
The third day, comes a frost, a killing frost;
And—when he thinks, too good a sight—his greatness
Is a ripe apple; and then he falls, as I do.
I have ventured, like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory;
But far beyond our depth: my head a readiness
At length broke under me; and now has left me
Wearie, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me,
Vain pomp, and glory of this world, I hate ye;
I feel my heart new open'd: O, how wretched
Is that poor man, that hangs on princes' favors!
There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin.
More pangs and tears than wars or women have;
And when he falls, he falls like Lucius

Crom. Never to hope again.

Wol. Enter Cromwell, amaz'dly.

Crom. Why, how now, Cromwell? I have no power to speak, sir.

Wol. What, amaz'd

At my misfortunes! Can thy spirit wonder,
A great man should decline! Nay, an you weep,
I am fallen indeed.

Crom. How does your grace?

Wol. Why, well;

Crom. How never so truly happy, my good Cromwell,
I know myself now; and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A stillness and quiet conscience. The king has cured me
Of that humbleness, with which our shoulders
These proud pillars, out of pity, taken
A load would sink a navy, too much honor;
Of a burden, Cromwell, this is a burden,
Too heavy for a man that loves his heart.
Crom. I am glad your grace has made that right use of it.

Wol. I hope, I have: I am old now; methinks,
(Out of a fortune of my I feel)
To endure more miseries, and greater far,
Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.

Cham. What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him!

Crom. The next is, that sir Thomas More is chosen
Lord chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden:
But he's a learned man. May he continue

Absol. A writ incurring a penalty.
KING HENRY VIII.

Act IV.

SCENE I.—A street in Westminster.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You are well met once again.

2 Gent. And so are you.

1 Gent. You come to take your stand here, and to behold the lady Anne pass from her coronation?

2 Gent. 'Tis my business. At our last encounter, the duke of Buckingham came for his trial.

1 Gent. 'Tis as I was true; but that timecold composition.

Tis, general joy.

2 Gent. 'Tis well: the citizens, I am sure, have shown at full their royal minds: As let them use their right privileges, they are beyond all in their way in celebration of this day with shows, pageants, and sights of honor.

1 Gent. Never greater, Nor, I assure you, better taken, sir.

2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains, That paper in your hand?

1 Gent. Yes; 'tis the list Of those that claim their offices this day By custom of the coronation.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims To be high steward; and next, the earl of Norfolk, He to be cardinal; you, I read the rest, Have I thanked you, sir; had I not known those customs, I should have been beholden to your paper. But, I beseech you, what becomes of Katharine, The princess dowager? how goes her business?

1 Gent. That I can tell you too. The archbishop of Canterbury, accompanied with other learned and reverent fathers of his order, Held a late court at Bunsbake, six miles off From Ampthill, where the princess lay; to which She oft was cited by them, but appear'd not: And that is but short, for not appearance, and The great late scruple, by the main assault Of all these learned men she was divorced, And the late marriage made of none effect: Since which, she was removed to Kimbolton, Which is the name of some new place.

2 Gent. That Crommer returns with his welcome, Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury.

Wol. That's news indeed.

Crom. Last, the lady Anne, With whose the king's heart in secret long marr'd, This day was view'd in open, as his queen, Going to chapel; and the voice is now Only about her coronation.

Wol. There was the weight that pull'd me down.

Crom. The king has gone beyond me, all my glories
In that one man I have lost last ever,
No man shall ever stand forth as mine honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited
Upon my goings. Go, get thee from me, Cromwell, I am thy father, though unworthily now
To be thy lord and master: Seek the king;
That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told him What, and how true thou art: he will advance
Some little memory of me will stir him
(1 know his noble nature) not to let
Thy hopeful service perish too; Good Cromwell, And meet him not; take me now, and provide For thine own future safety.

Crom. O, my lord, Must I then leave you? Most I needst be gone So good, so noble, and so true a master.

Bear witness, all, that have not hearts of iron, With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord,— The king shall have my service; but my prayers For ever, and for ever, shall be yours.

ACT IV.

2 Gent. Alas, good lady,—[Trumpets.

The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming.

THE ORDER OF THE PROCESSION.

A lively flourish of Trumpets; then enter,

1. Two Judges.

2. Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before him.

3. Choristers singing.

[Music.]

1. Mayor of London, bearing the mace. Then Gentleman to his coat of arms, and, on his head, a gilt crown.

5. Marquis Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-crown of gold. With him, the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver, with the dove, crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.

6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high steward. With him the Duke of Norfolk, with the roset of marshals, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.

7. A cunning bearce by four of the Common-ports; under it, the Queen in her robe; in her hair, richly adorned with pearls, crowned. This bearce side of her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.

8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronet of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.

9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circles of gold without flowers.

2 Gent. A royal train, believe me,—These I

Who's that, that bears the sceptre?

1 Gent. Marquis Dorset:

And that the earl of Surrey, with the rod.

2 Gent. A bold brave gentleman: And that should be The duke of Suffolk.

1 Gent. Why, those are the same; high-steward.

2 Gent. And that, my lord of Norfolk?

1 Gent. Yes.

2 Gent. [Looking on the Queen.] Heaven bless thee!
THOU hast the sweetest face I ever looked on,—Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel; One angel has all the ladies in his arms, And more, and richer, when he strays that lady: I cannot blame his conscience.

1 Gent. They, that bear
The crown of honor over her, are four barons
Of the Cinque ports.

2 Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all, near her. I take it, she that carries up'the train.

1 Gent. She is; and all the rest are countesses.

2 Gent. Their coronets so say. These are stars indeed.

And, sometimes, falling ones.

1 Gent. No more of that.

Erif Precession, with a great flourish of Trumpets.

Enter a Third Gentleman.

God save you, sir! where have you been broiling?

3 Gent. Among the crowd o'the abbey; where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more; and I am staid
With the mere rankness of their joy.

You saw
The ceremony?

3 Gent. That I did.

1 Gent. How was it?

3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.

2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.

3 Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream
Of old and young ladies, having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her; while her grace sat down
To rest a while, some half an hour, or so,
In a rich chair of state, opposing, opposite,
The beauty of her person to the people.

Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman
That ever lay by many, which when the people
Had the full view of, such a show arose
As the shrubs make at sea in a still tempore.
As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks,
(Doubtless, I think she had on,) and their faces
Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy
I never saw before. Great-bellic'd women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams
In the old time of war, would shake the press,
And make them reel before them. No man living
Could say, This is my wife, there; all were woe
So strangely in one piece.

2 Gent. But, pray, what follow'd?

3 Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest pace
Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and, saintly
Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly.
Then rose again, and bow'd her to the people:
When by the archbishop of Canterbury
She gave the royal making of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Conyers's coron
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems
Laud nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir,
With all the chanced music of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,
And with the same full face paced back again
The same way, where the feast is held.

1 Gent. Sir, you
Must no more call it York-place, that is past:
For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost;
You call no more the king's, and call'd—Whitehall.

3 Gent. But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name
Is fresh about me.

2 Gent. What two reverend bishops
Were those that went on each side of the queen?

3 Gent. Stokesley and Gardiner; the one, of Wincheste,
( Newly promoted from the king's secretary,)
The other, London.

2 Gent. He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,
That famous Cranmer.

All the land knows that:
However, yet there's no great breach; when it comes,
Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink from him.

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?

3 Gent. Thomas Cromwell;
A man in much esteem with the king, and truly
A worthy friend.—The king
Has made him master of the jewel-house,
And one, already, of the privy-council.

2 Gent. He will deserve more.

3 Gent. Yes, without all doubt. Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way as I do.
Is to the count, and there ye shall be my guests.
Something I can command. As I walk thither,
I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Exeunt.}

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter Katherine, Dauenger, sick; led between Griffith and Patience.

Griff. How does your grace?

Kath. O, Griffith, sick to death!

Griff. My legs, like loaden branches, bow to the earth.

Kath. Willing to leave their burden: Reach a chair;—

Griff. So, now, modestly, as it is a little ease.

Kath. Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led'st me,
That the great child of honor, cardinal Wolsey,
Was dead?

Griff. Yes, madam; but I think, your grace,
Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to.'

Kath. Pr'ythee, good Griffith, tell me how he died.

If well, he step'd before me, happily,
For my example.

Griff. Well, the voice goes, madam:
For after the stout earl of Northumberland
 Arrested him at York, and brought him forward
(As a man sorely taint'd) to his answer,
He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill,
He could not sit his horse.

Kath. Alas! poor man!

Griff. Athist, with easy roads, he came to Leicester,
Lo'dg'd in the abbey; where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honorably receiv'd him.

To whom he gave these words,—O, father Robert,
An old man, broken with the storms of state,
Is come to try his weary bones among you;
Give him a little ease for chrissakes.

So went to bed: where eagerly his sickness
Pursu'd him still; and three nights after this,
About the hour of eight, (which he himself
Foretold should be his last,) full of repentance,
Contemplative, tears, and sorrows,
He gave his honors to the world again,
His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest; his faults he gently on him.
Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak him,
And yet with charity,—He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes; one that by suggestion
Ty'd all the kingdom: simony was fair play;
His own opinion was his law: I the presence!
He would say with a royal majesty of his own
In both his words and meaning: He was never,
But where he meant to run, pull'd in;
He promises were, as he was, false, mighty.
But his performance, as he is now, nothing.
Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example.

Griff. Noble madam,
Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues
We write in water. May it please your highness
To hear me speak his good now!

Kath. Yes, good Griffith;
I was malicious else.

Griff. The cardinal,
Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly
Was buss'd to much honor. From his cradle,
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one;
Exceeding wise, fair spoken, and persuading;
Lolly, and sour, to them that lov'd him not;
But those men that sought him, he did favor.
And though he were unsatisfied in getting,
(Which was a sin,) yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely: Ever witness for him
Those twain of learning, that he raised in you,
Ipswich, and Oxford! one of which fell with him
Unwilling to outlive the good that did it;
The other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous,
So excellent in art, and still so rising,
That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue.

*happy. Of the king.

2 Ipswich.
His overthrew heaped happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little:
And, to add greater honors to his age
There man could give him, he did honor God
Kath.

As the other death wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honor from corruption,
But all the rest that honest chronicles as truth.
Whom I most hated living, thou hast made me
With thy religious truth, and modesty,
Now in his ashes honor: Peace be with him!—
Patience, he bears me still; and set me lower;
I have not long to trouble thee.—Good Griffith,
Assuredly.

How his music, the musician play me that said note
I named my knoll, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to.

Sach and solemn Music.
Grif.
She is deep.
Good wench, let's sit down quiet.
For fear we wake her;—Softly, gentle Patience.

The Vision.
Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Persons, clad in white robes, Wearing on their heads gardians of boys and golden rizen's on their faces: branches of boys or palm in their hands.
They first conoe unto her, then dance: and, at certain changes, the first two Caress a garland that had ever her head; at which,
The other four make reverend courtly sites; then the
Two that held the garland, deliver the same to the other
Next two, who observe the same order in their changes,
And holding the gardian over her head; which done,
They deliver the same gardian to the last two, who likewise observe the same Order, at which, (as it were by inspiration,) she Makes in her sleep signs of reigning, and holds up
Her hands to heaven: and in their dancing
They vanish, carrying the gardian with them.
The music continues.
Kath.

Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?
And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye?
Grif.
Madeam, we are here.
Kath.

It is not you I call for:
Saw ye none enter, since I slept?
Grif.
None, madam.
Kath.

No! saw you not, even now, a blessed troop
Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun!
They promised me eternal happiness;
And brought me gardians, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall,
Assuredly.
Grif.
I am most joyful, madam, such good
Dreams possess your fancy.
Kath.

Bid the music leave,
They are harsh and heavy to me.
Music ceases.
Pat.
Do you note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?
How long her face is drawn? How pale she looks,
And of an earthy cold? Mark her eyes!
Grif.
She is going, wench; pray, pray.
Pat.
Heaven comfort her!

Enter a Messenger.
Mess.

Ain't like your grace,—
Kath.
You are a saucy fellow:
Deserve we no more reverence?
Grif.
You are to blame,
Knowing, she will not lose her wanted greatness,
To me no rude behaviour: go to, kneel.
Mess.

Humblly docent your highness' pardon;
My haste made me unmanfully: There is staying
A gentleman, none from the king to see you.
Kath.
Admit him entrance, Griffith: But this fellow
Let me ne'er see again.

Exeunt Griffith and Messenger.

Re-enter Griffith with Capucius.

If my sight fail not,
You should be lord ambassador for the emperor,
My royal nephew, and your name Capucius,
Cap.
Madeam, the same, your servant.
Kath.

O, my lord,
The titles, and titles, now are alter'd strangely
With me, since first you knew me. But, I pray you,
What is your pleasure with me?
Cap.

Noble lady,
First, mine own service to your grace: the next,
The king's request that I would visit you;
Who groves much for your weakness, and by my
Sending you his princely commendations,
And heartily pleasing you, take you good comfort.
Kath.

O my good lord, that comfort comes too late.
Tis like a pardon after execution:
That gentle phrase, given in time, had cured me;
But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.
How does his highness?
Cap.
Madeam, in good health.
Kath.

So he may he ever do! and ever flourish,
When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor name
Damned it the kingdom!—Patience, is that letter
I caus'd you write, yet sent away?
Pat.
No, madam.

Giving it to Katherine.
Kath.
Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my lord the king.
Cap.
Most willing, madam.
Kath.
In which I have commended to his—
The model of our chastel loves, his young daughter—
The dews of heaven fall thick in blessings on her!—
Beseeching him to give her virtuous breeding;
She is young, and of a noble modest nature;
I hope, she will deserve well: and a little
To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him,
Heaven knows how dearly: My next great petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some duty
Upon my wretched women, that so long
Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully:
Of which there is not one, I dare avow,
Upon the earth, is dearer to me, than she
And now I should not be, but will deserve
For virtue, and true beauty of the soul,
For honesty, and decent carriage,
A right good husband, let him be a noble:
And, sure, those men are happy that shall have
The last page for my men:—they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me
That they may have their wages duly paid them,
And something over to remember me by:
If heart had pleas'd me to have given me longer life,
And able means, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole contents:—And, good my Lord.
By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish christian peace to souls departed,
Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king
To do me this last right.
Pat.
By heaven, I will;
Or let me lose the fashion of a man!
Kath.

I thank you, honest lord. Remember me
In all humility unto his highness:
Say, his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world: tell him, in death I bless'd him,
For so I will.—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell,
My lord,—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience,
You must not leave me yet. I must to bed;
Call in more women. When I am dead, good wench,
Let me be used with honor; strut me over
With more flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife to my grave: embalm me.
Then lay me forth: although uncom'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
I can no more.—[Exeunt, leading Katharine.
Afterwards queen Mary.]
ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Gallery in the Palace.

Enter Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, a Page, with a Torch before him, led by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gar. 'Tis one o'clock, boy, isn't it not? But I hath struck. Boy. These should be hours for necessities, not for delights; titles to repair our nature With comforting repose, and not for us To waste these times.—Good hour of night, sir Thomas! Whither so late?

Lov. 'Tis I, Methinks, It avoid the Charles, with what now, and Yes, 'Tis and have what, Pray But, have them say'st thou? ha! To pray for her! what, is she crying out! Lov. She said her woman; and that her suffering made Almost each pang a death. K. Hen. Almost. [Aside.]

K. Hen. What say'st thou? ha! To pray for her! what, is she crying out! Lov. She said her woman; and that her suffering made Almost each pang a death. K. Hen. Almost. [Aside.]

Lov. Came you from the king, my lord? Gar. I did, sir Thomas; and left him at primrose With the duke of Suffolk. I must to him too, Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave. Gar. Not yet, sir Thomas Lovell. What's the matter?

Lov. It seems, you are in haste; an if there be No great offence belongs to't, give your friend Some touch of your late business: Affairs, that

[As, they say spirits do] at midnight, have In them a wilder nature, than the business That seeks despatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you: And durst commend a secret to your ear Much weighther than this work. The queen's in labor.

They say, in great extremity; and fear'd, She'll with the labor end.

Gar. The fruit, she goes with, I pray for heartily; that it may find Good time, and love: but for the stock, sir Thomas, I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Methinks, I could Cry the amen; and yet my conscience says She's a good creature, and, sweet lady, does Deserve our better wishes.

Gar. But, sir, sir,— Here, me, sir Thomas; you are a gentleman Of mine own way; I know you wise, religious; And, let me tell you, it will ne'er be well,— 'Til not, sir Thomas Lovell, take of me, Till Cranmer. Cromwell, her two hands, and she, Sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, you speak of two The most remark'd i' the kingdom. As for Cromwell,— Beside that of the jewel-house, he made master O' the rolls, and the king's secretary; further, sir, Stands in the gap and trade of more preeminent, With which the time will load him: The archbishop Is the king's hand, and tongue; and who dare speak One syllable against him?

Gar. Yes, yes, sir Thomas, There are that dare; and I myself have vent'd To speak my mind of him: and, indeed, this day, Sir, (I may tell you,) I think, I have seen the lords o' the council, that he is (For so I know he is, they know he is) A most arch heretic, a pestilence That does infect the land; with which they moved, Have broken with the king; who hath so far Given ear to our complaint, (of his great grace And princely care; foreseeing those foul mischiefs, (Our reasons laid before him,) he hath commanded To-morrow morning to the council-board He be convened: He's a rank weed, sir Thomas, And we must root him out. From your afar, I hinder you too long; good night, sir Thomas.

Lov. Many good nights, my lord: I rest your servant. [Execute Gardiner and Page.]

As Lovell is going out, enter the King and the Duke of Suffolk.

K. Hen. Charles, I will play no more to-night; My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me. *A game at cards. Set on. Told their minds to. Summoned.
K. Hen.

Stand up, good Canterbury; the truth, and thy integrity, is the light of thy crown. In us, thy friends: Give me thy hand, stand up; Pity me, let's walk. Now, by my holy dame, What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd you and you had gone about that. I should have ta'en some pains to bring together Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you Without indulgence, further.

Cran.

Most dread liege, The good I stand on is my truth, and honesty; If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies, Will triumph or my person; which I weigh not, before of these matters vacant. I fear nothing What can be said against me.

K. Hen.

Know you not how Your understanding the world, with the whole world? Your enemies Are many, and not small; their practices Must bear the same proportion: and not ever The justice and the truth o' the question carries The due o' the verdict with it: At what ease Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt To wear against you! such things have been done. You are patently oppos'd; and with a malice Of as great size. Ween'th you of better luck. I mean in perjur'd witness, than your Master, Whose minister you are, whate'er he liv'd Upon this naughty earth! Go to, go to; You take a precipice for no leap of danger, And woo your own destruction.

Cran.

God, and your majesty, Protect mine innocence, or I fall into The trap is laid for me!

K. Hen.

Be of good cheer; They shall no more prevail, than we gave way to, Keep comfort to you; and this morning see You do appear before them: if they shall chance, In charging you with matters, to commit you, The best persuasions to the contrary Fail not to use, and with what vehemency The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties Will render you no remedy, this ring Deliver them, and your appeal to him: There make betwixt them.—Look, the good man weeps! He's honest, on mine honor. God's blest mother! I swear, he is true-hearted; and a soul None better in my kingdom.—Get you gone, And do as I have bad you.—[Exit Cranmer.] He has straitened His language in his tears.

Enter an old Lady.

Gent. [Aside.] Come back; What mean you? Lady. I'll not come back; the tidings that I bring Will make my boldness manner.—Now, good angel, Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person Under their blessed wings!

K. Hen.

Now, by thy looks I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver'd?

Lady. Ay, ay, and of a boy!

K. Hen.

Look, by thy looks I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver'd?

Lady. Ay, ay, my liege; And of a lovely boy: The God of heaven Both now and ever bless her!—Was a girl, Pursues boys hereafter, Sir, your queen Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you As cherry is to cherry.

K. Hen.

Lovell.—

Enter Lovell.

Lor.

K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks. I'll to the queen.

Lady. An hundred marks! by this light, I'll have more: An ordinary grooms is for such payment; I will have more, or scold it out of him. Such is this, the girl is like to him, I will have more, or else unsay't; and now While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Lobby before the Council-Chamber.

Enter Cranmer; Servants, Door-keeper, &c, attending.

Cran. I hope, I am not too late; and yet the gentleman, *Thick.

That was sent to me from the council, pray'd me To make great haste. All fast! what means this?—Hoo! Who waits there!—Sure you know me? D. Keep. Yes, my lord; but yet I cannot help you.

Cran.

Why? D. Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call'd lor. Enter Doctor Butts.

Cran.

So. Butts. This is a piece of malice; I am glad I came this way so happily: The king Shall understand it presently. 'Tis Butts. Cran. [Aside.] The king's physician: As he past alone; How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me! Pray heaven, he sound not my disgrace! For certain This is of purpose laid by, some that hate me, (God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice.) To quench more honor: they would shame to make me Wait else at door; a fellow-counsellor, Among boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleasures Must be fulfilled, and I attend with patience.

Enter, at a Window above, the King and Butts.

Butts. I'll show your grace the strangest sight.— K. Hen. What's that? Butts. I think your highness saw this many a day. K. Hen. Body o' me, where is it? [Exit Butts.] There, my lord:— The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury; Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants, Pages, and footboys.

K. Hen. Ha! 'Tis he, indeed: Is this the honor they do one another! 'Tis well, there's one above them yet. I had thought, They had parted so much honesty amongst them, At least, good manners, as not thus to suffer A man of his place, and so near our favor, To dance attendance on their lordship's pleasures, And at the door too, like a post with packets. By holy Venice, Butts, there's knavery: Let them alone, and draw the curtain close; We shall hear more anon.— [Exeunt.

The Council-Chamber.

Enter the Lord Chancellor, the Dukes of Suffolk and Norfolk, Earl of Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, Wiltshire, and Cromwell. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the Table, on the left hand; a Seat being left void where above him, as for the Archbishop or Chancellor. To which end seat themselves in order on each side. Cromwell, at the lower end as Secretary. Chan. Speak to the business, master secretary: Why are we met in council?—

Please your honors, The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury: Gar. Has he had knowledge of it?—

Cran. Yes. Nor. Who waits there? D. Keep. Without, my noble lords!—

Gar. Yes. D. Keep. My lord archbishop; And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures. Chan. Let him come in.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now. Cranmer approaches the Council-Table.

Chan. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry To sit here at this present, and behold That chair stand empty: But we all are men, In our own natures frail, out of which frailty And what of wisdom, you, that best should teach us, Have misdeem'd yourself; and not a little, Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling The whole realm, by your teaching, and your capítulo (For so we are informed,) with new opinions, Devices and dangers, which are heresies, And, as it were, doth, by prove persons, Gar. What reformation must be sudden too, My noble lords: for those that tame wild horses, Place them not in their hands to make them gentle; But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur them,
Till they obey the manage. If we suffer
Out of our casiness and childish pity
To one man's honor! this contagious sickness
Forces not all men: and what follows them?
Commotions, uprairs, with a general taint
Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbors,
The upper German, can dearly witness,
You freshly pinched in England.

Cran. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress
Both of my life and office, I have labored,
And, if I have little study, that my teaching,
And the strong course of my authority
Might go one way, and safely; and the end
Was ever, to do well; nor is there living,
(I speak here with a single heart, my lords,
A man, that more detests, more sins against,
Both in his private conscience, and his place,
Defacers of a public peace, than I do.)

Fray heaven, the king may never find a heart
With less allegiance in it! Men, that make
Envvy, and crooked malice, nourishment,
Dare into the best. I do beseech your lordships,
That, in this case of justice, my accusers,
Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,
And freely urge against me.

Suf. That cannot be; you are a counselor,
And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment,
We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness' pleasure,
And our consent, for better trial of you.

Fr. Henceforward you are committed to the Tower;
Where, being but a private man again,
You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,
More than, I fear, you are provided for.

Gar. Ah, my good lord of Winchester, I thank you,
You are always my good friend, and your word;
I shall both find your lordship judge and jury,
You are so merciful; I see your end,
'Tis clear; and all shall take it.

This man, Love, and meekness, lord,
Become a churchman better than ambition;
Win straining souls with modesty again,
Cast none away. That I shall clear myself.

Lay all the weight ye can upon my sentence,
I make as little doubt, as you do conscience,
In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,
But reverence to your calling makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary,
That's the plain truth; your painted glass discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness.

Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little,
By that, as if you were a perfect fool,
However faulty, yet should stand respect
For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty,
To load a fallen man.

Gar. Most noble secretory,
I cry your honor mercy; you may, worst
Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord!

Gar. Do not I know you for a lover
Of this new sect? Ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound, I say. Not sound!

Gar. Would you were half so honest!
Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.

Crom. I shall remember this bold language.

Gar. Remember your bold life too.

Crom. This is too much;

Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. Then thus for you, my lord.—It stands agreed,
I take it by all voices, that forthwith
You be convey'd to the Tower a prisoner;
There to remain, till the king's further pleasure
Be known unto us: Are you all agreed, lords?
All. We are.

Crom. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other
Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome!
Let some o' the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard.

Gar. Must I go like a traitor thither?

Crom. For me!
Two noble partners with you; the old duchess of Norfolk.
And lady marquis Dorset; Will these please you! Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you, Embrace, and love this man. With a true heart,
I hit you, I snail With you these then Is An't

K. Hen. Good man, those joyful tears show thy true heart.
The common voice, I see, is verified
Of thee, which says thus, Do my lord of Canterbury
A skewled turn, and he is your friend for ever.
Come lords, we tarry time away! I long
To have this young one made a Christian.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;
So I grow stronger, you more honor gain.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Palace Yard.
Noise and Turmoil within. Enter Porter and his Men.
Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals! Do you take the court for Paris-garden? Ye rude slaves, leave your gaping?

[Within.] Good master porter, I belong to the lord's household.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, you rogue! Is this the place to roar in! —Fetch me a dozen crab-tree slaves, and strong ones; these are bound to go to them. —I'll have that madhead You must be seeing christenings! Do you look for ale and Cake here, you rude rascals! Man. Pray, sir, be patient; 'tis as much impossible
(Unless we sweep them from the door with cannon.)
To scatter them, as 'tis to make them sleep On May-day morning; which will never be:
We may as well push against Paul's, as stir them.
Port. How got they in, and be hang'd! Man. I know not: How got the tide in? As much as one sound eudgel of four foot (You see the poor remainder) could distribute, I made no space, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.
Man. I am not Samson, nor sir Guy, nor Colbrand, I move them down before me; but, if I spared any, that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, let me never hope to see a chime again; and that I would not for a cow. God save her.

[Within.] Do you hear, master porter?

Port. What would you have me do?

Man. What should you do but knock them down by your bangers? Is this the Moscoviens to master in! or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to count, the women so besiege us! Bless me, what a try of inoculation is at door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand; here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier by his face, for 'o my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now rung in his nose; all that stand about him are under the line, they nail no other penance: That fire-drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me; he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him that railed upon me till her pink'd perriger fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I took the meteors out of the pot but that woman, who cried out, clowns! when I might see far from forty truncheon-carriers draw to her succor, which were the hope of the sad, where she was quarrel'd. They fell on me; I made good my place; at length they came to the broomstaff with me, I defied them still; when suddenly a line of boys behind them, loose their darts, delivered such a shower of publick, but I was glad to draw mine honor in, and let them win the work. The devil was amongst them, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a play-house, and light for bitten apples; that no audience, but That Tribulation of Troubles, the Limbus of Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of them in Limbo Patrum; they may like they are to dance these three days; besides the running banquet of two headless that is to come.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here. They grows still too, from all parts they are coming.
As if we stand not a fair here! Where are these porters, These lazy knaves? —Ye have made a fine hand, fellows, There's a trim rattle let in: Are all these Your faithful friends of the suburbs! We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christenings.

Port. An't please your honor, We are but men; and what so many may do, Not being torn a pieces, we have done: An army cannot rule them.

Cham. As I live, If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clap round lines, for neglect: You are lazy knaves; And here is a hundred of bums to strike: Ye must do service. Hark, the trumpets sound; They are come already from the christening; Go, break among the asses, and find your way out To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find A Marshalsea, shall hold you play these two months. Port. Make way there for the princes, Man. You great fellow, stand close up, or I'll make your head ache.

Port. You 't the canibal, get up o' the rail; I'll pick 'yer o'er the pales else.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Palace.

Enter Trumpets, sounding; then two Aidersmen, Lord Mayor, Garder, Chamber, Duke of Norfolk, with his Marshal's staff. Duke of Suffolk, two Noblemen bearing great standing Bows for the Christening Gifts; then four Noblemen, bearing a Canopy, under which the Duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the Child richly habited in a Mantle, &c, Train borne by a Lady, then follows the Marchioness of Dorset, the other Godmother, and Ladies. The Troop pass once about the Stage, and Gardner speaks.

Gard. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send, prosperous life, long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth.

Flourish. Enter King and Train.

Crane. [Kneeling.] And to your royal grace, and the good queen,

My noble partners, and myself, thus pray: — All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady, Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy, May hereby fall upon ye! K. Hen. Thank you, good lord archbishop; What is her name?

Crane. Elizabeth. K. Hen. Stand up, lord. The King kisses the Child. With this kiss take my blessing; God protect thee! Into whose hands I give thy life. Amen.

K. Hen. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal: I thank you heartily, so shall this lady, When she has so much English.

Crane. Let me speak sir, For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter I give more than thinking, for they fond them truth. This royal infant, (Heaven still move about her!) Though in her cradle, yet now promises Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings, Which shall bring all to ripeness: She shall be
- Place of confinement.
- A desert of whipping.
- Black leather vessels to hold beer.
- Pitch.
- At Greenwich.
(but few now living can behold that goodness)
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed: she was never
More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue,
Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces,
That mould up such a mighty piece as this is,
With all the virtues that attend the good,
Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse her,
Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her;
She shall be lov'd and fear'd: Her own shall bless her:
Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn,
And hang their heads with sorrow: Good grows
with her:
In her days, every man shall eat in safety
Under his own vine, what he plants; and sing
The merry songs of peace to all his neighbors.
God shall be truly known; and those about her
From her shall read the perfect ways of honor,
And by those claim their greatness, not by blood.
[Now shall this peace sleep with her: But as when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phaenix,
Her ashes new create another heir,
As great in admiration as herself;
So shall she leave her blessedness to one,
(When heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness.)
Who, from the sacred ashes of her honor,
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
And so stand [ix]d: Peace, plenty, love, truth, terror,
This and the following seventeen lines were probably written by B. Jonson, after the accession of King James.

That were the servants to this chosen infant,
Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him;
Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine,
His honor: and the greatness of his name
Shall be, and make new nations: He shall flourish,
And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches
To all the plans about him:—Our children's children
Shall see this, and bless heaven.

K. Hen. Thou speakest wonders,
Crow. She shall be, to the happiness of England,
An aged princess; many days shall see her,
And yet no day without a deed to crown it.
Would I had known no more! but she must die,
She must, the saints must have her: yet a virgin,
A most unspotted lily shall she pass
To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her
K. Hen. O lord archbishop,
Thou hast made me now a man: never, before
This happy child, did I get any thing:
This oracle of comfort has so pleas'd me,
That, when I am in heaven, I shall desire
To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.—
I thank ye all:—To you, my good lord mayor,
And your good brethren, I am much beholden;
I have receiv'd much honor by your presence,
And ye shall find me thankful. Lead the way,
lords;
Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye,
She will be sick else. This day, no man think
He has business at his house: for all shall stay:
This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

'Tis ten to one, this play can never please
All that are here: Some come to take their case,
And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear,
We have frighted with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear,
They'll say, 'tis naught: others, to hear the city
Abuse'd extremely, and to cry.—but's past:
Which we have not done neither: that, I fear,

All the expected good we are like to hear
For this play at this time, is only in
The merciful construction of good women;
For such a one we show'd them: If they smile,
And say, 'twill do, I know, within a while
All the best men are ours; for, 'tis ill hap,
If they hold, when their ladies bid them clap.

PROLOGUE.

In Troy there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
The princes orgulous, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Franght with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Sixty and nine, that wore
Their crowns regal, from the Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia: and their vow is made,
To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris asleep: and that's the quarrel.
To Toades they come:
And the deep-drawing barks do thus dispose
Their warlike fraughtage: now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unburnt Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Hias, Chetas, Trojan,
And Antenorides, with many a stapled, staple,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Spee'd up the sons of Troy.
Now, expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Troy and Greek,
Sets all on hazard—and let fortune chance
A prologue arm'd—but not in confidence
Of author's pen, or actor's voice; but suited
In like conditions as our argument,
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils,
Ginning in the middle; starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.
Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
Now good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

Enter TROJUS, armed, and PANDARUS.

TRO. Call here my varlet; I'll unarm again: Why should I war without the walls of Troy, That should such cruel battle here within? Each Trojan, that is master of his heart, Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none.

PAN. Will this gear! never be mended!

TRO. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength, Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceess valiant; But I am weaker than a woman's fear, Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance; Less valiant than the virgin in the night, And skillless as unpractis'd infancy.

PAN. Well, I have told you enough of this: for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no further. He, "

that will have a cake out of the wheat, must tarry the grinding.

TRO. Have I not tarryed?

PAN. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

TRO. Have I not tarryed?

PAN. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

TRO. Still have I tarry.

PAN. Ay, to the leavening; but here's yet in the word—hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking: may, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

TRO. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,

Doth lesser bireth at suffrance than I do. At Priam's royal table do I sit:

And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
So, traitor! when she comes!—\(\text{Scene II.}\) Troilus and Cressida.

Tro. I was about to tell thee—When my heart, as wedged with a sigh, would rave in twain; lest Hector of my father should perceive me, I did so when the sun did light a stern!

\(\text{Note:} \) burned this sigh in wrinkle of an eye.

But sorrow, that is couched in seeming gladness, is like that mirth late torns to sudden sadness.

\(\text{Note:} \) As her hair were not so blacker than Helen's, (well, go to,) there were no more comparision between the women.—But, for my part, she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, praise her;—but I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not disgrace your sister's Cassandra's wit; but—

\(\text{Scene II. A street.} \) Enter Cressida and Alexander.

\(\text{Note:} \) Troilus, by Menelans.

Cres. We were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba, and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower, Whose height commands as subject all the vale, To see the battle. Hector, whose patience Is, as a virtue, fixed, today was moved: He chid Andromache, and struck his armorer; And like as there were husbandry in war, Before the joint rose, he was harnessed light, And to the field goes he; where every flower, Did as a prophet, weep what it foresaw In Hector's wrath.

\(\text{Note:} \) Cres. What was his cause of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, this: There is among the Greeks A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector; They call him Ajax.
Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector? Do you know how you see him?

Cres. Ay, if ever I saw him before, and knew him.

Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for I am sure he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degree.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself! Alas, poor Troilus! I would he were—

Cres. So he is.

Pan. —Condition, I had gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself? no, he's not himself,—Would 'twere so, the gods are shame, my trusty friend, or end: Well, Troilus, well,—I would my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. The other's come to 't; you shall tell me another tale, when the other's come to t. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities—

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'Twould not become him, his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore the other day, that Troilus for a brown favor, (for so 'tis, I must confess,)—Not brown, neither.

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. 'Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, and not true.

Pan. She praised his complexion above Paris.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then Troilus should have too much; if she praised him above, his coloration is higher than his; he having color enough, and the other higher, is too flaring a praise for a good complexion; I hat be not Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she is a merry Greek, indeed.

Pan. Say, I am sure she does. She came to him the other day into a compass'd window,—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will he, within three pound, let as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a liver?—

Pan. But, to prove you to that Helen loves him;—she came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin.—

Cres. Juno have mercy!—How came it cloven!

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think, his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. 0, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. Yes, an 'twas a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to then;—But to prove you to that Helen loves Troilus,—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus! why he esteem him her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens out the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin;—indeed, she has a marvellous white hand. Indeed I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair out of his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But, there was such laughing;—Que Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran over.

Cres. With mill-stones, 8

Pan. Paris was well pleased.

Cres. But there was a more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes;—did her eyes run over too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Merry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus's chin.

Cres. Ain't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. Paris, that man, would make no question of that. One and fifty hairs, quoth he, and one white: That white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons. Jupiter! quoth she, which of these hairs is Paris my husband? He answered out, quoth she, pick it out, and give it him. But there was such laughing!—and Helen so blushing, and Paris so chid, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.

Pan. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

Cres. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on it.

Pan. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn, 'tis true; he will weep you an 'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 'twere a nettle against May. 3

[3 A Retreat round.

Pan. Har! they are coming from the field: Shall we stand up here, and see them, as they pass toward Ilium! good niece, do; sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. Let us please there.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

[Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

[The Hectors pass over the Stage.

Pan. Spies, so not loud.

Pan. That's Trojan; is not that a brave man! he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

[Pan. That's Hector: he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one of the soundest judgments in Troy, whatsoever, and a proper man of person:—When comes Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon; if he see me, you shall see him not but me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

[Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that: There's a fellow!—go by him, Hector: There's a brave man, niece.—0 brave Hector!—Look, how he looks! there's a countenance: Is't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!

Pan. 'Is' not? It does a man's heart good.—Look you what he's are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see! look you there! There's no jesting here, I say;—take off who will, as they say: there he hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

[Paris passes over.

Pan. Swords! any thing, he cares not: an the devil come to him, it's all one: By god's lid it does one's heart good;—Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes a man and a master under, niece; Is not a gallant man, too, 'twis not?—Why, this is brave now.—who said, he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why this will do Helen's heart good now;—I'll would I could see Troilus now!—you shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who's that?

[Pan. That's Helenus,—I marvel, where Troilus?

[Pan. That's Helenus,—I marvel, where Troilus?

[8 A proverbial saying.

[9 Went beyond bounds.

[1 A line in the game at cards called weekly.
Scene III.—TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

is.—That’s Helenus;—I think he went not forth to-day:—That’s Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?—
Pan. Helenus no;—yes, he’ll fight indifferent well.—Where is the more Troilus?—Hark; do we not hear the people cry, Troilus!—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS PASSES OVER.

Pan. Where! yonder! that’s Deiphobus:—Tis Troullus; there’s a man, uncle!—Ree!—Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him;—O brave Troilus!—I wish to come short of you, hour supper, sword is bloodied, and his helm more hack’d than Hector’s; And how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! be ne’er saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way: had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris!—Paris is durt to run; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to bolt.

Forses passes over the Stage.

Pan. Here come more.

Pan. Asces, tools, tools! chaff and bran; chaff and bran; porridge after meat! I could live and die i’ the eyes of Troilus. Ne’er look, ne’er look; the ears, ears!—trees, chaff and daws and daws. I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles; a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well!—Why, have you any discretion I have you any eyes! Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the space and suit that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a miniced man; and then to be baked with no date in the pye,—for then the man’s date is out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what yard he lie.

Cres. I put my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you to defend all these: and at all these, these lies, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Nay, none of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I’ll watch you for that: and that’s one of the chieftest of them too; if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for that I look the bow; unless it swell past hounding; and then it is past watching.

Enter Troilus’ Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come:—[Exit Boy.] I doubt he’s light.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I’ll be with you, niece, by-and-by.

Cres. To bring, uncle.

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token—you are a bawd.—[Exit Pandar.] Words, vows, griefs, tears, and love’s full sacrifice, He offers in another’s enterprise?

But more in Troilus thousand told I see Than in the glass of Pandar’s praise may be: Yet hold I off. Women are angels, women, They have more power in soil and soul in the doing: That she be lov’d knows nought, that knows not this—

Men prize the thing ungrain’d more than it is: That she was never yet that ever knew Love got so sweet, as when desire did sue: Therefore this maxum out of love I teach.—

Achaeans! are commanded; ungain’d, beweex; Then though my heart’s content firm love doth hear, Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. [Exit.

Ends were an ingredient in ancient pastry of almost every kind.

Scene III.—The Greek Camp. Before Agamemnon’s Tent.

Trumpets. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses, Menelaus, and others.

Agam. Princes, What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks? The couple purpose, that hope doth make In all designs begun on earth below, Falls in the promis’d largeness; check and disaster Grow to the veins of actions highest rear’d; As knots, by the cords of silken, untie, Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain Tortoise and errant! from his course of growth. Nor, princes, is it matter new to us, That we attend the counsels, and the act, But we soon see the short one. So far, That, after seven years’ siege, yet Troy wall stands, Still every action that hath gone before. Whereof we have record, trial did draw Blist and hot heart, not answering the aim, And that unbounded figure of the thought That gave’t surmise’d shape. Why then, you princes, Do you with cheeks abash’d behold our works; And think them shames, which are, indeed, nought else But the profligate trials of great Jove, To find that persiflage confidence men. The fineness of which metal is not found In fortune’s love; for them, the bold and coward, The wise and fool, the artist and unarted, The hard and easy, the self and alien, and kin. But, in the wind and tempest of her fortune, Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan Pulling at will, wins the light away; And what hath Mars, or what, or matter, or self Lies, rich in virtue, and unmingled, Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat, Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply The latter wards, in the reproach of chance, Lies the true proof of men; The sea being smooth, How many shallow baulk boats dare sail Upon her patient breast, making their way With those of nobler rank. But let the ruthless Boreas once enrage The gentle Thetis, and, anon, behold The strong-rib’d bark through liquid mountains sail. Boundless between the two moist elements, Like Perseus’ horse; Where’s then the saucy boat, Whose weak unumber’d sides but even now Convi’d greatness! I either to harbor fed, Or made a feast for Neptune. Even so Dost valor’s show, and valor’s worth, divide, In storms of fortune: For, in her ray and brightness, The herd hath more annoyance by the brize, Than by the tiger; but when the splitting wind Makes it, he holds the knees of knotted oaks, And lies tied under shade, why, then, the thing of courage, As rous’d with race, with rage doth sympathize, And, with an ardent tuned the selfsame key, Returns to chiding fortune.

Ulyss. Agamemnon,—

Thou great commander, hewer and bane of Greece, Heart of my numbers, soul and only spirit, In whom the temper and minds of all Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks. Besides the applause and approbation, The which, last mighty for the place and away,—[To Agamemnon.]

And thou most reverend for thy stretch’d-out life,—[To Nestor.]

I give to both your speeches,—which were such, As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece Should hold up high in brass; and such again, As venerable Nestor, hatch’d in silver, Should, in a boundless fame, (strung up the axe-tree On which heaven rides,) kilt all the Greekish ears To his experienced tongue,—yet let it please the gods, Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak. Agam. Speak, prince of Ithaca; and be’t of less expect That may be, endles’s, of importless burden, Divide thy lips: than we are confident. When rank Thersites opes his mastil jaws, We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

Ulisses. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,
And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master;
But for these instances.

The specialty of rule hath been neglected;
And the how-many forecours to his stand,
Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow tacitons.
When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
With what holiness? Degree will stand.
The unworshippest shows as truly in the mass.
The heavens themselves, the planets and this centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place.
Instinct how many, proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order;
And therefore is the glorious planet, Sol,
In no permanence endur'd and spher'd.
Amidst the other; which they own but eye.
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sacredly, to good and bad: But then the planets,
In evil mixture, to disorder wander,
What plagues, and what portents! what mutiny?
What raging of the sea! shaking of earth!
Commotion in the winds! frights, changes, horrors,
Devert and crack, rend and descend.
The unity and marvellous calm of states
Quite from their fixture! O, when degree is shaken,
What makes the ladder of high degree close.
The enterprise is sick! How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from divisible shores,
The general rectitude of human laws?
Preparator of age, crowns, scepters, laurels,
But by degree, stand in authentic place!

Take but degree away, unthine that string,
And the very frame of sense is broken.
What mad monstrosities, and things how meet?
In mere oppugnancy: The bounded waters
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sea of all this solid close!
Streets should be level, and the general
And the rude soul should strike his rather dead:
Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong
(These two so near, that senseless eyes rarely resolve)
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, and appetite,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey.
And, last, eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
This chaste, when degree is suffocative,
Follows the choking.
And this neglect of degree it is,
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
Utter to climb. The general
By him one step below; he, by the next;
That next by him beneath: so every step,
Exampled by the first pace that is sick
Of his superior, grows to an even fever
Of pale and bloodless eminence;
And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot;
Not from its own fire, but others,
To end a tyrant's breath.
Troy in your weakness stands, not in her strength.

Next. Most woefully Ulysses here discover'd
The fever whereof all our power is sick.

Agam. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,
What is the remedy?

Ulyss. The great Achilles,—whom opinion crowns
The snow and the foremost of our host,—
Holding his car full of his angry chariotees,
Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
Lies mocking our designs: With him, Patroclus,
Upon a hazy bed, the live-long day
Beckons and poles;
And with ridiculous and awkward action
(Which, slanderer, he imitation calls)
He pageants us. Sometimes, great Agamemnon,
The precipice reputation he puts up,
And, like a strutting, whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich
To bear the written dialogue and sound
That at his stretch of rodine and scalderad,9
Such to-be-pitted and o'er-wrested seeming
He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,
The language becomes a mingled, with groans unsqueark'd.
Which from, the tongue of roaring Typhon drop'd,
Would seem hyperbolies. At this dusty stuff,
The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
Cries—Excellent! His Agamemnon just—
Now please him, Hector!—O, by heaven, and strike thy head,
As he, being drest to some oration.
That's done;—as near as the extremest ends
Of parallels; as like as Vulcan and dis-wife:
A god Achilles shall cries, Exceunt!—
To Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night alarm.

And then, forsooth, the taint detect of age
Must Periplus of earth; forth to cough and spit,
And with a palsy-fumbling on his gorget,
Shake in and out the rivet;—and at this sport,
Sir Valor does; cries, O—enough, Patroclus,—
Or give me robs of steel! I hail all
In pleasure of my speech. And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gits, names, shapes,
Arms and generals of grace exact.
Achilles, poets, cities, prodigies,
Excitements to the field, or speech far truce,
Success or loss, what is, or is not, serves
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Next. And in the imitation of these twain,
(Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice,) many are infect.
Ajax is grown so well-well, and bears his head
In such a rim, in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him;
Makes factious feasts; racks on our state of war,
Builds an oracle: and such Thustanes
(An slave, whose gall coins slanders like a mint)
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our expostuate,
How he was never rooted in war and danger.

Ulysses. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice,
Count wisdom as no member of the war.
Forestall presence, and esteem no act
But that of hand; the stiff and mental parts,—
That do contrive how many hands shall strive,
When fitness calls them on; and know, by measure
Their observant toil, the enemies' weight,
Why, who's at hand not a finger's dirge.
They call this—bed-work, nappery, closet-war:
So that the ram, that butters down the wall,
For the great weight and rudeness of this
In their place before his hand that made the engine
Or those, that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution.

Next. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse
Makes many Thetis' sons.

[Trumpet sounded.

Enter Tbreas.

Men. From Troy.

Agam. What would you fore our tent? is this Great Agamemnon's tent, I pray?

Agam. Even this.

Men. May one that is a herald, and a prince,
Do a like usage to this kindest of Achæans?
Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm
Fore all the Grecian heads, which with one voice
Call Agamemnon head and general.

Men. Fair leave and large security. How may
A stranger to those most imperial looks
Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agam. How? even this.

Men. What?—tell me, or I will wake even
And bid the check be ready with a blush
Mosted as morning when she coldly eyes
The young sparr'd jests.
Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan seems us; or the men of Troy
Are ceremonial courtiers.

Men. Courtiers as free, as dendalum, unarmed,
As beauteous to us as their names that this is.
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and, Jove's
Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Eneas,
Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!
The worthiness of praise doth sustain his worth,
If he did only bring the praise forth
But what the repining enemy commends.
Scene III. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA. 507

That breath fame follows; that praise, sole pure, Transcends.

Again. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself, Eneas?

Eneas. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Again. Wilt thou, for an answer, pray you to

Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

Again. He hears nought privately, that comes from Troy.

Eneas. If Troy come not to whisper him:

I bring a trumpet to awake his ear:

To set his sense on the attentive bent,

And then to speak.

Again. Speak frankly, as the wind;

It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour:

That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake;

He tells thee so himself.

Ajax. Trumpet, blow loud,

Send thy brassy voice through all these lazy tents:—

And every Greek of mettle, let him know,

What Troy means truly, shall be spoke aloud.

Ajax. Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy,

A prince called Hector, (Priam is his father),

Who in this dull and long-continued truce

Is vastly grown: he bade me take a trumpet,

And to this purpose speak.

Kings, princes, lords!

If there be one among the fair sir of Greece,

That holds his honor higher than his life,

That weakens his praise more than he wars his peril;

That knows his valor, and knows not his fear;

That loves his mistress more than in confession,

(Wherein true lovers are,

And dare avow their beauty and her worth,

In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.

Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,

Shall make it good, or do his best to do it,

He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,

Than ever Greek did compass in his arms;

And will to-morrow with his trumpet call

No man between us but the Trojans, of Troy,

To rouse a Grecian that is true in love:

If any come, Hector shall honor him;

If none, he'll say in Troy, when he retires,

The Grecian dames are sun-burn'd, and not worth

The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Again. This shall be told our lovers, lord Eneas:

If none of them have soul in such a kind,

We left them all at home: But we are soldiers;

And may that soldier a mere recrunt prove,

That means not, hath not, or is not in love!

If none is one, or hath, or means to be,

That is my answer: Hector must none else, and he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man

When Hector's grandsire stuck'd: he is old now;

But, if there be not in our Grecian host

One noble man, that hath one rock of fire

To answer for his love, tell him from me,—

I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,

And in my vanbraced3 put this whiter'd brawn;

And reason him, will tell him, That my lady

Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste

As may be in the world: His youth in flood,

I'll prove this truth with my three drops or blood.

Ajax. Now heaven forbid such scarcity of youth!

Ulyss. Amen.

Again. Fair lord Eneas, let me touch your hand:

To your partition will I lead you, sir,

Achilles shall have word of this intent;

So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent:

Yourself shall feast with us before you go,

And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but Ulysses and Nestor.

Ulyss. Nestor—

Nest. What says Ulysses?

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain,

Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is 't?

Ulyss. This 's:

But wordes give hard knots: The seeded pride

That hath to this maturity blown up

In rank Achilles, must or now be cropp'd,

Or, shielding, breed a nursery of like evil,

To overbulk us all.

A. An armor for the arm.

Nest. Well, and how?

Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector

sends,

However it is spread in general name,

Relates in particular to Achilles's name.

Nest. The purpose is perspecious even as substance.

Whose grossness little characters sum up:

And, in the publication of this note,

But that Achilles, were his brain as barren

As banks of Lybia,—though, Apollo knows,

'Tis dry enough,—will with great speed of judg

ments.

Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose

Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you?

Nest. Yes,

It is most meet: Whom may you else oppose,

That can from Hector bring those honors on?

If not Achilles? Though 't be a sportful combat,

Yet in the trial much opinion dwells:

For here the Trojans taste our dearst repute

With their most estate: And trust to me, Ulysses,

Our imputation shall be oddly poised

In this wild action: for the success,

Although particular, shall give a scantling?

Of good or bad of general;

And in such indexes, although small picks

To their subsequent volumes, there is seen

The baby figure of the giant mass

Of things to come at large. It is supposed,

He, that makes Hector, issues from our choice:

And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,

Makes merit her election; and doth bulk,

As 'twere from forth as all, a man distill'd

Out of her virtues; Who, mislaying,

What heart receives from hence a conquering part,

To steel a strong opinion to themselves?

Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,

In no less manner, than are swords and bows

Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech:—

Therefore 'tis meet Achilles meet not Hector,

Let us, like merchants, show our fairest wares,

And think, percaence, they'll sell; if not,

The lustre of the better shall exceed,

By showing the worst first. Do not consent,

That ever Hector and Achilles meet,

For both our honor and our shame, in this,

Are done; and two strange followers,

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes; what are these?

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from

Hector,

Were he not strong, we all should share with him:

But he already is insolent;

And we were better parch in Afric sun,

Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes.

Should he escape Hector fair: If he were bold,

Why, then we did our main opinion crush

in to the best of our men. No, make a lottery;

And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw

And make us to believe.

Among ourselves, Give him allowance for the better man,

For that will physic the great Myrmidon,

Who brooks in loud applause; and make him fall

His crest, that prouder than blust'ring Iris heads.

If the dull bruiser Ajax come safe off,

We'll dress him up in voices; If he fail,

Yet go we under our opinion still,

That we have better men. But, hit or miss,

Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,—

Ajax, employ'd, plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Ulyss. Nestor—

Now I begin to relish thy advice;

And I will give a taste of it forthwith

To Agamemnon: go we to him straight.

Two curs shall tame each other: Pride alone

Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 'twere their home.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another Part of the Grecian Camp.

Enter Ajax and Thersites.

Ajax. Thersites,

Ther. Agamemnon—how if he had boil'd it full, all over, generally!

Ajax. Thersites,—

Ther. And these boil's did run!—Say so,—did not the general run then? were not that a bony sore?

Ajax. Dog,—

Ther. Then would come some matter from him; I see none yet.

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear! Feel then. [Strikes him.]

Ther. The glaze of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel be-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak then, thou unsaltened heaven, speak: I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner run thee into wit and holiness: but, I think, thy horse will sooner con an oration, than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou a red murrain o' thy jake's tracks?

Ajax. Toads-stool, learn me the proclamation.

Ther. Dost thou think, I have no sense, thou strikest me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation,—

Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not; my fingers itch. Thou wouldst dist itch from head to foot, and so great a catching of lice; I would make thee the holiesthmost scar in Greece. When thou art tooth in the murrains, thou strikest as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation,—

Ther. Thou grumbliest and nuttest every hour on Achilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness, as Cerberus at Proserpine's beauty, ay, that thou baskest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!

Ther. Thou should'st strike him.

Ajax. Cribba! no.

Ther. He would pun' thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ajax. You whoreson cur. [Beating him.]

Ther. Da, do.

Ajax. Thou stood for a witch!

Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an assegai might tutor thee; Thou searthy, valiant her, thou art here put to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a Barbarian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!

Ajax. You dog!

Ther. You scurvy lord!

Ajax. You cur. [Beating him.]

Ther. Mars his idiot! do, rudeness: do, camel, do, do.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax? wherefore do you thus?

How now, Thersites! what's the matter, man? Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay: what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why do so.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him; for whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Achil. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what medicinum of wit he utters! his evasions have ears thus long. I have boiled his brain, more than he has beet my bones: I will buy mine ox to a oar, and his gadpiner than the matter's not worth the much part of a sparow.——

* Pound.  1 Ass, a cant term for a foolish fellow.  2 The membrane that protects the brain.

This lord, Achilles, Ajax,—who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,—I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What! Ther. I say this, Ajax—

Ther. Has not so much wit—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.  3

Achil. Fool! Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he; look you there.

Achil. 0 thou damned ear, I shall—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame it.

Patr. Good words, Thersites.

Ther. Gud words, Patr.  4

Achil. I bade the vile owl, go, learn me the tenor of the proclamation, and he rakes upon me. Ther. I serve thee not.

Achil. Well, go to, go lo.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was suflferance, 'twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary; Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. Even so!—a great deal of your wit too lies in your swines, or else there be hares. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains; I were a good crack a frisky nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses, and old Nestor, whose wit was mouldy, ere your grandfathers had nailed on their toes—yoke they like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what, what, what?

Ther. Yes, good sooth; to, Achilles! to, Ajax! to!

Achil. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou art. Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace, Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach thus shall, shall I? [Patr. Achil. There's for you, Patroclus. Ther. I will see you hanged, like clothpales, ere I come any more to your teats; I will keep where there is wit slitting, and leave the faction foods.

[Exeunt.]

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaimed through all our host:

That Hector, by the first hour of the sun, Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy, To-morrow morning call some knight to arms, That with a虽然; and such one, that dare Maintain—I know not what; his trash; Farewell. Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Achil. I know the quarell'd; it is put to lottery; otherwise, He knew his man.

Achil. O, meaning you—I'll go learn more of it. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Priam, Hector, Thersites, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches, spent, Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:

Deliver Helen, and all exchange else— As honored men of Greece, travel, expense. Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consumed

In hot discussion of this momentous war—

Shall be herds of oxen:—Hector, what say you to it? Heel. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I, As far at the least my particular, yet, Dread Priam. Ther. There is no lady of soother bowels,
More spungy to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out—Who knows what follow'd?
The smartest effect is: the wound of a little, surely Secrecy; but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
So of the point of a sword, or the thrust of a dart,
Every little tube, 'mongst so many thousand disines,†
Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean of ours:
If we have lost so many tenths of ours,
To lose a thing not so dear to us, to
Had it our name, the value of one ten;
What merit's in that reason, which denes
The yielding of her up?
Tro. Fye, fye, my brother!
Weigh you the worth and honor of a king,
So great as our dread father, in a scale
Of common ounces! will you with counters sum
The past-proportion of his infinite
And buck'd-in a wast most innoxious,
With spans and meches so diminutive
As fears and reasons! fye, for godly shame!
Hec. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,
You are so empty of them. Should not our father
Bear the greater part of his affairs with reasons,
Because your speech hath none, that tells him so?
Tro. You are for dreams and slumber, brother priest,
You for your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:
You know, an enemy intends you harm;
You know, a sword employ'd is pernicious,
And its action the other more correct;
Who marvels then, when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of Reason to his heels;
And that like chiddery, where the treasury from Jove,
Or like a star disord'!—Nay, if we talk of reason,
Let's shut our gates and sleep: Manhood and honor
Should have no share hearts, would they but fat their thoughts
With this grand man reason; reason and respect
Make lovers pale, and lusthhoodl deject.
Hec. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost
The holding.
Tro. What is she worth, but as 'ts valued!
Hec. But value dwells not in particular will,
It holds his estimate and dignity
As well wherein 's precious of itself
As in the possessor; his mad folly,
To mix the service greater than the god,
And the will do'ts, that is attributable
To what incessantly itself affects,
Without some image of the affected merit.
And 'tis but to take today a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will:
My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
Two branded pilots twat the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment; How may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wife! I chose! there can be no evasion to blench from this, and to stand firm by honor:
We cannot back the silks upon the merchant,
When we have sold them; nor the remainder stands
We do not think in unrespective sieve
Because we now are full. It was thought meet,
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks;
Your breath with full consent belched his sails;
The double oar of Paris (the old one) took a stroke,
And did him service: he touch'd the ports desir'd;
And, for an old aunt, whom the Greeks held captive,
He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness
Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the morning.
Why keep we her! the grecians keep our aunt:
Is it not more worth keeping till war or peace, go,
If you'll confess, he brought home noble prize,
(As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands, go,
And cry'd—Inestimable! why do you now
• Teatro. • Caution. • shriek, or fly off.
• Priam's sister, Helenone.

The issue of your proper wisdom rate;
And do a deed that fortunate never did,
Be not the estimation which you priz'd
Richer than sea or land! Of that must base
That we have stolen what we do to keep to fail,
But, thieves unworthy of a thing so stolen,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We do to warrant it native! but
Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!
Pri. What noise! what shriek is this?
Cas. Tie our next bearer. I do know her voice.
Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!
Hec. It is Cassandra.

Enter Cassandra, roaring.
Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes
And I will fill them with prophetic tears!
Hec. Peace, sister, peace,
Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age, and wrinkled elders,
Soft infancy, that nothing can but cry,
Add to my clamors! let us pray betimes
A money of that mass of morn to come.
Cry, Trojans, cry! practice your eyes with tears!
Tro. Must not be, or goodly Ilium stand;
Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all.
Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen and a woe;
Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go. [Exit.]
Hec. Not you! Troilus, do not these high strains
Of divination in our sister work
Some touches of remorse! or is your blood
So madly heated, that no discourses of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?
Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
And no other than event doth form it;
Nor once decree the courage of our minds
Because Cassandra's mad; her brain-sick rapture
Cannot disturb the goodness of a reason.
What hath her several honors all engaged
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons! And dave forbid, there should be done amongst us
Such things as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for and maintain!
Par. Else might the world convince of levity
As well my undertakings as your counsels;
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so perilous an act:
For what, alas, can these my single arms
What propagation! is in one man's valor
That stand the push and emnity of those
This would excite; Yet, protest, were I alone to pass the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should never retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights!
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant, is no praise at all.
Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasures such a beauty bristles with it;
But I would have the soul of her fair rape
Wiped off, for honorable keeping her.
What treason were it to the runasck'd queen,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up,
In terms of seduction! Can it be,
That so degenerate a strain as this,
Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?
There's not the nearest sprit on our party,
Without a heart to do, or word to do her wrong;
When Helen is deflected; nor none so noble,
Whose life were left bestow'd, or death unclaimed,
Where Helen is the subject; then, I say,
We'll war very for her, whom we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.
Hec. Paris, and Troilus, you have both said well.
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have good;—but superficially; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to hear moral subject:
• Uproot, change to a worse state.
• Convict.
• Defenc.
• Commented.
The reasons, you allege, do more conduc
To the hot passion of dis tempter'd blood,
Than your cool reason doth.
'Twixt right and wrong; For pleasure, and re
Have cars more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision.
Nature enforces,
All does be render'd to their owners; Now
What needeth debt in all humanity,
Than wise is to the husband if this law
Of men be corrupted through ambition:
And that great minds, of partial indulgence
To their beneficent wills, resist the same;
There found is a rash with well-ordered nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen then be wise to Sparta's king,—
As is well known she is,—these minds
Of nature, and of nations, speak aloud
To have her back return'd: This to persist
In doing wrong, extenuates no wrong,
But makes it much more heavy, Hector's opinion
Is this, in way of truth; yet notwithstanding,
My sprightly brethren, I propound't to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence
Upon our joint and several dignities.

Troy. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design;
Were it not glory that we more affected,
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in their defence.
But, worthy Hector, She is a theme of honor and renown,
A spur to valiant and manacous deeds;
Whose present courage may heat down our foes,
And come, in time to come, extenuate us.
For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promised glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.

Hec. I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Parnassus. —
I have a raising challenge sent amongst
Those generous nobles of the Greeks;
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits;
I was advertld, their great general slept,
Whilst emulation in the army crept:
Thus, I presume, will wake him. [Exit.

Enter Thersites.

Thers. How now, Thersites! What, lost in the labyrinth of thy fancy! Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: 0 Wife!
Would you know that I could bear him, whilst he rated at me: 'Stoop, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issuing of my spavined excrections. Then there's Achilles, he's a man of men. If Troy two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-carter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove the king of gods, and, Mercury, lose all the serpent-craft of thy Colchus: if ye take not that little less than a little wit from them that have 'em which short-armed ignorance itself knows is no abundant supply, it will not in his time, by cunning, deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy iron, and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the white-foot'd, or, rather, the brown-soiled! for that, methinks, is the curse dependent on those that war for a placket. I have said my prayers; and devil, capsy, say Amen. —What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites! Good Thersites, come in and talk.

Thers. If I could have remembered a glib counter sent, thou mightst not have slipped out of my contemplation; but it is no matter; I thyself upon thy master's side! The common praise of woolly folly and ignorance, to time in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee!
Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death; then if she, that lays thee out, says thou

The wand of Mercury, which is wrested with serpents.

art a fair course, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but lazers. Amen. —Where's Achilles to make up a tree determination?

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Thers. Ay; The heavens hear me!

Enter ACHILLES.

Ach. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Ach. Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come; what's Agamemnon?

Thers. Thy commander, Achilles;—Then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites; Then tell me, I pray thee, if this were not thy house?

Thers. Thy knower, Patroclus; Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayst tell, that knowest.

Ach. O, tell, tell.

Thers. I'll decline the whole question, Agamemnon command's Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower, and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. Who's a fool?

Thers. Peace, fool! I have not done.

Ach. He is a privileged man,—Proced, Thersites.

Thers. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool,
Thersites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Ach. Derive this; come.

Thers. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command
Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus a fool positive.

Patr. Who's a fool?

Thers. Make that demand of the provcr.—It suffices me, thou art. Look you, who comes here!

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and Ajax.

Ach. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody:—Come in with me, Thersites.

Thers. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is, a cuckold, and a whore; A good quarrel, to draw enmous act-tions, and bleed to death upon. Now the dry ser-pigo on the subject I and war, and lecher, confound all!

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. With his tent; but I disposs'd, my lord.

Ach. Let it be known to him that we are here;
He shent our messengers; and we lay by
Our appertainments—visiting of him:
Let him make his last performance, he think
We dare not move the question of our place, or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit. Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent; he is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favor the man;
but, by my head, 'tis pride: But why, why let him show us a cause.—A word, my lord.

[Take's Agamemnon aside.

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulyss. He hate'st; for Ajax last disdigned his foot from him.

Nest. Who? Thersites!

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument?

Ulyss. No; you see, he is his argument, that has his argument; Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more our wish, than their faction.; But it was a strong com-posture, a foot could dismount.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily unrive. Here comes Patroclus.

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for course: his legs are legs for necessity, not for }durance.

Scene III.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA. 511

Patr. Achilles bids me say—he is much sorry, if anything more than your sport and pleasure did move your greatness, and this noble state, to call you hence? I hope he does not.

But, for your health and your digestion's sake, An after-dinner's breath.

Agam. Hear you, Patrokus:—

We are too well acquainted with your answers:

But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Much attribute he hath; and much the reason Wherein he is belied: yet all the world— Not virtuously on his own part beheld,— Do, in our eyes, begin to lose their gloss;

Ye, like fair fruit in an unharmful dish, And ready to rot untasted. Go and tell him We come to speak with him: And you shall not sin.

If you do say—we think him over-prond,

And under-sinned; in self-assumption greater,

Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself.

Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on;

Disclose the holy strength of their command,

And underwrite it in an observing kind:

His humorous predominance; yea, watch

His petty lures: is he, indeed, so

The passage and whole carriage of this action

Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this; and add,

That, if he hold his price so much, We'll love him; but to him, as an engine

Not portable, he under this report—

Bring action hither, thus cannot go to war:

A stirring dwarf we do allowance; give him a tavern-gam with so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently.

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied,

We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter.

[Exit ULYSSES.

Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is,

He is so much! Do you not think, he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say—

he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax: you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind's the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the later. He that is proud, eats up himself, -and will be his own deceiver, his own chronicler; and whatever praiseth itself, in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engraving of vipers.

Aes. And yet he loves himself: Is it not strange?

[Exit.

Re-enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none; but carries on the stream of his dispose, Without observance or respect of any,

In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request, Untent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only,

He may regard:

Possess'd he is with greatness;

And speaks not to himself, but with a pride

That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth

Holds in his blood with and not discourse,

That twixt his mental and his active parts,

Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,

And batters down himself: What should I say?

He is so pugnacious, that the death-tokens of it

Cry—No recovery.

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.

Dear lord, so you and greet him in his tent;

Tis said, he holds you well; and will be led, At your request, a little from himself.

* Fats of honey. * Approbation.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!

We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes

When they go from Achilles: Shall the proud lord

That bastes his arrogance with his own seam;

And never suffers matter of the world

Enter his thoughts,—save such as do revolve

And ruminate himself,—shall he be wash'd up

Of that we hold an idol more than he? No,

This thricely worthy and right valiant lord

Must not so stare his palm, nobly acquire,

Nor, by my will, assignate his merit,

As sumptuously as Achilles is,

By going to Achilles:

That to endure his fat—already pride;

And add more to his calumny.

This lord go to him: Jupiter, forbid,

And say in thunder—Achilles go to him.

Nest. O, this is well; he raises the vein of him.

Div. And how his silence drinks up this appearance?

Ajax. If I go to him, with my arm'd fist I'll push him

Over the face.

Agam. No, no, you shall not go.

Ajax. An he be proud with me, I'll pheeze his pride:

Let me go to him.

Ulyss. He will not hear the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.

Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow.

Nest. How he describes Himself?

Ajax. Can he not be sociable?

Ulyss. The raven.

Chides blackness.

Ajax. I will let his honors blood.

Ajax. He'll be physician, that should be the patient.

Ajax. An all men were a my mind,

Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion.

Ajax. He should not hear it so;

He should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. An 'twould, you'd carry half.

Ulyss. He'd have ten shares.

Ajax. I'll knead him, I will make him supple.

Nest. He's not yet thorough warm: force him with praises:

Pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry.

Ulyss. He'd be lord, you fed too much on this disease.

[To AGAMEMNON.

Nest. O noble general, do not do so.

Div. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Ajax. Who, that thus naming of him does him harm.

Here is a man—but 'tis before his face; I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

He is not enmous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A valiant person, dog, that shall palter thus with us!

I would, he were a Trojan!

Nest. Would it were in Ajax now— What a vice

Ulyss. If he were proud?

Div. Or covetous of praise?

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne!

Div. Or strange, or self-affected?

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure;

Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee such

Thick and thickly stam'd by thy tutor, and thy parts of nature

Three-famed, beyond all creation;

But that he deserv'd thy arms to fight,

Let Mars divide eternity in twain,

And give to each: and, for thy vigor,

Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield:

To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,

Which, like a bourn, a pole, a shore, confines

Thy spacious and divided parts: Here's Nestor,—

Instructed by the antiquary times,

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant.

Par. Friend! you! pray you, a word: Do not you follow the young lord Paris?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

Par. You do depend upon him, I mean?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon that lord.

Par. You depend upon a noble gentleman;

I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!

Par. You know, me do you not?

Serv. Faith, sir, superficially.

Par. Friend, know me better; I am the lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope I shall know your honor better.

Par. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace.

Pan. Grace! not so, friend; honor and lordship are my titles:—What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir; it is music in parts.

Par. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Par. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Par. At whose instance, fair friend?

Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.

Par. Command, I mean, friend.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Par. Friend, we understand not one another; I am too courteys, and thou art too cunning: At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That's not, indeed, sir. Marry, sir, at the request of Paris my lord, who is there in person; with him the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul.

Par. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen; Could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not sense enough to come to speak with Paris from the prince Troilus: I will make a compli- mental assault upon him, for my business sweet.

Serv. Sudden business! there's a stewed phrase, indeed!

Enter Paris and Helen, attended.

Par. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them: especially to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillow.

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.

—Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Par. You have broke it, cousin; and, by my life, you shall make it whole again; you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance:—Nell, he is full of harmony.

Par. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. 0 sir,—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.

Par. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in fact.

Par. I have business to my lord, dear queen;—

My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing certainly.

Par. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with

*  *  *

Parts of a song.

Keeps thicket. Please it our great general.

To call together all his state of war;

French kings are come to Troy: To-morrow,

We must with all our main of power stand fast;

And here's a lord,—come knights from east to west.

And curl their flowers Ajax shall cope the best.

Again, go we to council. Let Achilles sleep:

Light boats sail swift, though greater hulls draw deep.

[Exeunt.]

me.—But (marry) thus, my lord.—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus,—

Helen. My lord Pandarus! hark-sweet queen?

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to!—commends himself most affectingly to you.

Helen. You shall not rob us out of our melody; if you do, our melancholy upon your head!

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen, I faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad, is a sour offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words, no, no.—And, my lord, he desires you, that, if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What staying is my sweet queen,—my very sweet queen!

Par. What exploit's in hand! where sups he to-night?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Par. I'll lay my life, with my disposè Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter, you are wide; come, your disposè is sick.

Par. Well, and yet my excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say —Cressida! no, your poor disposè's sick.

Par. I say.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy!—Come, give me an instrument. Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My noise is horribly in love with a thing you have; sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my lord Paris.

Par. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twin.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Where, come, I'll hear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, praythce now! By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love; this love will undo us all. O, Copid, Cupid, Cupid!

Par. Love! ay, that it shall, I faith.

Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so:

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, oh, love's bow

Shooteth back and doe:

The shaft confoundst,

Not that it wounds,

But sickles still the sere.

These lovers cry—Oh! ha! they die!—

Yet that which seems the wound to kill,

Dost turn oh! oh! to ha! to ha! he!

So dying love lives still—

Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!

Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Hey ho!

Helen. In love, in faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Par. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that

Wife of your mark.
breeds hot blood and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds?—Why, they are viper-blood, venomous viper-blood!—Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I may have armed to-night, but my Neil would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something;—you know all, you Pandaruses.

Pan. Why then not honest-sweet queen,—I long to hear how they sped to-day,—You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pand. Ye well, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen.

[Exit Pan.]—[A Retreat sounded.]

Par. They are come from field; let us to Priam's hall.

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo you.

To help unarm our Hector; his stubborn buckles, With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd, Shall more obey, than to the edge of steel, Or force of Greekish sinews: you shall do more Than all the isle's kings, disarray great Hector.

Helen. Twill make us proud to be his servant,

Paris: Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty, Gives us more palm in beauty than we have; Yea, overshrines ourself.

Pan. Sweet, above thought I love thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Pandarús's Orchard.

Enter PANDARUS and a Servant, meeting.

Pan. How now! where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's.

Serv. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarus: I slalk about her door, Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks Staring and staring at the woful wafters: O, be thou my Charon, and give me swift transportation to those fields, Where I may wallow in the lily beds Propos'd for the deserter! O gentle Pandarus, From Cupid's brush take off his painted wings, And fly with me to Cressida!

Pan. Walk here i' the orchard. I'll bring her straight. [Exit Pandarus.]

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirls me round. The imaginary relish is so sweet

That it enchants my sense; What will it be,
When that the watery palate tastes mixed
Love's three-reputed nectar! I death, I fear me; Swooning destruction: or some joy too fine,
Too subtle-potent, tuned too sharp in sweetness,
For the capacity of my roder powers: I fear it much; and I do fear besides,
That I shall lose distinction in my joys;
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Enter PANDARUS.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight; you must be witty now. She doth so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were fray'd with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest vilain;—she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en arrow.

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:

My heart beats thicker than a foweson pulse; And all the powers do theirbestowing joys,
Like vassalage at unaware's encountering;
The eye of majesty.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a blemish in the skin;—here she is now; swear she loves to the hour, that you have sworn to me.—What, are you gone again! you must be watch'd ere you be made tame, now!—Come, come, come, your ways; come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you the fills.—Why do you pot speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Also, the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on and kiss the mistress. How now! a kiss in secret! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet.—Nay, you shall touch her eyes; ere I part you. The Ialcon as the tercel, for all the ducks of the river: go to, go to.

Tro. You have benefit of all words, lady;—Paxdarus, the richer with hearts, give her heed: but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, bidding again? Here's

In whose theatres the parties interchangeably
Come in, come in; I'll go get a fire.

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wished me thus?

Cres. Wished, my lord!—The gods grant!—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abraision? What too curious dress copies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love!

Cres. More dregs than water, if my tears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils cherubins: they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason can make at fear to fear: To fear the worst, oft cures the worst.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither!

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings: when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, cat-rocks, tame tigers: thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough, than be put to undergo many difficulties imposed. This is the monstrously in love,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd: that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions, and the act of furies, are they not monsters?

Tro. Ah, you say truly; and when two such enmities us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare, till merit crown it: no perfection in reverence shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert before his birth; and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be Such to Cressida, as what envy can say worst, shall be a mock for his truth: and what truth can speak truer, not more than Troilus!

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that; if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me: Be true to my lord: if he chide, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's words are my eth.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too; our kindred, though they be long ere they are woaded, they are constant, being won; they are ours, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart.

Prince Troilus, I have now'd you night and day For many a month; my joys are too much.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win? Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord, With the first glance that ever—Fardon me!—
If I counter much, you will play the tyrant.

Shakspeare's.
I love you now; but not, till now, so much
But I must master it:—in faith, I lie;
My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown
Too headstrong for their mother: See, we foes!
We have a babbler! who shall be gone to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?
But, though I lov’d you well, I wou’d you not;
And yet, good faith, I wish’d myself a man;
Or that we women had no art of speech
Of speaking first. Sweet, had I held my tongue;
For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak
The worse for it, I shall repent. See, see your silence,
Cunning in dambusters, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel: Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music Issue thence.

Pam. Pretty faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me;
’Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kiss:
I am ashamed:—O heavens! what have I done!—
For this time I shall take leave of my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid.

Pam. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning.

Cres. Fray you, content you.

Tro. What Occurs you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

You cannot shun Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try,
I have a kind of self resides with you;
But by an unknown self: that it should leave, To be another’s fool. I would be gone.
Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak, that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show more craft Than love;
And fell so roundly to a large confession, To angle for your thoughts: But you are wise, Or else you love not; for to be wise and love,
Exceeds man’s might: that dwells with gods above.

Tro, 0, that I thought it could be in a woman,
[As, if I can, I will presume in your absence, To feed for aye’ her lamp and flames of love
To keep her constancy in plight and youth.
Our own beauty’s outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter than blood decays;
Or, that persuasion could but thus convince me,—
That my integrity and truth to you Might be all knit together with the match, and weight Of such a winnow’d purity in love;
How were I then upheld! but alas,
I am as true as truth’s simplicity.
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I’ll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight,
When right with right wars, who shall be most right?

True swains in love, shall, in the world to come, Approve their truth by Troilus; when their rhymes Fall upon the gift of earth, and big compare, Want smilies, truth tired with iteration.

As true as steel, as plантage to the moon,
Sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
Iron to adamant, as earth to earth—
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth’s authentic author to be cited,
As true as Troilus shall crown up the verse,
And multiply the numbers.

Prophecy may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself.
When the waterdrops have wearied the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow’d cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dust and ashes; yet let memory,
From false to false, among false maidens in love,
Upbraid my falsehood! when they have said—as false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth.
As fox to lamb, as wolf to Hector’s call,
Fard to the head, or stepdame to her son.
Yet, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
As false as Crocod.

Pan. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it!
I’ll be the witness;—here, I hold your hand; here, my cousin’s. If ever you prove false one to another,

Ever.

Comparison.

Met with and equaled.

Conclude.

since I have taken such pains to bring you together,
Let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world’s end after my name, call them all—Pandars: let all impostors meet be Troiluses, all false women Creseds, and all brokers-between Pandars! say, amen. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber and a bed, which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away.

And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here, Bed, chamber, Pandar, to provide this gear!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomed, Nestor, Ajax, Menelaus, and Calchas.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,
The advantage of the time prompts me aloud,
To call for recompense. Appoint it to your mind,
That, through the sight I bear in things, to love,
I have abandon’d Troy, let my possession,
Incur’d a traitor’s name; exposed myself,
From certain and possessed’ conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes, sequent’ring from me all
That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition,
Made tame and most familiar to my nature;
And here to do your service, am I come.

As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give now a little benefit.

Of those many registers I promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

Again. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan! make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner call’d Antenor,
Yesterday took; Troy holds him very dear.
Doth have you? (often have you thanks therefore)
Beseech my hand, and in right great exchange,
Whom Troy hath still denied: But this Antenor,
I know, is such a wretch in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slack,
Wanting his management: and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,
In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter: and her presence
Shall quit strike off all service I have done,
In most accepted pain.

Again. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither? Calchas shall have
What he requests of us.—Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange!

Withal, bring word—if Hector will to-morrow
Be anscest with his challenge: Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake; and ’tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus, before their Tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands’t the entrance of his tent;—
Please it our general to pass strangely? by him,
As if it were forgot; and princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him:
I will come last: ’Tis like, he’ll question me,
Why such implausive eyes are bent, why turn’d on him:
If so, I have decision med’cable,
To use both your strange appearance and pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink;
It may do good: pride hath no other glass
To show itself, but pride; for supple knees
Feed a but contemptible, and it the proud man’s feed.

Again. We’ll execute your purpose, and put on
A form of strangeness as we pass along;—
So do each lord; and either greet him not,
But by a word, if word shall be thought more
Than if not look’d on, I will lead the way.

Ach. What, comes the general to speak with me?

You know my mind, I’ll fight no more against Troy.

Again. What says Achilles? would he augur with us?

Nest. I pray you, my lord, augur with the general?

Ach. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Again. The better.

[Exeunt Agamemnon and Nestor.

Like a stranger.
Scene III. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Achil. Good day, good day.
Achil. What, does the euckold scora me?
Ajax. How now, Patroclus?
Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.
Ajax. Ha!
Achil. Good morrow.
Ajax. Ay, and good next day too.

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achillis?
Patr. They pass by strangely: they were used to bend;
To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
To come as humbly as they used to creep
To holy altars.
What, am I poor of late?
This certain, greatness, once fall'n out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too: What the declin'd is,
He shall as soon read in the eyes of others,
As feel in mind of all the men, like butterflies.
Show not their mealy wings but to the summer;
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honor; but honor for those honors
That are without him, as place, riches, favor,
Prizes of accident as oft as merit:
When which they fall, as being slippery standers,
The hope that they can claim on them as slippery too,
Do one pluck down another, and too: But
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends: I do enjoy
All the old gild that did possess,
See these old men's looks; who do, methinks, find out
Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses; I'll interrupt his reading.
How now, Ulysses?
Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son!
Achil. What are you reading?
Ulyss. A strange friend here
Writes me, that man—how dearly ever parted,?
How much in having, or without, or, in—
Can any eye but that into which he hath,
Not feels what he owes, but by reflection;
As when his virtues shining upon others
Heat them, and they return that heat again
To the first giver.
Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses,
The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself to the beholder with the eye itself;
(That most pure spirit of sense) beheld itself,
Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos'd
Such as each other with each other form.
For speculation turns not to itself,
Till it hath traffill'd, and is married there
Where it may see itself: this is not strange at all.
Ulysses. I do not strain at the position,
It is familiar: but at the author's spirit:
Who, in his circumstance, expressly proves—
That no man is the lord of any thing,
(Two men and of all there be much consisting,
Till it communicate his parts to others:
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught.
Till he behold them form'd in the applause
Where they are extended, which, like an arch re-verberates
The voice again; or like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His beams and his beams; I was much kept in this;
And apprehend here immediately
The unknown Ajax.
Ajax. What heaven, a man there is! a very horse;
That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are,
Most abject in regard, and dear in use!
What things again must dear in the esteem,
And be most rul'd now shall be abnor-mow,
An act that very chance doth throw upon him,
Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do,
When what the wind leaves to do!
How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
Whiles others play the idiots in her eyes!
How one man eats into another's pride,
Where pride is lasting in his wayward heart.
To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
They clap the stubber Ajax on the shoulder;—
* Excellently endowed.
* Detail of argument.

As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking.
Achil. I do believe it: for they pass'd by me,
As misers do by beggars; neither gave to me
A word, nor look: What are my deeds forgot?
Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts aims for oblivion.
A great-siz'd murder of ingratiations;
Those small deeds are good deeds past: which are devour'd
As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done: Perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps how bright; to have done is to hang
Quite out of fashion, like a rusty nail
In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;
For honor travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but good heart: keep on the path;
For emulation hath a thousand sons,
That one by one pursue: if you give way,
or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an outer'd tide they all rush by,
And leave you hundmost:
Or, like a fallant horse fallen in first rank,
Die there for pavement to the abject rear,
O'er-run and trampled on: Then what they do in present,
Though less than yours in past, most o'ertop yours:
For time and carriage is all: That slightly
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand;
And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the corner: Welcome ever smiles,
And largess goes out sighing. O, let not virtue seek Remuneration for the thing it was;
For beauty, wit,
High birth, vicar of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendskip, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time,
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,—
That all, with our consent, praise then as they like the gods;
Though they are made and moulded of things past;
And give to dust, that is a little gill,
More laud than gift o'er-dusted.
The present eye best tests the present object:
Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Grecians begin to worship Ajax:
Since things in motion sooner catch the eye,
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
And still it might; and yet it may again,
If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in thy tent,
Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made envious musions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drive great Mars to faction.
Achil. Of this my privacy
I have strong reasons.
Ulyss. The reasons are more polit and herculeal:
'Tis known, Achillis, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.
Achil. Ha! known!
Ulyss. Is that a wonder!
Achil. The providence that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Plutus' gold;
Finds bottom in the uncomprehensible seas;
Keeps plotted with the act, and almost-born gawd,
Does thoughts unvail'd, and in their dumb cradles.
There is a mystery [with whom relation
Durst never meddle] in the soul of state;
Which hath an operation more divine
Than breath, or pen, can give express to;
All the commerce that you have had with Troy,
As perfectly ours, as yours, my lord;
And better would it suit Achillis much.
To throw down Hector, than Polyxena;
But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home,
When fate unseal'd his hands so rich a trump;
And all the Grecian girls shall tripping sing—
Great Hector's sister did Achillis win;
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.
Farewell, Achillis, with your love speak;
The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break.
[Exit.

Patr. To this effect, Achillis, have I mov'd you:
A woman impudent and mannish grown
* New-fashioned toys.
* The transport of the deities to combat on either side.
* Polyxena.
* Friend.
Is not more loath'd than an enemy man.

In time of action, I stand condemn'd for this;

They think, my little stomach to the war,
And your great love to me, restrains you thus;
Sweet Troilus, not yourself; and the weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his ignoble hold,
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air.

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

Patr. Ay; and, perhaps, receive much honor by him.

Achil. I see, my reputation is at stake;

My fame is shrewdly gird'd.

Patr. O, then beware!

Those wounds heall'd, that men do give themselves:

Omission to do which is necessary
Seals a commission to a blank of danger;

And danger, like an azure, subtly mounts
Even then when we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go tell Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus:

I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
To invite the Trojan lords after the combat,
To see us here unarmed: I have a woman's longing,
An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his deeds of peace;
To talk with him, and to behold his visage
Even to my full of view. A labor save'd!

Enter Thersites.

Ther. A wonder!

Achil. What? Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for himself.

Achil. How so? Ther. Do you think singly tomorrow with Hector;

And is so prophetically proud of an heroic cudgelling,
That he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why, he walks up and down like a peacock,
A stride, and a stand: ruminates, like an hostess,
That hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bates his lip with a politic regard,
As who should say—there were wit in this head, an 'twould out; and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's tendone for ever; for Hector break not his neck: the combat, he'll break it himself in vain glory. He knows not me: I said, Good-morrow, Ajax; and he replies, Thanks, Agamemnon.

What heart can the man, that takes me for the general? He has grown a very hand-bash, language-less, a monster. A plague of opinion! A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him,

Thersites.

Ther. No, no, I! why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not answering; speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in his arars. I will put on his presence; let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: Tell him—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax, to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe conduct for his person, of the ungracious and most ill-fated six, or seven times honored captain general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this Patr. To love bless great Ajax!

Ther. Humph! Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles.—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you, to invite Hector to his tent?

Ther. H Humph! Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon!

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha! Patr. What say you to it? Ther. God be wi you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Ajax is at the fair day, by eleven o'clock it shall go one way or other; howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this time, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out of tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knock'd out his brains, I know not: But, I am sure, none; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make callings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stir'd; And I myself set not the bottom of it. [Exit Achilles and Patroclus.

Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather a tick in a sleeve, than such a valiant ignorance.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE 1.—Troy. A Street.

Enter, at one side, Eneas and Servant, with a Torch; at the other, Paris, Demophoës, Antenor, Diomedes, and others, with Torches.

Paris. See, ho! who's that there?

Diomed. 'Tis the lord Eneas. Paris. Is the prince there in person?—

Had I so good occasion to be long.

As you, prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business.

Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Diomed. That's my mind too.—Good morrow, lord Eneas.

Paris. A valiant Greek, Eneas; take his hand: Witness the process of your speech, wherein

You told—how Diomed, a whole week by days, had haunt you in the field.

Eneas. Health to you, valiant, sir; during all question of the gentle trance:

But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance,

As heart can think, or courage execute.

Diomed. The one and other Diomed embraces.

Our bloods are low in calm; and, so long, health:

But when contention and occasion meet,

By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life,
With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Eneas. And thou shalt hunt a lion that will fly
With his face backward.—In humane gentleness,

Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchises life,

* Conversation.

Welcome, indeed! By Venus' hand I swear,

No man alive can love, in such a sort,

The thing he means to kill, more excellently.

Dios. We sympathize Jove, let Eneas live,

To my sword his fate be not the glory,

A thousand complete courses of the sun!

But, in mine envious honor, let him die,

With every joint a wound: and that to-morrow!

Eneas. We know each other well.

Dios. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despicable gentle greeting.

The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—

What business, lord, so early!

Eneas. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not.

Paris. His purpose meets you: 'Twas to bring this Greek.

To Calchas' house; and there to render him,

For the enraged Antenor, the fair Cressida:

Let's have your company; or, if you please,

Haste there before us: I constantly do think,

(Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge,) My brother Troilus lodges there to-night;

Rouse him, and give him note of our approach,

With the same quality here: I fear We shall be much unwelcome.

Eneas. There I assure you Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece, Then Cressida borne from Troy.

* Lute-strings made of catgut.

* Intelligent.
SCENE II.—Court before the House of Pandarus.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself; the morn is cold.
Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down.

He shall unboil the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not:
To bed, to bed: Sleep kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses,
As infants' empty of all thought.

Cres. Good morrow then.

Tro. Pr'ythee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you aweary of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Wear out the lark, hath rous'd the rumbus' crowns,
And dressing night will hide our joys no longer,
Would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief,
With wings more momentary-swift than thought.
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. You men will never tarry,—

O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off,
And then he would have tarried. Hark! there's one up.

Pan. [Within.] What, are all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mockning;
I shall have such a life.

Pan. How now, how now; how do maiden-wed?—
Here, you maid! where's my cousin Cressid?—
Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle.
You bring me to do, and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what! to do what!—let her say what;
what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come; beseech your heart! you'll never be good,
Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchia!—has not slept to-night! would be not,

1 Noisy. 2 To do is here used in a wanton sense.
     3 An Italian word for poor fool.
     4 A naughty man, let it sleep! a bugbear take him!
     5 Knocking.

Cres. Did I not tell you!—would he were
Knock'd o' the head!—

Who's that at door! good uncle, go and see.

My lord, come you again into my chamber:
You smile and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!—

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd, I think of no such thing.—

Knocking.

How earnestly they knock! pray you, come in;
I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exit Troilus and Cressida.

Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there! what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now! what's the matter!

Enter Aneas.

Ane. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there! my lord! Aneas! By my troth, I knew ye not: what news with you so early!

Cres. Did I not tell you!—would he were
Knock'd o' the head!—

Who's that at door! good uncle, go and see.

My lord, come you again into my chamber:
You smile and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!—

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd, I think of no such thing.—

Knocking.

How earnestly they knock! pray you, come in;
I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exit Troilus and Cressida.

Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there! what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now! what's the matter!

As Pandarus is going out, enter Troilus.

Tro. How now! what's the matter?—

Ane. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you.
My master is so rash! there is at hand Paris your brother, and Diomedes, the Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith, ere the first sacrifice within this hour, we must give up to Diomedes' hand the lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Ane. By Priam, and the general state of Troy;
They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!
I will go meet them: and, my lord, Aneas,
We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Ane. My lord, you are a good, true lord; the secrets of nature Have not more gift in taciturnity.

[Exit Troilus and Aneas.

Pan. Is I possible! no sooner got, but lost! The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad.
A plague upon Antenor, I would they had broke's neck!

Enter Cressida.

Cres. How now! What is the matter? Who was here!

Pan. Ah, ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord gone?
Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art changed for Antenor; thou must to thy lord, and I am gone from Troy; 'twill be his death: 'twill be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.
Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father; I know no touch of consanguinity.

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me, As the sweet Troilus.—O you gods divine!

Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood, If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death, Do to this body what extremities you can;

1 Haughty. 2 Some or feeling of relationship.
Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root!
[Curtain.]

Cres. I must then to the Greeks.

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woul'd Cressid amongst the merry Greeks! When shall we see her?

Tro. Hear me, my love! Be thou but true of heart.

Cres. I true! how now! what wicked deems is this?

Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly, for it is parting from us:
I speak not, be thou true, as fearing thee;
For I will throw my glove to death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart:
But, be thou true, say I, to fashion in
My sequent protestation: be thou true,
And I will see thee.

Cres. O, you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers
As infinite as imminent, but, I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give them nightly visitation.
But yet, be true.

Cres. O heavens!—be true again?

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love;
The Grecian youths are full of quality?
They're loving, well compos'd, with gifts of nature flowing,
And suit'd o'er with arts and exercise;
How novelty may move, and parts with person,
Alas, a kind of godly jealousy
(Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin)
Makes me alarms.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain then?
In this I do not call your faith in question,
So mainly as my merit; I cannot sing,
Nor hell the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games, fair virtues all,
To which the Grecians are most prompt and preg-
But I can tell, that in each grace of these
There lurks a still and dumd-boseous devil,
That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.
Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No.

But something may be done, that we will not;
And some devices to ourselves,
When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their changeable potentie.

[Enter .

Tro. Come, kiss, and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus?

Tro. Good brother, come you hither;
And bring ., and the Grecian with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:
While others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch more simplicity;
Whilst some with cunning geld their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
Fear not my truth; the moral of my wit
Is—plain, and true,—there's all the reach of it.

[Enter , .

Cres. Come! to him that instantly must die,—
Bid them have patience: she shall come anon.

[Exit.]

But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very centre of the earth,
Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in, and weep:

Pan. Do, do.

Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks;
Crack my heart with sobs, and break my heart
With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Before Pandar's House.

Enter PARIS, TROILUS, ENESIAS, DEIPHOBUS, ASTENOR, and DIOMEDES.

Par. It is great morning; and the hour prefix'd
Of her delivery to this valiant Greek
Cannot fast upon.—Good my brother Troilus,
Tell you the lady what she is to do,
And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk into her house;
I'll bring her to the Grecian presently:
And to his hand when I deliver her,
Think it an altar, and thy brother Troilus
O'ertake there offering to it his own heart. [Exit.]

Par. I know what 'tis to love;
And 'would, as I shall pity, I could help!—
Please you, walk in, my lords.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Pandar's House.

Enter PANHARIDES and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?
The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violenctly in a sense as strong
As that which causeth it: How can I moderate it?
If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like alayment could I give my grief:
My mind admits no qualifyng dress;
No more my grief in such a precious loss.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes.—Ah, sweet ducks:

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus! [Embracing him]

Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too: O heart! as the goodly saying is,—

— O heart, 0 heavy heart!—

— Why sighs thou without breaking?

Cres. What answer he gives again,

— Because thou canst not ease thy smart,

By friendship, nor by speaking.

There never was a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse; we see it, we see it.—How now, lambs!

Cres. I love thee, Troilus, in some sort of purity,
That the blest gods—as angry with my fancy,
More bright in zeal than the devotion which
Cold lips blow to their deities—take thee from me.

Pan. Have the gods evey

Pon. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 'tis too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true, that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hatefull truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Tro. From Troy and Troilus. Cres.

Tro. Is it possible?

Cres. And suddenly; where injury of chance
Puts back leave-taking, justly roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all repandure, forcibly prevents
Our lock'd embrasures, strangling our dear vows
Even in the birth of our own laboring breath:
We two, that with so many thousand signs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
With the rude levity and dis-charge of one.
Injuries time now, with a robber's haste,
Crimes his rich thievish up, he knows not how:
As many terraces as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consigns kisses to them,
He fumbles up into a loose alience;
And seants us with a single famish'd kiss,
Distributing his salt of broken tears.

Enr. [Within.] My lord! is the lady ready?

Tro. Har! you are call'd: Some say, the Genius

Cres. Come! to him that instantly must die,—
Bid them have patience: she shall come anon.

[Side.]
Scene V. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA. 519

She is as for high-sounding 'er thy praises, As thou unworthy to be called her servant. I change thee, use her well, even for my charge; For, by the dread Pluto, if thou dost not, Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard, I'll cut thy throat.

Enter. O, be not moved, prince Troilus, Let me be privileged by my place, and message, To be a speaker free; when I am hence, I'll answer to my lusts. And know you, lord, I'll choose my way on chance, not my own worth. She shall be priz'd; but that you say—be't so, I'll speak it in my spirit and honor, no.

Tro. Come, to the port.—'Tis Tros will tell thee, Diomed. This is ourßh shall off myself to hide thy head, I shall cry thee hence. Give me thy hand; and, as we walk, To our own selves bend we our needful talk. [Exeunt TROILUS, CRESSIDA, and DIOMED. (Trumpet heard.)

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Enr. How have we spent this morning? The prince most think me tardy and remiss, That swore to ride before him to the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus fault: Come, come to the field with him.

Din. Let us remain ready straight.

Enr. Yea, with a bridge's fresh alacrity, Let us address to tend on Hector's heels. The glory of our Troy doth this day lie, On his fair weight and single chivalry. [Exeunt.

Scene V.—The Grecian Camp. Lists set out.

Enter Ajax, armed; AGAMEMNON, Achilles, PATROCLUS, Menelaus, Ulysses, Nestor, and others.

Ajax. Here art thou in that hour's fresh and fair, Anticipating time with starting courage. Give thy trumpet a loud note to Troy, Then dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air May pierce the head of the great combatant, And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purpose. Now crack thy lungs, and split thy broken pipe: Blow, villain, till thy spangled bias cheek Out-cleave the bow of puff'd Aquilon: Come, stretch thy hand, and let thy crest-sport blood; Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early days, Ajax. Is not you Diomed, with Calchas' daughter?

Ulyss. Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait: He rises on the toe; that spirit of his In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter Diomed, with Cressida.

Ajax. Is this the lady Cressid?

Di. Even she.

Ajax. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady:

Nec. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;

Twere better, were she kiss'd in general.

Nest. And ye courtly counsel I'll begin.

So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady:

Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patroclus. But that's no argument for kissing now: For thus popp'd Paris in his hardihood; And thus held you in your armament;

Ulyss. O deadly gall and theme of all our sores! For which we lose our heads, to gild his horns, Patroclus. The first was Menelaus' kiss; this, mine: Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O, this is trim!

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir; Lady, by your leave.

Cres. In kissing, do you render or receive?

Patroclus. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to live.

The kiss you take is better than you give; Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.

* Pleasure, will.

Cres. You're an odd man; give even or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady! every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true, That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You fill me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn. Ulyss. It was no match, your nail against his horn.—

Men. Sweet lady, be a kiss of you!

Cres. You may.

Ulyss. I do desire it.

Cres. Ulyss. Why, beg then.

Why then, for Venus's sake, give me a kiss.

When Hector was so much again, at his condition.

Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis due.

Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

Din. Lady, a word? I'll bring you to your father. [Dinocrates leads out Cressida.

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulyss. Fye, fye upon her! There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip.

Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out At every joint and motive of her body. 0, these encounterers, so gib of tongue.

This gives a new comer one ear every time, And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts To every ticklish reader! set them down For shallow spoils of opportunity, And daunt them from the scene. [Trumpet within.

All. The Trojans' trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter Hector, armed; Enars, Troilus, and other Trojans with Attendants.

Enars. Haul, all the state of Greece! what shall be done? To him that victory commands? Or do you purpose, A victor shall be known! will you the knights Shall to the edge of all extremity Pursue each other; or shall they be divided By any voice or order of the field? Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Enars. He cares not; he'll obey condition.

Achil. Tis done like Hector; but securely done, A little proudly, and great deal misprising The knight opposition.

Agam. (If not Achilles, sir, What is your name?)

Achil. (If not Achilles, nothing.)

Enars. Therefore Achilles: But, whate'er, know this: In the extremity of great and little, Valor and pride eke themselves in Hector; The one almost as infinite as all, The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well, And that, which looks like pride, is courtesy. This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood: In love with half; half Hector stays at home: Half heart, half hand, half Hector's device to seek This blended knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.

Achil. A maiden battle then?—0, I perceive you.

Re-enter Diomed.

Agam. Here is sir Diomed:—Go, gentle knight, Stand by our Ajax; as you and lord Enars Consent upon the order of their fight, So be it; either to the uttermost, Or else a breath: the combatants being kin, Half stints them there before their words begin. [Ajax and Hector enter the Lists.

Ulyss. They are oppos'd already.

Agam. What is Trojan is that same that looks so bright.

Ulyss. The youngest son of Priam, a true knight; Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word; Speaking in deeds, and dreadful in his tongue; Not soon downbrow'd, and looking provok'd, soon calm'd: His heart and hand both open, and both free; For what he has, he gives; what thinks, he shows; Yet gives the not, till judgment guide his bounty, Nor dignify an impatient or too great breath: Manly as Hector, but more dangerous; For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes To tender objects; but, in heat of action, Is more vindictive than jealous love: They call him Troilus; and on him erect

* Motion.

Breathing, exercises.

* Un suitable to his character.

* Yields, given way.
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector. Thus says Eneas: one that knows the youth
Best, and his inches, and, with private soul
Did in great Troy thus translate him to me.
[Alarum. Hector and Ajax, fight.

Again. They are in action.

Hec. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st;

Awake thee!

Thy blows are well disposed;—there, Ajax!

Dio. You must no more.

[Trumpets cease.

Ene. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet, let us fight again.

Hec. Hector, awake!

Hec. Why, then, will I no more:—

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Peam's seed;
That obligation of our blood forsooth
A gory communion twixt us twain:
Were thy communion Greek and Trojan so,
That you could of a thought have done us all,
And this is Trojan; the sciences of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood
Runs on theaxter  cheek, and this sinster
Bounds in my father's; by Jove multiplett'd,
Thou shoaldst not bear from me a Grecian member.
Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of thee, nor thee the past gory way.
That any drop thou pour'st from thy mother,
My sacred aunt, should mortal sword be drain'd!
Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
By him that thou forsooth, lord Actaeon,
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
Cousin, all honor to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector: This thought too gentle, and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition earned in thy death.

Hec. Not Neoptolemus so mirable,
(On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st O yes cries, This is he) could promise to himself
A thought of added honor born from Hector.

Then would I transport thee from both the sides,
What further thou will do.

Hec. We'll answer it;

The issue is engagement;—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entrails find success,
(As self! I have the chance,) I would desire
My proper causis to our Grecian tents.

Dis. Tis Agamemnon's wish; and great Achilles
Dole to see unsarch'd the valiant Hector.

Hec. Aecus, call my brother Troilus to me:
And signify this loving interview
To the expectation of our Trojan part;
Desire them home,—give me thy hand, my cousin;
I will go eat with thee, and see your knights,

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

Hec. The worthiest of them tell me name by name;
But for Achilles, my own single eyes
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Hec. 0 O, a sight so welcome as to one
That would be nought of such an enemy;
But that's no welcome: Understand I more clear,
What's past, and what's to come, is strayed with furskis.
And formless ruin of oblivion;
But in this extant moment, faith and truth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow brass-drawing
Rods that are great spirit: I have a soul.
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hec. I thank thee, most inquisitive Agamemnon.

Ajax. Great and well-aim'd load of Troy,
No less to thee.

[To Troilus.

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting.

You brave of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

Hec. Whom must we answer!

Men. The noble Meneles,

Hec. O you, my lord! by Mars' his gauntlet,

This must I mock not, that I affect the untraded oath;
Your quiddam wise swears still by Venus' glove:
She's sweet, but bad ye not commended her to you.

Men. Name her without; she's a deadly theme.

Hec. O pardon; I often

*Explain his character. *

*Left. *

*Seldom. *

*Imperial. *

Hec. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,
Laboring for destiny, make cruel way
Through all of Greekish youth: and I have seen thee,
As hot as Perses, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Despairing of his end, and end of his steel.
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' the air,
Not letting it decline on the declin';
That I have said to some my standers-by,
So, Jupiter, generat's lively eye,
And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling: This have I seen;
But the more consummate, still feckless,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grandare;
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars, the captain of us all.
Never like thee: let an old man call thee free;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

*Enters the old Nestor.

Hec. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
That must so long walk hand in hand with time:—
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to claspe thee;

Nest. I would, my arms could match thee in emulation,
As they contend with thee in courtesy.

Hec. I would they could.

Nest. Ha!

By this the bearded, I'd fight with thee to-morrow.
Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time—

Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by us.
Hec. Where is my father, lord Ulysses?

Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Domed in Ilion,
On your Grecian embassy.

Ulyss. Sir, I bethink you then you would excuse
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that perty front your town,
Your towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must be their own feet.

Hec. I must not believe you.

There they stand yet; and modestly I think,
The fate of every Trojan stone would ease
A drop of Grecian blood: The end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.

Ulyss. Not so, to bring to him we live.

Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome:
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.

Achilles. I shall forgetting thee, lord Ulysses, thou!—
Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.

Hec. Is this Achilles?

Achilles. I am Achilles.

Hec. Stand fair, I pray thee; let me look on thee.

Achilles. Behold thy self.

Nay, I have done already.

Achilles. Thou art too brief; I will the second time,
As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb,

Achilles. O, like a look of sport thon'rt read me o'er;
But there's more in me than thou understand st;

Achilles. Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achilles. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body
Shall I destroy him? whether there, or there? or there?
That I may give the local wound a name;
And make distinct the very breach whereout
Hector shall forget still thee, lord Ulysses, thou!—

Hec. Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.

Hec. Is this Achilles?

Achilles. I am Achilles.

Hec. Stand fair, I pray thee; let me look on thee.

Achilles. Behold thy self.

Hec. O, like a look of sport thon'rt read me o'er;
But there's more in me than thou understand st;

Achilles. Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achilles. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body.
ACT V. SCENE I.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Tro. My lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you, In what place of the field doth Cachus keep? Ulysses. At Menelaus' tent, most proudest Troilus; There Diomed doth feast with him to-night; Who neither looks upon the heaven, nor earth, But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view On the fair Cressida. Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much. After we part from Agamemnon's tent, To bring me thither? Ulyss. You shall command me, sir. As gentle tell me of, what honor was This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there That wails for what she is not? Tro. O, sir, as such as boasting show their scars A mock of you, sir. Will you walk on, my lord? She was below'd, she love't; she is, and doth: But, still, sweet love is food for fortune's teeth. [Exit.]

ACT V.

Enter Achilles and Patrocles.

Achilles. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night. Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow. Patroclus, let us least him to the height.

Patrocles. Here comes Thersites.

Achilles. Well said, Adversity! and what need these tricks? Patrocles. Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus? Achilles. Do I curse thee? Patrocles. Why, no, you ruinous; you whorsome indistinguishable cur, no. Achilles. No! why art thou exasperate, thou idle innumerable skin of slope, silk, thou green sarceet flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou? Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such wretched, diminutives of nature! Patrocles. Out, gall! Thersites. Finch-eeg! Achilles. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite from my great purpose in to-morrow's battle. Here is a letter from queen Hecuba; A token from her daughter, my fair love; Both taxing me, and gazing me to keep An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it: Fall, Greeks; fall, fame; honor, or go, or stay, My major vow lies here, this I'll obey. Come, come, Patrocles, help to trim my tent; This night in banquetting must all be spent. Away, Patrocles. [Execute Achilles and Patrocles.

Thersites. With too much blood and too little brain, these two may run mad; but if with too much brain, and too little blood, they do, I'll be a curer of madmen. Here's Agamemnon, an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails; but he has not so much brain as car-rats. And then the goodly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull,—the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckold,-a thristy shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg,—to what form, but that he is, should wit load earth, and make earth forest with wit, turn him to! To an ass, were nothing; he is both ass and ox; to an ox, were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mole, a cat, a fitchew; a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttoc, or a herring without a rod, I would not care: but to be Menelaus,—I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not whether I would be, if I were not Thersites; for I care not to be the house of a hazar, so I were not Menelaus,—Heb-day! spirits and tires! Enter Hector, Troilus, Ajax, and Patroclus.

Achilles, Come, come, enter my tent. [Execute Achilles, Hector, Ajax, and Nestor.

{Exeunt.}
Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a man unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he leers, than I will a serpent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth, and promise, like Brabker the hound; but when he performs, astronomers foretell it is prodigious, there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon, when Diomed keeps his word, I will rather leave to see Hector, than not to dog him: they say, he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—Nothing but lecher! all incontinent varlets! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Before Calchas' Tent.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. What, are you up here, ho! speak.

Cal. [Within] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think.—Where's your daughter?

Cal. [Within] She comes to you.

Enter Troilus and Ulysses, at a distance; after them Thersites.

Ulysses. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter Cressida.

Tro. Cressid, come forth to him!

Dio. How now, my charge?

Cress. Now, my sweet guardian!—Hark! a word with you. [Whispers.]

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulysses. She will sing any man at first sight.

Thers. And any man may sing her, if he can take her chaff; she's noted.

Dio. Will you remember me?

Cress. Remember! yes.

Dio. Nay, but do then.

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Dio. List! Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Thers. Roguery!

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cress. I'll tell you what:

Dio. Pho, pho! come, tell a pin: You are forsworn.

Cress. In faith, I cannot: What would you have me do?

Thers. A juggling trick, to be—secretly open.

Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?

Cress. I pr'ythee, do not hold me to mine oath; But do any thing but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience! Cress. How now, Trojan!

Dio. Diomed.— No, no, good night: I'll be your friend no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cress. That last! one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness!

Ulysses. You are mov'd, prince; let us depart, I pray you.

Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself To wrathful terms: this place is dangerous; The time right deadly: I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Dio. Now, good my lord, go off:

Tro. You now to great destruction: come, my lord.

Dio. I pr'ythee, stay.

Ulysses. You have not patience, come.

Tro. I pray you, stay; by heaven, and all heaven's torments, I will not speak a word.

Dio. Nay, and so good night.

Tro. Doth that grievr thee?

I will be patient.

Cress. In faith, I do not; come hither once again.

Ulysses. You shake, my lord, at something; will you go on?

You will break out.

Tro. She strokes his cheek! *Fortenious, omious. + Key. *Shuffle.

Ther. The devil luxury, with his fat rump and pot belly; finger tickles these together! Fry, leechery, fry!

Dio. But will you then?

Cress. In faith, I will, h; never trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cress. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.

Ulysses. You have sworn patience.

Tro. Fear me not, my lord; I will not be myself, nor have cognitions Of what I feel; I am all patience.

Re-enter Cressida.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now! Cress. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.

Tro. O beauty! where's thy fault?

Ulysses. My lord,—

Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.

Cress. You look upon that sleeve; behold it well.— He lov'd me—0 false wench!—Give've me again.

Dio. Who was't?

Cress. No matter, now I have't again.

I will not meet with you to-morrow night:

I will by Diomed, visit me no more in mine.

Thers. Now she sharpens—Well said, whetstone.

Dio. I shall have it.

Cress. What, this?

Dio. Ay, that.

Cress. O, all you gods!—0 pretty, pretty pledge! Thy master's now has thinking in my head.

Of thee and me; and signs, and takes my glove, And gives memorial dainty kisses to it, As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me;

Thers. What makes you this; I will take my heart withal.

Dio. I had your heart before, this follows it.

Tro. I did swear patience.

Cress. You shall not have it, Diomed; faith you shall not;

I'll give you something else.

Dio. I will have this; Whose was it?

Cress. 'Tis no matter.

Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.

Cress. Twas one's that loved me better than you will.

But, now you have it, take it.

Dio. Whose was it?

Cress. By all Diana's waiting-women yonder, And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

Thers. He will not wear it on his helm; And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it. Wert thou the devil, and wo't as ton thy horn, It should be challenged.

Cress. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past;—And yet it is not;

I will not keep my word.

Dio. Why then, farewell;

Thers. Never shall mock Diomed again.

Cress. You shall not go:—One cannot speak a word, But it straight starts you.

Dio. I do not like this fooling.

Thers. Nor I, by Pluto; but that that likes not you, pleases me best.

Dio. What, shall I come? the hour?

Cress. Ay, come — O Jove!—

Do come — I shall be plagued.

Dio. Farewell till then.

Cress. Good night. I pr'ythee, come.

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee; But with my heart the other eye doth see. All! poor our sex! this fault in us I find, The error of our eye directs our mind:

What error leads, must err; to then conclude, Minds, sway'd by eyes, are full of inanition. [Exit Cressida.

Ther. A proof of strength she could not publish more.

Unless she said, My mind is now turn'd whore.

Ulysses. All's done, my lord.

Tro. It is.

Ulysses. Why stay we then?

Tro. To make a recordation to my soul Of every syllable that here was spoke.

But, if it tell how these two did co-aet,
Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?
Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperence so obstinately strong,
That doth invert the attest of every ear;
As if those organs had decepirnly functions,
Created only to catamize.

Was Cressid here!

Ulysses. I cannot conjure, Trojan.

Tro. She was not, sure.

Ulysses. Most sure she was.

Tro. Why, my negation hath the taste of madness.

Ulysses. Nor name, my lord: Cressid was here but now.

Tro. Lp it not be believed for womanhood?

This tower'd you not mothers? Do not you give advantage
To stubborn critics—apt, without a theme.

For depravation,—to square the general sex
By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.

Ulysses. With this she, done, prince, that can soil our mothers!

Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she,

Thrice. Will he swagger himself out on's own eyes.

Tro. Yes he? this is Odium's Cressid:

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;

If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimony,

If sanctimony be the gods' delight,

If there be rule in unity itself,

This was not she. O madness of discourse,

That cause sets up with and against itself!

Beauty and virtue! where reason revolts.

Without perdition, and loss assume all reason

Without revolt; this is, and is not, Cressid!

Within my soul there doth commence a fight

Of strange nature, that a thing inseparable

Divides more wider than the sky and earth;

And yet the spacious breadth of this division

Admits no orifice for a point, as a subtile

As Achilles' broken wand, to enter,

Instance, 0 instance! strong as Pluto's gates;

Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:

Instance, 0 instance! strong as heaven itself;

The boundless heaven, earth's bound, doth, and bound;

And with another knot, five-finger-tied,

The fractions of her faith, ofts of her love,

The fragments, scamps, the bits, and greedy relics

Of her over-eaten faith are bound to Diomed.

Ulysses. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd

With that which here his passion doth express!

Tro. Ay, and shall be divell'd wide.

In characters as red as Mars;

Imitant with Venus: never did young man fancy

With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.

Hark, Greek.—As much as I do Cressid love,

So much by weight hate I her Diomed;

That sleeve is mine, that he'll bear on his helm;

Were it a casque compos'd by Vulcan's skill,

My hand would strike it; not the drossful spoit,

Which shipment do the hurricane call,

Constraining mass by the Almighty sun,

Shall dizzy with more emamor Neptune's car

In his next emotion, than shall my promptly sword

Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tackle it for his concupis.

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false!

Let all the earth that wish'd to stain me

And they'll seem glorious.

Ulysses. O, contain yourself;

Your passion draws ears biter.

Enter AEneas.

AEneas. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord:

Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy;

Ajax, your guard—he doth conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince:—My courteous lord, adieu:

Farewell, revolled fair!—and, Diomed,

Stops you? and pray, thou, to the head!

Ulysses. I'll bring you to the gates.

Ther. Accept disdained thanks.

Enter TROILUS, AEneas, and Ulysses.

TROILUS. Would, I could meet thee like Diomed!

I would crook like a raven; I would howd, I would howd.

Patrocus will give me any thing for the inelligence of this whereof: the parrot will not more

for an almond, than he for a commodious drab.

Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery;

* For the sake of.

Compressed.

For the sake of.

Compressed.

nothing else holds fashion: A burning devil take them!

[Exit.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. Where was my lord so much ungently temper'd,

To stop his ears against admonishment!

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You think me credulous; you get in you:

By all the everlasting gods, I'll go.

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.

Hect. No more, I say.

Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister; am'd, and bloody in intent:

Consort with me in loud and dear petition.

Pursue we him on knees; for I have dram'd

Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night

Hath nothing been but thunders and foremost slaughter.

Cas. O, it is true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound!

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hect. Beseech, I say: the gods have heard me sweat.

Cas. These gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows;

They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd

Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And O! be persuaded: Do not count it holy

To hurt he beauty, if it is as law,

For we would give much, to use violent tho's,

And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow;

But vows in every purpose must not hold:

Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say;

Mine honor keeps the weather of my fate:

Life every hour holds dear; but the dear heart

Holds honor far more precious dear than life.—

Enter Troilus.

Hect. Now how, young man, mean'st thou to fight to-day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

[Exit CASSANDRA.

Hect. No, 'faith, young Troilus: do's thy bravery, youth,

I am to-day the vein of chivalry.

Let grow thy.Address till thy knees be strong;

And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.

Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,

I'll stand, to-day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

Tro. But, sovereign! you have a voice of mercy in you

Which better fits a lion, than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me not.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecians fall,

Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,

You bid them rise and live.

Hect. O, 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

Hect. How now! how now!

Tro. For the love of all the gods,

Let thee the hermit pity with our mother;

And when we have our armor buckled on,

The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords;

Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

Hect. Fury, savage, fye!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.

Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withstand me?

Not fate, no, not the sword of Mars becom'd with fiery trimmings my rete;

Not Priamus and Hector on knees,

Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears;

Their ears o'ergorg'd with the rings of their name,

Wear out the very truth of their sword,

Opp'd to hinder me, should step my way,

But by my run.

Re-enter Cassandra with Priam.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast:

He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay,

Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,

Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go back:

Thy wife hath dream'd, thy mother hath had visions;

Cassandra doth foresee, and I myself

Foolish.

Fut off.

Useful, woful.

Mercy.
Am like a prophet suddenly erupt,
To tell thee—that this day is ominous,
Therefore, come back.

Hect. Encas a field;
And I do stand engaged to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valor, to appear
This morning to them.

Pri. But thou shalt not go.

Hect. I must not break my faith.
You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,
Let me not shame myself; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice,
Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O Priam, yield not to him.

And, do not, dear father.
Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you:
Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exit Andromache.]

Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl,
Makes all these bodements. Case.

O farewell, dear Hector,
Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale!
Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents!
Harsh, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out!
How poor Andromache shrills her dolors forth!
Behold, destruction, frenzy, and amazedness,
Like willow antics, one another meet,
And all cry—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector.

Tro. Away!—Away!

Cas. Farewell. Yet soft,—Hector, I take my leave;
Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive.
[Exeunt.]

[Exeunt severally Priam and Hector.

Alarums. Tro. They are at it; hark! Proud Diomed believe,
I come to lose my arm, or win my single.

As Troilus is going out, enter from the other side.

Pandares. Pain. Do you hear, my lord! do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pain. Here's a letter from your poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pain. A whorsom phisib, a whorsom rascally phisib so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall distress you one of these days; And I have a rhymes in mine eye as I be taken by the bones, that, unless a man were cursed, I cannot tell what to think on't:—What says she there!

Tro. And so, my good woman, write me letters from the heart.

[Tearing the Letter.

The effect doth operate another way.—
Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together.
My love with words and errors still she feeds;
But edicts another with her deeds.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE IV.—Between Troy and the Grecian Camp.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Theristes.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another; I'll go look on. 'That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurry, dotting, foolish ass, Theristes, and Troy there, in his helm: I would Iain see them meet; that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Grecish whoremonger villain with the sleeve, lack, and destruction, frenzy, and amazedness, Like willow antics, one another meet, and all cry—Hector! Hector is dead! O Hector.

Exeunt severally.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.  Act V.

 Dio. Thou dost miscall retire:
I do not fly; but advantageous care
Withdrew me from the odds of multitude:
Haste at Troy!
Ther. Hold thy whore, Grecian!—now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve! [Exit TROILUS and DIOMEDES, fighting.

Enter Hector.

Hec. What art thou, Greek? art thou for Hector?

Ther. Art thou of blood, and honor?

Hec. No, no,—I am a rascal; a scurvy raining knave; a very slyth rogue.

Ther. I do believe the like!—live.

Exeunt.

Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me; But a plague break thy neck, for frightening me! What's become of the wenching rogues! I think, they have swallowed one another: I would bath at that miracle. Yet, in a sort, lecherous shit itself. I'll seek them.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same.

Enter Diomedes and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse:
Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid:
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty;
Tell her, I have chastis'd the anonymous Trojan,
And am her knight by proof.

Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit Servant.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamus
Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margarolen
Hath done the prisoner;
And stands colossal-wise, waving his beam,
Upon the paved crosses of the king.
Epistrophus and Celius: Polixenes is slain;
Amphinachus, and Theo's, deadly hurt;
Patroclus taken, or slain; and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary
Appals our numbers; haste we, Diomed,
To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter Nestor.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles:
And bid the snail-paced Ajax arm for shame—
There is a thousand Hectors in the field;
Now here he fights on Galatea his horse,
And there lacks work; anon, he's there about,
And there they fly, or die, like sealed sealed
Gown, the bay horse. Attends the falling shield with the vender,
And there the stray Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him like the mower's swath:
Here, here, the miles, wherever he leaves and takes;
Dexterity so obeying appetite,
That what he will, he does; and does so much,
That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles Isarming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance;
Patroclus wounds have rend'd his drawy blood,
Together with his mangled Myrmidon,
That noiseless, handleless, hack'd and chip'd, come to him,
Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend,
And hows at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it,
Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day
Mad and fantastic execution—
Engaging and redeeming of himself,
With such a careless force, and forceless care,
As if that luck, in very spine of cunning,
Bade him win all.

Enter Ajax.

Dio. Hector's master! No, Ay, there, there
Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hector! Come, come, thou boy-querell, show thy face:
Know what it is to meet Achilles angry.
Hector! where's Hector! I will none but Hector. [Exit.

*Lance: Blunted.
*Shovel: Crushed.
SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter Diomedes.

Diom. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus!

Ajax. What wouldst thou!

Diom. I would correct him.

Ajax. Were I the general, thou shouldst have my office,

Ere that correction,—Troilus, I say! what, Troilus!

Enter Troilus.

Tro. O traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face, thou traitor,

And pay thy life thou owst me for my horse!

Diom. Ha! art thou there?

Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.

Diom. He is my prize, I will not look upon,

Tro. Come both, you coggings! Greeks have at you both.

[Exeunt, fighting.]

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? O, well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now do I see thee: Ha!—Have at thee, Hector.

Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.

Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan.

Be happy that my arms are out of use:

My rest and negligence befriend thee now,

But thou anon shalt hear of me again;

Till when, go seek thy fortune.

[Exit.

Hect. I would have been much more a fresher man,

Had I expected thee. Now how, now my brother!

—Enter Troilus.

Tro. Ajax hath taken Euanos: Shall it be? no,

By the flame of yonder glorious heaven,

He shall not carry him; I'll be taken too,

Or bring him off.—Fate, hear me what I say!

I reck not that the better end of life I end.

[Exit.

Enter one in sumptuous Armor.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek! thou art a goodly mark:

Now I wilt thou not!—I like thy armor well;

I'll finish it, and unlock the rivets all,

But I'll be master of it:—Will thou not, beast, abide?

Why, then fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The same.

Enter Achilles, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons;

Mark what I say! Attend me and see me lead

Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath;

And when I have the bloody Hector found,

Empale him with your weapons round about;

In closest manner execute your arms.

Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye:

It is decreed,—Hector the great must die.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—The same.

Enter Menelaus and Paris, fighting: then

Diomedes.

Ther. The cuckold, and the cuckold-maker are at it: Now, bull! now, dog! 'Loo, Paris, 'lo! now my double-headed sparrow! 'Loo, Paris, 'lo!

The bull has the game—were horns, he!

[Exeunt Paris and Menelaus.

Enter Menelaus.

Menelaus. Turn, slant, and fight,

Ther. What art thou?

Men. A bastard son of Priam's.

Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards: I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mad, bastard in valor, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard be more fear'd? Take level, the quarrel's most com- mon to us: if the son of a whole whorfe for a fight, where he tempts judgment? Farewell, bastard.

Men. The devil take thee, coward!

[Exeunt.

—End of the First Part.

—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Most pitied core, so far without,

Thy goodly armor thus hath cost thee life.

Now is my word to thee: I'll take thy good breath;

Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death!

[Pulls off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.

Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;

How ugly mischief comes breathing at his heels;

Even with the sail and dark'ning of the sun,

To close the day up, Hector's lie is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd; forsooth this vantage, Greek.

Achil. See, fly, fellows, strike; this is the man I seek.

[Hector falls.

So Iion, full thou next! now, Troy, sink down;

Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone—

On, Myrmidons; and cry you all again,

Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain!

[Hark! a retreat upon our Grecian part.

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.

Achil. The dragon-wing of night o'erspreads the earth,

And, sticket! like, the armies separate.

My half-supp'd sword, that frankly would have fed,

Pleas'd with this dainty bit, thus goes to bed.

[Swipes his sword.

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail;

Along the field I will the Trojan trail.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—The same.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor,

Diomedes, and others, marching.

Shouts within.

Ajax. Hark! hark! what shout is that?

Nest. Peace, drums.

[Within.]

Achil. Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!

Diom. The brutus is Hector's slain, and by Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be;

Great Hector was as good a man as he.

Agam. March patiently along; let one be sent

To pray Achilles see us at our tent.

If in his death the gods have us befriended,

Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.

[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE XI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Ajax and Trojans.

Ajax. Stand, boy! yet are we masters of the field:

Never go home; here start we out the night.

—Enter Trojans.

Tro. Hector is slain!

All. Hector!—The gods forbid.

Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail,

In beastly sort, dragg'd through the shameful field.

Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed!

Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy!

I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,

And lingering our sure destruction on!

Aene. My lord, you do discomfort all the host.

Tro. You understand me not, that tell me so:

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;

But dare a man innocents, that godless men

Address their dangers in. Hector is gone!

Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?

Let him, that will a screech-owl be call'd,

Go in to Troy, and say there—Hector's dead!

There is a word will Priam turn to stone;

Make well's and Nobes of the maids and wives,

Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word,

Scare Troy to the father of itself. But, mind thy way;

Hector is dead; there is no more to say.

Stay yet;—You vile abominable tents,

Thus proudly pitch'd upon our Phrygian plains,

Let Titan rise, as early as the day!

I'll through and through you!—And thou, great sir'd coward!

No space of earth shall sunder our two hates:

* An arbitrator at athletic games.

* Fattening.

* Noise, rumor.

* Pitched, fixed.
I’ll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still.
That mouldeth goblins swift as frenzy thoughts.—
Strike a free march to Troy!—with comfort go:
Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe.

[Exit Enée and Trojans.

As Troilus is going out, enter, from the other side, Pandar's.

Pan. But hear you, hear you you!
Tro. Hence, broker lackey! ignomy and shame
Pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name!

[Exit Troilus.

Pan. A goodly med'cine for my aching bones!—
O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised! O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a work and how ill requited? Why should our endeavor be so loved, and the performance so loathed? what verse for it! what instance for it!—
Let me see:—

* Ignominy.

Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing,
Till he hath lost his honey, and his sting:
And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fall.—
Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths:—
As many as be here of panders' hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall:
Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans,
Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.
Brethren and sisters, of the hold-door trade,
Some two months hence my will shall here be made:
It should be now, but that my fear is this,—
Some galled goose of Winchester would hiss:
Till then I'll sweat, and seek about for cases;
And, at that time, bequeath you my diseases.

[Exit.

ACT I.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several doors.

Poet. Good-day, sir.
Paint. I am glad you are well.
Poet. I have not seen you long; how goes the world?
Paint. It wears, sir, as it grows.
Poet. Ay, that's well known: But what particular rarity? what strange, Which manifold record not matches? see, Magic of bounty! All these spirits thy power Hath conjur'd to attend, I know the merchant.
Paint. I know them both; 'tis other's a jeweller.
Mer. O, 'tis a worthy lord!
Jew. Nay, that's most fix'd.
Mer. A most incomparable man; breath'd, as it were, To an untrivalable and continual goodness; He passes.
Jew. I have a jewel here.
Mer. O, pray, let's see't: For the lord Timon, sir?
Jew. I'll he will touch the estimate; But, for that—
Poet. When we for recompense have prais'd the value, It stains the glory in that happy verse Which optly sings the good.
Mer. 'Tis a good form.
[Looking at the jewel.]
Jew. And rich: here is a water, look you.
Paint. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication To the great lord.
Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me.
Our poesy is as a gum, which oozes
From whence 'tis nourished: the fire 'tis the flint Shows not till it be struck; our gentle flame
* Inured by constant practice.
* Continual.
* i.e. Exceeds, goes beyond common bounds.

Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies
Each bound it chafes. What have you there?
Paint. A picture, sir.—And when comes your book forth?
Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, sir.
Let's see your piece.
Paint. So 'tis: this comes off well and excellent.
Paint. Indifferent.
Poet. Admirable: How this grace Speaks his own standing! what a mental power This eye shoots forth! how big imagination Moves in this lip! to the dumbleness of the gesture One might interpret.
Paint. It is a pretty mocking of the life.
Paint. There is a touch: 'tis good!
Poet. I'll say of it,
It tutors nature: artificial strife?
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators, and pass over.

Paint. How this lord's follow'd!
Poet. The senators of Athens: Happy men!
Paint. Look, more!
Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors.
I have, in this rough work, shaped out a man, Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug With ampest entertainment: My free drift Halts not particularly: but moves itself In a wide sea of wax: no levelled malice Injects one comma in the course I hold; But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on, Leaving no track behind.
Paint. How shall I understand you?
Poet. I'll unbolt to you.

You see how all conditions, how all minds,

* As soon as my book has been presented to Timon.
* i.e. The contest of art with nature.
* My design does not stop at any particular character.

527
(as well of gib and slippery creatures, as of grave and austere opinion,) tender down Thy graces to lord Timon:—his large fortune, Upon his good and gracious nature hanging, Subsides and properties to his love and tendance. All whom he charity, and finds in grace; for the glass-faced father? To Apemantus, that few things loves better Than to abhor himself; even he drops down The knee before him, and returns in peace Most rich in Timon's mind. I saw them speak together. Poet, Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill, Feign'd Fortune to behold. The base of the mount is covered with thistles, with all deserts, all kind of That labor on the bosom of this sphere To propagate their states: amongst them all, Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fixed, One do I personate of lord Timon's time: Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her; Whose present grace to present slaves and servants Translates his rights. Tis conceiv'd to scope. This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks, With one man beckon'd from the rest below, Bowing his head against the steepy mount To clinch his happiness, would be well express'd In our condition. Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on: All those which were his fellows but of late, (Some better than his value,) on the moment Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance, Ram sacrificial whisperings in his ear, Make sacr'd even his shripp, and through him Drink the free air. Pain. Ay, marry, what of these! Poet. When Fortune, in her shif and change of mood, Spurns down her late below'd, all his dependants, Which labor'd after him to the mountain's top, Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down, Not one accompanying his declining foot. Pain. Tis common: A thousand moral paintings I can show, The shall disultrate these qualities of fortune More pregnantly than words. Yet you do well, To show lord Timon that mean eyes have seen The foot above the head. Trumpets sound. Enter Timon, attended; the Sargent of Venetius talking with him. Tim. Imprison'd! is he, say you! Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord: live talents is his debt; His means most short, his creditors most strait: Your honorable letter he desires To those have shut up; which, failing to him, Periods his comfort. Tim. Noble Venetian! Well; I am not of that feather, to shake off My friend when he must need me. I do know him A gentleman, that well deserves a help, Which he shall have: I'll pay the debt, and free him. Ven. Serr. Your lordship ever binds him. Tim. Command me to him: I will send his ransom: And, being enfranched, bid him come to me: *Tis not enough to help the felth up, But to support him after.—Fare you well. Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honor! [Exit. Enter an old Athenian. Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak. Tim. Freely, good father. Old Ath. Thou hast a servant named Lucilius. Tim. I have so: What of him? Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before thee. Tim. Attends he here, or no?—Lucilius! Enter Lucilius. Luc. Here, at your lordship's service. Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon, this thy creature, By night frequents my house. I am a man That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift; And my estate deserves an heir more ra'nd, Than one which holds a treacher. 1 One who shows by reflection the looks of his patron. 2 To advance their conditions of life. Tim. Well; what further? Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin else On whom I may confer what I have got: The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride, And I have bred her at my dear expense In quality of the best. This man of thine Attempts her love: i' pr'ythee, noble lord, Join with me to forbid her visit; Myself have spoke in vain. Tim. The man is honest. Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon: His honesty rewards him in itself, it must not bear my daughter. Tim. Does she love him? Old Ath. She is young and apt: Our own precedent passions do instruct us What 'tis in your youth. Tim. [To Lucilius.] Love you the maid? Luc. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it. Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing, I call the gods to witness, I will choose Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world, And dispossess her all. Tim. How shall she be endow'd, If she be mated with an equal husband? Old Ath. Three talents, on the present; in future, all; Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long; To build his fortune, I will strain a little, For 'tis hard in nature. Give him thy daughter: What you bestow, in him I will counterpasse, And make him weigh with her. Old Ath. Not noble lord, I will pawn to this your honor, she is his. Tim. My hand to thee; mine honor on my promise. Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship: Never may That slave or fortune fall into my keeping, Which is not o'wd to you! [Exit Lucilius and old Athenian. Poet. Vouchsafe my lord, and long live your lordship! Tim. I thank you: you shall hear from me anon. Go not away:—What have you there, my friend! Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech Your lordship to accept. Tim. Painting is welcome. The painting is almost the natural man; For since disonor tradiles with man's nature, He is but outside: These pen'dil figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work; And you shall find, I like it: wait attendance Till you hear further from me. Pain. The gods preserve you! Tim. Well fare you, gentlemen:—Give me your hand: We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel Hath suffer'd under praise. Jew. What, my lord! disgrace! Tim. A mere satiety of commendations. If I should pay you not as 'tis extol'd, It would unclew me quite. Jew. My lord, 'tis rated As those, which well would give: But you well know, Things of that value, differing in the owners, Are prized by their masters: believe'd, dear lord, You mend the jewel by wearing it. Tim. Well mock'd. Mr. No, my good lord; he speaks the common tongue, Which all men speak with him. Tim. Look, who comes here! Will you be chid? Enter Apemantus. Jern. We will bear with your lordship. Mer. He'll spare none. Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus! Apem. Till I be gentle, stay for thy good morrow. When thou art Timon's dog, and these knives honest. Tim. Why, doest thou call them knives? thou know'st them not. Apem. They not Athenians! Tim. Yes. Apem. Then I repent not. * Ruin.
Scene II.
TIMON OF ATHENS.

Jem. You know me, Apeamantus.
Ape. Thou know'st I do; I call'd thee by thy name.
Jem. Thou art proud, Apeamantus.
Ape. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like Timon.
Timo. Whither art going?
Ape. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.
Timo. That's a deed thou'll die for.
Ape. Right, if doing nothing be death by the mouth.
Timo. How likst thou this picture, Apeamantus?
Ape. The best, for the innocence.
Timo. Wought he not well that painted it?
Ape. I'd wrought better that man, if he had been a painter;
and yet he's but a third piece of work.
Pain. You are a dog.
Ape. Thy mother's of my generation: What's she, if I be a dog?
Timo. Will dine with me, Apeamantus?
Ape. No; I eat not lords.
Timo. An thou should'st, thou'dst anger ladies.
Ape. O, they eat lords; so they come by great belles.
Timo. That's a lascivious apprehension.
Ape. So thou apprehend'st it; Take it for thy labor.
Timo. How dost thou like this jewel, Apeamantus?
Ape. Not so well as plain dealing, 1 which will not cost a man a dot.
Timo. What dost thou think 'tis worth?
Ape. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet?
Poet. How now, philosopher!
Ape. Thou best.
Poet. Art not wise?
Ape. Yes.
Poet. Then I lie not.
Ape. Art not a poet?
Poet. Yes.
Ape. Then thou liest: look in thy last work,
where thou hast taught'st me a worthy fellow.
Poet. That's not taught, he is so.
Ape. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labor: He that loves to be flattered, is worthy o' the flatterer.
Heavens, that I were a lord!
Timo. What wouldst thou do then, Apeamantus?
Ape. Even as Apeamantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.
Timo. What, thyself?
Ape. Ay.
Timo. Wherefore?
Ape. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.—
Art not thou a merchant?
Mer. Ay, Apeamantus.
Ape. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not!
Mer. I traffic do it, the gods do it.
Ape. Traffic's thy god, and thy god confound thee!
Trumpets sound. Enter a Servant.
Timo. What trumpeter's that?
Serv. 'Tis Alcibiades, and
Some twenty horse, all of companionship.
Timo. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us.—
[Exeunt some Attendants. You must needs dine with me.—Go not you hence,
Till I have thank'd you; and when dinner's done,
Show me this piece.—I am joyful of your sights.—
Enter Alcibiades, with his Company.
Most welcome, sir!
[They salute.
Ape. So, so; there!—
Aches contract and starve your supple joints!
That there should be small love amongst these sweet
Alcibiades,
And all this court'sy! The strain of man's bred out
Into baboon and monkey.
Telib. Sir, you have said my longing, and I feel
Most hungrily on your sight.
Timo. Ere we depart, we'll share a hontious time
In different pleasures.
Serv. 'Tis done, let us in.
Timo. Enter two Lords.
1 Lord. What time a day is it, Apeamantus?
Ape. Time to be honest.

1 Alluding to the proverb: Plain dealing is a jewel, but they who use it beggars.
2 Lord. That time serves still.
Ape. The most accursed thou, that still omit'st it.
2 Lord. Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
Ape. Ay; to see meat fill knives, and wine
heat fools,
2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.
Ape. Thou art a fool, to bid me farewell twice.
2 Lord. Why, Apeamantus!
Ape. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.
1 Lord. Hang thyself.
Ape. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding;
make thy requests to thy friend.
1 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence.
Ape. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the ass.
[Exeunt.
1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in,
And taste lord Timon's bounty! he outgoes
The very height of kindness.
2 Lord. He pours it out: Plutus the god of gold
Is but his steward: no need; 2 but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him,
But breeds a greater return exceeding
All use of quittance.
1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,
That ever govern'd man.
2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?
1 Lord. I'll keep you company.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room of State in Timon's House.
Hautboys playing loud March. A great Banquet served in; FLAVIUS and others attending; then Enter Timon, Alcibiades, LUCIUS, LUCULLUS, SEMPERIDES, and others, Athenian Senators, with VENTIMILES, and Attendants. Then comes, dropping after all, Apeamantus, discontentedly.
Tim. Most honor'd Timon, 'tis hath pleas'd the gods remember
My father's age, and call him to long peace.
He is gone happy, and has left me rich;
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound
To your free heart, I do return those talents,
Doubl'd with thanks, and service, from whose help
I serv'd liberty.
Tim. O, by no means,
Honest Ventiudes! you mistake my love;
I gave it freely ever, and there's none
Can truly say, he gives, if it receives:
If our betters play at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them: Faults that are rich, are fair.
Ven. My lord, I protest.
[They all stand ceremoniously looking on Timon.
Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony
Was but dev'd at first, to set a glass
On faint deeds; hoarded with dislike.
Recollecting goodness, sorely err'st shown;
But where there is true friendship, there needs
none.
Pray sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me.
[They sit.
1 Lord. My lord, we always have confessed it.
Ape. He, he, content'st I let hang'd it, have you not?
Tim. O, Apeamantus!—you are welcome.
Ape. You shall not make me welcome;
I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.
Tim. Yee, thou art a churl; he hath got a place there for thee.
Does not he make a man, 'tis much to blame:
They say, my lords, that ira furor brevis est,
But you'll man's ever angry.
Go, let him have a table; since he dares not
For he does neither your company,
Nor is he fit for, indeed.
Ape. Let me stay at thine own peril, Timon;
I come to observe; I give thee warning on't.
Tim. I take thee not for a fool; thou art an Athenian;
therefore welcome: I myself would have no power:
'Prythee, let my meat make thee silent.
Ape. I scorn thy meat; 'wou'de cheat me, for I should
2 Need here means desert.
3 i.e. All the customary returns made in discharge of obligations.
4 Anger is a short madness.
Ne'er flatter thee—O you gods! what a number Of men eat Timon, and he sees them not! It grieveth me to see so many dip their meat In Timon's blood; and all the madness is, Hecheonsthem up too.

1 I wonder men dare trust themselves with men: Methinks they should invite them without knives; Good men to eat their meat, and safer for their lives. There's much example for't; the fellow, that Sits next him now, parts bread with him and pledges. The breath of him in a divided draught, Is the readiest man to kill him: it has been prov'd, If I Were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals; Least they should see my wound and judge my dangerous notes: Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

Tim. My lord, in heart; and let the health go round.

2 Lord. Let it flow thus, my good lord.

Timon. Flow this way! A brave fellow!—he keeps his sides well, Timon. These hands will make thee, and thy state, look ill, Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, Honest water, which ne'er left man; the more: This, and my food, are equals; there's no odds, Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

Apemantus's Grace.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf; I pray for no man but myself; Grant I may never prove so foolish, To trust my head on his outward head; Or a harlot for her weeping; Or a dog that seems a-sleeping; Or a keeper with my freedom; Or my friends, if I should need 'em.

Amen. So fall to! Rich men sin, and I eat too.

[Eds. and drinks.

Much good dicing thy good heart, Apemantus! Timon. Captain Alcibiades, your heart's in the field now.

Alcib. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.

Timon. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies, than a dinner of friends.

Alcib. Peace, peace, will we be bleeding new, my lord, there's no meat like them; I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apen. Would all those flankers were thence ere this were cold; and then thou mightst kill 'em, and bid me 'em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that thou couldst once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeal, we should think ourselves for ever perfect.

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves provide that! I shall have much help from you: How had you been my friends else? why have you that charitable title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart! I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus I confirm you. O, you gods, think I, what need we have any friends, if we should never have need of them! They were for the most needless creatures living, shall, we could we'er have use for them; and would most re- scuable sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits: and what better or properer can we call our own than the riches of our friends? O, what a precious comfort 's, to have so many, like brothers, coming another one's fortunes! O joy, even made away ere it can be born! Mine eyes cannot hold out, neither, methinks: to forget their faults, I drink to you.

Apen. Thou wittest to make them drink, Timon.

2 Lord. Joy had the like conception in our eyes, And, at that instant, like a babie sprung up.

Apen. Ho, ho! I laugh to think that babie a bastard.

3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me much.

Apen. Much? [Tucket sounded.

Tim. What means that trump?—how now! Enter a Servant.

Serr. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies! what are their wills? Serr. There comes with them a foremoster, my lord, which bears that of the office, to assign their pleasures. Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon; and to all That of his bounties haste!—The five best senses Acknowledged for their rise and office to their patron; And come freely To gratulate thine plentiful bosom: The eye, Taste, touch, smell, all pleas'd from thy table rise; They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They are welcome all; let them have kind admittance:

Music, make their welcome.

[Exit Cupid.

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you are behold'd.

Music. Re-enter Cupid, with a Mass of Ladies as Amazons, with Lutes in their hands, dancing, and playing.

Apen. Hey day, what a sweep of vanity comes this way! They dance! they are mad women. Like madness is the glory of this life, As this pomp shows to a little oil, and root. We must arm ourselves for fools, to dispose of ourselves; And spend our flatteries, to drink those men, Upon whose age we void it up again.

With poisonous spite, and envy. Who lives, that's not Depraved, or depriv'd! who dies, that bears Not one spurn to their graver of their friends' gift? I should fear, those, that dance before me now, Would one day stamp upon me: they have been done: Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from Table with much warbling of Timon: and to shew their Loves, each sings out an Amazon, and all dance. Men with Women, a lofty and a tinsel to the Huntsmen, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies,

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment, Which was the half so beautiful and kind; You have added worth unto it, and lively haste, And entertain'd me with mine own device; I am to thank you for it.

1 Lord. My lord, you take us even at the best. Apen. 'Faith, for the worst of it is fliby; and would not hold taking; I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet

Attend on us: Please you to dispose yourselves, All Lord. Most thankfully, my lord.

[Exeunt Cupid, and Ladies.

Tim. Flavins,—

Flav. My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord.—More jewels yet! There is no crossing him in his humor; [Aside. Else I should call him. Well,—'Faith, I should When all's spent, he'd be cross'd then, an he could. 'Tis pity, bounty had not eyes behind; That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind,3 or leas to the Crescents with the Casket.

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serr. Here, my lord, in readiness.

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O my friends, I have one word To say to you:—Look, you good lord, I must Entreat you, honor me so much, as to Advise this jewel Accept, and wear it, kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,— All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serr. My lord, there is certain nobles of the senate Newly alighted, and come to visit you.

[Much, was formerly an expression of contemptuous admiration.

[Exit, and returns with the Casket.

3 For his nobleness of soul.
Act II. Scene I.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.
Flor. | I beseech your honor,
    | Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.
Tim. | I thank you well! why should I alter my comfort any time I'll hear thee;
    | I promise, let us be provided.
To show them entertainment.
Flor. | I scarce know how. [Aside.
Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. May it please your honor, the lord Lucius,
Out of his free love, hath presented to you
Four milk-white horses, trap'd in silver.
Tim. | I shall accept them fairly; let the presents
    | Enter a third Servant.
Be worthily entertain'd.—How now, what news!
3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honorable gentleman, lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honor two tuns of greyhounds.
Tim. | I'll hunt with him; and let them be receiv'd,
    | Not without fair reward.
Flor. | What will this come to?
He commands us to provide, and give great gifts,
And all out of an empty coffers.—
Nor will he know his purse: or yield me this,
To show him what a beggar his heart is.
Being of no power to make his wishes good;
His promises fly so beyond his state,
That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes
For every word; he is so kind, that he now
Pays interest for't; his land's put to their books,
Wells, 'lu'd I were gently put out of office,
Before I were forc'd out!
Happier is he that has no friend to feed,
Than such as do even enemies excel.
I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit.

Tim. | You do yourselves, much wrong, you hate too much of your own merit:
Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.
2 Lord. | With more than common thanks I will receive.
3 Lord. | O, he is the very soul of bounty!
Tim. | And now I remember me, my lord, you gave
Good words the other day of a lady courser.
I rode on; it is yours, because you liked it.
2 Lord. | I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that.

Tim. | You may take my word, my lord; I know,
    | no man
Can justify praise, but what he does affect:
Wrench not your friend's affection with mine own:
I'll tell you true. I'll call on you.
All Lords. | None so welcome.
Tim. | I take all and your several visitations
So kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give;
Methinks, I could deal kindness to my friends,
And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades,
Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich,
It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living
Is 'mongst the dead; and all the lands thou hast
Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. | Ay, defied land, my lord.
1 Lord. | We are so virtuously bound,
Tim. | And so
Am I to you.
2 Lord. | No infinitely more.
Tim. | All to you.—Lights, more lights.
1 Lord. | The best of happiness,
Honor, and fortunes, keep with you, lord Timon!
Tim. | Ready for his friends. [Exit.

Act II.

SCENE I.—A Room in a Senator's House.

Enter a Senator, with Papers in his Hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand to Varro; and to Isidore
He owes nine thousand; besides my former sum,
Which makes it two-and-twenty.—Still in motion
Of raging waste! It is not, it will not.
If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,
And give it Timon, why, the dog owns gold:
If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more
Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon,
Ask nothing, give it him, it blest me, straight,
And able horses: No porter at his gate;
But rather one that smiles, and still invites
All that pass by. It cannot hold the reason
Can find his state in safety. Caphis, ho!
Caphis, I say!

Enter CAPHIS.

Caph. | Here, sir, what is your pleasure!
Sen. | Get on your cloak, and haste you to lord Timon:
Impart to him your moneys; he be not ceased8
With slight denial; nor then silenced, when—
Courage me to your madder—and the cap
Plays in the right hand thus:—but tell him, sirrah,
My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn
Out of mine own; his days and times are past,
And my reliances and国企 dates.
Have smit my credit: I love, and honor him;
But must not break my back, to heal his finger.
Immediate are my needs; and my relief
Must not be foes & and turn'd to me in words,

Tim. But find supply immediate. Get you gone:
Put on a most important aspect,
A visage of demand; for, I do fear,
When every feather sticks in his own wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull.
Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.
Caph. | I go, sir.
Sen. | I go, sir!—take the bonds along with you,
And have the dates in compleat.
Caph. | I will, sir.

Sen. | Go. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter Flavius, with many Bills in his Hand.

Flav. No care, no stop! so senseless of expeus
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
Nor cease his flux of riot: Takes no account
How things go from him; nor resamines to care
Of what is to continue: Never mind
Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.
What shall be done! He will not hear, till feel:
I must be round with him, now he comes from hunting.
Fye, fye, fye, fye!

Enter CAPHIS, and the Servants of ISIDORE and VARRO.

Caph. | Good even, Varro: What,
You come for money?
Var. Serv. | Is't not your business too!
Caph. | It is;—and yours too, Isidore!
Isid. Serv. | It is so
Caph. | i.e. All happiness to you.
* Offering salutation
* By his heaven he means good advice.
TIMON OF ATHENS.  ACT II. SCENE II.

Caph. Would we were all discharged!
Var. Serv. I fear it.

Enter Timon, Alcibiades, and Lords, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again,
My Alcibiades,—With me! What's your will?
Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.
Tim. Dues! Whence are you?

Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward.

Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off
To the succession of new days this month:
My master is awak'd by great occasion,
To call upon you; and humbly prays you,
That with your other noble parts you'll suit,
In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend;
I'pright, but repair to me next morning.
Caph. Say, good my lord.

Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.
Var. Serv. One Varo's servant, my good lord—and Apem. He last ask'd you expressly to your lordship.
Tim. Give me breath;—
I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;
[Exeunt Alcibiades and Lords.

Tim. I'll wait upon you instantly.—Come hither, pray you.

[To Flavius.

How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd
With clamorous demands of date-broke bonds,
And the detention of long-since-due debts,
Against my honor?

Flav. Please you, gentlemen, the time is ungraevleable to this business: Your importunity cease, till after dinner;—
That I may make his lordship understand Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends:—
See them well entertain'd.
[Exeunt Timon, Flav. I pray, draw near.
[Exit Flavius.

Enter Apemantus and a Fool.

Caph. Stay, stay; here comes the fool with Apemantus; let's have some sport with 'em.
Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Dull. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!—Var. Serv. How dost, fool?—
Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?—Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

Apem. No; I's to thyself.—Come away.

[To the Fool.

Hist. Serv. [To Var. Serv.] There's the fool
Hangs at your bosom already.

Apem. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on him yet.

Caph. Where's the fool now?

Caph. Apem. How?—Ay, what?—Var. Serv. What are we, Apemantus?

Apem. Asses, all Serv. Why?

Apem. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

Apem. False Gramercies, good fool: how does your mistress?

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Corinth.

Apem. Good! gramercy.

Enter Page.

Page. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.

Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain! what do you in this wise company?—How dost thou, my master?

Apem. Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Forswear ice, fructose, read me the superscription of these letters; I know not which is which.

Apem. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Apem. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hanged. This is to lord Alcibiades; thus to Alcibiades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bastard.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog; and thou shall finish, a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone.

[Exit Page.

Apem. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to lord Timon's, Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apem. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers.

All Serv. Ay; 'twould they serv'd us.

Apem. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.

Fool. Have you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his servant; My mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly: The reason of this?

All Serv. I could render one.

Apem. Do it then, that we may account thee a whoremaster, and a knave; which notwithstanding thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Fool. What is a whoremaster, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit; sometime, it appears like a lord; sometime, like a lawyer; sometime, like a philosopher, with two stomes more than his artificial one: He is very often like a knight; and, generally in all shapes, that man goes up and down in, from four-score to twenty, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. These are not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.

All Serv. Aside, aside; here comes lord Timon.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Apem. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lovers, elder brother, and woman; sometime, the philosopher.

[Exeunt Apemantus and Fool.

Flav. Fie, you, walk near; I'll speak with you anon.

Tim. You make me marvel! Wherefore, ere this time,
Had you not fully laid my state before me;
That I might so have rated my expense,
As I had leave of means?

Fool. You would not hear me,
At many usuries I propos'd.

Tim. Go to;
Perchance, some single vantages you took,
When my indisposition put you back;—
And that umptomism made your minister,
Thus to excuse yourself.

Flav. O my good lord!
At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you; you would throw them off,
And say, you found them in mine honesty.
When, in some trading present, you have bid me Return so much," I have shock'd my head, and wept;
Vera, zero; to the author, you would my pride To hold your hand more close: I did endure Not seldom, nor no slight cheeks; when I have on't Like a young dinner; when I whelp'd of yourestate.
And your great flow of debts. My dear lord, Though you hear now, (too late!) yet now's a time,
The greatest of your having lacks a half
To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

Flav. 'Tis all engaged, some forfeited and some;
And what remains will hardly stop the mouth Of private creditors: the future comes apace;
What shall defend the interim? and at length How goes our reckoning?

Tim. To Lacedaemon did my land extend.

Flav. This good lord, the world is but a word;
Were it all yours, to give it in a breath,
How quickly were it gone?

Tim. You tell me true.

Flav. If you suspect my husbandry, or falsehood,
Call me before the exactest auditors,

* A certain sum.
And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me, When all our offices^ have been oppress'd With riotous feeders; when our vaults have wept With drunken splint of wine; when every room Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy; I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock, And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Dr'ythre, no more.

Flam. Heaven's have lied, the bounty of this lord! How many prodigal bits have slaves, and peasants, This night enfranchized! Who is not Timon's! What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is lord Timon's! Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon! Ah! when the means are gone, that buy this praise, The breath is gone where' this praise is made! Poesy's last-dost: one cloud of winter showers, These fies are couched.

Tim. Come, sermon no farther: No villainous bounty yet hath pried my heart; Privily, not ignorantly, have I given. Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack, To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart; If I would broach the vessels of my love, And try the argument of hearts by borrowing, Men, and men's fortunes, could I fraudly use, As I, by thee and me.

Flam. Assurance bless your thoughts! Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd. That I resign their blessings; for these Shall I try friends: You shall perceive how you Mistake my fortunes; I am wealthy in my friends. Within there, ho! — Flaminus, Servilius!

Enter Flaminus, Servilius, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord, my lord,— Tim. I will watch you severally.—You, to lord Lucius,— To lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his Honor to-day;—You to Scipionus; Comment me to their loves; and, I am proud, say, That my occasions have found time to use them Toward a supply of money; let the request be hastened.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

Flam. Lord Lucius, and lord Lucullus! hump! [Aside.

Act III.

SCENE I.—A Room in Lucullus's House.

FLAMINIUS waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you; he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter LUCILIUS.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucil. [Aside.] One of lord Timon's men! a gift. I warrant. Why this hits right; I dream of a silver basin and ever-to-night. Flaminus, honest Flaminus; you are very respectably welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.—[Exeunt Servant.] And how does that honorable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful lord and friend, look to-day?

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucil. I am right glad that his health is well, sir. And what lust thou there under thy elxak, pretty Flaminus?

Flam. 'Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir; which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honor to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use the fifty talents, hast sent to your lordship to furnish him; nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucil. Ha, ha, ha,—nothing doubting, says he! alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'is, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often have I dined with him, and told him on't; and come again to supper to him, of purpose to have

1 The apartments allotted to culinary offices. be
2 Dignified, make respectable. 3 For respectfully, him spend less; and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his; I have told him on't, but I could never get him from it.

Re-enter Servant, with Wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.

Lucil. Flaminus, I have noted thee always wise. Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure. Lucil. I have observed thee always for a towardly prompt spirit; give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and cannot use the time well, if the time use thee well;—good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah.—[To the Servant, who goes.] Who goes?—or is it thy honest, handsome Flaminus? Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman: but thou art wise; and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is not a time to lend money; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidares for thee; good boy, wink at me, and say, thou sawest me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Isn't possible, the world should so much ditter; And we alive, that liv'd? Fly, dam'd baseness, To him that worshippeth thee. [Exeunt. [Throwing the Money away. 5 Intending had anciently the same meaning as attending. 6 A halfcap is a cap slightly moved, not put off. 7 For incessantly. 8 Liberal, not parsimonious. 9 Honesty here means liberality.
Luc. Ha! Now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy mate. [Exit Lucullus.
Fla. May these add to the number that may scald thee!
Let molten coin be thy damnation, Thou disease of a friend, and not myself! Has friendship such a faint and milky heart, It turns in less than two nights? O, you gods, I feel my master’s passion! This slave I find not, neither do my lord’s words suit in him: Why should it thrive, and turn to nutriment, When he is turn’d to poison? O, may diseases only work upon’t! And when he is sick to death, let not that part of Which my lord paid for, be of any power To expel sickness, but prolong his hour! [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Public Place.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who, the lord Timon? I am your very good friend, and an honorable gentleman. 1 Stran. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumors; now lord Timon’s happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fye, no, do not believe it: he cannot want money for 2 Stran. But believe you this, my lord, that not long ago, one of his men was with the lord Lucullus, to borrow so many talents; may, urged extremely for it, and showed what necessity being’d for it, and yet was denied.

Luc. What a strange case was that! now, before the gods, I am ashamed on’t. Denied that honorable man! there was very little honor show’d in’t. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received several kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like triddles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook, and sent to me, I should ne’er have denied his occasion so many talents.

Exit Servilius.

Ser. See, my good hap, wonder’s my lord; I have sweat to see his honor.—My honored lord,— [To Lucius.

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well;—Commend me to thy honorable-virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honor, my lord hath sent me. Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord; he’s ever sending: How shall I thank him, thinkest thou? And what has he sent now?

Ser. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents.

Luc. I know, his lordship is but merry with me; he cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord.

If this occasion were not virtuous, I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I, to dishonour myself with such a good time, when I might have shown myself honorable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honor!—Servilius, now, before the gods, I am not able to do’t; the more beast, I say:—I was sending to use lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I am not, the wealth of Athens, I have done it now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship; and I hope, his honor will conceive the fairness of me, because I have no power to be kinder, and therefore I will not bring my care upon the밖에서 of Athens. Act III

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I will look you out a good turn, Servilius.— [Exit Servilius.

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk, indeed; And he, that’s once denied, will hardly speed. [Exit Lucius.

1 Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius? 2 Stran. Ay, too well.

1 Stran. Why this? Is the disease so and just of the same piece is every flatterer’s spirit. Who can call him His friend, that dips in the same dish! for, in Timon, one commonly knows his lord’s father And kept his credit with his purse; Supported his estate; nay, Timon’s money Has paid his men their wages; He ne’er drinks, But the silver treads upon his shoe. And yet, (O, the monstrousness of man When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!) He does deny him, in respect of his, What charitable men all to beggars.

3 Stran. Religion grows at it.

1 Stran. For mine own part, I never tasted Timon in my life. Nor does he want me? Three! Humph!— [Exit. Would others all! He might have tried lord Lucius, or Lucullus; And now Ventidius is wealthy too, Who return’d from prison: All these three Owe their estates unto him.

Ser. Of my lord, They have all been touched, and bound base metal; They have all denied him! Ser. How! have they denied him!

Has Ventidius and Lucullus drudg’d him? And Ventidius and Lucullus drudg’d him? And now Ventidius and Lucullus drudg’d him? And now Ventidius and Lucullus drudg’d him? Must I be his last refuge! His friends, like physicians, Thrive, give him over; Must I take the curse upon me!

He has much disgraced me in it; I am angry at him, That might have known my place: I see no sense in his

But his occasions might have wo’d me first; For, in my conscience, I was the first man That was deliver’d from him; And does he think so backwardly of me now, That I’ll require it last? No: So it may prove, An argument of laughter to the rest, And I amongst the lords be thought a fool. I had rather than the waste of thrice the sum, He had sent to me first, but for my mind’s sake; I had such a courage to do him good. But now

And with their faint reply this answer join; Who bates mine honor shall not know my coin.

Ser. Excellent! your lordship’s a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did, when he made man politic; he cross’d himself by’t; and I cannot think he intended the villains of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear foul! Takes virtuous copies to be wicked; like those that, under hot ardent zeal, would set whole realms on fire. Of such a nature is his politic love. This was my lord’s best hope: now all are fled, Save the gods only! Now his friends are dead, He hopes for his child: but one out ofwards with their wards Many a bounteous year, must be employ’d Now to guard sure his master. And this is all a liberal course allows; Who cannot keep his wealth, must keep his house

[Exeunt.}
Scene IV.

Timon of Athens.

Enter two Servants of Varro, and the Servant of Lucius, meeting Titus, Hortensius, and other Servants to Timon's Creditors, waiting his coming out.

Var. Serv. Well met; good morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Hor. Lucius! What do we meet together?

Luc. Serv. Ay, and, I think, one business doth command us all; for mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter Philoctetes. And sir

Philoctetes too!

Phi. Good day at once.

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother.

What do you think the hour!

Phi. Laboring for mine.

Luc. Serv. So much!

Phi. Is not my lord seen yet?

Luc. Serv. Not yet.

Phi. I wonder on't: he was wont to shine at seven.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter with him:

You must consider, that a prodigal course

Is like the sun's, but not, like his, recoverable.

I fear,

This deepest winter in lord Timon's purse;

That, is one may reach deep enough, and yet

Find little.

Phi. I am of your fear for that.

Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange event.

Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift,

For which I wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. Mark, how strange it shows, Timon's ways this should pay more than he owes;

And even as your lord should wear rich jewels

And send for money 'em.

Hor. I am weary of this charge, the gods can

Witness:

I know, my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth.

And now ingratitude makes it worse than theft.

1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine's three thousand crowns:

What's yours!

Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine.

1 Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep; and it should seem

By the sum

Your master's confidence was above mine;

Else, surely, his had equal'd.

Enter Flaminiaus.

Tit. One of lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminiaus! sir, a word: 'Pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship: pray signify so much.

Flam. I need not tell him: he knows, you are too diligent. [Exit Flaminiaus.

Enter Flavius, in a cloak, muffled.

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward muffled so? He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.

Tit. Do you hear, sir?--

1 Var. Serv. By your leave, sir.--

Flav. What do you ask of me, my friend?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.

Flav. Ay.

If money were as certain as your waiting,

'Twere sure enough. Why then prefer'd you not

Your sums and bills, when your false masters eat

Of your lords meat? Then they could smile and fawn

Upon his debts, and take down 'th interest

Into their glutinous maws. You do yourselves but

Wrong, to stir me up; let me pass quietly:

Believe't, my lord and I have made an end:

I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

Flav. If twill not,

'Tis not so base as you; for you serve knaves.

[Exit.
And none but tyrants use it cruelly. It pleases time, and fortune, to be heavy Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood, Has found a way to the sea, which was his depth To those that, without need, do plunge into it. He is a man, setting his fate aside, of comey virtues: Not he did soil the fact with cowardice; (An honor in him, which buys out his fault;) But, with a noble fiery, and fair spirit, seeking his reputation touch'd to death, He's born to oppose his foe. And with such sober and unmoved passion He did behave his anger, ere 'twas spent, as if he had but prov'd an argument. 1 Sen. You understand too much a paradox, Striving to make an ugly deed look fair; Your words have look'd so much upon them, as if they labor'd To turn the images into light, set guarding Upon the head of valor; which, indeed, is valor misbegot, and came into the world When seets and actions were newly born: He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer The worst that man can breathe; and make his wrongs His outsides: wear them like his nimble, careless heart, And e'er prefer his injuries to his heart, To bring it into danger. It wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill, What folly 'tis to hazard life for life! Ath. My lord, 1 Sen. You cannot make goss sins look clear; To revenge is no valor, but to bear. Ath. My lords, then, under favor, pardon me, If I speak like a captain. Why do perfidious men expose themselves to battle, And not endure all threatening? Sleep upon it And let the eyes quietly cut their throats, Without repugnancy! but if there be Such valor in the bearing, what make we Abroad? why then, women are more valiant, That stay at home, if heard crying for It and th' more captain than the lion; the felon, Laden with troubles, wiser than the judge, If wisdom be suffering. O my lords, As that are great, be pitifully gone. Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood? To kill, I grant, is sun's extremest gust; But, in defence, by mercy, 'tis most just. To be in anger, is impolicy: But who is man, that is not angry? Weary but the body with this. 2 Sen. You breathe in vain. Ath. What! In vain! his service done At Lacedaemon, and Byzantium, Were a sufficient bracer for his life. 1 Sen. What's that! Ath. Why, I say, my lords, it's done fair service. And shun in fight many of your enemies: For full of valor did he bear himself in the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds! 2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em, he is a sworn roister; it is a sin that often Beareth him, and takes his valor prisoner: If there were no foes, that were enough alone To overcome him: in that beastly fury He has been known to commit outrages, and cherish actions: 'Tis inter'd to us, His days are foul, and his drink dangerous. 1 Sen. He dies. Ath. Alas! He's a poor man. I might have died in war, My lords, if not for any parts in him, (Though his right arm might purchase his own time, And be in debt to none,) yet more to move you, Than stay at home to his, and join them both: And, for your sake, your reverend ages love security, I'll pawn my victories, all My honor to you, upon his good returns. If by this crime he disproves the law his life. Why, let the war receive't in valiant garne; For law is strict, and war is nothing more. He has been known to commit outrages, On height of our displeasure: Friend, or brother, He forgets his own blood, that spills another. Ath. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords, I do beseech you, know me. 2 Sen. How! Ath. Call me to your remembrances, manage, govern. 4 For aggravation. 3 Sen. What! Ath. I cannot think, but your age has forgot me; It could not else be, I should prove so base, To sue, and be denied such common grace: My words are aye at you. 1 Sen. Do you dare our anger! 'Tis in a few words, but spacious in effect; We banish thee for ever. Ath. Banish me! Banish your dojage; banish usury, That makes the senate ugly. 1 Sen. What? of his foes; Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell our spirit, He shall be executed presently. [Execute Senators. 2 Sen. He's a man that keep you old enough: that you may live Only in bone, that none may look on you! I am worse than mad: I have kept back their forces. While they have told their money, and let out Their coin upon larger interest; I myself, Rich only in large hurts.—All those, for this! Is this the basalt, that the usurping senate Pours into captains' wounds! ha! banishment! It comes not till; I hate not to be banish'd; It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury, That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up My discontented troops, and lay for hearts, His honor with most lands to be at odds; Soldiers should brook as little wrongs, as gods. [Exeunt. SCENE VI.—A magnificent Room in Timon's House. Music. Tables out: Servants attending. Euler divers Lords, at several doors. 1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir. 2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think, this honorable lord did but try us this other day. 1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts firing; when we encountered: I hope it is not so low with him, as he be made seem in the trial of his several friends. 2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new friends. 1 Lord. I should think so: He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear. 2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out. 1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go. 2 Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you? 1 Lord. A thousand pieces. 2 Lord. A thousand pieces! 1 Lord. What of you? 2 Lord. He sent to me, sir—Here he comes. Enter Timon, and Attendants. Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both: And how fare you! 1 Lord. Ever at the best, bearing well of your lordship. 2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willing, than we your lordship. Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter; such summer's fruits are many medals of refreshment, our dinner will not compensate this long stay; feast your ears with the music awhile; if they will tire so harshly on the trumpet's sound: we shall to present the banquet. 1 Lord. I hope it remains not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger. Tim. O, no, it would not trouble you. 2 Lord. My lord he tells me. Tim. Ah, my good friend, what cheer! [The Banquet brought in. 2 Lord. My most honorable lordship, I am sick of shame, that when your lordship this other day sent me to, I was so unfortunate a beggar. Tim. Think not of it, sir. For dishonored. We should now say—lay cut for hearts, t.e. the affection of the people. To tire on a thing, meant to be idly employed on it.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall. The gods have cast thee in those wolves! Dive in the earth, and henceforth not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent! Obedience fail in children! slaves and fools, Pluck the grave wrinkled senator from the bench, and mingling in their steads! to general villains Convert, o’ the instant, green virginity! Do’t in your parents’ eyes! bankrupts, hold fast; Rather than render back, out with your knives, And cut your trustye’st throats! bound-servants, steal! Large-handed robbers your grave masters are; And pill by law! mad, to thy master’s bed; Thy mistress is o’ the brothel! son of sixteen, Pluck the th’id crutch from the old limping sire, With it beat out his brains! nay, and fear, Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth, Domestic awe, night-feast, and neighborhood, Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contraries, And yet confession live!—Plagues, incident to men, Your potent and infectious fevers heap On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold scintica, Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt At home as their minds and hearts are, lusus and liberty! Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth; That gainst the stream of virtue they may strive, And drown themselves in riot! itchess, blains, Sow all the Athenian bosoms with their crop Be general leprosy! breath infect breath; That their society, as their friendship, may Be merely poison! Nothing I’ll hear from thee, But nakedness, thou detestable town!

Enter Flatus, with two or three Servants.

Flav. Hear you master, stedward, where’s our master?

Ser. We are undone! cast off! nothing remaining! Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to you? Let me be recorded by the righteous gods, I am as poor as you. Ser. Such a house broke! So noble a master fallen! All gone! and not one friend to take his fortune by the arm, And go along with him! Ser. As do we turn our backs From our companion, thrown into his grave; So his kindreds to his buried fortunes Sink all away; leave their false vows with him, Like empty purses pick’d: and his poor self, A dedicatory beggar to the gods, With his disease of all-scorched poverty, Walks, like contempt, alone.—More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruined house.

Ser. Yet do our hearts wear Timon’s ivy, That see 1 by our faces; we are fellows still, * Jacks of the clock; like those of St. Dunstan’s church, In Petit street.  * Accumulated curses.
TIMON OF ATHENS.

Act IV.

Serving alike in sorrow: lean'd is our bark; And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck, Hearing the surge's threat; we must all part Into this sea of air.

Good fellows all, the latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you. Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake, Let's shake our heads, and say, 'Tis a knell unto our master's fortunes. We have seen better days. Let each take some; [Giving them Money.

Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more: Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor. [Exeunt Servants.]

O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings us! Who would not wish to be a beggar then, Since riches point to misery and contempt! Who'd be so mock'd with glory or to live But in a dream of friendship? To have his pools, and all that state compounds, But only painted like his varnish'd friends! Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart, Undone by goodness! Strange, unusual blood, When a man's worst sin is, he does too much good! Who then dares to be half so kind again? For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar men. My own red hand, bless'd, bless'd, to be so accur'd, Rich, only to be wretched—th're great fortunes Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord! He's hung in rage from this ungrateful seal Of dissembling friends: nor has he been with to Supply his life, or that which can command it. I'll follow, and inquire him out; I'll serve his mind with my best will; Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still.[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Woods.

Enter Timon.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth Rotten humility; below thy sister's orb Infect the air! Twin'd brothers of one womb,— Original perfection, residence, and birth! Scarcity is divin'd,—touch them with several fortunes; The greater scorcs the lesser: Not nature, To have their sores lay siege, can bear great fortune, But by a contempt of nature. Raise me this beggar, and denude that lord; The senator shall bear contempt hereditary, The beggar native honor. It is the pasture lards the brother's sides, The want that makes him lean. Who dares, who dares, In purity of manhood stand upright, And say, This man's a flatterer? If one be, So are they all; for every grace of fortune Is by them'd by that below: the learned hate Ducks to the golden fool: All is oblique: There's nothing level in our cursed natures, But direct villany. Therefore be abhor'd And out of fashion, men, and men of men, His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains: Destruction hang mouldy mankind!—Earth, yield me roots! [Digging.]

Who seeks for better of thee, sance his palate With thy most open heart! What is here? Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold! No, gods, I am no false Florist. Roots, you clear heavens! Thus much of this, will make black, white; foul, fair; Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young; coward, valiant.

Ha, you gods! why this? What this, you gods! Why this Will lug your priests and servants from your sides Pluck out men's pillows from below their heads: This yellow slave Will knit and break religions; bless the accur'd; Make the hour leprous forlorn; place thieves, And give them title, knee, and approbation, With senators on the beef: this is it, That makes the wappen'd dog go wild again; She, who'd be the spit-head, and ulcerous sores, Would cast the garge at, the payment for her types To the April day again. Come, damned earth,
Scene III.

TIMON.

Tim. That,

By killing villains, thou hast worn to conquer

My country.

Put up thy gold: Go on,—here's gold,—go on;

Be not of a petty place, a wretched object;

With o'er some high and city, call his poor

In the sick air; Let not thy word skip one;

Pity not hon'd age for his white beard;

Hate me the more: Strike me the most charient matron:

It is her habit only that is honest,

Herself a bawd: Let not the virgin's check

Make soft thy trenchant sword; for those milk-

pallid faces smile from feels exhaust them all

That through the window-bars are men's eyes,

Are not within the feet of pity writ,

Set them down horrible terrors: spare not the babe,

Whose gossamer smiles from feels exhaust them.

mercy;

Think it a bastard, who the oracle

 Hath doubtfully pronounced thy throat shall cut,

And made it his sword: for grief against objects;

Put armor on thine ears, and on thine eyes,

Whose proof, nor cells of mothers, minds, nor babes,

Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding,

Shall pierce a jot: There's gold to pay thy soldiers:

Make large confusions: and, thy joy spent,

Confounded be thyself! Speak not, be gone.

Alec.

Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou giv'st me!

Not all thy counsel.

Tim.

Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse

Upon thee?

Phr. & Timan.

Give us some gold, good Timon:

Hast thou more?

Tim.

Enough to make a whore's wear her trade,

And make whores, a bawd. Hold up thy shield,

Thy apron mountant: You are not cahoulable,—

Although, I know, you'll swear, terribly swear,

Into strong shudders, and to heavenly agues,

The martial gods that hear you,—spare your oaths,

I'll trust to your conditions; Be whores still;

And if this breath that you take you convert,

Be strong in whom no bawd him, burn him up,

Let your close fire predominate his smoke,

And be no torches: Yet may your pains, six

Be quite contrary: And thatch your poor thin roofs

With burdens of the dead;—some that were hang'd.

No matter;—wear them, betray with them: where

Paint till a horse may mire upon your face:

A pox of wrinkles!

Phr. & Timan.

Well, more gold;—What then!—

Behold, we'll do any thing for gold.

Tim.

Consumptions sow

In hollow houses of men; strike their sharp shins,

And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice,

That he may never more in false title plead;

Nor sound his quills! shrilly; hoar the flam'n,

That scolds against the quality of flesh,

And not believes himself; down with the nose,

Doth wear the flat; the base is quite away

Of him, that his particular to foresee,

Smells from the general weal; make curd'd-pate

Where complexions fail.

And let the unscarr'd braggarts of the war

Derive some pain from you: Plague all;

That your activity may detect and quell

The value of all errantry:—There's more gold;—

Do you damn others, and let this damn you,

And ditches grave you all!

Phr. & Timan.

More counsel with more money,

Of the immortal Tison.

Tim.

More whored, more mischief first; I have given you earnest.

Alec.

Strike up the drum towards Athens.

Tim. If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again.

Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more.

Alec. I never did thee harm.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.

Alec.

Call'st thou that harm?

Tim. Men daily find it such. Get thee away,

And take thy bungles with thee.

Sicilia.

Cutting.

An allusion to the tale of Edipus.

Without pity.

Against objects of charity and compassion.

Vocations.

Alec.

We but sold him,—

Strike.

[Drum beats. Exit Alcibiades, Phrynius, and Timandra.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness,

Should yet be hungry!—Common mother, thou

Digging.

Whose worm unmeasurable, and infinite head,

Teems, and feeds all; whose self-same molcule,

Worsof thy proud child, arrogant man, is pull'd,

Engenders the black toad, and adder bite,

The cold weal, and eyeless venom'd worm.

With all the abhorred births below crisp'ed heaven

Whereon Hyperon's quickening fire doth shine;

Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate,

From fort with the dangerous hopeless poor root!

Enscar thy tertiary and concepcion widow,

Let it no more bring out ingrateful man!

Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears;

Toem with new monsters, whom thy upward face

Be to the marble mansion all above

Never preservst!—O, a root,—Dear thanks!

Dry up thy narrow, vines, and plough-turn leas:

Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts,

And morsels unctuous, gruses his pure mind,

That from it all consideration slips!

Enter Apemantus.

More man? Plague! plague!

Apem. I was directed hither: Men report

Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them.

Tim. This then, because thou dost not keep a dog

Whom I would imitate: Consumption catch thee!

Tim. In man is the nature thou receiv'st;

A poor unhuman melancholy, sprung

From change of fortune. Why this spade? this pitch?

This shee-like habit, and these looks of care!

 Thy flatteners yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft,

Hug their discase's perfumes, and have forgot

That ever Tison was. Shame not these woods,

But putting on the cunning of a country man

Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive

By that which has undone thee: hinge thy knee,

And let thy body;—thou art ever from thyself,

Blow off thy cap;—praise his most viscous strain,

And call it excellent; thou wast told thus;

Gav'st their thin ears, like tapsters, that bid well;

To knaves, and all approchers; 'This most just,

That thou turn rascal; hast thou wealth again,

Rascals should have't. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself.

Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like thysell;

A madman so long, now a fool: What, think'st

That the base, thy base, thy insolence,

Will put thy heart on warm? Will these man's duties

That have outliv'd the eagle, page thy heels,

And skip when thou put'st out! Will the cold brook;

Candied with ice, caudle thy morning taste,

To cure thy o'ernight surfeit! call the creatures,—

Whose naked natures live in all the spite

Of wrinkled heaven; whose bare unloosed trunks,

To the conflicting elements expos'd,

Answer more nature,—but them flatten thee;

O! thou shalt find—

Tim.

A fool of thee: Depart.

Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem. Why?

Tim. Thou flatt'rst misery.

Apem. I flatter not; but say thou art a caunt.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apem. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office, or a fool's.

Dost please thyself in't?

Apem. Yes.

Tim. What! a knave too?

Apem. If thou didst put this sour cold habit on

To castigate thy pride, 'twere well; but thou

Dost it enforcedly; thou'lt dost curiour be again,

Wert thou not beggar.

Willing misers are

Outwive uncertain pop, is crownd' before?

The one is filling still, never complete;

The other at high wish: Best state, contentless,
Hath a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse than the worst, content.
Thou shouldst desire to die, being miserable,
Thou hast heart's breath; that is more miserable.
Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm
With favor never clasps;—but bred a dog.
Hast thou, like us, from our first swifts proceed
The lawful degrees thou hast in this world to afford
To such as may the passive drugs of it
Freely command, thou wouldst have plunged thyself
In general rot, melted down thy youth
In thy own bed of death:—and never learn'd
The key precepts of respect, but follow'd
The sugar'd game before thee. But myself
Who had the world as my confectionary.
Thou hast the tongues of three thousand sorts of men.
At duty, more than I could frame employment;
That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves
Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush.
Fall from their boughs, and left me open, bare
For every storm that blows;—I to bear this,
That never knew but better, is some burden:
That nature did commence in suffrence, time
Hath made thee hard in it. Why should'st thou hate men?
They never flatter'd thee. What hast thou given?
In which, the wiser,—thy father, that poor ear.
Must be thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff
To some she-beggar, and compound thee,
Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone;
If thou hadst not born the worst of men
Thou hadst been a knife, and darterer.

Apem. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. Thou art, that I am not thee.

Apem. I, that I was

No prodigal. Tim. I, that I am one now;
What will the wealth I have shut up in thee,
I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.—
That the whole life of Athens were in this!
Thou wouldst eat it.

[Enters a rod.]

Apem. Here! I will put thy beast, [Offering him something.

Tim. First mend my company, take away thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack Of thine.

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but hodg'd;
I should it; I should it.

Apem. What wouldst thou have to Athens?

Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,
Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim. The best and trustest;
For here it sleeps and does no hired harm.

Apem. Where ly'st o' nights, Timon?

Tim. Unheard of above me.

Apem. Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

Tim. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather,
Where it eat.

Apem. Thou would poison obedient, and knew my mind!

Apem. Where wouldst thou send it?

Tim. To serve thy dishes.

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends:—When thou wast in gilt, and thyplitude, they mock'd thee for too much curiously;—in thy raggs thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary.
There's a medlar for thee, eat it.

Apem. Let's hate.

Tim. Ay, though it look thee.

Apem. An thou hadst hated medlars sooner, you should have loved thyself better now. What man didst thou ever know unlike, that was beloved after his means!

Tim. Who, without those means thou talkest of,
do thou ever now beloved?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

Tim. What things in the world causeth thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What wouldst thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power:

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.

Tim. Would'st thou have thyself full in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apem. Not this: for a beast's more miserable in a world.

Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to!—If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee; if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee; if thou wert the fox, the lynx would suspeet thee; when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass; if thou wert the ass, thy dundness would torment thee; and still thou livedst but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflicte thee, and oft thou shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner:—wou'rt thou the unicorn, pride and warriness would confound thee, and make theme own self the conqueror of thy turn:—wou'rt thou the bear, you wouldst be killed by the horse:—wou'rt thou a horse,
you wouldst be seized by the lord:—wou'rt thou a lordan, you wouldst be cursed by the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life:
all thy safety were remotions; and thy defence, absence.

What beast couldst thou be, that wert not subject to a beast! and what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation?

[Looking on the Gold.]

Tim. 'Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright denier
Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!
Thou ever young, fresh, bold, and delicate wooer;
Whose blush doth stam the consecrated snow
That lies on Dams lap; thou visible god,
That so many impossible things
And makst them kifs! that speak'st with every tongue,
To every purpose! O thou toucher of hearts!
Think, thy slave man rebels; and by thy virtue
Set them into confounding odds, that beasts
May have the world in empire!

Tim. Would it were so;—But not till I am dead!—I'll say; thou hast gold, thou wilt be thord' to shorty.

Tim. Thon Thy back, I pr'ythee.

Apem. Live, and love thy misery
Tim. Long live so, and so die!—I am quit.

[Exit Apemantus.

Tim. The top, the principal.

Timon.
More things like men!—Eat, Timon, and abhor them.

Enter Thieves.

1 Thief. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender out of his remainder: the mere want of gold, and the falling-from of his friends, drove him into this melancholy. 2 Thief. It is a noise, he hath a mass of treasure. 3 Thief. Let us make the assay upon him: if he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall'st get it? 2 Thief. True; for he's a rich man, his hid. 1 Thief. Is not this he? 2 Thief. Where! 1 Thief. Tis his description. 3 Thief. He! I know him. 2 Thief. Save thee, Timon. 1 Thief. Moses, soldiers, not thieves. 2 Thief. Both too; and women's sons. 3 Thief. We are not thieves, but men that much do want. 1 Timon. Your greatest want is, you want much of me.

Why should you want? Behold the earth hath roots; within this mile break forth a hundred springs: The sarks bear meat, the bruisers sweet hips; The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full mess before you. Want! why want? 1 Thief. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water, As madmen and fishes. 1 Timon. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes.

You must eat men. Yet thanks! I must you can, That you be thieves professed; that you work not In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft In limited professions. Rascal thieves, Here's gold! Go, suck the subtle blood of the grape; Till the big fever seethe your blood to froth, And so escape hanging; trust not the physician; His antidotes are poison, and he stays More than you rob: take wealth and lives together; Do villany, do, since you profit to do. Like workmen. I'll example you with thievish The son's a thief, and with his great attraction Rabes the vast sea: the moon's an ardent thief, And her pale fire she snatches from the sun: The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves The moon into salt tears: the earth a thief That feeds on breads by a comest'st pale gold. From general excrement: each th'ens is a thief; The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power Have unchecked their love. Nor love not yourselves: away, Robin hood! Say, what's gold? There's more gold. Cut throats. All that you meet are thieves: to Athens, go, Break open shops; nothing can you steal, But thieves do lose it; steal not less, for this I give you; and gold enough you howseover! 1 Timon. Return to his care.

3 Thief. He has almost charmed me from my profession, by persuading me to it. 1 Thief. 'Tis in the nature of mankind, that he thus advises us; not to have us thrive in our mystery. 2 Thief. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade. 1 Thief. Let us first see peace in Athens: There is no tune so miserable, but a man may be true. 1 Timon. Return to his care.

Enter Flavus.

Flavus. O you gods! Is you desir'd and ruinous man my lord! Full of decay and failing! 0 monument And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd! What an alteration of honor has Desperate want made? What viler thing upon the earth, than friends Who can bring nolest minds to basest ends! How rarely does it meet with this time's guise, When man was wish'd to love his enemies: 1. Legal. 2. Comest, manure. 3. How happily.

Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo These that would mischief me, than those that do! He has caught me in his eye: I will present My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord, Still serve him with my life.—My dearest master!

Timon comes forward from his Care.

Timon. Away! what art thou? 1 Thief. He have you forgot me, sir? 2 Timon. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all men; Then, if thou grant'st thou art man, I have forgot thee. 1 Flavus. An honest poor servant of yours. 2 Timon. Then I know thee not: I ne'er had honest man About me; 1 all that I kept were knives, To serve in meat to villains. 1 Flavus. The gods are witness, Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief For his undone lord, than mine eyes for you. 2 Timon. What, dost thou weep! —Come nearer;— Then I love thee. Because thou art a woman, and disdainst Flinny mankind; whose eyes do never lose Dear thorough dust and laughter. 2 Timon. Strange to see, that weep with laughing, not with weeping! 1 Flavus. I beg of you to know me, good my lord, To accept my grief, that whilst this scarce wealth lasts, To entertain me as your steward still.

2 Timon. Had I a steward so true, so just, and now So comfortable! It almost turns my dangerous nardus difficult. Let me behold Thy face. —Surely, this man was born of woman. Forgive my generous and exceptless rashness, Perpetual-sooner gods! I do proclaim One honest man,—mislike me not,—but one; No more, I pray,—and he is a steward.— How fair would I have hated all mankind, And thou reGPCUest thyself: But all, save thee, tell with curses. Menthinks, thou art more honest now, than wise For, by oppressing and betraying me, Thou mightst have sooner got another service: For many so arrive at second masters, Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true, (For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure,) Is not thy kindness sensible, covetous, Not a murmuring kindness: and as rich men deal'd themselves, Expecting in return twenty for one? 1 Flavus. No, my most worthy master, in whose breast Doubt and respect, what are placed too late: You should have got'd false times, when you did best! Suspect still comes where an estate is least. That which I show, heaven know, is merely love, Duty, and zeal to your unmatcht mind. Care of your food and living: and, believe it, My most honor'd lord, For any benefit that points to me, Either in hope, or present, I'd exchange For this one wish, That had you power and wealth To requite me, by making rich yourself. 2 Timon. Look thee, 'tis so! —Thou singly honest man, Here, take — the gods out of my misery Have sent me treasure. Go, live rich, and happy: But thus condition'd: Thou shalt build from me;兴建 all, curse all; show charity to none: But let the famish'd desert leave from the bone, Ere thou relieve the beggar: give to dogs What thou deny'st to men; let prisons swallow them. Deibus with them: Be men like blasted woods, And may diseases lick up their false bloods! And so farewell, and thrive. 1 Flavus. O, let me stay, 2 Timon. And comfort you, my master. 1 Timon. Curses, stay not; fly, whilst thou art bless'd and free: Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee. 1 Timon. (Exeunt severally.)
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Timon's Cave.

Enter Poet and Painter; Timon behind, unseen.

Poet. As I took note of the place, it cannot be for men so high.

Tim. I wonder what's to be thought of him? Does the rumor hold for true, that he is so full of gold?

Poet. Certain: Alcibiades reports it; Phrynia and Timon had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity:
'Tis said he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Tim. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his hands?

Poet. Nothing else: you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest.
Therefore, 'tis not amiss we tender our loves to him in this supposed distress of his; it will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travel for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Tim. What have you now to present unto him?

Poet. Nothing at this time but my visitation:
only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Tim. If you can serve him so well; tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Poet. Good as the best. Promising is the very air o' the time: it opens the eyes of expectation; peradventure is ever the dullest for his act; and, but in the phainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use. To promise is most courtly and fashionable; performance is a kind of will or testament, which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint a man so bad as thyself.

Poet. I am thinking what I shall say I have provided for him: it must be a personating of himself; a satire against the solemnity of prosperity; with a discovery of the infinite flatness, that follow youth and opulence.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? Will thou whip thine own faults in other? Do so, I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him:
Then do we sin against our own estate,
When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Tim. True.

Poet. When the day serves, before black-corner'd night,
Find what thou want'st, by free and other'd light.

Come.

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a god's gold,
That he is worship'd in a baser temple,
Then where swine feed!
'Tis the stone that rigit'st the bark, and plough'st the foam:
Settled admired reverence in a slave:
To thee be worship! and thy saints for aye
Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey!
'Tis I do meet them.

Poet. Advancing.

Tim. Poet, Hall, worthy Timon?

Poet. Sir,

Tim. I have one liv'd to see two honest men.

Poet. Sir, having o'er an open bounty tasted,
Hear'd why you were retired, your friends fall'n off,
Whose thankless natures—O abhorred spirits!
Not all the whips of heaven are large enough—
What! to you! Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence
To their whole being! I'm rapt, and cannot cover,
The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude
With a man's size of words.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see the better:
You, that are honest by being what you are,
Make them best seen, and known.

Poet. Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Ay, you are honest men.

Poet. We are hither come to offer you our service.

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I require you?
Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? I no.

Both. What can we do, we'll do, to do you service.

Tim. You are honest men: you have heard that I have gold:
I am sure you have: speak truth: you are honest
men.

Poet. So it is said, my noble lord: but therefore Came not my friend, nor I.

Tim. Good honest men: Thou draw'st a counterrist!

Best in all Athens; thou art, indeed, the best:
Thou contrivest most likely.

Poet. So, so, my lord.

Tim. Even so, sir, as I say:—And for thy fiction,

Why, thy verse stews with stuff too fine and smooth,
That thou art even natural in thine art.

But, for all this, my honest-natur'd friends,
I must needs say, you have a little fault:
Marry, 'tis not monstrons in you; neither wish I,
You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honor,
To make it known to us,

Tim. You'll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will yoo, indeed?

Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's ne'er a one of you but trusts a knife,

That mightily deceives you.

Both. We.

Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him dis-
semble,

Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,
In your bosom: yet remain assur'd,
That he's a made-up villain.

Poet. I know none such, my lord.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you
gold,
Rid me these villains from your companies:
Hang them, or stab them, drown them in a draught,
Confound them by some course, and come to me,
I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord, let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this, but two m companies:—

Each man apart, all single and alone,
Yet an arch-villain keeps him company.
If, where thou art, two villains shall not be,

Poet. To the Painter.

Come not near him.—If thou wouldst not reside

But where one villain is, then him abandon.—
Hence! pack! there's gold, ye came for gold, ye slaves,
You have done work for me, there's payment:
Hence! You are an alchemist, make gold of that:
Out, rascal dogs!

[Exit, beating and driving them out.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Flavius, and two Senators.

Flav. It is in vain that you would speak with
Timon:
For he is set so only to himself,
That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
is friendly with him.

1 Sen. Bring us to his cave:
It is our part, and promise to the Athenians,
To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike
Men are not still the same: 'Twas time, and grief
That feared his life, and grief, and time, and his own hand
Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him: Bring us to him
And chance it as it may.

* A portrait was so called.
* A complete, a finished villain.
Flav. Here is his cage.—

Peace and content be here! Lend Timon! Timon! Let him and he speak to tear his griefs, the Athenians, by two of their most revered senators; greet thee:

Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak, and be hang'd!

For each true word, a blister! and each false be as a cautering to the root o' the tongue, Consuming it with speaking?

1 Sen. Worthy Timon—

Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.

2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, Timon. Timon. I thank them; and would send them back the plague.

Could I but catch it for them.

1 Sen. O, forget

What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.

The senators, with one consent of love, Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought On special dignities, which vacant lie For thy best use and wearing.

2 Sen. They confess,

Toward thee, forgetfulness too general, gross;

Which now the public body,—which doth seldom Play the revancer,—feeling in itself,

As Timon's aid, hath made itself withal

Of its own will, restraining aid to Timon:

And send forth us, to make their sorrow'd render, Together with a recompense more fruitful,

Than health and leisure can weigh the world by the drum:

Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth,

As shall to three riot out what wrongs were theirs,

And write in thee the figures of their love,

Ever to read them thine. You witch me in it;

Time. Suppose me to the very brink of tears:

Lend me a boy's heart, and a woman's eyes,

And I'll be weep thee these comforts, worthy senators.

1 Sen. Therfore, please thee to return with us,

And of our Athens, (thine, and ours,) to take The captain's-up, thou shalt be met with thanks,

Allow'd with absolute power, and thy good name Live with authority:—so soon we shall drive back Of Alcibiades the approaches wild:

Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up his country's peace.

2 Sen. And shakes his threatening sword

Against the walls of Athens.

1 Sen. Therefore, Timon,—

Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir; Thus,—

If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,

Let not Timon, That—Timon cares not. But if he suck fair Athens, And take our goodly aged men by the beards, Giving our holy virgins to the slam Of contumelious,. beastly, mankind-at-war;

Then, let him know,—and tell him, Timon speaks it, In pity of our aged, and our youth,

I cannot choose but tell him, that— I care not, And let him take it at worst; for their knives care not

While you have threats to answer: for myself,

There's not a whistle in the unruly camp,

But I do prize it at my love, before

The reverend'st threat in Athens. So I leave you To the protection of the prosperous gods,

As leaves to keepers.

Stay not, all's in vain.

Flav. Why, I was writing of my epitaph,

It will be seen to-morrow: my long sickness Of health, and living, now begins to end,

And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still; Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,

And last so long enough!

1 Tim. But yet I love my own country; and am not One that recedes in the common wreck,

As common brat doth put it.

1 Sen. That's well spoken.

Tim. Command me to them; and tell them, that to ease them of their griefs,

And of little strakes, the right of their wrongs, Their pile of love, with other incident things That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain

In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do their—

I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath.

2 Sen. I like this well, he will return again.

Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,

That much of my own use and profit to cut down,

And shortly must I tell it: Tell my friends,

Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,

From high to low throughout, that whose please To stop affliction, let him take his bate.

Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,

And hang himself:—I pray you, do my greeting.

Flav. Trouble him no further, thus you still shall have him.

Tim. Come not to me again: but say to Athens,

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion

Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;

Which once a day with his embossed flood

The turbulent surge shall cover; thither come,

And let my grave-stone be your oracle,—

Lips, let your words go by, and language end:

What is amiss, plague and infectious name

Graves only be men's works; and death, their gain!

Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign!

1 Sen. His discontent's are unremovably

Coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead: let us return,

And strain what other means is left unto us

In our dear perd.

1 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Walls of Athens.

Enter two Senators, and a Messenger.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discovered; are his files As full as thy report?

Mess. Have I spoke the least:

Besides, his expedition promises Present approach.

2 Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mess. I am a courier, one mine ancient friend:—

When, though in general part we were oppos'd,

Yet our old love made a particular force,

And made us speak like friends,—this man was rising

From Alcibiades to Timon's cage,

With letters of entreatry, which imported

His fellowship to the cause against your city,

In part to take this of Timon.

Enter Senators from Timon.

1 Sen. Here come our brothers.

2 Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect.

The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scouring Both chokes the air with dust: In and prepare; Ours is the fall, I fear; our foes, the snare.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Woods. Timon's Cave, and a Tomb-stone seen.

Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.

Sold. By all description this should be the place. Who's here? Who speak, ha!—No answer!—What is this?

Timon is dead, who hath outstrip'd his span:

Some beast rear'd this; there does not live a man. Dead, sure; and thus his grave.

What's on this tomb I cannot read; the character I'll take with wax.

Our captain hath in every figure skill;

An aged interpreter, though with you in doubt days:

Before proud Athens he's set down by this, Whose tail the mark of his ambition is. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Before the Walls of Athens.

Trumpets sounded. Enter Alcibiades and Forces.

Alcib. Sound to this coward and lascivious town Our terrible approach. [A Parley sounded.

Enter Senators on the Walls.

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the tune

Dreadful.}

543
With all licentious measure, making your wills
The scope of justice; till now, myself, and such
As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wandered with our travers'd arms, and breath'd
Our sufferance vainly; now the time is flush;
When crouching marrow, in the bearer strong,
Crack'd of itself, No more: new breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of case;
And purry insolence shall break his wind,
With fear and horrid flight.
1 Sen. Noble and young,
When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit,
Ex thou hastid power, or we had cause of fear,
We sent to thee; to give thy rage balm,
To wipe out our ingratitude with loves
Above their quantity.
2 Sen. So did we woo
Transformed Timon to our city's love,
By humble message, and by promises and means;
We were not all unkind, nor all deserve
The common stroke of war.
1 Sen. These walls of ours
Were not erected by their hands, from whom
You have receiv'd your griefs: nor are they such
That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall
For private faults in them.
2 Sen. Nor are they living
Who were the motives that you first went out;
Shame, that they wanted cunning, in excess
Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord,
Into our city with thy banners spread:
By decimation, and a bided death,
(If thy revenges hunger for that food,
Which nature loathes,) take thou the destin'd tenth;
And by the hazard of the spotted die,
Let die the spotted.
1 Sen. All have not offended;
For those that were, is it not square to take,
On those that are, revenges: crimes, like lands,
Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage:
Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin,
Which, in the bluster of thy wrath, must fall
With those that have offended: like a shepherd,
Approach the fold, and curb the infected forth,
But kill not all together.
2 Sen. What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile,
Than how to't with thy sword.
1 Sen. Set but thy foot
Against our rampir'd gates, and they shall ope,
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say, thou'lt enter friendly.
3 Sen. Throw thy glove;
Or any token of thine honor else,
That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress,
And not as our confusion, all thy powers
Shall make their harbor in our town, till we
Have seal'd thy full desire.
Aetcib. Then there's my glove;
Descend, and open your uncharged ports;
Those enemies of Timon's, and mine own,
Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof,
Fail, and no more: and,—to atone thy fears
With my more noble meaning,—not a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
But shall be remedied, to your public laws
At heaviest answer.
Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.
Aetcib. Descend, and keep your words.
[The Senators descend, and open the Gates.
Enter a Soldier.
Sol. My noble general, Timon is dead;
Entomb'd upon the very hem of the sea;
And on his gravestone, this inscription; which
With wax I brought away, whose soft impression
Interprets for my poor ignorance.
Aetcib. [Reads.] Here lies a wretched case, of wretched soul bereft:
Seek not my name: A plague consume you wicked
cafilfs left!
Here lie I, Timon; who, alife, all living men did hate:
Pass by, and curse thy fill; but pass, and stay not here thy gait.
These well express in thee thy latter spirits;
Though thou abhorrest in us our human griefs,
Scour'dst our brain's slow, and those our dieplets which
From wizard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for;
On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead
Is noble Timon; of whose memory
Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city,
And I will use the olive with my sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace stult war;
make each
Prescribe to other, as each other's leech.
Let our drums strike.
[Exeunt.
* Unattacked gates.  Reconcile.
* Etcop.  Physician.
CORIOLANUS.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS, a noble Roman.
TITUS LARTIUS, a General against the Volscians.
COMINUS, a Citizen of Antium.
MENENIUS AGrippA, a Friend to Corioliatus.
SICINIUS VELUTES, a Tribune of the People.
JUNIUS BRUTUS, a Citizen of Volscia.
Young MARCUS, Son to Corioliatus.
A Roman Officer.
TELLUS AVIDUS, General of the Volscians.
Conspirators with Caius Marcius.

SCENE, partly in Rome, and partly in the Territories of the Volscians and Antitians.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter a Company of mutinous Citizens, with Slaves, Clubs, and other Weapons.

1 Cit. Before we proceed any further, hear me speak.
2 Cit. Speak, speak. [Several speaking at once.
3 Cit. You are resolved rather to die than to famish!
4 Cit. Resolved, resolved.
5 Cit. First, you know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.
6 Cit. We know't, we know't.
7 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Isn't a verdict?
8 Cit. No more talking on't; let it be done: away, away.
9 Cit. One word, good citizens.
10 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians, good! What authority surfeits on, would relieve us: if they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess, they relieved us humanely: but they think, we are too dear: the leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufficiency is a gain to them.
11 Cit. Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes: for the gods know, I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.
12 Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?
13 Cit. Against him first; he's a very dog to the commonalty.
14 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country!
15 Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.
16 Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.
17 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft conscienced men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.
18 Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him: You must in no way say, he is covetous.
19 Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations; he hath faults with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these? The other side of the city is riven: Why stay we prating here! To the Capitol.
20 Cit. Come, come.
21 Cit. Soft; who comes here!

Enter MENENIUS AGrippA.

22 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa: one that hath always loved the people.
23 Cit. He's one honest enough: Would, all the rest were so!
24 Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? Where go you With hats and clubs? The matter speak, I pray you.
25 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate: They have had inkling, this fortnight, what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say, poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know, we have strong arms too.
26 Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine host neighbors, Will you undo yourselves?
27 Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.
28 Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have the patricians of you. For your wants, Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your staves, as hit them Against the Roman state; whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong link asunder, than can ever Appear in your impediment: For the dearth, The gods, not the patricians, make it; and Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack, You are transported by calamity. Thither where more attends you: and you slander The heels o' the state, who care for you like fathers, When you curse them as enemies.
29 Cit. Care for us!—True, indeed!—They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses crammed with grain; make edicts for

Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost:
Thou rascal, that art worst in blood, to run
Lead'st first, to win some vantage,—
But make you ready your shafts and clubs;
Rendez your raths at the points of battle;
The case must have bale, Hail, noble Marcus!—

Ester Caesar Marchus.

Mar. Thanks.—What's the matter, you dissentious rogues?

Cic. What, you have ever your good word?

Mar. He that will give good words to thee, will flatter Beneath abhorring. What would you have, you
That like nor peace, nor war? the one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts you,
Where he could find you lions, finds you kares;
Where foxes, geese: You are so sner, no,
Than is the coat of fire upon the ice, or hairstone in the sun. Your virtue is,
To make him worthy, whose offence subdues him,
And curse that justice did it. Who deserves great-
ness,
Deserves your hate: and your affections are
A few, the appell'll tell you. With a kind of smile,
Which never came from the lungs, but even thus,

That envied his receipt; even so most subtly;
As you malign our senators, for that
They are not such as you.

What could the belly answer!

Men. I will tell you; If you bestow a small [of what you have little]
Patience, a while, you'll hear the belly's answer.

1 Cic. You are long about it.

Men. Note me this. Your great grave belly was deliberate,
Not rash like his accusers, and thus answered:
True is it, my incorporeal friends, quoth he,
That I receiv'd the general food and life,
Which you do live upon: and fit it is;
Because I am the storehouse, and the shop
Of the whole body: But if you do remember,
I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the court, the heart,—to the seat o' the brain,
And, through the cranks and offices of man,
The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
From me receive that vital competency
Whereby they live: And though that all at once,
You, my good friends, [this says the belly.] mark me:

1 Cic. Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. Though all at once cannot
See what I do deliver to each;
Yet I can make my supply up to that all
From me do return the flour of all,
And leave me but the bran. What say you to it?

1 Cic. It was an answer. How apply you this?

Men. The senators of Rome are this goodly belly,
And you the mutinous members: For examine
Their counsels and their cares; digest things rightly
Touching the well o' the common; you shall find,
Not profitable benefit which you receive,
But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you,
And no way from yourselves.—What do you think?

You, the great toe of this assembly.

1 Cic. Why the great toe? Why the great toe?

Men. For that being one o' the lowest, basest,
poorest,

1 Cic. Why the great toe? Why the great toe?

Men. For that being one o' the lowest, basest,
poorest,
Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where's Caius Marius!

Mor. Here; what's the matter!

Mess. The news is, sir, the Voles are arms. Mor. I am glad on't; then we shall have means to vent

Our musty superflity.—See, our best elders.

Edl. Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators;

JUNIUS BARTUS, and SEN VIUS VELUTUS.

1 Sen. Marcus, 'tis true, that you have lately told us;

The Voles are in arms.

Mor. They have a leader,

Titus Aundius, that will put you to't.

I sin in envying his nobility:

And were I any thing but what I am,

I would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together.

Mor. Were half to half the world by the ears,

And upon my party, I'd revolt, to make

Only my wars with him: he is a lion

That I am proud to hunt.

1 Sen. Then, worthy Marcus,

Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mor. And I am constant.—Titus Lartius, thou

Shall use me once more strike at Aundius' face.

What, art thou still! stand out!

Tile. No. Caius Marius;

I'll lean upon one crutch, and fight with the other,

Exeunt behind this business!

Men. O, true bred!

1 Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, I know,

Our greatest friends attend us.

Tile. Lead you on:

Follow, Cominius; we must follow you;

Right worthy your priority.

Com. Noble Lartius!

1 Sen. Hencé! to your homes, be gone.

[To the Citizens.

Mor. Nay, let them follow;

The Voles have much ear: take these rascals thither.

To gnaw their garners!—Worshipful mutineers,

Your valor puts well forth: pray, follow.

[Exeunt Senators, Capt. More, Tit., and Mess.

Sen. Citizens steal away.

Sir. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcus!

Brutus: he has no equal.

Sir. When we were chosen tribunes for the people,

Brutus mark'd you his lip, and eyes.

Sir. Nay, but his taunts.

Brutus: being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods.

Sir. Behold the modést moon.

Brutus: the present wars devour him: he is grown too proud to be so valiant.

Such a nature,

Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow

Which he treads on at moon: But I do wonder,

His insensibility can brook to be commanded

Under Cominius.

Brutus: Fame, at the which he aims,—

In whom already he is well graeced,—cannot

Better be held, nor more attain'd, than by

A place below the first: for what miscarries

Shall be the general's fault, though he perform

To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure

Will then cry out of Marius, O, if he Had borne the business!

Sir. Besides, if things go well,

Opinion, that so sticks on Marius, shall

Of his merits? rob Cominius.

Com. Cominius:

Half all Cominius' honors are to Marcus,

Though Marius earn'd them not: and all his faults

To Marcus shall be honors, though, indeed,

In aught he merit not.

Sir. Let's hence, and hear

How the deepast is made: and in what fashion,

More than in singularity, he goes

Upon his present action.

Brutus: Let's along.

[Exeunt.

& Nobili.

Scene II.—Coriolanus. Enter Caius ius Aundius, and certain Senators.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is? Aundius,

That they of Rome are enter'd in our councils,

And know how we proceed.

Aundius.

Is it not yours?

What ever hath been thought on in this state,

That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome

Had execution? 'tis not four days gone,

Since I heard them; the same are the words; I think

I have the letter here; yes, here it is: [Reads.

They have press'd a power, but it is not known

Whether for east, or west: The death is great;

The people insatious: and it is not now

Cominius, Marcus, your old enemy,

(Who is of Rome worse hated than of you.)

And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,

These three lend on this preparation.

Whether 'tis best: most likely, 'tis for you:

Consider of it.

1 Sen. Our army's in the field:

We never yet made doubt that Rome was ready

To answer us.

Aundius.

Nor did you think it folly,

To keep your generals hence till'd, till when

They need must show themselves; which in the hatching,

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery,

We shall be shorten'd in our aim; which was,

To take in many towns, ere, almost, Rome

Should know we were about.

2 Sen. Noble Aundius.

Take your commission: be you to your hands:

Let us alone to guard Corioli:

If they set down before us, for the remove

Bring up your army: but, I think, you'll find

They have not prepar'd for us.

Aundius.

Or, doubt not that;

I speak from certainties. Nay, more,

Some parcels of their powers are forth already,

And only bithereward. I leave your honors.

If we and Caius Marius chance to meet,

'Tis sworn between us we shall never strike

Till one can do no more.

All. The gods assist you!

Aundius.

And keep your honors safe!

1 Sen. Farewell.

2 Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell.

[Exeunt.

Scene III.—Rome. An Apartment in Marcus' House. Enter Volumnia and Virgilia; They sit down on two low stools, and sew.

Virgilia. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a manner comfortable sort. If my son were my husband, I should feeler rejoice in that absence wherein he won honor, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would show most love.—When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way; when for a day of kings' entractures, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholdin';—considering how honor would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir,—was pleased to let him seek danger

Where he might strike fame: To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter,—I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now, in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

Virgilia. But had he died in the business, madam, how then?

Volumnia. Then his good report should have been of my son; I thereon would have found issue. Hear me proceed sincerely: Had I a dozen sons,—each in my love alike, and none less dear than the one my good Marcus,—I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gentlewoman. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit your lordship.

Virgilia. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself.
Coriolanus.

Act I.

Val. Indeed you shall not.

Methinks, I hear rather your husband's drum; See how he stirs! And here comes Ausidius down by the hair; As children from a bear, the Voices shunning him: Methinks I see him stamp thus, and call thus,—

'Tis he, you comrade, you need no more fear. Though you were born in Rome: his bloody brow With his mail'd hand then winding, forth he goes Like to a harvest-man, that's task'd to mow But to lose his hair.

Vir. His bloody brow! O, Jupiter, no blood! Val. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man Than gilt his horse's: The breasts of Hecuba, Which you did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier Than Hector's forehead, when it spurted forth blood At Grecian swords' contending.—Tell Valeria, We are fit to bid her welcome. [Ekt Gent. Vir. Prevail bless me! Ford to fell Ausidius! Val. He'll beat Ausidius' head below his knee, And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with Valeria and her Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Val. Sweet madam,—

Gent. I'll glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What, are you sewing here! A fine spot, in good faith.—How does your little son!

Val. Sir, that child is your ladyship's good madam.

Val. He had rather see the swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his school-master.

Val. O my word, the father's son: I'll swear, 'tis a very noble boy. O, my truth! and the boy looks upon him! Wednesday half an hour and a half: he has such a continued countenance, I saw him run after a guided butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; catch'd it again; or whether his fallsurpassed him, or how 'was he, so long as he did set his teeth, and tear it? O, I warrant, how he marmock'd it!—

Val. One of his father's moods.

Val. Indeed, la, 'tis a noble child.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitches; I must have you play the idle housewife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam: I will not out of doors.

Val. Not out of doors!

Val. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars. That I may continue vent free and reasonably to come, you must go visit the good lady that lies there.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vir. Why, I pray you?—

Vir. Tis not to save labor, nor that I want love. Vir. You would be another Penelope: yet, they say, the pretty. In Ulysses' absence, did but fill Theseus full of mirth. Come, I would, your canibale were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for puts. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam.

Val. In earnest, 'tis true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Voices have an army forth; and all the whole Roman army is the general, with one of our Roman power: your lord, and Titus Lartius, are set down before their city Corioi; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This news, on mine honor: and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Val. I will not delay, madam; for you are now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In truth, I think, she would:—Fare you well then,—Come, good sweet lady.—Pr'ythee, Virginia, I will thy solemnities out of door, and go along with us.

Boy.
Enter Titus Lartius.

Lart. What is become of Marcus? All. Slain, sir, doubtless. Enter Coriolanus. Lart. Following the flies at the very heels, Went they he enters: who, upon the sudden, C eyel'd to their gates; he is himself alone, To answer all the city. Lart. Whose sensibly out tares his useless sword. And, when it bows, stand up! Thou art left, Marcus: A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art, Were set so rich a jewel. Thou, and a soldier Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks, And the thunder-like percussion of thy sounds, Thou makest thine enemies shake, as if the world Were feverous and did tremble.

Re-enter Marcus, bleeding, assaulted by the Enemy. Lart. Look, sir. Let's fetch him off, or make remain abide. [They fight, and all enter the City. SCENE V.—Within the Town. A Street. Enter certain Romans, with Spoils. 1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome. 2 Rom. And I this. 3 Rom. A marvellous off! I took this for silver. [Achran continues still off. Enter Marcus, and Titus Lartius, with a Trumpet. Mar. See here these mowers, that do prize their hours At a crack'd drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons, Irons of a doubt, doublets that hangmen wear, Furry with those that wore them, these base slaves, Ere yet the light be done, pack up!—Down with them.— And hark, what noise the general makes!—To him— There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romans: Then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city; Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste To help Cominius. Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st; Thy exercise hath been too violent for A second course of fight. Mar. Sir, praise me not; My work hath: yet warm'd me: Fare you well. The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: To Aufidius thus I will appear, and fight. Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune, Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms Misscide thy opposers swords! Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page! Mar. Thy friend no less Than she that placeth high'd! So, farewell. Lart. Thou wastest Marcus!—[Exit Marcus. Go, sound thy trumpet in the market place; Call thither all the officers of the town, Where they shall know our mind: Away. [Exeunt. SCENE VI.—Near the Camp of Cominius. Enter Corinhius and Forces retreating. Com. Breathe you, my friends; well fought, we are come off Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands, Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs, We shall be charg'd again. Whilest we have struck, By interims, and convening gusts, we have heard The charges of our friends—The Roman gods, Lead their successes as we wish our own; That both our powers, with smiling fronts encoutering. Enter a Messenger. May give you thankful sacrifice!—Thy news? Mess. The citizens of Corinthe have issed, And given to Lartius and to Marcus battle: I saw my party to their trenches driven, And then I came away. 1 Having sensation, feeling. 2 A Roman coin. Com. Though thou speak'st truth, Methinks, thou speak'st not well. How long is't since! Mess. Above an hour, my lord. Com. "Tis not a mile; brie'ly we heard their drums; How couldst thou in a mile confound? an hour, And bring thy news so late? Mess. Spies of the Volcnes held me in chase, that I was forced to wheel Three or four miles about; else had I, sir, Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter Marcus. Com. Who's yonder, That do's appear as he were day'd! 0 gods! He has the stamp of Marcus; and I have Before-time seen him thus. Mar. Come I too late? Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor, More than I know the sound of Marcus' tongue From every meaner man's. Mar. Come I too late! Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others, But mantled in your own. Mar. O! let me clip you; In arms as sound, as when I would, in grief As merry, as when our nuptial day was done, And apters burn'd to bedward. Com. Flower of warriors, How is't with Titus Lartius? Mar. As with a man busied about decrees: Condemning some to death, and some to exile; Ransoming him, or prying, threat'ning oth'the; Holding Corinthe in the name of Rome, Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash, To let him slip at will. Com. Where is that slave, Which told me they had beat you to your trencnes! Where is he? Call him hither. Mar. Let him alone, He did inform the truth; But for our gentlemen, The common file, [A plague!—Tricks for them! The mouse ne'er surnad the cat, as they did Budge from rascals worse than they. 'Com. But how prevail'd you? Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think— Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' the field? If not, why cease you till you are so? Com. Marcus, We have at disadvantage fought, and did Retire to win our purpose. Mar. How lies their battle! Know you on which side They have placed their men of trust! Com. As I guess, Marcus, Their hands in the vaward are the Antiques, Of their best trust: o'er them Aufidius, Their very heart of hope. Mar. Do beseech you, By all the battles wherein we have fought, By the blood we have shed together, by the vows We have made to endure friends, that you directly Set me against Aufidius, and his Antiques: And that you not delay the present but, Filling the air with swords advanced, and darts, We prove this very hour. Com. Though I could wish You were conducted to a gentle halt And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking; take your choice of these The best can aid your action. Mar. Those are they That most are willing:—If any such be here, (As it were sin to doubt) that love this painting Wherein you see me wear'd; if any fear Lesser his person than an idle report; If any think, brave death outweighs bad life, And that his country's dearer than himself; Let him alone, or so many, so minded, Wave thus, [Waving his hand.] to express his disposition, And follow Marcus. They shall about, and wear their Swords; take him up in their Arms, and cast up their Caps.
CORIOLANUS.

Act I. SCENE IX.

O me, alone! Make you a sword of me!
If these shows be not outward, which of you
But is four Voices! None of you but is Able to bear against the greatest Auifidus.
A shield as hard as his. A certain number,
Though thanks to all, must I select: the rest,
Shall bear the business in some other fight,
As cannot have had the praise to March—
And four shall quickly draw out my command,
Which men are best melind'd.

March on, my fellows:
My good this ostentation, and you shall
Divide in all with us. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Gates of Corioli.

Titus Lartius, having set a Guard upon Coriolus, going with a Drum and Trumpet towards Cominius and Caius Marcius, enters with a
Lieutenant, a party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So, let the ports be guarded; keep your
As I have set them down. I'll do send, despatch
These centuries to our aid; the rest will serve
For a short holding; if we lose the field,
We cannot keep the town.

Lici. Fear not our care, sir.

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us—
Our guide, come; to the Roman camp conduct us.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—A Field of Battle between the Romans and the Volscian Camps.

Lart. Enter Marcius and Attendants.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate thee
Worse than a promise-breaker.

Aug. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate thee.

Nar. Yf I try, Marcius,
Hallow me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullius,
A blood of fought in your Corioli walls,
And made what work I pleased; 'twas not my blood
Wherein thou seest me mask'd: for thy revenge,
Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Lart. Wert thou the Hector, that was the whip of thy bragg'd procyn,
Thou shouldst not seare me here.

[They fight, and certain Voices come to the end of the battle.][All of Activity.

Officious and not valiant,—you have sham'd me
In your condemned seconds? [Ele rate fighting, driven in by Marcius.

SCENE IX.—The Roman Camp.

Lart. A Retreat is sounded. Fioishur, enter:
At one side, Cominius and Romans; at the other side, Marcius, with his Arm in a Scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,
Thought not believe thy deeds: but I'll repeat it
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles;
Where great patricians shall affect, and shrug,
I the end, admire; where ladies shall be frightened,
And, gladly quak'd, hear more; where the dull
tribunes,
That, with the lusty plebeians, late thine honors,
Shall say against their thoughts—We thank the gods,
Our Rome hath such a soldier!—

Yet can'tst thou to a morose of this feast,
Having fully dined before.

Enter Titus Lartius, with his Power, from the Pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, the we carphon:
Hath thou beheld it?

Mar. Pray now, no more; my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. I have done
As you have done; that's what I can; induced
As you have done; that's for my country:

1 Gates. 2 Companies of a hundred men.
3 In affording such ill-timed help.
4 Thrown into gratuitous trepidation.

He that has but effected his good will,
Hath overtaken mine act.

Com. Thou shall not
The service of thy deserving: Rome must know
The value of her own: 'twere a concession
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings; and to silence that,
Which to the spirit of such is a pleasing wound,
Would seem but modest. Therefore, I beseech you,
(If in sign of what you are, not to reward
What you have done,) before our army hear me.

Mar. You have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.

Com. Should they not
Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses,
Whereof we have in good, and good store, of all
The weapons and the shield acquired, and city,
We render you the tenth; to be taken forth,
Before the common distribution, at
Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bridle to pay my sword: I do refuse it:
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[A long Flourish. They all cry, Marcus! Marcus! close up their Cups and Lances: Cominius and Lartius stand bare.

Mar. May these same instruments, which you proclaim,
Never sound more! When drums and trumpets shall
The pleasing voices of the streets, and cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing; When steel grows
Soft as the parasite's silk, let him be made
An overture for the wars! No more, I say;
For that I have not wash'd my nose that bled,
Or foul'd some dubious wretch—which without note,
Here's many else have done,—you shout me forth
In acclamations hyperbolical;
As I loved my life, and should be diet'd
In praises sauced with lies.

Com. Too modest are you; more cruel to your good report than grateful
To us that give you truly: by your patience,
If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you
(Laokeum that means his proper 'harm) in manacles,
Then reason safely with you.—Therefore, be it known,
As to us, to all the world, that Cains Marcius Wears this war's garland; in token of which you should know him to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging; and, from this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all the applause and clamor of the host,
Such Marcus Coriolius.—

Bear the addition nobly ever!

[Fiorish. Trumpets sound, and Drums.

All. Cains Marcus Coriolius! Lart. Marcus! Marcius! And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush, or no: Howbeit, I thank you—
I mean to strike your seed; and, at all times,
To understand your good addition,
To the fairness of my power.

Com. So to our tent; the care we do repose us, we will write to Rome of our success,—You, Titus Lartius, Masto to Corioli back: send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate,
For our own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Com. The gods begin to mock me. I that now
Refus'd more princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general, and top of praise would Take a.—What's your thers.—What is't
Com. I sometime lay here, in Corioli,
At a poor man's house: he used me kindly:
He cried to me: I saved him prisoner, but
But then Auifidus was within my view,
And strait o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you
To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well begg'd! Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free, as the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcus, his name! a

ACT II. SCENE I.  CORIOLANUS.

Cor. By Jupiter, forget—
I am weary; yea, my memory is h'rd—
Have we no wine here?—
Sow. Go to our tent;—
The blood upon your visage dires: 'tis time
It should be look't to: come. [Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The Camp of the Volscus.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter Tullus Aufidius, bloody, with two or three soldiers.

Auf. The town is taken!—
1 Sol. 'Twill be deliver'd back on good condition.

Auf. Condition!—
1 Sol. By Jove! I were a Roman; for I cannot,
Being a voice, be that I am.—Condition! What good condition can a treaty find
The part that is at mercy! Five times, Marcius,
I have remonstrated with this disloyal head,
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat,—By the elements,
If e'er again I meet him beard to beard,
Your two or I am bias; Mine emulation
Hath not that honor in't, it had; for where?
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
(True sword to sword,) I'lt pitch at him some way;
(or wrath, or craft, may get him.)—
1 Sol. He's the devil.
Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle: My valor's poison'd,
With only suffering stain by him; for him
Shall fly by night; for by day, sleep, or sanitary,
Being naked, sick: nor tame, nor Capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embalmer's all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom'game;
My hate to Marcus: where I find him, were it
At home upon my brother's guard, even there
Against the hospitable canons, would I
Wash my fierce hand in his heart. Go to the city;
Learn, how 'tis hold; and what they are, that is last
Be hostages for Rome. [Exeunt.

Auf. Will you not go?—
1 Sol. I am attended by the cypress grove:
I pray you,
(Too sound the city mills,) bring me word atterth
How the world goes; that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey.
1 Sol. I shall, sir. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter Menenius, Suckins, and Brutus.

Men. The augurer tells me, we shall have news to-night.

Brut. Good or bad?—
Men. Not according to the prayer of the people;
For I have heard the voice of the city.
Sir. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends. Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?
Sir. The lamb.
Men. How can you devour him; as the hungry plebeus would the noble Marcus?
Brut. He's a lamb indeed, that bares like a bear.
Men. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb.
Men. Two or I am bias; tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.
Men. In what enormity is Marcus poor, that you two have not in abundance!—
Both Trib. He's poor in no one fault, but stored with all.
Sir. Especially in pride.
Both Trib. And topping all others in boasting.
Men. This is strange now: Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us and ours?—
Both Trib. Why, how are we censured?—
Men. Because you talk of pride now,—Will you not be angry?
Both Trib. Well, well, sir, well.
Men. Why, 'tis no great matter: for very little thicke of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience: give your disposition the reins, and be augured at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so. You blame Marcus for being proud?
Both Trib. We do it not alone, sir.
Men. Why, I know, you can do very little alone; for your helps are many; or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too in- jury like, for doing much alone. You talk of pride: O! that you could turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O, that you could!
Brut. What then, sir?
Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, [alas tools,] as any in Rome.
Sir. Marcus, you are known well enough too.
Men. I am known to be a humours patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of alias Tyber in't; said to be something imperfect, in favoring the first complaint: hasty, and tender-like, upon too trivial motion: one that converses more with the buttock of the night, than
* Whereas.

with the forehead of the morning. What I think I utter; and spend my malice in my breath: Meet- ing two such weak-mind'd as you are, [I cannot call you Lycorouses,] if the drink you gave me, stuck my palate advirtly, I made a crooked face at it.
I cannot say, your worship's have delivered the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the mapo of my malice: and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are revenged grave men; yet, tell me, that tell, you have good hopes. If you make this in the mapo of my malice, and I scarce follows it, that I am known well enough too! What harm can your bosom' conspeectures given out of this character, if I be known well enough too?

Brut. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs; you wear out a good wholesome fore- room, in hearing a cause between an orange wife and a fasteseller; and then return the controversy of three-piece to a second day of audience. —When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pitched with the cowl, you make faces like marmets; set up the bloody flag against all patience; and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, that end up the controversy, the more enraged by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause, is calling both the patience knaves: You are a pair of strange ones.

Brut. Come, come, you are well understood to be a pericter giber for the table, than a necessary boucher in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become muckers, if they shall partake of such ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beards; and your beards deserve not so honorable a grave, as to stuff a bottle, or empty it, or be entombed in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcus is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors, upon Jerusalem; though, per- adventure, some of the best of them were hereditary hangmen. Good c'en to your worshipships: more of your conversation would injet my brain, being the herdmen of the beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leaf of you.

[Brut. and Sir. retire to the back of the Scene.

Enter Volumnia, Virginia, and Valeria, &c.

How now, my as fair as noble ladies, [and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler,] whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Val. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcus approaches: for the love of Juno, let's go.

Men. Ha! Marcus coming home! **

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most prosperous propostion.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter and I thank thee:—

Hoo! Marcus comes home! Come in, come in! Two Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him: the state hath another, his wife another; and, I think, there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night:— A letter for me!—

Tir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I saw it.

Men. A letter for me? It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiricke, and to this prescription, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Tir. Oh, no, no, no.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much:— Brings 'a victory in his pocket!—The wounds become him.

Vol. On's brows, Menenius, he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. And 'twas time for him too, I'll warrant him that: an he had staid by him, I would not have been so indisposed for all the chests in Coriol; and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go:—Yes, yes, yes: the senators' letters from the general, and in him he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Vol. In truth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous? Ay, I warrant you, and without his true purchasing.

Tir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True! I hope, woman.

Men. True! I'll be sworn they are true:— Where is he wounded?—God save your good worships! [To the Tribunes, who come forward.] Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud:—Where is he wounded?

Vol. I the shoulder, and 't the left arm: There shall be large quadrates to show the people, when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin, seven hurts 't the body.

Men. One in the neck, and two in the thigh,— there's none that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now it's twenty-seven; every gash was an ensign to his grave: [A Shout and Flourish.] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the urchins of Marcus; before him he carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears; Death, that's dry-spirted, in 's weary arm doth lie:— Which being advanced, declines; and then men die.

A Serenade. Trumpets sound. Enter Commius and Titus Lartius; between them, Coriolanus, crowned with an oaken Garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight Within Coriol's gates: where he hath won, With fame a name to Caius Marcus; these In honor follow, Coriolanus; Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus! [Flourish.]

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus! Cor. No more of this, it doth offend my heart; Pray now, no more.

Com. O! Look, sir, your mother.

You have, I know, petition'd all the gods For my prosperity. [Kneels.]

Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up; My gentle Marcus, worthy Caius, and By deeds-achieving honor newly nam'd, What is it? Coriolanus, must I call thee? But O, thy wife—

Cor. My gracious silence, hail!—

Wou'dst thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home. That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah, my dear, Such eyes the widows in Coriol warn, And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Cor. And live you yet?—0 my sweet lady, pardon. [To Valeria.]

Vol. I know not where to turn:—0 welcome Lords.

And welcome, general;—And you are welcome all. Men. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could weep.

And I could laugh; I am light, and heavy: Wel come: A curse begin at every root of his heart. That is not glad to see thee!—You are three, That Rome should do: one; yet, by the faith of men, We have some old crab-trees here at home, that Be grazed to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors: We call a nettle, but a nettle; and The faults of tools, but folly.

Cor. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Her. Give way there, and go on.

Cor. Your hand, and yours. [To his Wife and Mother.]

Enter in our own house I do shade my head, The good patricians must be visited; From whom I have received not only greetings, but with them change of honors.

Vol. I have lived To see inherited my very wishes, And the buildings of my fancy: only there is one thing wanting, which I doubt not, but Our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother, I had rather be their servant in my way, Than sway with them in theirs.

Com. [To the Capitol.]

(Flourish. Cornets. Exeunt in state, as before.]

Vol. The Tribunes remain.

Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the blear'd sights Are spectacled to see him; Your prattling nurse Into a rapture lets her baby cry. While she chats him: the kitchen maiklin' pins Her richest lockbram' bont her reechy' neck, Clambering the walls to eye him: stalls, bolts, windows. Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hord'd With variable complexities: all agreeing In earnestness to see him: self-show'd damosels Do pressing on the public thorough, and pull To win a vulgar station: our veil'd dames Commit the war of white and damask, in Their spectacled, gewaided' checks, to the wanton spoil Of Phoebus, bursting kisses: such a mother, As if that whatsoever god, who leads him, Were slyly crept into his human powers, And gave him gracious posture.

Sic. On the sudden, I warrant him consult.

Bru. Then our office may.

During his power, go sleep. Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honors From where he should begin and end; but will Lose those that he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort. Sic. Doubt not, the commoners, for whom we stand, But there, upon their ancient maleice, will Forget, with the least cause, these his new honors; Which that he'll give them, make as little question As he is proud to do. Bru. I heard him swear.

Were he to stand for consult, never would he Appear 't the market-place, nor on him put The napless vesture of humanity; Nor, showing (as the manner is) his wounds To the people, beg their kneeling breaths. Sic. 'Tis right.

Bru. It was his word: O, he would miss it, rather Than carry it, but by the suit of the gentle to him, And the desires of the nobles.

Malt. Bless Haien. sold with sweat and smoke Seldon, Priest. {Adorned.
Scene II.

CORIOLANUS.

As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To gratify his noble service, that
Hath thus stood for his country: Therefore please you,
Most reverend and grave elders, to desire
The present counsel, that at one end
In our well-found successes, to report
A little of that worthy work perform’d
By Caius Marcus Coriolius; whom
We meet here, both to thank and to remember
With honors like his himself.

Sen. Speak, good Cominius; leave nothing out for length, and make us think Rather our state’s defective for recapitulation,
Than we to stretch it out. Masters of the people,
We do request your kindest ears; and, after,
Your loving motion toward the common body,
To yield what passes here.

Sen. We are convened
Upon a pleasing treaty; and have hearts
Inclined to honor and advance
The theme of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather
We shall be bless’d to do, if he remember
A kinder valour of the people, than
He hath hereto prized them at.

Men. That’s off, that’s off;
I would you rather had been silent: Please you
To hear Cominius speak.

Men. Most willingly: But yet my caution was more pertinent,
Than the rebuke you gave it.
Men. He loves your people;
But tie him not to be their bedfellow.—
Worthy Cominius, speak.—Nay, keep your place.

Cor. Cominius rises, and offers to go away.

Men. Sit. Cominius: never shame to hear
What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honors’ pardon; I had rather have my wounds to heal again,
Than hear say how I got them. Sir, I hope,
My words disench’d you not.

Men. No, sir; yet off
When brows have made me stay, I feed from words.
You sooth’d not, therefore hurt not: But your people,
I love them as they weigh.

Men. Fray now, sit down.
When the alarm were struck, then idly sit
To hear my nothing monstred.

Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i’ the sun,
When the alarm were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothing monstred.

Com. I shall lack voice; the deeds of Coriolius
Should not be utter’d feebly.—It is hold,
That valor is the choicest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver: if it be,
The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterafet.—At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought
Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
Whom with all power I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian limb he drov’n
The braided lances before him: he bestrid
An o’er-pres’t Roman; and ’tis the consul’s view
Slew three oppressors: Tarquin’s self he met,
And struck him on his lance: in that day’s feats,
When he struck danger through the world in the scene,
He prov’d best man o’ the field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man-enter’d thus, he waxed like his sire,
And, in the height of seventeen battles since,
He lurch’d all swords o’ the garland. For this last,
Before and in Corioli, let me say,
I cannot speak of him home. He stopp’d the thers;
And, by his rare example, made the coward
Turn terror into sport: as waves before
A vessel under sail, so men obey’d.
And felt how his step was sword (death’s stamp)
Where it did mark it took; from face to foot

Sic. I wish no better,
That I may have him hold that purpose, and put it
In execution.
Bru. ’Tis most like, he will.
Sic. It shall be to him then, as our good wishes;
And such destruction.
Bru. So it must fall out
To him, or our authorities. For an end,
We must suggest the people in what hatred
He seems to shew the state that in the power he would Have made them nuisances, silenced their pleading, and Disproportioned their freedoms: holding them,
In human action and capacity,
Curse him soul, as he would to the world,
Than camels in their war; who have their provant;
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

Sic. This, as you say, suggested
At some time when his soaring insolence
Shall teach the people, (which time shall not want,
If he be put upon: and that’s as easy,
As to set dogs on sheep,) will be his fire;
To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bru. What’s the matter?
Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. ’Tis thought
That Marcus should be consult: I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind
To beg to speak: The matrons show their griefes
Ladies and maids their scars and handkerchiefs,
Upon him as he pass’d: the nobles bended,
As to Jove’s statue; and the commons made
A shower, and thunder, with their caps, and shouts:
I never saw the like.

Bru. Let’s to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the time,
But hearts for the event.

Sic. Have with you. [Exeunt.

Scene II.—The Capitol.

Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions.

Off. Come, they are almost here: How many stand for consuls?

Off. Three, say they; but ’tis thought of every one,
Coriolius will carry it.

Off. That’s a brave fellow: but he’s vengeance
Proud, and loves not the common people.

Off. Faith, there have been many great men
That have flatt’d the people, who’ve ever loved them;
And many more that they have loved not;
Not wherefore; so that, if they love they know not why,
They hate upon no better a ground: Therefore,
For Coriolius neither to care whether they Love or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he
Has in his disposition; and out of his noble carelessnes,
Let them plainly see’t.

Off. If he did not care whether he had their love, or no,
He was萬元tly tratt’d, and cou’d do them neither good nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone, that may fully do him their opposite. Now, to seem to admit the mallei and displeasure of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love.

Off. The hath deserved worthy of his country:
And his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those, who, having been supple and courteous to the people, become’d without any further deed to honor, and are carried all into their favor: for his sport; but he hath so planted his honors in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not comess so much, were a kind of ingratitude: to report otherwise were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck re-proof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

Off. No more of him; he is a worthy man:
Man, to a monarch.

Suet. Enter, with Victors before them, Caius, the Consul, M. Ennius, Coriolius, many other Senators, Sicinius, and Brutus. The Senators
Take their places; the Tribunes take theirs also by themselves.

Men. Having determin’d of the Volscians, and
To send for Tullus Lartius, it remains,

He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tincted with dying cries; alone he enter'd
The mortal city, where he painted
With stainless destiny, a deedless came off,
And with a sudden reinforcement struck
Coriol, like a planet: Now all's his:
When by and by the din of war'gan' pierce
His ready sense: then straight his doubled spirit
Re-quicken'd what in flesh was fatigaze,9
And to the battle came; where he did
Run reckoning o'er the lives of men, as if
'Twere a perpetual spoil; and, till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood
To leave his breast with panting.

1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honors
Which we devise him.
Cor. Our spoils he kick'd at; and Look'd upon things precarious, as they were
The common luck o' the world: he covets less
Than misery, itself would give: rewards
His deeds with doing them, and is content
To spend the time to end it.

Men. He's right noble; let him be call'd for.

1 Sen. Call for Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter Coriolanus.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. My fees, and services.

Men. It then remains, that you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you, that you o'earlap that custom; for I cannot Put on the gown, stand naked, and entertain them.
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage: please you,
That I may pass this doing.

Sir. Must have their voices; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Brut. Pray you, go fit you to the custom; and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honor with your form.

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well be Taken from the people.

Sir. Mark you that? I'll be bold unto them—thus I did, and thus:
Show them the unaching scars which I should hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only:

Men. Do not stand up.
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our cause to them;—and to our noble consul
Wish we all joy and honor.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honor!
Floreat. Then exit Senators.

Brut. You see how he intends to use the people.
Sir. May they perceive his intent? He that will require them,
As if he did contain what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Brut. We'll inform them
Of our proceedings here; on the market-place,
I know they do attend us.

SCENE III.—The Forum.

Enter several Citizens.

1 Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. Nor may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do; for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them; so, if he tells us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous: and for the multitude to be ingrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude; of which, we being members, should beourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once, when we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the monstrous multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely colored and truly I think, if all our wits were issue out of one skull, they would fly cast, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all the points of the compass.

2 Cit. Think you, sir? Which way, do you judge, my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; 'tis strongly wedg'd up in a blockhead: but if it were at liberty, I would, sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. I judge myself a fool: in which being three parts melted away with rotten devils, the fourth would return for conscience sake to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:—You may,
you may.

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it.
I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus and Menenius.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility: mark his behavior. We are not to stay altogether, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars: wherein every one of us has a single honor, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues:
therefore follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall gain him.

All. Content, content. [Exeunt.

Men. Sir, you are not right; have you not Known the worthiest men have done it?

Cor. What must I say?—I pray, sir,—Plague upon it! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace:—look, sir,—my
I got them in my country's service, when
Some certain of your brethren roar'd, and ran
At the noise of our own drums.

Men. Me, the gods! You must not speak of that: you must desire them
To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me! Hang'em,
I would they would forget me, like the virtues
Which our divine's lose by them.

Men. I'll leave you; pray you, speak to them; I pray you,
In wholesome manner. [Exeunt.

Enter two Citizens.

Cor. Did them wash their faces,
And keep their teeth clean,—So, here comes a brac—
You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.

1 Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you to't.

Cor. Mine own desert.

2 Cit. Your own desert.

Cor. Ay, not
Mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire?

Cor. So, sir; 'Twas never my desire yet,
To trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing,
We hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o' the consul-ship?

1 Cit. The price is, sir, to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly?

Sir, I pray let me ha'n: I have wounds to show you,
Which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice,
Sir;
What say you?

2 Cit. You shall have it, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir,—
There were many with whom voices beggd—
I have your alms; adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An't were to give again,—But 'tis no matter.

[Exeunt two Citizens.]
Enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consult, I have here the customary gown.

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your engross.

3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not, indeed, loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them; 'tis a condition; they account gently; and see the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the maxim, nod, and be off to them most counterfeited; that is, sir, I will counteract the detriment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the deserving. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consult.

4 Cit. We hope to find you our friend, and therefore give you our voices heartily.

3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily! [Exeunt.

Cor. Most sweet voices!—Better it is to die, better to starve.

Then the chace the when first we do deserve.

Why in this woful gown should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Thus to unarmed voices?—Custome calls me to!—
What custom wills, in all things should we do,
The dust on antique time would be unswept,
And mountaneous error be too highly heap'd
For truth to over-peer.—Rather than look so,
Let the high office and the honor go
To one that would do thus,—I am half through;
The one part suff'd, the other will I do.

Enter three other Citizens.

Here come more voices;
Your voices; for your voices I have fought;
Watch'd for your voices; for your voices, bear
Of wounds two dozen odd; battles three six.
I have seen and heard of; for your voices have Done many things, some less, some more: your voices:
Indeed, I would be consult.
6 Cit. Therefore let him be consult: The gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people.

AII. Amen, Amen.—

God save thee, noble consul! [Exit Citizens.

Cor. Worthy voices!

Reciter MENENIUS, with BRUTUS AND SCITIUS.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribes
Endue you with the people's voice: Remains,
That, in the official marks invested, you
Amon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sec. The custom of request you have discharged:
The marks rata, and you are summon'd
To meet anon upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? at the senate-house?

Sec. There, Coriolanus.

May. I may then change these garments?

Sec. You may, sir.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself
Again the senate-house.

Sec. Fare you well. [Exit Consul, and MENENIUS.

He has it now; and by his looks, methinks,
'Tis warm at his heart.

Reciter. With a proud heart he wore
His humble weeds: Will you discuss the people?

Reciter Citizens.

Sec. How now, my masters! have you chose this man?

1 Cit. He has our voices, sir.

Bru. We pray the gods, he may deserve your loves.

2 Cit. Ah, sir; To my poor unworthy notice,
He mock'd us, when he begg'd our voices.

3 Cit. Certainly,

He flouted us downright.

1 Cit. No; his kind of speech, he did not mock us.

2 Cit. Not one amongst us save yourself but says,
He used us scornfully: he should have show us
his marks of merit, wounds receive'd for his country.
Sec. Why, so he did, I am sure.

Sec. No; no man saw 'em.

[Several speeck.

3 Cit. He said, he had wounds, which he could show in private;
And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,
I would be consult, said: aged men who
But by your voices, will not so permit me;
Your voices therefore: When we granted that,
Here was,—I thank you for your voices,—thank you.

Your most sweet voices;—now you have left your voices.

1 have no further with you:—Was not this mockery!

Sec. Why, either, were you ignorant to see it?
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness
To yield your voices?

Bru. Could you not have told him,
As you were less'd.—When he had no power,
But was a petty servant to the state,
He was your enemy; ever spake against
Your liberties, and the charitiers, but you bear
'the body of the weight: and now arriving
A place of potency, and sway o' the state,
If he should still malignantly remain
Fast for the custom, your voices, perhaps
He curses to yourselves! You should have said,
That as his worthy deeds did claim no less
Than what he stood to, so his gracious nature
Would think upon you for your voices, and Translate his malice towards you into love,
Standing your friendly lord.

Sec. Thus to have said,
As you were fore-advise'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And try'd his inclination: from him pluck'd
Either his gracious promise, which you might,
As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;
or else it would have gild'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article
Tying him to weight; so, putting him to rage,
You should have known, in the advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unciciected.

Bru. Did you perceive,
He did solicit in free contempt,
When he had need of your loves; and do you think,
That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,
When he hath power to crush? Why, had your

No heart among you? Or had you tongues, to ery
Against the rectorship of judgment!

Sec. Have you,
Ere now, deny'd the ask? and, now again,
on him, that did not ask, but mock'd, besow
Your sniv-for tongues!

3 Cit. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet.

2 Cit. I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

1 Cit. I twice live hundred, and their friends to piece'em.

Bru. You hence instantly; and tell those friends,—
They have chose a consul, that will from them take
Their liberties; make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking;
As therefore keep to do so.

Sec. Let them assemble;
And, on a safer judgment, all revoke
Your ignorant election: Enhorce his pride,
And his old hate unto you: besides, forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble weed;
How in his suit he scorn'd you: but your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took you
The apprehension of his present porosis,
Which gibingly, ungraciously he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru. Lay
A fault on us, your tribes; that we labor'd

2 Plebeians, common people.

Carriage.
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrance: but you have found,
Slaught'ring his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revolve
Your sudden approbation.

Bru. Say, you never had done
(Harp on that still,) but by our putting on:
And presently, when you have drawn your number,
Repair to the Capitol.

Cor. We will so: almost all [Screats speak.
Revert in their election. [Execut. Citizens.

Bru. Let them go on;
This mutiny were better put in hazard,
Than stay, past doubt, for greater:
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Sen. To the Capitol:
Come; we'll be there before the stream of the people;
And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own,
Which we have goaded onward. [Execut.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Cornets. Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINUS, TITUS LARTIUS, SCENARS, AND PATRICIANS.

Cor. Tullus Aufidius then had made new head?

Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was, which caused
Our swifter composition.

Cor. So then the Voices stand but as at first;
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road
Upon us again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul, so;
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?

Lart. On safe-guard he came to me; and did curse
Against the Voices, for they had so vilely
Yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?

Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How! what?

Lart. How often he had met you sword to sword:
That, of all things upon the earth, he hated
Your person most: that he would have no fortune
To hopeless restitution, so he might
Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he?

Cor. I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hated folly.—Welcome home.

To LARTIUS.

Enter SCRANTUS AND BRETTS.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' the common mouth. I do despise
For they do prank them in the people,
Against all noble sustenance.

Sen. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Bru. It will be dangerous to Go on: no further.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter!

Cor. Hath he not pass'd the nobles, and the commons?

Bru. Cominius, no.

Cor. Have I heard children's voices?

1 Sen. Tribunes, give way: he shall to the market-place.

Bru. The people are incess'd against him.

Sen. This.

Or all will fall in brawl.

Cor. Are these your herd?— Must these have voices, that can yield them now,
And straight disclaim their tongues!—What are your offices!

You being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?

Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpose'd thing, and grows by plot,
To curb the will of the nobility:—
Suffer it, and live with such as cannot rule,
Nor ever will rule.

Bru. Call'st not a plot:
The people cry, you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repul'd 'em.
Scandal'd the suppliants for the people: call'd them
Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Bru. Let it not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them since?

Bru. How! inform them?

Cor. You are like to do such business.

Not unlike
Each way to better yours.

Cor. Why then should I be consulted? By you clouds
Let me deserv'e so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow-tribune.

Men. You show too much of that,
For which the people stir: If you will pass
To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit;
Or never be so noble as a consul,
Nor yoke with him for tribune:—

Men. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abs*d.—Set on.—This pall'rings
Become not Rome; nor has Coriolanus
Deserv'd this so disdain'd of a rab, laid fiakly
The plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn!

This was my speech, and I will speak'nt again;—
Men. Not now, not now.

1 Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will.—My nobler friends,
I crave their pardons:—

For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein beheld themselves: I say again,
In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd, and Sunder'd,
By mingling them with us, the honor'd number;
Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that
Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

1 Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How! no more! A
As for my country I have shed my blood,
Not caring outward to do, so shall my lungs
Comm! words till they decay, against those measels Which we disdain should citer? us, yet sought
The very way to catch them.

Bru. You speak o' the people As if you were a god to punish, not
A man of their infancy.

To jump a body with a dangerous physic
That's sure of death without it—at once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison: your dishonor
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it;
Not having the power to do the good it would
For the ill which both control it.

Brut.

Sen. He has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer
As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch! despite o' erwhelm thee!—
What should these people do with these bold tribunes!

On whom depending, whose obedience fails
To the greater bench: In a rebellion,
When what's not murder, but what must be, was law,
Then were they chosen; in a better hour,
Let what is meet, be said it must be meet,
And throw their power into the dust.

Brut. Manifest treason.

Sen.

Cor.

In Sic.

Sic. This a counsel? no.

Brut.

Men.

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit Brutus: in whom

Attach their, as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to the public weal: Obey, I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Men.

Sic.

Brutus, with the Ediles, and a Rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic. Here's he, that would Take from you all your power.

Brut.

Sen.

Brutus.

Cit.

Men.

Sic. Hear me, people:—Peace;

Cit. Let's hear our tribunes:—Peace, Speak, speak,

Men. You are at point to lose your liberties:

Marcius would have all from you;

Marcius, whom late you have named for consul.

Men.

Sic.

True,

The people are the city.

Brut. By the consent of all we were established
The people's magistrates.

Men.

Sic.

Men. And so are like to do.

Cor. That is the way to lay the city flat;

To bring the roof to the foundation;

And bury all which yet distinctly ranges,

In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic.

This deserves death.

Brut. Or let us stand to our own authority.

Men. Or let us lose it;—We do here pronounce,

Upon the part of the people, in whose power

We were elected theirs, Marcius is worthy

Of present death.

Sic. Therefore, lay hold of him:

Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence

Into destruction cast him.

Brut.

Cit. Ediles, seize him.

Sen.

Men.

Sic.

Men.

Risk.

Men. Beech you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Ediles. Peace, peace, peace.

Men. Be that you seem, truly your country's friend,

Number.

Fear.
And temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.

Sir, these cold ways, That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous With the coldness is violence—lay hands upon him, And bear him to the rock.

No; I'll die here. [Drowing his sword.]

There's some among you have been friends the lighting; Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen.

Men. Down with that sword—Tribunes, withdraw a while.

Brut. Lay hands upon him.

Men. Help Marcius! help, You that are noble; help him, young and old!

Cit. Down with him, down with him.

[In this scene, the Tribunes, the Edicts, and the People, are all dead in.

Men. Go, get you to your house; begone, away, All shall be taught else.

Get you gone.

Cor. Stand fast;
We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that! The gods forbid!

I pray thee, noble friend, home to thy house; Leave us to cure this case.

Men. For 'tis a sore upon us, You cannot tent yourself: Begone, beseech you.

Come, sir, along with us.

Cor. I would they would barbarians, (as they are, Though in Rome int'rest) not Romans, (as they are) Though call'd the porch o' the Capitol. Men. Put not thy worthy rage into your tongue; One time will over one.

Cor. I will beat forty of them.

Men. Could I myself Take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two tribunes.

Com. But now his odds beyond arithmetic; And manhood is call'd foolery, when it stands Against a falling fabric.—Will you hence, Before the tag! return! whose rage doth rend Like interupted waters, and o'erbear What they are used to bear.

Men. Pray you, begone; I'll try whether my old wit be in request With those that have but little; this must be patch'd With cloth of any color.

Com. Nay, come away;
[Exeunt Con., Com., and others.]

1 Pat. This man hath merr'd his fortune.

Men. His nature is too noble for the world; He would not flatter Neptune for his trident, Or love for his power to thunder. His heart's his mouth.

What his breast forgives, that his tongue must vent; And, being angry, does forget that ever He heard the name of death. [A Noise within.

Here's goodly work!

2 Pat. I would they were a-bed! Men. I would they were in Tyber!—What, the vengeance. Could he not speak them fair?

Enter Brutus and Sicinius, with the Rubble.

Sic. Where is this viper, That would depopulate the city, and Be every man himself?

Men. You worthy tribunes,— He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law, And therefore law shall scorn him further trial To the severity of the public power, Which he so sets at nought. 1 Cit. He shall well know, The noble tribunes are the people's mouths, And their hands. He shall, sure on'.

Sic. [Several speak together.

Men. Peace.

Men. Do not cry, havoc, where you should but hunt With modest warrant.

Sir. [Quais away.

Sir. How comes it, that you have help to make this rescue?

Men. Hear me speak:— As I do know the consul's worthiness, So can I name his fault. Sic. Consult!—What counsel? Men. The consul Coriolanus. Brut. He a consul! Cit. No, no, no, no. Men. It, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good people. I may be heard. I'd crave a word or two; The which shall turn you to no further harm, Than so much loss of time.

Sir. Speak briefly then; For we are peremptory, to despatch This valiant traitor to eject him hence, Were but one danger; and, to keep him here, Our certain death; therefore it is decreed, He dies to-night.

Men. Now the gods good forbid, That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude Towards her deserved children is enroll'd In Jove's own book, like an unnam'd doom Should now cut up her own! Sic. He's a disease, that must be cut away. Men. O, he's a limb, that has but a disease: Mortar, to cut it off; to cure it, easy. What has he done to Rome, that's worthy death! Killing our enemies! The blood he hath lost. (Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath, By many an ounce;) he drop'd it for his country. And, what is left, to lose it by his country, Were to us all that don't, and suffer it, A brand to the end o' the world.

Men. This is clean kam! Brut. Merely awry: when he did love his country, It honor'd him.

Men. The service of the foot Being one gangren'd, is it not then respected For what before it was? Brut. We'll hear no more— Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence; Lose his infection, being of catching nature, Spread further. Men. One word more, one word. This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find The harm of unseal'd swiftness, will, too late, Tie leaden pounds to his heels. Proceed by process; Lost parts (as he is belov'd) break out, And sack great Rome with Romans. Brut. If it were so,— Sic. What do you talk! Have we not had a taste of his obedience? Our eddies snipe; ourselves resisted! Come:— Men. Consider this:—he has been bred in the wars Since he could draw a sword, and is all school'd In boodling language, in meal and salt together He throws without distinction. Give me leave, I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him Where he shall answer by a lawful form, (In peace,) to his utmost peril. Men. Noble tribunes, Be you then as the people's officer: Masters, lay down your weapons; Go not home. Sic. Meet on the market-place: We'll attend you there: Where, or, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you:— Let me desire your company. [To the Senators.] He must come, Or what is worst will follow. 1 Sen. [Quites away. Pray you, let's to him. [Exeunt. SCNt. A Room in Coriolanus' House. Enter Coriolanus, and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears; present me Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels; Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock, That the precipitancy might down stretch.
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still
Be thus to them.

Enter VOLUMNIA.

1 Pol. You do the nobler.

Cor. I praise my mother

Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To toil, and sell with their own hands, to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance stood up
To speak of peace, or war. I talk of you;
To better the not so wild, which thou dost comines,
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame
Thyself fonsitho, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power, and person.

Men. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, all their hearts were yours:
For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.

Vol. For thy theee now,
Go, and be ruled: although, I knew, thou hast rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bowe.

Enter COMINUS.

Com. I have been 't the market-place: and, sir,
't what
You make strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence, all's in anger.

Men. Only fair speech.

Com. But, I think, 'twill serve, if he
Can thereto frame his spirit

Vol. He must, and will:—

Pr'ythee now, say, you will, and go about it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbar'd seconce? Must I,
With my base tongue, give to my noble heart
A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do:
There were there but this single plat to lose,
This mould of Marcius, they to dost shold grind it,
And throw it against the wind,—To the marketplace:
You have put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Vol. Pr'ythee now, sweet son; as thou hast said
My praises made thee first a soldier, so;
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do:

Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some hard'st spirit! My throat of war be worn,
Which quireed with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, with my love.
That babiesulls asleep! The smiles of knives
Ten; in my cheeks; and school-boys' tears take up
The glassers of my sight! A beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd
knees,
Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an arm's!—I will not do:
Lest I surcease to honor mine own truth.
And, by my body's action, teach my mind
A most ineresth busines.

Vol. At thy choice then:

At bec of thee, it is my more dishonor,
Than thou of them. Come all around; let
Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous showiess: for I lock at death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list,
Thy valiantness was mine, thou sall'st dis't from me;
But ow'ry pride thyself.

Cor.—Pray, be content;

Mother, I am going to the market-place;
Chide me no more. I'll mountbank their loves,
Cog their hearts from them, and come home hel'd
'd at the moves in Rome. Lose or gain:
Commend me to my wife. I'll return consult;
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
The way of flattery, farther.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit.]

Com. Away, the tribunes do attend you: arm yourself
To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd

* Unshaven head.
* Dwell.
* Own.
Coriolanus.

I. The word is, mildly.—Pray you, let us go; Let them accuse me by my invention, I will answer in mine honor.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it then; mildly. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Forum.

Enter Senators and Bruces.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannical power: If he evade us there, Enforce him with his envy to the people; And that the spoil, got on the Antities, Was never distributed.—

Enter an Edile.

What, will he come!

Edil. He's coming.

Bru. How accompanied?

Edil. With old Menenius, and those senators That always favor'd him.

Sen. Have you a catalogue Of all the voices that we have procur'd,

Set down by the poll!

Edil. I have; 'tis ready, here.

Sen. Have you collected them by tribes?

Edil. I have.

Sen. Presently assemble the people hither: And when they hear me say, It shall be so
The people and patricians of the city shall either For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them, If I say, fine, cry fine: it death, cry death; Insisting on the old prerogative And power the truth of the cause.

Edil. I shall inform them.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry, Let them not cease, but with a din continuo Enforce the present execution

Of what we chance to sentence.

Edil. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint, When we shall have to give't them.

Bru. Go about it.—[Exit Edile.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius, Senators, and Patricians.

Sen. Well, here he comes.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece Will bear the knave by the volume.—The honor'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice Supplied with worthy men! that I may love among us! Throng our large temples with the shows of peace, And our streets with war!

Men. Amen, amen.

Cor. A noble wish.

Enter an Edile, with Citizens.

Edil. Draw near, ye people.

Edil. List to your tribunes; audience: Peace, I say.

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Trib. Well, say.—Peace, ho.

Cor. Shall I be charged no further than the present? Must all determine here?

I do demand,

Sen. If you submit you to the people's voices, Allow their officers, and are content To suffer lawful censure for such faults As shall be prov'd upon you!

Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says, he is content: Then he will give service: he has done, consider; Think on the wounds he bears, which show Like graves to the holy churchyard.

Cor. Scratches with briers,

Sen. Scars to move laughter only.

Men. Consider further,

That when he speaks not like a citizen, You find him like a soldier: Do not take

Will bear being called a knave,

His rougher accents for malicious sounds, But, as I say, such as become a soldier, Rather than envy you.

Cor. What is the matter,

Men. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter, That, being pass'd for consul with full voice, I am so dishonord, that the very hour You take it old again!

Sen. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: 'tis true, I ought so.

Sen. We charge you, that you have contrived to take From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical;

For which, you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. How! Traitor!

Men. Nay; temperately: Your promise,

Cor. The firsts! the lowest hell hold in the people!

Call me their traitor!—Thou infamous tribune!

Without thy leaves so twenty thousand deaths, In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy ly ing tongue both numbers, I would say, Thou hast, unto thee, with a voice as free As I do pray the gods.

Sen. Mark you this, people?

Bru. To the rock with him; to the rock with him!

Peace.

We need not put new matter to his charge: What you have seen him do, and heard him speak, Beating your officers, cursing yourselves, Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying Those whom their power must live by; even this, So criminal, and in such capital kind, Destroys the extreme death.

Bru. But since he hath serv'd well for Rome,

Cor. What do you prize of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Men. Is this

The promise that you made your mother?

Know, I pray you,—

Cor. I'll know no further:

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,

Vexabon exile, slaying; pount to linger

But with a grain of a day, I would rather

Their mercy at the price of one fair word; Nor check my courage for what they can give, To have't with saying, Good morrow.

Sen. For that he has

(Ass much as in him lies) from time to time Envi'd against the people, seeking means To pluck away their power; as now at last Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers

That do distribute it; In the name o' the people, And in the power of the tribunes, we,

Even from this instant, banish him our city;

In perdi of precipitation

From off the rock Tarpeian, never more

To enter our home gates; 'tis the people's name, I say, it shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so.

He shall be set; let him away: he's banish'd,

And so it shall be.

Cor. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends;

Sen. He's sentenced; no more hearing.

Cor. Let me speak: I have been consul, and can show from Rome,

Her enemies mark upon me. I do love

My country's good, with a respect more tender, More holy and profound, than my own life,

My dear wife's esteem'd her womb's increase,

And treasure of my loves; then it I would

Speak that—

Sen. We know your drift: What speak?

Bru. There's more to be said, but he is banish'd,

As enemy to the people, and his country:

It shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so.

Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath I late

As reck's of the rotten lens, whose loves I prize

As the dead carcasses of unhurled men

That do corrupt my air, I banish you;

And here remain with your uncertainty!

Let every trifle run and slake your hopes!

Malks. ° Of long standing. ° Showd hatred.

Your enemies, with noding of their plumes,
For you, yet myself, with the power still
To banish your defectors; till, at length,
Your ignorance, (which finds not, till it feels,)
Making not reservation of yourselves,
(As for your own foes, deliver you, as most Abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt CORIOLANUS, COMICS, MENENIUS,
Scoriti, and Patricians.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before a Gate of the City.

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLNENIA, VIRGILIA, MENENIUS,
COMICS, AND severa young Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell!
the beast
With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were used
To say, extremity was the true criterion;
That common chances common men could bear;
That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating: fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded,
craves
A noble cunning: you were used to load me
With regrets, that would make invincible
The heart that could't them.

Fare. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I pr'ythee, woman,—

Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in

Rome,

And occupations perish!

Cor. What, what, what! I shall be lost when I am lack'd! Nay, mother,
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labors you'd have done, and save'd
Your husband so much sweat. Comiins,
Drop not; adieu! Farewell, my wife! my mother!
I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Memmius,
Thy tears are softer than a younger man's;
And venumous to thine eyes.—My sometime
guard
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld
Hearts-hard'ning spectacles; tell these sad women,
Tie fond! to wait meritable strokes,
As'tis to laugh at them.—My mother, you won
My hazards still have been your solace: and Believe't not lightly, (though I go alone
Like to a lonely dragon, that his ken
Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more than seen,) your son
Will, or expect the common, or be caught
With cautelous turns and practice.

My first' son,
Whether wilt thou go? Take good Cominins
With thee a while: Determine on some course,
More than a wild expenditure to each chance
That starts i' the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods!

Vol. Cor. I'll follow thee a mouth, desire with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou mayst know of us,
And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send
Of the vast world, to seek a single man;
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I the absence of the needer.

Cor. Fare ye well:

Vol. Cor. That's yet unbruised: bring me but out at gate.
Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch, when I am forth,
But me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men.

As any ear can hear.—Come, let's not weep—

[Substant.

1 Foolish.

2 Nestor.

3 Injurious.

4 Exposure.

5 True metal.

Act. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!

Vol. Our enemy's banish'd! he is gone! Hoo! hoo!

[The People shout, and throw up their Caps.

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him,
As he hath follow'd you, with all despise;
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city.

Cor. Come, come, let us see him out at gates;

[Exeunt.

The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Come.

Act. IV.

SCENE II.—A Street near the Gate.

Enter ScENIES, Brutos, and an .Edie.

Sic. Bid them all home; he's gone, and we'll no further—

The nobility are vex'd, who, we see, have sided
In his behalf.

Bru. Now we have shown our power,

Sic. Let us seem hubber after it is done,

Thou when it was a-doin.

Sic. Bid them home;

Sic. Thy, their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru. Dismiss them home.

[Exeunt.

Enter VOLNENIA, VIRGILIA, and MENGNIUS.

Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.

Bru. Why?

Sic. They say, she's mad.

Bru. They have ta'en note of us.

Keep on your way.

Vol. O, you're well met: The hoarded plague

Requiteth your love!

Men. Peace, peace; be not so loud.

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should

Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be gone!

[To BRUTUS.

Vtr. You shall stay too: [To Sicini.] I would,

Sic. I had the power

To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you mankind!

Vol. Ay, fool! is that a shame!—Note but this foal

Was not a man my father! Hadst thou fasshion
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,

Sic. O blessed heavens!

Vol. O, more noble blows than ever thou wert words;
And for Rome's good,—I'll tell thee what;—

Let go.

Sic. Nay but thy mast-stay too:—I would my son

Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,

His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then!

Vol.

Men. What then?

Vol. He'd make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards, and all,—

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

Men. Come, come, peace.

Sic. I would he had continued to his country,
As he began; and not unkind himself

The noble knot he made.

Bru. I would he had.

Vol. I would he had! Twas you insinu'd the rubbish;

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth

As I can of those mysteries which heaven

Will not have earth to know.

Bru. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone;

You have done a brave deed: Ere you go, hear this:—

As far as deth the Capitol exceed
Enter a Citizen.

In puny battle slay me—save you, sir.

Cor.

Enter a Citizen.

In puny battle slay me—save you, sir.

Cor.

Direct me, if it be thy will,

Where great Aufidius lies: Is he in Aturn?

Cor.

And heeds the nobles of the state,

At his house this night.

Cor.

Which is his house, beseech you?

Cor.

This, here, before you.

Cor.

Thank you, sir; farewell.

[Exit Citizen.

0 world, thy slippery turns! Friends now last sworn,

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,

Where Whose pleasant bed, whose innocent, and exercise,

Are still together, who twin, 'twere, in love

Unseparable, shall within this hour,

On a dissension of a don't, break out

To bitter enmity: This is the fift doers.

Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep

To take, as to the other, by some chance,

Some trick not worth an egg shall grow dear friends,

And interjoin their issues. So with me—

My birth-place hate I, and my love's upon

This enemey town.—I'll enter: if he slay me,

He does fair justice: if he give me way,

I'll do his country service.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—A Hall in Aufidius's House.

Music Within. Enter a Servant.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here!

I think our fellows are asleep.

[Exit.

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. Where's Cotus? my master calls for him.

Cotus!

[Exit.

Enter Coriolanus.

Cor. A goodly house: The feast smells well, but Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Servant.

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence art thou, sir? Has the pester his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Fray, get you out.

Cor. Away!

2 Serv. Away! Get you away.

Now thou art troublesome.

1 Serv. Are you so brave! I'll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third Servant. The first meets him.

3 Serv. What follows this?

1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out of the house: Pr'ythee, call my master to him.

3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your heart.

3 Serv. What are you?

Cor. A gentleman.

3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3 Serv. Fray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station: here's no place for you; pray you, avoid: come.

Cor. Follow your function, sir.

And hark how on cold airs he Pushes him away.

3 Serv. What, will you not? Pr'ythee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

[Exit.

2 Serv. And I shall.

3 Serv. Were dwellent thou?

Cor. Under the canopy.

3 Serv. Under the canopy?

Cor. At.

3 Serv. Where's that?

Cor. 'Tis the city of kites and crows.

3 Serv. 'Tis the city of kites and crows!—What an ass it is!—Then thou dwellst with daws too!

Cor. No, I serve not thy master.

* A small coin.

* Peel.
3 Serv. How, sir! Do you meddle with my master?

Cor. Ay; 'tis an honest service than to meddle with thy mistresse;
Thou pratt'st, and pratt'st; serve with thy treacher,
[Beats him away.]

Enter ATTILIA, and the second Servant.

Att. Where is this fellow?

3 Serv. Here, sir; I'ld have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Cor. Whereby comes thou? what wouldst thou do?

Not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not Tell me the matter for the man, am, necessity
Commands me name myself, name.

What is thy name?

Cor. A name unsuited to the Volscians' ears.
And harsh in sound to thine.

Att. Say, what's thy name?

Cor. Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
READS A COMMAND IN IT; though thy tackle's torn,
Thou show'st a noble vessel: What's thy name? Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown: know'st thou
Me yet?

Att. I know thee not:—Thy name?

Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done
To thee particularly, and to all the Voices,
Great good and mischief; therefore may
My surname, Coriolanus: The painful service,
The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood
Shed for my thankless country, are requited
Ripe with that surname; a good weapon
And witness of the malice and displeasure
Which thou shouldst bear: only that name remains;
The cruelty and envy of the people;
Permitted by our distant nobles, who
Have all forsook me, hath devour'd the rest;
And suffer'd me by the voice of slaves to be
The worst'd of Rome. Now, thou say'st
Hast brought me to thy heart: Not out of hope,
Mistake me not, to save my life; for if
I had fear'd death, of all the men I should have Voided thee; but in mere spite,
To be full quit of those thy banishes,
Stand I before thee. Then if thou hast
A heart of wreak in thee, that will revenge
Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those mains
Of shame seen through thy country, speed thee straight,
And make my misery serve thy turn; so use it,
That my revengeful service may prove
As benefits to thee; for I will fight
Against my enker'd country with the spleen
Of all the unkind things. But if thou
Dost not at this, and that to prove more fortunes
Thou art tir'd, then, in a word, I also am
Longer to live most weary, and present
My throat to thee, and to thy ancient malice:
Which not to cut, would show thee but a fool;
Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drown'd tunes of blood out of thy country's breast,
And mourn not live but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Att. O Marcius, Marcius,
Every word thou hast speak'd hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter
Should from thy cloud speak divine things, and say,
'Tis true: I'd not believe them more than thee,
All noble Marcius,—O let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My gnaw'd ash an hundred tunes hath brake,
And scar'd the moon with splinters! Here I clip
The tail of my sovereignty, and stop those mains
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valor. Know thou first,
I would not have thee fall; but if thou
Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble things! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I was my esteemed mistress,
Bести. Where, thou villain! I tell thee,
Thou hast a power on foot; and I had purpose

Once more to hew thy target from thy breast;

But lose no more in arms for it. Thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Inhabit the forms, lashing each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy Marcius,
Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art hence banish'd, we would muster all
From throne to senate to severity; and, pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er-beat. O, come, go in,
And take this friendly invitation,
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am preparing against thy territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. Nay, you bless me, gods!—

Att. Therefore, most absolute sirif thou wilt have
The leading of thine own revenues, take
The one half of my commission; and set down,—
As best thou art experienced, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—those own ways:
Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rarely visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But come in:
Let me command thee first to those, that shall Say, yes, to thy desires. A thousand welcomes! and Most admirable and er' a most a piece.
Yet, Marcius, that was much. Your hand! Most welcome!

Coriolanus and Att. Servants. [Exeunt.]

1 Serv. Adrastea! Here's a strange encounter.

2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have Strucken him with a cudgel; and yet my mind
Gave me his clothes a false report of him.

Cor. Marcius, and this is he, he has. He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.

2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was Something in him: He had, sir, a kind of face, me-thought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

1 Serv. He had sol; looking, as it were,—Would I were unmusical in my heart, thought there was more in him than I could think.

2 Serv. So did I. I'll be sworn: He is simply the Rarest man in the world.

1 Serv. I think he is: but a greater soldier than he, you wot one.

2 Serv. Who? my master?

1 Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Serv. Worth six of him.

1 Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier.

2 Serv. Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say
That for the defence of a town, our general is excellent.

1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.

Re-enter third Servant.

3 Serv. O, slaves, I can tell you news; news, you rascals,

1 Serv. What's what, what? let's parle.

2 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations
I had as he be a condemned man.

3 Serv. Wherefore! wherfore!

2 Serv. Why, here's he that was sent to thwart our general—Caius Marcius.

1 Serv. Why do you say, thwart our general?

3 Serv. I do not say, thwart our general; but he Was always good enough for him.

1 Serv. We were he is friends and fellows: he
Was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say
So himself.

2 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth out; before Corioli, he scolded him and notched him like a carbado.

2 Serv. An he had been cannibly given, he might have dined and eaten him too.

1 Serv. But, more of thy news?

3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars; set at upper end
'0 the table, and asked no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bald before him: Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with his hand, and turns up the white o' the eye to look at him. But the body of the news is, our general is cut t' the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday; for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table. He'll go, he says, and sowle; the porter of Rome gates by the cars; he will move down all before him, and leave his game unpolled.

2 Serv. And he's as like to do, as any man I can imagine.
3 Serv. Don't! he will don't! For, look you, sir, his friends are many; and enemies: which friends,
sir, (as it were,) must not (look you, sir,) show them-theselves (as we term it,) his friends, whilst he's in directitude.
1 Serv. Directitude! what's that?
3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like conyes after rain, and revel all with him.
1 Serv. But when goes this forward?
3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have your cones struck up this afternoon: tis, as were, a parcel of their least, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.
2 Serv. Why then we shall have a stirring world made. This peace is nothing; but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.
1 Serv. Let me have war, say! it' exceeds peace, as far as days do meet; it's springish, waking, audu-ble, and full of vent. Peace is an apple oxyn, lethargy; unmended dead, sleepy, unconsolable; a getter
of more bastard children, than war's a destructor of.
2 Serv. 'Tis so; and as war, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher; so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.
1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.
3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars, for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volsians. They are rising, they are rising.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter Scevus and Buctus.

Sir. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him:
these bodies are tame; the providence of heaven.
And quietness of the people, which before were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends
Blush, that the world goes well; who rather had,
Though they themselves did suffer he, be behold.
Dissonant numbers pestering streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

Enter Messenius.

Brut. We stood to't in good time. Is this Me-enius?
Sir. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O, he is grown most kind.
Of late.—Hail, sir!
Men. Hail to you both!
Sir. Your Coriolanus, sir, is not much miss'd,
But with his friends: the commonwealth doth stand,
And so would do, were he more angry at it.
Men. All's well; and might have been better, if He could have temporiz'd.
Sir. Where is he, hear you? Men. Nay, I hear nothing; his mother and his wife
Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Cit. The gods preserve you both!
Sir. Good even, our neighbors.
Brut. Good even to you all, good even to you all.
Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees,
Are bound to pray for you both.
Sir. Live and thrive!
Brut. Farewell, kind neighbors: we wish'd Co-rioranus
Had lov'd you as we did.
Cit. Now the gods keep you.
Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. [Exit Citizens.]
[SCENE Exten's.]
This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying, confusion.

Brut. Caius Marcius was
A worthy officer; the war; but insolent,
Of judges with pride, ambitions past all thinking, Self-liking.

Sir. And affecting one sole throne,
Without assistance.
Men. I think not so.
Sir. We should by this: it call our lamentation,
If he had gone forth counsel; found it so.
Brut. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome
Sits safe and still without him.

Enter Edile.

Edl. Worthy tribunes,
There is a slave, whom we have put in prison.
Reports,—the Volses with two several powers
Are enter'd in the Roman territories:
And with the deepest malice of the war
Destroy what lives before them.
'Tis Aurelius,
Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment,
Thrusts forth his horns again into the world.
Which were it that's dead, when Marcius stood
For Rome,
And durst not once peep out.
Sir. Of Marcius? Brut. Go see this rumorer whipp'd.—It cannot be
The Voles dare break with us.
Men. Cannot be! We have record, that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been
Within our age. Within ten years, and with it yellow,
Before you punish him, where by he heard this:
lest you should cause to whip your information,
And beat the messenger who tells beware
Of what is to be dreaded.
Sir. Tell not me:
I know this cannot be.
Brut. No possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles, in your presence, are come;
All to the senate-house: some news is come,
That turns their countenances.
Sir. 'Tis this slave:—Go whip him here the people's eyes:—his raising
Nothing but his rep't!—
Mess. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is seconded; and more,
More fearful is det erred.
Sir. What more fearful?
Mess. It is spok freely out of many mouths,
(How probable, I do not know,) that Marcius,
Join'd with Aurelius, leads a power against Rome;
And vows revenge as sanguine, as between
The young' st and oldest thing.
Sir. This is most likely!
Brut. Raise'd only, that the weaker sort may wish
Good Marcius home again.
Men. This is unlikely.
He and Antius can no more alone,
Than violent contrariety.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. You are sent for to the senate:
A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius,
Associated with Aurelius, wages
Upon our territories, and have already Overborne their way, consum'd with fire, and took
What lay before them.

Enter Comites.

Com. O, you have made good work!
Men. What news! what news?
Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters, and
To melt the city heads upon your pates;
To see your wives discomf in'd to your noses;
Men. What's the news! what's the news?
Com. Your temples burn'd in their cement;
And your franchises, wherein you stood, confin'd
Into an auger's bore.
Men. Fray now, your news?—
You have made fair work, I bear me:—Pray, your news!
If Marcius should be join'd with Volsians,—
Com. If! He is their god: he leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shape a man better; and they follow him.
Against us brats, with no less confidence,
Coriolanus. Pray, as yet who you are at all! Being gone to the Camp; you whether you now you at. 'Tis but now. Come, Ay; Say when best: We are all undone, unless The noble man have mercy. Con., Who shall ask it? The tribunes cannot do for shame: the people Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, Because to Rome, they charged him even As those who did the, he had deserve'd his hate, And therein show'd like enemies. Men. 'Tis true: If he were putting to my house the brand That should consume it. I have not the face To say, Be receiv'd you. You have made fair hands, You and your crafts! you have crafted fair! Con., You have brought A trembling upon Rome, such as was never So incapable of help. Tel., Say not, we brought it. Men. How! Was it we? We for'd him; but, like beasts, And cowardly nobles, gave way to your clusters Who did he out of o' the city. But, if fear, They'll reveal him in again. Tullius Aufidius The second name of men, obeys his points As if he were his officer:—Desperation Is all the policy, strength, and defence, That Rome can make against them. Enter a Troop of Citizens. Men. Here come the clusters:— And is Aufidius with him?—Are you they That made the air unwholesome, when you cast Your stinking, crooky caps, in hoasting at Coriolanus' e'er. Now he's coming! And not a hair upon a soldier's head, Which will not prove a whip; as many coxcombs. And he that throw caps up, will he tumble down, And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter; If he could burn us all into one coal, We have deserve'd it. O, peace! We hear fearful news. 1 Cid. For mine own part, When I said, banish him, I said, 'twas pity. 2 Cid. And so did I. 3 Cid. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us: That we did, we did for the best; and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will. Con., You are good things; you voices! Men. You have made Good work, you and your cry?—Shall we to the Capitol? Con., O, ay; what else! [Exeunt Cor. and Men. Sic. Go, masters, get you home, be not dismay'd; These are a side, that would be glad to have This true, which they so seem to fear. Go home, And shed no sign of fear. 1 Cid. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let's home. I ever said, we were 't the wrong, when we banish'd him. 2 Cid. So did we all. But come, let's home. Brus. I do not like this news. Sic. Nor I. Brus. Are we to the Capitol?—Would half my wealth Would buy this for a lie. Sic. Pray, let us go. [Exeunt. SCENE VII.—A Camp; at a small distance from Rome. Enter Aemilius, and his Lieutenant. Afr. Do they still fly to the Roman? Lucr. I do not know what wickedness' in him: but Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat, Their talk at table, and their thanks at end; And you are darken'd in this action, sir, Even by your own. Afr. I cannot help it now; Unless, by using means, I came the foot Of our design. He bears himself more proud, Even to my person, than I thought he would, When first I did embrace him: Yet his nature In that's no changing; and I must excuse What cannot be amended. Lucr. Yet I wish, sir, (I mean for your particular,) you had not in your commission writ with him; but either Had borne the action of yourself, or else To him had left it solely. Afr. I understand thee well: and he thon sure, When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems, And so he thinks, and is no less apparent To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly, And she good industry for the Volscian state; Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon As draw his sword; yet he hath left undone That which shall break his neck, or hazard mine, Whence er we come to our account. Lucr. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry Rome! Afr. All places yield to him ere he sits down; And the nobility of Rome are his: The senators, and patricians, love him too. The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people Will be as rash in the repeat, as hasty To expel him thence. I think, he'll lie to Rome, As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it By sovereignty of nature. First he was A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honors ever the 'twas pride, Which out of daily fortune ever taints The happy man; whether defect of judgment, To fall in the disposing of those chances Which he was lord of; or whether nature, Not to be other than one thing, not moving From the casque to the cushion, but commanding Even with the same austerity and garb As he controll'd the war; but, one of these, As he hath spaces of them all, not all! For I dare so far free him, made him fear'd, So hated, and so banish'd: But he has a merit, To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues Lie in the interpretation of the time; And power, into itself most commendable, Hath not a tomb so evident a chair To extol what it hath done. One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail; Rights by rights fromer, strengths by strengths do fail. Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine. Thou art poorest of all; then shortly art thou mine. [Exeunt. 8 An eagle that preys on fish. 9 The chair of civil authority. 10 Not all in their full extent.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, COMINIUS, SCAEVOLA, BRUTUS, and others.

Men. No, I'll not go; you hear, what he hath said.

Which was sometime his general; who lov'd him.
In a most dear particular. He call'd my father:
I know you, but I will not go. He banish'd him,
A mile before his tent fell down, and knelt
The way unto his mercy: Nay, if he cry'd!
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear? Come, yet one time he did call me by my name:
I urged our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we have died together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to; forbad all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name i' the fire
Of dashing Rome.

Men. Why, so: you have made good work:
A pair of tribunes that have reck'd for Rome,
To make rods cheaply! A noble memory!

But, sirrah, Cominius is the prospect
When it was less expected: he replied,
It was a bare petition of a state
To them whom they had punished.

Men. Very well.

Could he say less? Come, I offer'd to awaken his regard
For his private friends: His answer to me was
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of nonsense, musty chaff: He said, 'twas folly,
For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt,
And still to nose the offence.

For one poor grain
Or two! I am one of these; his mother, wife,
His child, and this brave fellow too; we are the grains:
You are the musty chaff; and you are smelt
Above the moon: We must be burnt for you.

Sir. Nay, pray, be patient: If you refuse your aid
In this so never-needed help, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. But, sure, if you
Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue
More than the instant array we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

No: I'll not meddle.

Sir. I pray you, go to him. Men. What should I do?

Beau. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome towards Marcus.

Men. Well, and say that Marcus
Return me, as Cominius is returned,
Unheard; what then?

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness! Say'be so!

And in your good will
Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake it;

If not, he'll hear me. Yet to hate his lip,
And him at good Cominius, much unhears me.
He was not taken well; he had not dined:
The veins unkind'd, our blood is cold, and then
We lack'd him, when he was at table feeding,
Have supplier souls.

That in a priest-like taste, therefore I'll watch him
Till he be dieted to my request,

And then I'll set him up.

You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall creole having knowledge
Of his success. [Exit Cominius.

Sec. He'll never hear him.

Men. Not! *

* Condemned with willingness.

* Sec. Have managed so well for Rome as to get the town burnt to save the expenses of wars.

Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as a link burnt in; and his collar
The goather to his pity. I kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said, Rise; dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand: What he would do,
He sent in writing after me; what he would not,
Bound with an oath, to yield to his conditions:
So, that all hope is vain,

Men. Unless his noble mother, and his wife;
Who, as we said, meant to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore let's hence,
And with our fair entreaties haste them on. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An advanced Post of the Volscian Camp before Rome. The Guard at their Stations.

Enter the MCPENIUS.

Men. 1 G. Stay: Whence are you?

2 G. Stand, and go back.

Men. You guard like men; as well, but, by
Our station, to you.

You may not pass, you must return: our general
Will not more hear from thence.

2 G. You'll see your Rome embrus'd with fire,
before
You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends, if you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots' to blanks,
My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.

1 G. He it so; go back: the virtue of your name
Is not here passable.

Men. Tell thee, fellow, Thy general is my lover & I have been
The book of his good acts, whencesoever you have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply, amplified;
For I have ever verified his deeds,
(Or whom he's chief,) with all the size that verity
Would without laying suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtil ground,
I have tumble'd past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leasing. Therefore,
I must have leave to pass.

1 G. Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf, as you have uttered well, you shall not pass here: no, though it were as victuals to his, as to live chastely. Therefore, go back.

Men. Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your general.

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar, (as you say you have,) I am one that, telling true under him, must say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he din'd, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you!

Men. I am as thy general is.

4 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Can you, when you have push'd out your gates
The very defider of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, give your enemy your shield, think to front his revenues with the wives and graces of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palp'd intercession of such a decayed dearth as you seem to be! Can you think to blow the trumpet of this city out of breath to your men, with such weak breath as this! No, you are received, therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution; you are condemned, our general has sworn you out of reproach and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here,
he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.

Scene III.

Coriolanus.

Men. I mean thy general.

1 G. My general cares not for you. Back, I say; go, lest thou forth thy half pint of blood:—back,—that's the utmost of thy having:—back.

Men. Nay, but fellow, fellow,—

[Enter Coriolanus and Aufidius.]

Cor. What's the matter? Auf. I'll say an errand for you; thou shalt perceive that a Jack-guardian cannot offer me Coriolanus or myself but by my entertainment with him, thou stand'st not of the state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship and crueller in suffering; both of which, and away for what's to come upon thee. The glorious god sits in hourly synod upon thy particular prosperity, and love the no worse than thy old father Menenius.

6.0. men! my sons! thou art a preparation for me; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being assured, none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sights; and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good god assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon the varlet here; this, who, like a block, hath denied my access thee.

Cor. Away!

Men. How! away! I am your child, I know not. My affairs are servanted to others: Though I owe My revenge properly, my remission lies In Volscian breasts. That we have been familiar, I am no longer unacquainted with peace.

Cor. Than pity note how much.—Therefore, becorn. Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Yet, for, I'd thee, Take this along; I write it for thy sake.

[Give a Letter.]

Cor. And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius, I will not hear thee speak.—This man, Aufidius, Whom I have, believe in Rome? Yet thou boldest still.

Auf. You keep a constant temper.

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius.]

Scene III.—The Tent of Coriolanus.

Enter Coriolanus, Aufidius, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow Set down our host.—My partner in this action, You must report to the Volscian lords, how plainly I have borne in this business.

Auf. Only their ends You have respected: stopp'd your ears against The general suit of Rome; never admitted An urgent whisper, no, not with such friends That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man, Whom with a crack'd head I have sent to Rome, Loved me above the measure of a father; Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuse Was to send him; for whose old love, I have (Though I shou'd sordily to him) once more The first conditions, which they did refuse, And cannot now accept, to grace him only. That thought he could do more; a very little I have of his counsels; he knows no suits, Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter Will I lend ear to.—Ha! what shou'd this be?

[Shout within.]

1 Fellows. 2 Jack in office. 3 Because. 4 Reprimanded. 5 Openly. 6 Gust, storm. 7 Juna.
Cor. Aduidius, and you Voices, mark; for we'll have two sides out of court, and what is the fault? Should be silent, and not speak, our raiment,

And taint of howes would bewray what life
We have lived since thy exile. Think with thyself,
How more unfortunate than all living women
Are we, hither: since that thy sight, which Should make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,
Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow.

Making the mother, wife, and child, to see
The son, the husband, and the father, tearing his country's bowels out. And to poor we,
Thou, my country, my soul's, enough of it, for
This our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy: For how can we,
Alas! how can we for our country pray,
Wherein our country, our nation, our enemy's
That we should be so bound! Alack! or we must lose
Our dear nursey or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. We must find
An evident calamity, though we had
Our wish, which side should win: for either thou
Dost, as a foreign recreant, be led
With marches through our strait, or else
Triumphantly tread upon thy country's ruin;
And bear the pain, for having bravely shed
Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
I pray they do not wait on fortune's fortune.

These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee
Rather to show a noble grace to both parties,
Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
March to assault thy country, than to tread
(Trust to th' son shalt not) on thy mother's womb,
That brought thee to this world,
Ay, and on mine,
That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name
Living to time.

Boy: He shall not tread on me;

Boy, away, I am a bigger, but I am not a fight,
Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
Requires nor child nor woman's face to see,
I have sat too long.

[Richard.]

Vat, no way from thou thus.
If it were so, that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy
The Voices whom you serve, you might condemn us,
As prisoners of your honor: No; our suit
Is, that you reconcile them: while the Voices,
May say, This mercy we have show'd; the Romans,
This we receiv'd: and each in either side
Live as they shall to thee, and cry, Who's not
For making up this peace? Thou know'st, great son,
The end of war's uncertain; but this certain,
That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefices
What live shall shew shall reap, no such a name,
Who's reprieve shall be death'd with curses;
Whose chronicle thus writ,-The man was noble,
Good citizen, if he keep's his last attempt, he Destroys his country and his name remains
To the ensuing age, abhor'd. Speak to me, son;
Thou hast affected the fine strains of honor,
Point the graces of the gods;
To bear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air,
And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
That should but rive an oak. Why dust not speak!
This is the time, and no honor belongeth
Still to remember wrongs!-Daughter, speak you:
He cares not for your weeping,-Speak thou, boy:
Perhaps thy childishness will move him
Than can our reasons. There is no man in the world
More bonnie in his mother; yet here he lets me prune
His buck's necks. This,) little fool, in his like
Show'd th' dear mother any courtesy:
When she, (poor fond) of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home;
Loudly she joyed, and with my tongue,
Say, my mother's unkind, And spur me back: But, if it be not so,
Thou art not honest; and the gods will plague thee,
That thou restrains't me from the duty,
Which to obey such part belongs;—He came away:
Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees.
To his surname Coriolanus lones more pride,
Than pity to our prayers. Down; an end;
This is the last.—So we will home to Rome
And die among our neighbors.—Nay, behold us:
This boy dost thou love? and think what is
But kneels, and holds up hands, for fellowship.
Does reason our petition with more strength
Than thou hast to deny.—Come, let us go:
This fellow had a Volumnia for a mother;
Her wife is in Coriolis, and his child.
Like him by chance,—Yet give us our despatch:
I am here to subdue our city to are,
And then I'll speak a little.

Cor. O mother, mother,

[Holdring VOLU\NIA by the hands, sigh'd.

What have you done? Behold, the heavens grope,
The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O!
You have won a happy victory to Rome;
And now that you have meant, for my part,
Most dangerously you have with him prevai'd,
If not most mortal to him. But, let it come:
Aduidius, though I cannot make true wars,
I'll trade the scene, and give him victory. Where do you in my stead, say, would you have heard
A mother less? or granted less, Aduidius?

Vat. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn, you were;
And, sir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir,
What profit's there in all this advice for me and my part,
I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and pray you,
Stand to me in this case.—O mother! wife!

Adu. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy and thy peace
At difference in thee: out of that I'll work
Myself a former fortune.

[Ladies make signs to CORIOLANUS.

Cor. [To VOLV\NIA, V\RGI\\, &c.

But we will drink together; and you shall bear
A better witness back than words, which we,
On like conditions, will have counter-swear.-
Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve
To have a temple built you; all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this his peace.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Rome. A public Place.

Enter Metellus and Sicinius.

Men. See you yond' costor' o the Capitol: yond' corner stone!

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If't be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him.
But I say, there is no hope in't; we are sentenced,
and staid upon execution.

Sic. If't be possible, and so short a time can alter the condition of a man!

Men. There is a difference between a grub, and a butterfly: yon' butterfly was a grub. This Marcus is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He loved his mother dearly.

Men. A younger man and he no more remembers his mother now, than an eight year old horse.
The taint of his face sounds ripe grapes.
When he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his tread. He is able to pierce a corset with his eye; talks like a knave, and his humb a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made for' Alexander. What he bids be done, is finished with his labour. He wants nothing of a god but eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Thus what mercy his mother shall bring from him; There is no more mercy in him, than there is milk in a mate tiger; that shall our poor city find, and all this hour of you:

Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banned him, we repeated not the words or he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you've save your life, fly to your house:
The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune,
And have him up and down; all swearing, if

* Angle.   * Chair of state.   * To resemble.
The Roman ladies bring not comfort home, They'll give your death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sir. What's the news? - The Voiles have prevail'd.

The Voiles are disobled, and Marcius gone: A merrier day did never yet greet Rome, No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sir. Friend, Art thou certain this is true? - It must certain! -

Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire: Where have you heard, that you make doubt of it? Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tides, As the remonstrated through the gates. Why, hark, hark, hark!

[Trumpets and Howlings sounded, and Drums beaten, all together. Shooting out fire.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and pipes, Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans, Make the sun dance. Hark! how they joy! - Shouting again.]

Mon. This is good news: I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia is worth of consuls, senators, patricians, A city full; of tribunes, such as you, A sea and land full: You have prayed well to-day. This morning, for ten thousand of your throats, I'd not have given a doot. Hark, how they joy! - Shouting and Music.

Sir. First, the gods bless you for their tidings; next Accept my thankfulness.

Mess. Sir, we have all Great cause to give great thanks. So many of them are near the city?

Mess. Almost at point to enter. We will meet them, and help the joy. -

[Enter the Ladies, accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and the Stratified People. They pass over the Stage.]

1 Sen. Behold our patroons, the life of Rome: Call all your tribes together, praise the gods, and make triumphant fires; straw flowers before them: Unshout the noise that banished Marcius, Repeal him with the welcome of his mother; Cry, - Welcome, ladies, welcome!

All. Welcome, ladies! Welcome! - [A flourish with Drums and Trumpets."

[Exeunt."

SCENE V. Autium. A Public Place.

Enter TULLIUS AURIDUCUS, with Attendants.

Aur. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here: Deliver them this paper: having read it, Bid them repair to the market-place; where I, Even their ears and in the coming sight, Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse, The city ports! by this hath entered, and Intends to appear before the people, hoping To purge himself with words: Despatch! -

[Exeunt Attendants."

Enter three or four Conspirators of Antidius' Faction.

Maxwell, very welcome! -

1 Cor. How is it with our general? -

Aur. Even so, As with a man by his own alms empow'd, And with his charity sham.

2 Cor. Most noble sir, If you do hold the same intent wherein You wist'd us parties, we'll deliver you Of your great danger.

Aur. Sir, I cannot tell; We must proceed, as we do find the people. -

3 Cor. The people will remain uncertain, whilst Two have you there's difference; but the fall of either Makes the survivor heir of all.

Aur. I know it; And my pretext to strike at him admits A great construction. I rai's'd him, and I prai'd Mine honor for his truth: Who being so heich'en'd He water'd his new plants with dew of flattery, Seducing so my friends: and to this end, He bow'd his nature, never knowing me But to be rough, unsayable, and free.

3 Cor. Sir, his stoutness -

Recall. -

Aur. Gates. -

When he did stand for consul, which he lost By lack of slopes.

[Exeunt."

2 Cor. That I would have spoke of: Being banish'd from the city, you hear him: He presented his case, not threat: I took him; Made him joint servant with me; gave him way, In all his own desires; may, let him choose Out of my titles, his projects to accomplish, My best and surest hopes, and to see such instruments Mine own person: help to reap the fame Which he did end all his; and took some pride To do myself this wrong: till, at the last, He seemed his follower, not tyrant; and He waged me with his countenance, as if I had been mercurian."

1 Cor. So did he, my lord. The army marvel'd at it. And, in the last, When he had carried Rome; and that we look'd For no less spoil than glory.

Aur. For which my sinews shall be stretched upon him. At a few drops of women's rheum? which are As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labor Of our great action: Therefore shall he die, And I'll have found in his; but hard! -

[Drums and Trumpets sound, with great shouts of the People."

1 Cor. Your native town you enter'd like a post, And had no welcomes home; but he returns, Splitting the air with noise.

2 Cor. And patient fools, Whose children he hath slain, their base threats tear, With giving him glory.

3 Cor. Therefore, at your vantage, Ere he express himself, or move the people With what he understand, let him feel your sword, Which we will second. When he lies along, After your way his tale pronounce'd shall bury His reasons with his body.

Aur. Say no more; Here come the lords. - [Enter the Lords of the City."

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Aur. But, worthy lords, have you heeld perus'd What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

Lord. And grieve to hear it.

What faults he made before the last, I think, Might have some end: it is now his last end, Where he was to begin, and give away The benefit of our lives, answering us With our own charge; - making a treaty, where There was but yielding: this admirably done. -

Aur. He approaches, you shall hear him.

[Enter CORIOLANUS, with Drums and Colors; a Crowd of Citizens with him."

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier; No more infected with my country's love, Than when I parted hence, but hencewardly Under your great command. You are to know, That prosperously I have attempted, and With bloody passage, led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. - Our spies we have brought home, Do more than counterpose, a full third part, The charnel of the action. We have made peace, With no less honor to the Antidius Than shame to the Romans: And we here deliver, Subscribe by the consuls and patricians, Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

[Read it; noble lords, -

But tell the traitor, in the highest degree He hath abuse'd your powers.

Cor. Treator! - How now?

Aur. Ay, traitor, Marcus, Marcus!

Cor. Ay, Marcus, Caius Marius; Dost thou think I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name Coriolanus in Corioli? -

You lords and heads of the state, perfectly He has betray'd thy business, and given up, For certain drops of salt, your city Rome, (I say, your city,) to his wife and mother: -

Thought! me rewarded with good looks. -

Rewarding us with our own expenses.
Breaking his oath and resolution, like
A twist of rotten silk; never admitting
Counsel of the war; but at his nurse’s tears
He whim’d and roared away your victory;
That pages blush’d at him, and men of heart
Look’d wondering each at other.

Cor. [Heart’st thou, Mars?]—Ha!

Autf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears.—

Cor. [No more.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart
Too great for what contains it. Boy! O slave!—
Pardon me, lords, ’tis the first time that ever
I was forc’d to scold. Your judgments, my grave
lords,
Must give this ear the lie: and his own notion (Who wears my stripes impress’d on him; that must bear
My beating to his grave) shall join to thrust
The lie unto him.

1 Lord. Peace, both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Voles; men and lads,
Stain all your edges on me.—Boy! False hound,—
If you have writ your annals true, ’tis there,
That like an eagle in a dove-coe, I
Flutter’d your Voices in Corioli:
Abide I did it.—Boy!

Autf. [A time.

Why, noble lords,
Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,
Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart,
‘For your own eyes and ears!

Cor. Let him die to’t. [Several speak at once.

Cl. [Speaking promiscuously.] Tear him to pieces, do it presently. He killed my son,—my daughter,—He killed my cousin Marcus;—He killed my father.

2 Lord. Peace, ho;—no outrage,—peace.
The man is noble, and his name folds in
This crown of the earth. His last offence to us
Shall have judicious hearing.—Stand, Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace.

6 Judiciol.

Cor. [0, that I had him,
With six Aufiduses, or more, his tribe,
To use my lawful sword!

Autf. Insolent villain!

Cor. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.

[Aufiduses and the Conspirators draw, and kill Coriolanus, who falls, and Aufiduses stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold.

Autf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord. O Tullus,—

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valor will weep.

3 Lord. Treat not upon him.—Masters all, be quiet:
Put up your swords.

Autf. My lords, when you shall know (as in this race,
Provol’d by him, you cannot) the great danger
Which this man’s lie did owe you, you’ll rejoice
That he is thus cut off. Please it your honors
To call me to your senate, I’ll deliver
Myself your royal servant, or endure
Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord. Bear from hence his body,
And mourn you for him; let him be regard’d
As the most noble corse that ever herald
Did follow to his urn.

2 Lord. [His own impatience
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.
Let’s make the best of it.

My rage is gone,
And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up.
Help, three o’ the chiefest soldiers: I’ll be one,—
Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully:
Trail your steel pikes.—Though in this city he Hath widow’d and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury,
Yet he shall have a noble memory.—

Autf. [Execute, bearing the body of Coriolanus
A dead March sound’d.]
To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels!
You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!
O, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome,
Knew you not Pompey! Many a time and oft,
Have you climbed up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops,
Your soldiers in your arms, and there have sat
The live-long day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome:
And when you saw his chariot but appear,
Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath her banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds
Made in her concave shores!
And do you now put on your best attire!
And do you now pull out a holiday!
And do you now strew flowers in his way,
That comes in triumph over Pompey’s blood!
Behold;
Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,
Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this ingratitude.
Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and for this fault,
Assemble all the poor men of your sort!
Draw them to Tyber banks, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.
[Exit Citizens.
See, whe’er their basest metal be not mov’d;
They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.
Go you down that way towards the Capitol;
This way will I: Disrobe the images,
If you do find them deck’d with ceremonies.
Mar. May we do so!
You know, it is the least of Luperca!
Flav. It is no matter; let no images
Be hung with Caesar’s trophies, I’ll about,
And drive away the vulgar from the streets:
So do you too, where you perceive them thick.
These growing feathers pluck’d from Caesar’s wing,
Cæsar. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to hear; And since you know you cannot see yourself So well as by reflection, I, your glass, Will modestly discover to yourself That self you see which you yet know not of. And be not jealous of me, gentle Brutus: Were I a common laugh, or did use To state with ordinary oaths my love To every new proceeding; if you would But that I do fawn on men, and hug them hard, And after scandal them; or if you know That I profess myself in banqueting To all the rout, then hold me dangerous. [Flourish and Shout.

Brut. What means this shouting! I do fear the people Choose Caesar for their king.

Cas. Ay, do you fear it? Then must I think you would not have it so. But I will, and know you well; But wherefore do you hold me so in horror? What is it that you would import to me? It be nought toward the general good, Set honor in one eye, and death in the other, And I will look on both indifferently: For, let the gods so speed me, as I love The name of honor more than I fear death. Cas. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus As well as I do know your outward favor Well, honor is the subject of my story.— I cannot tell, what you and other men Have done in this life; but, for my simple self, I had as lief not be, as live to be in awe of such a thing as I myself. I was not made for Caesar: so were you: We both have fairer titles than we wear; To both endure the winter's cold, as well as he. For one, upon a raw and gusty day, The troubled Tyber chafing at his shores, Caesar said to me, Brutus? dost thou think, Caesar, to tread in these angry floods, And swim to yonder point? Upon the word, I will break the ice as Caesar: so were you: And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did. The torrent roar'd; and we did burst it With lusty sinews; throwing it aside And starting not with hearts of comprouses. But ere we could arrive the point propos'd, Caesar cry'd, Help me, Cassius, or I sink. I, as Ancus, our great ancestor, Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder The old Anchises bear; so, from the waves of Tyber, Did I the tired Caesar: and this man Is now become a god; and Cassius is A worthier creature, and must bend his body, If Caesar carelessly but nod on him. He had a fever when he was in Spain, And from the side of life on him, I shook; I was frightened; so, that poor Brutus, with himself at war, Forget's the shows of love to other men. Cas. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion. By me and all, of this breed of mine hath buried Thoughts, of great value, worthy contemplations, Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face? Brutus. No, Cassius: for the eye sees not itself, But by reflection, by some other things. Cas. This just: And it is very much lamented, Brutus, That we have no such mirrors, as will turn Your hidden worthiness into your eye, That you might see your shadow. I have heard, Where many of the best respect in Rome, Every (with mortal Cæsar,) speaking of Brutus, And growing underneath this age's yoke, Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes, Brutus. Into what dangers would you lead me, That you would have me seek into myself For that which is not in me!

2 A ceremony observed at the feast of Lupercalia.

3 The nature of your feelings.

4 For a ceremony.
Julius Caesar

When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But Rome is troubled with a sorer frown.
When could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide walks encompass'd but one man
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
What freemasonry is there, and who have had it.
O! you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus once, that would have brook'd
The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome,
And suffer it no more;
Brut. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;
What you would work me to, I have some aim;
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall not tell it now; for this present
I would not, so with love I might extort you,
Be any farther mov'd. What you have said,
I must consider of; I will meditate
I will with patience hear; and find a time
Both meet to hear, and answer, such high things.
Tell then, my noble friend, chew upon this;
Brutus had rather be a villain,
Than to repel him a son of Rome
Under these hard conditions as this time
Is like to lay upon us.
Caes. I am glad that my weak words
Have struck but this much show of fire from Brutus.
Recanter Caesar, and his Train.
Brut. The games are done, and Caesar is returning.
Caes. As they pass by, pluck Caesar by the sleeve:
And be will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded, worthy note, to-day,
Shall we that ever were, or are, called Cassius,
The angry spot doth glow on Caesar's brow,
And all the rest look like a chidden train:
Caesar's hand is pale; his manner seems
Like with such forces; and such tery eyes,
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd in conference by some senators,
Caes. Caesar will tell us what the matter is.
Caes. Antonius,—
Ant. Caesar.
Caes. Let me have men about me that are fat;
Sleepeers, dreamers, madmen, or with their eyes
T'ord! Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.
Ant. Fear him not, Caesar, he's not dangerous;
He is like to be a man he would regard;
Caes. Would he were fatter—but I fear him not:
Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much;
He's a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays,
As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music;
Sleets, and madmen, and a multitude of things;
Thus doth he mock himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at anything.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
While others are disposed to their desires;
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather think what is to be feard,
Than what I fear, for always I am Caesar.

Casca. You pull me by the cloak; would you speak with me?
Brut. Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chance'd to-day,
That fools and knaves may no longer laugh at us;
Caes. Why, you were with him, were you not?
Brut. I should not then ask Casca what hath chance'd
Caes. Why was there a crown offer'd him; and being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a-shouting.
Brut. What was the second noise for?
Caes. Why, for that but Caes. They shout'd thrice; What was the last cry for?
Caes. Why, for that too.
Brut. This is the man that offered him the crown.
Caes. Ay, marry, was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting by, mine honest neighbors shouted.
Caes. Who offer'd the crown to him?
Caes. Why, Antony.
Brut. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Casca.
Casca. I can as well be hanged as tell the manner of it; for he offer'd it with one mouth.
I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown;—yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coro'net;—and, as I told you, he put it by;—but, for all that, to say the truth, he did not have it.
Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again; but, to my thinking, he was very joyful to lay his fingers oft it. And then he offered it the third time; but he offered it now still. He refused it, the rabbagehod, and slapped their chopp'd hands, and threw up their swathy night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Caesar refused the crown, that it had almost choked Caesar; for he swooned, and fell down at it: And for mine own part, I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips, and receiving the bad air.
Cas. But soft, I pray you: What! did Caesar swoon?
Brut. He fell down in the market-place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.
Caes. This' is very like: he hath the falling-sickness.
Cas. No, Caesar hath it not; but you, and
And honest Casca, we have the falling-sickness.
Casca. I know not what you mean by that; but, I am sure Caesar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him, and hiss him, according as he pleased, and despis'd them, as they do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.
Brut. What said he, when he came unto himself?
Caesar. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the coro'net, and put on it, and wear'd the crown, he pluck'd me of his doublet, and offer'd them his throat to cut,—At I had been a man of any occupation, if I should not have taken him at a word, I would not much go to fell among the rogues:
—and so he fell. When he came to himself again, I said, he had done, or said, anything amiss, he desired their worship's to think it was his infirmity.
Three or four times, I stood, and crum'd Aesop, good soul!—and forgave him with all their hearts: but there's no need to be taken of them; if Caesar had stab'd their mothers, they would have done no less.
Brut. And after that, he came, thus sad, away?
Casca. Ay.
Cas. Did Cicero say any thing?
Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.
Cas. To what effect?
Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll never look you in the face again: But those that understood him, smiled at one another, and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarves, and an 'scape, they were put to silence.
Fare you well. There was more soferly yet, if I could remember it.
Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Caesar?
Casca. No, I'mresolved forth.
Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?
Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your dinner worth the eating.
Cas. Good! I will expect you.
Casca. Do so: Farewell both.

[Exit Casca.]

Brut. What a blunt fellow this is grown to be;
He was quick mettle, when he went to school.
Cas. So he is now, in execution
Of any bold or noble enterprise.
However he puts on this tardy form,
This rudeness is said to caress him,
Which gives men stomach to digest his words
With better appetite.
Brut. And so it is. For this time I will leave you.
To-morrow, if you please to speak with me,
I will come home to you; or if you will,
Come home to me, and I will wait for you.
Cas. I will do so;—till then, think of the world.

[Exit Brutus.

Well Brutus, thou art noble: yet, I see,
Thy honorable metal may be wrought;
From that it is disposed:—Thee meet
That noble metall, with their like skins;
For who so firm, that cannot be seduced!—
Cesar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus:
If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,
He should not offer me: with that same hand, as
In several hands, in at his windows throw,
As if they came from several citizens,
Scene III.——A Street.
Thunder and Lightning. Enter, from opposite sides, Cassar, with his Sword drawn, and Cicero.
Caes. Good even, Cassar: Brought you Cassar home safe?
Why are you breathless, and why stare you so?
Cassar. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth
Shakes, like a thing uniform!
Cicero,
How dost thou know the winds?
For I have seen the waves
Rave nothing else, but to the roaring wind.
Did I go through a tempestt dropping fire,
Either there is a civil state in heaven;
Or else the world, too saucy with the gods,
Incessest them to send destruction.
Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?
Cassar. A common slave (you know him well by Held up his left hand, which did flame, and burn
Like twenty torches joint'd; and yet his hand,
Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd.
Besides, I have not yet put up my sword.
Against the Capitol I met a lion,
Who glared upon me, and went surly by,
Without annoying me; and there were drawn
Upon a man, a hundred ghastly eyes,
Transformed with their fear; who swore, they saw
Men, all on fire, walk up and down the streets.
And, yesterday, the bird of night did sit,
Even at noon-day, upon the market-place.
Hooting and shrieking: When these prodigies
Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,
There are no reasons;—They are natural;
For, I believe, they are portents sent
Unto the climate that they point upon.
Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time:
Both nature and constrution; then I think,
Clean from the purpose of the things themselves,
Comes Cassar to the Capitol to-morrow!
Cassar. He doth; for he did bid Antonius
Send all men, by whom they would be there to-morrow.
Cic. Good night then, Cassar: this disturbed sky
Is not to walk in.
Farewell, Cicero.
Cassar. Enter Cassar.
Caes. Who's there?
Cassar. A Roman.
Caes. Cassar, by your voice.
Cassar. Your car is good. Cassius, what night is this?
Caes. By my pleasing night to honest men.
Cassar. Who ever knew the heavens mate so?
Caes. Those that have known the earth so full of faults.
For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me unto the perilous night;
And, thus unbraced, Cassar, as you see,
Have bared my bosom to the thunder-storm;
And, with the cross lightnings seem'd to open
The breast of heaven, I did present myself
Even in the aim and vow, dash of it.
Cassar. But wherefore did you so much tempt
The heavens?
It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.
Caes. You are dull, Cassar; and those sparks of life
That should be in a Roman, you do want,
Or rather their essences; You look pale and sad,
And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the heavens;
But if you would consider the true cause,
We have this night, why all the world is broken,
Wit, why birds, and beasts, from quality and kind;
Why old men, fools, and children calculate;
Why all the things change, from their ordinance,
Their natures and pre-foreordain'd fate?
To monstrous quality; why, you shall find,

That heaven hath instill'd them with these spirits,
To make them instruments of fear and warning,
Unto some monstrous state. Now could I, Cassar,
Name to thee a man most like this dreadful night;
That so great a passion, opens graves, and roars
As doth the lion in the Capitol:
A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
In perilous action, yet prodigious calm.
And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.
Cassar. "Tis Cassar that you mean: Is it not, Cassius?
Caes. If it be he, to whom it is: for Romans now
Have thews and limbs like to their ancestors;
But woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,
And we are governed by our mothers' spirits;
Or who's? who's?—and suffering show them nothing.
Cassar. Indeed, they say, the senators to-morrow
Mean to establish Cassar as a king:
And he shall wear his crown by sea and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.
Caes. I know where I will wear this digger then:
Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassar:
Thence, ye gods, you make the break most strong;
Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do appear;
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor railles dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit;
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.
If I know this, all know the world besides,
That is not tyranny but what I do bear,
I can shake off at pleasure.
Cassar.
Caes. So can I:
So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cause his captive to be free:
Caes. And why should Caesar be a tyrant then?
Poor man! I know, he would not be a wolf,
But he that sees the Romans are but sheep:
He were no lion, were not Romans kinds.
Those that with haste will make a mighty fire,
Begin it with weak straws: What trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate.
So vile a thing as Caesar! But, O grief!
Where hast thou led me! I, perhaps, speak this Before we come to-stand.
My answer must be made: But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.
Caes. You speak to Cassar; and to such a man,
That is no hearing tell-tale: Hold thy hand;
Be factions for redress of all these grievances;
And I will set this foot of mine as far,
As who goes farthest.
Caes. There's a bargain made,
Now know you, Cassar, I have mov'd already,
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans,
To undergo with me an enterprise
Of honorable-dangerous consequence;
And I do know, by this, they stay for me
In Pompey's porch: for now, this fearful night,
There is no stir, or walking in the streets;
And the complexion of the element
Isfavor'd, like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, hery, and most terrible.

Enter Cinna.
Cassar. Stand close awhile, for here comes one
In haste.
Caes. 'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is my friend,—Cinna, where hast thou so?
Cinna. Tell me, I pray you: Who's that? Metellus Cimber?
Caes. No, it is Cassar; one incorporate
To our number. Am I not stand for, Cinna?
Caes. I am glad out: What a fearful man this is!
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.
Cinna. Am I not stand for, Cinna? tell me.
Cinna. Yes,
Caes. You are. O, Cassius, if you could but win
The nobler Brutus to our party—
Caes. Do you content: Good Cinna, take this paper,
And let us lay it in the pretorium:
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done,
Reap, when at Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.
Is Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there?
Cinna. All but Metellus Cimber; and he's gone
To see the state of your house. Well, I will lie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Brutus's Orchard.

Enter Brutus.

Bru. What, Lucius! ho!—
I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!—
If I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.
When, Lucius, when! Awake, I say: What, Lucius!—

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord!—
Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius;—
When it is lighted, come and call me here.
Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit Lucius.

Bru. It must be by his death: and, for my part,
I know no personal cause to spur him up.
But for the general. He would be crowned:—
How that might change his nature, there's the question.
It is the bright day that brings forth the adder;—
And that craves waking. Crown him!—

And then, and grant, we put a sting in him,
That at his will he may do danger with.
The abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins
Remorse from power: And, to speak truth of Caesar,
I have not known when his affection swayed
More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder;
Whiles it is climbing, it is North to heaven;
But when he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend: So Caesar may:
Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel
Will bear no color for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus: That what he is, augmented,
Would run to these, and these extremities:
And therefore think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischiefs;
And kill him in the shell.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir;
Searching the window for a glint, I found
This paper, thus set and up; and, I am sure,
It did not lie there when I went to bed.
Bru. Get you to bed again, it is not day,
Is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March?
Luc. I know not, sir.
Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me word.
Luc. I will, sir.

Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the air,
Gives so much light, that I may read by them.

Brutus, thou sleep'st! awake, and see thyself.
Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, redress!—
Brutus, thou sleep'st! awake, and see thyself.
Such injustices have been often dropp'd
Where I have took them up.
Shall Rome, &c. Thus must I piece it out:
Shall Rome stand under one man's axe? What! Rome?

My ancestors did from the streets of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king.
Speak, strike, redress!—Am I caitiff then?
To speak, and strike! O Rome! I make thee promise,
If the redress will follow, thou receivest
Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, March has wasted fourteen days.

[Knock within.

Bru. Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks. [Exit Lucius.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar,
I have not slept.
Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim
Is like a phantasm:—or a hideous dream:
The genius and the mortal instruments,
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, sullies then
The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, tis your brother Cassius at the door,
Who doth desire to see you.
Bru. Is he alone?
Luc. No, sir, there are more with him.
Bru. Do you know them?
Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their ears,
And half their faces buried in their cloaks,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favor.

Bru. Let them enter.

They are the faction, O conspiracy!
Shall't thou to shew thy dangerous brow by night,
When evils are most free? O, then, by day,
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;
Hide it in smiles, and affability:
For if thou path thy native semblance on,
Cassius and Brutus, we are done enough
To hide thee from prevention.

Enter Cassius, Casca, Decius, Cinna, Metellus Cimber, and Tribunes.

Cas. I think we are too bold upon your nest:
Good morrow, Brutus! Do we trouble you!

Bru. I have been up this hour; awake all night.
Know I these men, that come along with you?
Cas. Yes, every man of them; and no man here,
But honor you: and every one doth wish,
You had but that opinion of yourself.
Which every noble Roman bears of you.
This is Tribunus.

Bru. He is welcome hither.

Cas. This, Decius Brutus.

Bru. He is welcome too.

Cas. This, Casca; this, Cinna;
And this, Metellus Cimber.

Bru. They are all welcome.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night? [Opens the Letter, and reads.

Cas. Shall I cut a word? [They whisper.

Dec. Here lies the cast: Both not the day break here!

Cas. No.

Cas. O, pardon, sir, it doth: and you grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.

Cass. You shall know, that you are both deceived.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises;
Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Some two months hence, no higher toward the north
He first presents his fire; and the high cast
Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one.
Cas. And let us swear our resolution.

Bru. No, not an oath: If not the face of men,
The suffrance of our souls, the time's abuse,—

[Aside.

Cas. What?—

Bru. I will change to virtue, and to worthiness.

Cas. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him.
You have rich well conceited. Let us go,
For it is after midnight, and, ere day.
We will awake him, and be sure of him.

[Exeunt.
If these he motives weak, break off betimes, And every man hence to his idle bed; So let high-sighted tyranny range on, Till each man drop by lottery. But if these, And we are sure our hope, be hear fire again, To kindle cowards, and to steel with valor The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen, What need we any spur, but our own cause, That is our bed. But what of others? Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word, And will not suffer! and what other oath, Than honesty to honestly engaged, That this shall be, or we will fall for it? Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautious! Old feeble carions, and such suffering souls The welcome wrongs: unto bad causes swear Such energies as need, but do not stand The even virtue of our enterprise. Nor the insupportable mettle of our spirits, The weight we bear, or our performance, Did need an oath: when every drop of blood, That every Roman bear, and nobly bears, Is guilty of a several bastardy, If he do break the smallest particle Of any promise that hath pass d from him. But what of Cicero! Shall we sound him! I think, he will stand very strong with us. Cic. Let us not leave him out. Brut. No, by no means. Luc. O, let us have him; for his silver hairs Will purchase us a good opinion. And his voice to commend our deeds: It shall be said, his judgment rid's our hands; Our youths, and wildness, shall no whit appear, But all be burned in his gravity. Brut. O, name him not; let us not break with him! For he will never follow any thing The other men begin. Then leave him out. Cas. Indeed, he is not fit. Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd but only Caesar! Dec. Decius, well urged — I think it is not meet, Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Caesar, Should outlive Caesar. We shall find him A good contriver; and, you know his means, If he improves them, may well stretch so far, As to annoy us all: which to prevent, Let Antony and Casar fall together. Brut. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius Cassius, To cut the head off, and then hack the limbs; To run in death in death, and envy afterwards: For Antony is but a child of Caesar, Let us be sacrificers, but no butchers, Cains. We all stand up against the spirit of Caesar; And yet, if there is some check of him, O, that we then could come by Caesar's spirit, And not dismember Caesar! But, alas, Caesar must bleed for it! And, gentle friends, Let's kill him boldly, but most unthrificantly; Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods, Not how him as a carcass fit for hounds: And let our hearts, as subtle masters do, Stir up their accusers to an idle rage, And after seem to chide them. This shall make Our purpose necessary, and not envious: Which so appeasing to the common eyes, We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers, And for Mark Antony, think not of him; For he can do no more than Caesar's arm, When Caesar's head is off. Cas. Yet I do fear him: For in the ingrafted love he bears to Caesar: — Brut. Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him: It is too great for man that he can do Is to himself: take thought, and die for Caesar: And that were much he should; for he is given to sports, to wildness, and much company. Cre. Then let us do it. Let us end our day; For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter. Clock strikes. Brut. Peace, count the clock. Cass. The clock hath striken three. Trib. 'Tis time to part. Cas. But it is doubtful yet, Whether Caesar will come forth to-day, or no: — Precariously. Brut. Let us not break the marker to him. Cre. It is very possible. For he is superstitious grown of late; Quite from the main opinion he held once Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies: It may be, these apparent prodigies, This uncustom'd terror of this night, And the persuasion of his augurers, May hold him from the Capitol to-day. Dec. Never fear that: If he be so resolv'd, I can provide for him: or he love to hear, That unicorns may be betray'd with reserve, And bears with glasses, elephants with holes, Lions with toils, and men with daffterers. But, when he shall be, he hates daffterers. He says, he does: being then most flattered. Let me work: For I can give his humor the true bent; And I will bring him to the Capitol. Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him. Brut. By the eighth hour: Is that the uttermost? Cin. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then. Mct. Caius Ligarius; doth bear Caesar hard, Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey; I wonder, none of you have thought of him. Brut. Now, good Metelius, go along by him? He loves me well, and I have given him reasons; Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him. Cas. The morning comes upon us: We'll leave you, Brutus:— And, friends, disperse yourselves: but all remember What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans. Brut. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily; Let not our looks put on our purposes; But bear it as our Roman actors do, With unfruit'd spirits, and formal constancy: And so, good-morrow to you every man. [Exit all but Brutus.]

Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep! It is no matter; Enjoy the heavy-heavy dew of slumber; Thou hast no figures, nor no fantasies, Which busy care draws in the brains of men; Therefore thou sleep'st so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my lord! Brut. Portia, what mean you? Whereto rise these sounds? It is not for your health thus to commit Your weak condition to the raw-cold morning. Por. Nor for yours neither. You have ungraciously, Stole from my bed: And yesternight, at supper, You suddenly arose, and walk'd about, Musing, and sighing, with your arms across; And when I ask'd you what you meant the matter was, You stared upon me with ungentle looks: I urg'd you further; then you scratch'd your head, And ta'bbed to yourselves: I seemed to your foot: Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not; But with an angry wrathful of your heart, Gave sign for me to leave you: So I did; I beg to strength'nd All which seem'd too much enkindled; and, withal, Hoping it was but an effect of humor, Which sometime hath his hour with every man. It will not let you call, nor talk, nor sleep: And, could it work so much upon your shape As it hath much prevail'd on your condition, I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord, Make me acquainted with your cause of grief. Brut. I am not well in health, and that is all. Por. Brutus is wise, and were he not in health, He would embrace the means to come by it. Brut. So I do—good Portia, so to bed. Por. Is Brutus sick? and is it physical To walk unbraided, and suck up the humors Of the body? — Is it, Brutus? What, in health? And will he steal out of his wholesome bed, To dare the vile contagion of the night? And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air To add to his sickness? No, my lord: — You have some sick offence within your mind, Which, by the right and virtue of my place, I ought to know of: And, upon my knees, charman't by my nature commendable, By all your vows of love, and that great vow Which did incorporate and make as one, That you unfold to me, yourself, your half, — By his house. — Such shapes created by imagination. — Keep'rd. — Bump. — Moist.
SCENE II.—A Room in Caesar’s Palace.

Thunder and Lightning.

Enter CALPURNIA.

Cal. What mean you, Caesar? Think you to walk forth?
You shall not stir out of your house to-day.

Caes. Caesar shall forth: The things that threat end come.
Ne’er look’d but on my back; when they shall see
The face of Caesar, they are vanished.

Cal. Caesar, I never stood on ceremonies,
Yet now thee see I in aier, in my heart within,
Beside the things that we have heard and seen,
Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.
A lioness hath whelp’d in the streets of Rome,
And graves have yawn’d, and yielded up their dead:
Fierce fiery warriors light upon the clouds,
In ranks, and squadrons, and right form of war,
Which dazzle fairest upon the Capitol:
The noise of battle hurst’d! in the air,
Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan;
And ghosts did shriek, and squall about the streets.
O Caesar! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Cas. What can be avoided,
Whose end is purpos’d by the mighty gods?—
Yet Caesar shall go forth: for these predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Caesar.

Cal. When bergers die, there are no comets seen;
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

Ces. Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come.

Re-enter a Servant.

What say the augurers?—
Serv. They would not have you go forth to-day,
Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast.

Cas. The gods do this in shame of cowardice;
Caesar should be a heart without a heart,
If he should stay at home to-day for fear.
No, Caesar shall not: Danger knows full well,
That Caesar is more dangerous than he.
We were two lions in one body yesterday,
And I the elder and more terrible;
And Caesar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas, my lord,
Your wisdom is consum’d in confidence.
Do not go forth to-day: Call it my fear,
That keeps you in the house, and not your own.
We’ll send Mark Antony to the senate-house,
And he shall say, you are not well to-day:
Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this.

Cas. Mark Antony shall say, I am not well;
And, for thy humor, I will stay at home.

Enter Decius.

Here’s Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Dec. Caesar, all hail! Good morrow, worthy Caesar:
I come to fetch you to the senate-house.

Cas. And you are come in very happy time,
To hear my greeting to the senators,
And tell them, that I will not come to-day:
Cannot, is false; and that I dare not, false;
I will not come to-day: Tell them so, Decius.

Cal. Say, he is sick.

Cas. Shall Caesar send a lie?
Have I in conquest stretch’d mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell you, I am to bear it?
Decius, go tell them, Caesar will not come.

Dec. Most mighty Caesar, let me know some cause.
Lost I be laugh’d at, when I tell them so.

Cas. The cause is in my will, I will not come;
That is enough to satisfy the senate.
But, for your private satisfaction,
Because I love you, I will let you know.

Calpurnia here, my uncle, stays me at home:
She dreamt to-night she saw my statue,
Which, like a fountain with a hundred spouts,
Did run pure blood; and many lusty Romans
Come smiling, and did bathe their hands in it.
And these does she apply for warnings, portents
And evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg’d, that I will stay at home to-day.

Dec. This dream is all amiss interpreted;
It was a vision, far and fortunate.

Never paid regard to prodiges or omens. Encountred.
Your statute spouting blood in many pipes, in which so many spider's webs did, signifies that from you great Rome shall suck Reviving blood; and that great men shall press For truths, slaves, rulers, rulers, and cognizance. This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

Cæs. And this way have you well expounded it.

Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say: And know it now: The senate have concluded To give you this day, 3 crowns to ruffle Cæsar. If you shall send them word, you will not come, Their minds may change. Besides, it was a mock Act to be render'd, for some one to say, Enters the senate hall and another said:
When Cæsar's wife shall meet with better dreams. If Cæsar hide himself, shall they not whisper, La, Cæsar is afraid?

Pardon me, Cæsar; for my dear, dear love To your succeeding bids me tell you this; And reason to my love is libans?

Cæs. You did behold your fears seem now, Calphurnia! I am ashamed I did yield to them.— Give me my robe, for I will go—

Enter Public, Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Cæsca, Trebonius, and Cinna.

And look where Publicius is come to fetch me. Pub. Good-morrow, Cæsar.

Cæs. Welcome, Publicius.— What, Brutus, are you still'd so early too?

Good-morrow, Cæsar.—Cæsars Ligarius, Cæsar was ne'er so much my enemy, As that same avenue which hath made you lean.— What is't o'clock! Brut. Cæsar, 'tis struck eight. Cæs. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter Antony.

See! Antony, that revels long o' nights, Is not withstanding up—

Good-morrow, Antony.

Ant. I did them prepare withal. I am to blame to be thus waited for—

Now, Cinna:—Now, Metellus:—What, Trebonius?

I have an hour's talk in store for you; Remember that you call on me to-day: Be near me, that I may remember you.

Tred. Cæsar, I will:—and so near will I be,

That your best friend shall wish I had been further. Cæs. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine with me: And we, like friends, will straitway go together, Brut. That every like is not the same, O Cæsar, The heart of Brutus years! to think upon!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Street near the Capitol.

Enter Antemidorus, reading a Paper.

Art. Cæsars, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius; come not near Cæsa; have an eye to Cinna; tread not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cuminum; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast unwound Cassius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar. If thou be'st not mortal, look about thee: Securely gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy towers, Antemidorus. Here will I stand, till Cæsar pass along And as a suitor will I give him this. My heart laments, that virtue cannot live Out of the reach of misprision.

If thou read this, O Cæsar, then may'st live; If not, the fates with traitors do contrive. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the same Street, before the House of Brutus.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I'prythee, boy, run to the senate-house: Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone: Why dost thou stay? Luc. To know my errand, madam. Por. I would have had thee there, and here again, Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there: 0 Constancy, be strong upon my side!— Let a high mountain 'twixt my heart and tongue! I have a man's mind, but a woman's might. How hard it is for women to keep counsel! Art thou here yet? Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

Enter Soothsayer.

Por. Come hither, fellow: Which way hast thou been? South. At mine own house, good lady. Por. What is't o'clock? South. About the ninth hour, lady. Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitol? South. Madam, not yet: I go to take my stand, To see him pass on to the Capitol. Por. Thou hast some suit to Cæsar, hast thou not? South. That I have, lady; if it will please Cæsar To be so good to Cæsar, as to hear me. Luc. I shall beseech him to betroint himself; Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him? South. That I know will be, much that I fear may change. Good-morrow to you. Here the street is narrow; The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels, Of senators, of praetors, common suitors. Will crowd a leekie man almost to death: I'll get me to a place more void, and there Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. [Exeunt.

Por. I must go. Ah me! how weak a thing The heart of woman is! O Brutus! The heavens speed thee in thy enterprise! Sure the boy heard me:—Brutus hath a suit, That Cæsar will not grant.—O, I grow faint:— Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord; Say, I am merry: come to me again, And bring me word what he doth say to thee. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Capitol; the Senate sitting.

A Crew of People in the Street leading to the Capitol. Enter Antemidorus and the Soothsayer. Flourish. Enter Cæsar, Brutus, Cassius, Cæsca, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cinna, Antony, Lepidus, Popilus, Publicius, and others.

Cæs. The Ides of March are come. South. Ay, Cæsar; but not gone.

Art. Had, Cæsar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read, At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

*Subordinate. *Greaves.

Art. O Cæsar, read mine first; for mine's a suit That touches Cæsar nearer: Read it, great Cæsar. Cæs. What touches us ourself, shall be last serv'd. Art. Delay not, Cæsar; read it instantly. Cæs. What, is the fellow mad! Pub. Sirrah, give place. Cæs. What, urge you your petitions in the street! Come to the Capitol. Cæsar enters the Capitol, the rest following. All the Senators rise.

Scene I.

JULIUS CAESAR.

JULIUS CAESAR. What said Popilius Lena?

CAS. He wish'd to-day our enterprise might thrive.

JULIUS CAESAR. Fear our purpose is discovered.

CAS. Look, how he makes to Caesar: Mark him. Caesar will be sudden, for we fear prevention. Brute, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius or Caesar never shall turn back, For I will stay myself.

BRU. Cassius, be constant; Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes; for, look, he smiles, and Caesar doth not change.

CAS. Trebonius has his time; for, look you, Brute,

He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Excus AND Trebonius. Caesar's letters take the Senators this way.]

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go, and presently prefer his suit to Caesar.

BRU. He is address'd; press near, and second him.

CAS. If Cassius you hold in his fat ears your hand,

Cas. Are we all ready? what is now amiss, That Caesar and his senate must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Caesar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat
An humble heart:
Kneeling. I must prevent thee, Cimber. These courtharts, and these lowly courtiers,

Ham. shall fire the blood of ordinary men,

And turn pre-ordainment, and first decree,

But the law of children. He shall be constant:
That to think that Caesar bears such rebel blood,

That will be th'awd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words,

Low-soud'd courtiers, and base, and baneful twining.

Thy brother by decree is banished;

He dost bend, and pray, and fawn for him,

I spurn thee like a cur out of my way.

Know, Caesar doth not wrong; nor without cause
Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice more worthy than my own,

To sound more sweetly in great Caesar's ear,

For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

BRU. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Caesar;

Desiring thee, that Publius Cimber may have an immediate freedom of appeal.

Cas. What, Brutus?

CAS. Pardon, Caesar; Caesar, pardon:

So low as to thy foot doth Caesar fall,

To beg entreaty for Publius Cimber.

CAS. I could be well mov'd, if I were one of you;

If I could pray to move, prayers would move me: But I am constant as the northern star, Of those true-bred and renowned quality,

There is no fellow in the firmament.

The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,

They are all fire, and every one doth shine;

But there's but one in all doth hold its place: So, in the world; 'tis furnish'd well with men,

And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive; Yet, in the number, I do know but one That can hold his noble hold of unshak'd motion; and, that I am he,

Let me a little show it, even in this;
That I was constant, Cimber should be banish'd,

And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O Caesar.

CAS. Hence! Will thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Caesar,

CAS. Doth not Brutus bootsess; kneel!

Casca. Speak, hands, for me! [Casca stabs hold of his arm. He is then stabbed by several others.]

CAS. Casca. El fu, Brutus? [Then fall, Caesar.

Dec. The Senators and People retire in confusion.

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—
Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cin. Some to the common pulpits, cry out,

Liberty, freedom, and entrenchment! Brutus. People, and senators! be not affrighted;

Fly not; stand still:—ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpit, Brutus, and speak too.

Brutus. Where's Publius?

Cin. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Caesar's

Should chance—

BRU. Talk not of standing,—Publius, good cheer; There is no harm intended to your person; Nor to no Roman else; so tell them, Publius.

CAS. And leave us, Publius, lest that the people Rushing on us, should do your age some mischief.

BRU. So, and let no man abide this deed, But we the doers.

Re-enter TREBONIUS.

CAS. Where's Antony?—

TREB. Fled to his house amazed:

Men, wives, and children, stare, cry out, and run, As it were doomsday.

BRU. Fal's: we will know your pleasures:

That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time,

And draw from you which men shall bear our will.

CAS. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life,

Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

BRU. Grant that, and then is death a benefit:

So are we Caesar's friends, that have abridg'd

His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop, And let us bath our hands in Caesar's blood

Up to the elbows, and besmears our swords:

Then walk we forth, even to the marketplace;
And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads,

Let's all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

CAS. So, and, then, and, wash. How many ages hence

Shall this our lofty scene be acting over,

In states unborn, and accents yet unknown!

BRU. How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey's basis lies along,

No worshipper but the dust!

CAS. So oft as that shall be,

So often shall the knot of us be unfold'd

The men that gave our country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth!

CAS. Ay, every man away:

Brutus shall lead; and we will gain our checks

With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

BRU. Soft, who comes here! A friend of Antony's.

SERV. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel;

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down;

And, being prostrate, thus he bid me say:

Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;

Cesar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving:

Say, I love Antony, and I honor him;

Say, I fear'd Caesar honor'd him, and lov'd him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony

May safely come to him; and be resolv'd

How Caesar hath deserv'd to lie in death,

Mark Antony shall not love Caesar dead,

So well as Brutus liveth; but will follow

The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus

Thorough the hazards of this our state;

With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

BRU. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman:

I never thought him worse.

Tell him, so please him come unto this place,
He shall be satisfied; and, by my honor,
Depart untouch'd.

SERV. I'shall fetch him presently.

BRU. I know that we shall have him well to friend.

CAS. I wish we may; but yet have I a mind

That leans him much; and my misgiving still

Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

Re-enter Antony.

BRU. But here comes Antony.—Welcome, Mark Antony.

ANT. O mighty Caesar! Dost thou lie so low? Are all thy conquests, glory, triumphs, spoils, shrunk to this little measure?—Fear thee well; I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,—Who else must be let blood, who else is rank? If I myself there is not sufficient for it As Caesar's death's hour; nor instrument Of half that worth, as those thy swords, made rich With the most noble blood of all this world. I do beseech ye, if you have a heart, now, Whist your purs'd hands do rock and smoke, Grow too high for the public safety.
Fulfil your pleasure. Live a thousand years, I will not find myself so apt to die; No place will please me now, no mode of death, As here by Caesar, and by you cut off, The choice and master-spirits of this age. JULIUS Ceasar! beg not your death of us. Though now we must appear bloody and cruel, As, by our hands, and this our present act. You see we do; yet see you but our hands, And this the bleeding business they have done: Our hearts you see not, they are pitiful; And pity to the general wrong of Rome (A tear drops from his eye, so pitiful, pity.) Hail done this deed to Ceasar. For your part, To you our swords have befriend'd marks, Mark Antony: Our arms, in strength of malice, and our hearts, Of wrong, for you, do receive in With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence, Ceasar. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's, In the disposing of new dignities, Brutus. Only be patient, till we have appeas'd The multitude, beside themselves with fear, And then we will deliver you the cause, Why I, that did love Caesar when I struck him, Have didst proceeded. I doubt not of your wisdom. Let each man render me his bloody hand: First, Mictus Brutus, will I shake with you;— Next, Cains Caiusius, and I take you hand; Now, Decius Brutus, yours;—now yours, Me- telius; Yours, Cinna, and my valiant Cassius, yours;— Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius. Gentlemen all,—has! what shall I say? My course now stands on such slippery ground, That one of two bad ways you must conceive me, Either a coward, or a traitor,— That I did love thee, Caesar, O, 'tis true: If by thy spirit look upon us as this; Shall it not grieve thee, dearer than thy death, To see thy Antony making his peace, Shall I the bloody fingers of thy foes, Most noble! in the weight of his letters hand? Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds, Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood, It would become me better, than to close In terms of friendship with thine enemies, Pardon me, Julius!—Here wast thou by'd, brave heart: Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand, Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy letch. O world! thou wast the forest to this hart; And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee,— How like a Heaven's creature to be slain, Dost thou here lie!

Cas. Mark Antony,— Pardon me, Cains Caiusius: The enemies of Caesar shall say this: Then, in a friend, it is cold modesty. Cas. I blame you not for prais'ing Caesar so; But, pardon me, you to have with us? Will you be pricked in mutiny? I'll prove friends, Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore took your hands, but was indeed, Swy'd from the point, by looking down on Caesar. Friends am I with you all, and love all; Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons, Why, and wherein, Caesar was dangerous. More else, were this a savoy spectacle: Our reasons are so full of good regard, That were you, Antony, the son of Caesar, You should be satisfied. That's all I seek: And am moreover suitor, that I may Produce his body to the market-place; And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend, Speak in the order of his funeral.

Brutus. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you— You know not what you do: Do not consent; [Aside. That Antony speak in his funeral: How you much the people may be mov'd By that which will utter!

Brutus. I will myself into the pulpit first, And show the reason of our Caesar's death: What Antony shall speak, I will protest He speaks by leave and by permission; And that we are contented, Caesar shall Have all true rites, and lawful ceremonies, It shall be in the Conference, than do us wrong. Cas. I know not what may fall: I like it not. Brutus. Mark Antony, here, take you Caesar's body, You shall not in your funeral speech blame us, But speak all good you can devise of Caesar; And say, you do't by our permission; Else shall you have no hand at all About his funeral: And you shall speak In the same pulpit, where I am going, After my speech is ended.

Ant. It be so; I do desire no more. Brutus. Prepare the body then, and follow us. [Exit all but Antony.

Ant. O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth That I with my sword may thee as thy 秋 But speak all good you can devise of Caesar! Thou art the rumps of the noblest men, That ever lived in the tide of times. Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood! Over thy wounds now do I prophesy: Which, like dumb mouths, do o'er their ruby lips To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue:— A curse shall light upon the limbs of men; Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife, Shall cumber all the parts of Italy; Blood and destruction shall be so in use, And death himself so general a famifier, That mothers shall but smile, when they behold Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war; All pity choked with custom of fell deeds: And Caesar's spirit, ranging for revenge, With Até by his side, come hot from hell, Shall in these comaines, with a monarch's voice, Cry, Hence! and let slip the dogs of war; That this bold deed shall smell above the earth, Withcarrion men mourning for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Oecatus Caesar, do you not? Serv. I do, Mark Antony,

Ant. O, Caesar did write for him to come to Rome From the next war;—how is he? Serv. And bid me say to you by word of mouth,— O Caesar!— [Seeing the Body. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep, Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes Seeing those heads of sorrow stand in thine, Began to water, Is thy master coming?

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath chanc'd: Here is the rumour, it is a dangerous Rome, No Rome of safety for Octavius yet; He hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay a while: Thou shalt not back, till I have borne this corse Into the market-place: there shall I try, In my oration, how the people take The cruel issue of these bloody men; According to the which thou shalt discourse To young Octavius of the state of things, lend me your hand. [Exit, with Caesar's Body.

SCENE II.—The Forum.

Enter Brutus and Cassius, and a Throng of Citizens.

Cit. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied. Brut. Then follow me, and give me audience, By Caesar's name.

Cassius, go you into the other street, And part the numbers,— Those that will hear us speak, let them stay here; Those that will follow Cassius, go with him; And public reasons shall be rendered Of Caesar's death.

1 Cit. I will. I will hear Brutus speak.

2 Cit. I will hear Cassius, and compare their reasons, When severally we hear them rendered.

[Enter Cassius, with many of the Citizens. Brutus goes into the Rostrum.

3 Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: Silence! Brut. Be patient till the last.

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause; and be silent, that ye may hear: believe me for mine honor; and have respect to mine honor, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom; *The signal for giving no quarter.

* Friends.
SCENE II. JULIUS CAESAR.

and awake your senses, that you may the better judge of this assembly, any dear friend of Caesar's, to him I say, that Brutus's love to Caesar was no less than his. If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Caesar, this is my answer. I did not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves; or that Caesar were dead, to live all free men? As Caesar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, so let me rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honor him: but, as he was ambitious, I slew him: There is tears, for his love; joy for his fortune; honor for his valour and death, for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude, that would不做翻译
See, what a rent the envious Caesar made:
Through this, the well-beloved Brutus stabbed:
And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,
Mark how the blood of Caesar follow'd it:
As rushing out of doors, to be restore'd.
If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no;
For Brutus, as you know, was Caesar's angel;
Jove, have you got, how dearly Caesar lov'd him!
This was the most unkindest cut of all:
For when the noble Caesar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitor's arms,
Quite vanquish'd him; then burst his mighty heart;
And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey's statue's
Which all the while ran blood, great Caesar fell.
O, what a bat was there, my countrymen!
Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,
Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.
O, now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
The din'd pity: these are gracious drops.
Kind souls, what, weep you, when you but behold
Our Caesar's vesture wounded! Look you here,
Here is himself marr'd, as you see, with traitors.
1 Cin. O piteous spectacle!
2 Cin. O noble Caesar!
3 Cin. O woe day!
4 Cin. O traitors, villains!
1 Cin. O most bloody sight!
2 Cin. We will be revenged; revenge: about,
—seek,—burn,—fire,—kill,—say!—let not a traitor live.
Ant. Stay, countrymen.
1 Cin. Peace there:—Hear the noble Antony.
2 Cin. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die
with him.
Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up.
To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
They, that have done this deed, are honorable:
What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,
That made them do it; they are wise and honorable,
And will, no doubt, with reason answer you.
I come not, friends, to steel away your hearts;
I am no orator, as Brutus is:
Not, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
That love my friend; and that they know full well,
That gave me public leave to speak of him.
For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
To stir men's blood: I only speak right on;
I tell you that, which you yourselves do know:
Show you sweet Caesar's wounds, poor, poor dumb mouths.
And bid them speak for me: But were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Caesar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.
Cin. We'll mutiny.
1 Cin. We'll burn the houses of Brutus.
2 Cin. Away then! come, seek the conspirators.
Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen, yet hear me speak.
Cin. Peace, ho! hear Antony, most noble Antony.
Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what?
Wherein hath Caesar thus deserved your loves?
Alas, you know not:—I must tell you then:—
You have forgot the will I told you of.
Cin. Most true:—the will:—let's stay, and hear the will.
Ant. Here is the will, and under Caesar's seal.
To every Roman, when he giveth it,
To every several man, seventy-five drachmae.
2 Cin. Most noble Caesar!—we'll revenge his death.

---

3 Cin. O royal Caesar!
Ant. Hear me with patience.
Cin. Peace, ho!
Cin. The tribune, he hath left you all his walks,
His private arbors, and new-plant'd orchards.
On this side Tyber: he hath left them you,
And to your hearers for ever: common pleasures,
And the walk abroad, and recreate yourselves.
Here was a Caesar: When comes such another!
1 Cin. Never, never:—Come, away, away,
We'll burn his body in the holy place,
And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.
Take up the body.
2 Cin. Go, fetch fire.
3 Cin. Pluck down benches.
4 Cin. Pluck down forms, windows, any thing.
Exeunt Citizens, with the body.
Ant. Now let it work. Mischief, thou art about.
Take, and we do you dwell!—How now, fellow?

---

Enter a Servant.
Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.
Ant. Where is he?
Serv. He and Lepidus are at Caesar's house.
Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him:
He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us any thing.
Serv. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius
Are rising now:—I must go through the gates of Rome.
Ant. Belike, they had some notice of the people
How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius.

---

Exeunt.

SCENE III. A Street.
Enter Cinna, the Poet.
Cin. I dreamt to-night that I did feast with Caesar,
And things unluckily charge my fantasy:
I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

---

Enter Citizens.
1 Cin. What is your name?
2 Cin. Whither are you going?
3 Cin. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what?
4 Cin. Are you a married man, or a bachelor?
2 Cin. Answer every man directly.
1 Cin. Ay, and briefly.
1 Cin. Ay, and wisely.
3 Cin. Ay, and truly, you were best.
Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going?
Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a bachelor?
Then to answer every man directly,
And briefly, wisely, and truly. Wisely say, I am a bachelor.
2 Cin. That's as much as to say, they are fools
That marry.—You'll hear me a song for that, I fear.
Proceed: directly.
Cin. Directly, I am going to Caesar's funeral.
1 Cin. As a friend, or an enemy!
Cin. As a friend.
2 Cin. That matter is answered directly.
3 Cin. For your dwelling—briefly.
Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.
4 Cin. Your name, sir, truly.
Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.
1 Cin. Tear him to pieces, he's a conspirator.
Cin. And to this man the poet, I am Cinna the poet.
3 Cin. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.
Cin. I am not Cinna the conspirator.
2 Cin. It is no matter, his name's Cinna: pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.
3 Cin. Tear, him, tear him. Come, brands, ho! firebrands. To Brutus', to Cassius', burn all
Some to Decius' house, and some to Casca's; some to Ligarius': away! go.

---

[Exeunt.]
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Room in Antony's House.

ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, and LEPIDUS, seated at a Table.

ACT.

These many shall die; their names are prick'd.

OCT. Your brother too must die; Consent you, Lepidus?

LEP. I do consent.

ACT.

Prick'd him down, Antony.

Upon condition this shall not live,

Which is your sister's son, Mark Antony.

ACT.

He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn'd him.

But, Lepidus, go to Caesar's house;

Fetch the will hither, and we will determine

How to cut off some charge in legacies.

ACT.

What, shall I find you here!—

Or here, or at the Capitol. [Exit LEPIDUS.

ACT. This is a slight unmeritable man,

Meet to be sent on errands: Is it so,

The three-aki world divided, he should stand

One of the three to share it?—

ACT.

So you thought him; and took his voice who should be prick'd to die, in our black sentence and prescription.

ACT. Octavius, I have seen more days than you;

And though we lay these honors on this man,

To ease ourselves of divers dangerous loads,

He shall not bear them as the ass bears gold,

To groin and sweat under the business,

Either led or driven, as we point the way;

And having brought our treasure where we will,

Then take we down his load, and turn him off,

Like to the empty ass, to shake his cars,

And graze in commons.

ACT. You may do your will,

But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

ACT. So is my horse, Octavius; and, for that,

I do appoint him store of provender,

It is a creature I teach to fight,

To wind, to stop, to run directly on;

His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit.

And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so:

He can be taught, and trained, and bid go forth;

A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds

On objects, arts, and imitations;

Which, out of use, and stale'd by other men,

Begin his fashion: Do not talk of him,

But as a property. And now, Octavius,

Listen great things.—Brutus and Cassius

Are Levy powers; we must straight make head.

Therefore, let our alliance be concluded

Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd out;

And let us presently go sit in council,

How every matter may be best disclos'd,

And open perils surest answered.

ACT. Let us do so; for we are at the stake,

And say'd about with many enemies;

And some, that smile, have in their hearts I fear,

Millions of mischief. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before Brutus' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis.

BRA. Enter BRUTUS, LUCIUS, LUCIUS, and Soldiers: TITINIUS and PINDARUS meeting them.

BRA. Stand here.

LUC. Give the word, ho! and stand.

BRA. What now, Lucilius! is Cassius near?

LUCIUS. I am at hand: and Pindarus is come to do you salutation from his master.

[PINDARUS giveth a Letter to Brutus.]

BRA. He greets me well.—Your master, Pindarus,

In his own charge, or by ill officers,

Hath given me some worthy cause to wish

Things done, undone: but, if he be at hand,

I shall be satisfied.

PIND. I do not doubt

BRA. But that my noble master will appear

Such as he is, full of regard and honor.

[Enter Lucius. Lucilius is not doubtful.—A word, Lucilius:

How he receiv'd you, let me be resolv'd.

LUC. With courtesy, and with respect enough;

But not with such familiar instances,

Nor with such free and friendly conference,

As he hath used of old.

BRA. Thou hast describ'd

A hot friend cold:—Ever note, Lucilius,

When love begins to sicken and decay,

It useth an enforced ceremony.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith:

But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,

Make gallant show and promise of their mettle:

But when they should endure the bloody spur,

They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades,

Sink in the track of Comes his army on.

LUC. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd;

The greater part, the horse in general

Are come with Cassius. [March within.

BRA. Hark, he is arriv'd:—

March gently on to meet him.

Enter Cassius and Soldiers.

CAS. Stand, ho!

BRA. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.

[Within:] Stand. [Within:] Stand. [Within:] Stand.

CAS. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.

BRA. Judge me, you gods! Wrong I mine enemies!

And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?

CAS. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides

wrong.

And when you do them——

BRA. Cassius, be content,

Speak your grief coldly:—I do know you well:—

Before the eyes of both our armies here,

Which should perceive nothing but love from us,

Let us not wrangle. Bid them move away:

Then, in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,

And I will give you audience. Pindarus.

BRA. Bid our commanders lead their charges off

A little from the ground.

CAS. Lucilius, do the like: and let no man

Come to our tent, till we have done our conference.

Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Within the Tent of Brutus.

LUCIUS AND TITINIUS AT SOME DISTANCE FROM IT.

Enter Brutus and Cassius.

CAS. That you have wrong'd me, doth appear in this:

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella,

For taking tributes here of the Sardians;

Wherein my letters, praying on his side,

Because I knew the man, were slighted off.

BRA. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a case.

CAS. In such a time as this, it is not meet:

That every man's offence should bear his comment.

BRA. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself

Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm:

To sell and mart your officers for gold,

To undeservers.

CAS. I am an itching palm?

BRA. You know that you are Brutus that speak this,

Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

BRA. The name of Cassius honors this corruption,

And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

CAS. Committee?

BRA. Remember March, the ides of March remembered.

Did not at Julius bleed for justice's sake?

What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,

And not for justice! What, shall one of us,

Tiding.
That struck the foremost man of all this world,
But for supporting nobles; shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes?
And sell the mighty space of our large honors,
For so much trash, as may be grasped thus!—
I have us'd my breast, and lay the moon,
Than such a Roman.
Cas. Brutus, bay not me;
Cas. Yet endure it; you forget yourself
To hedge me in; I am a soldier, I.
Older in practice, abler than yourself
To make conditions.
Brut. Go to; you're not, Cassius.
Cas. I am.
Brut. I say, you are not.
Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself;
Ha! have you upon your heart, tempt me no further.
Brut. Away, slight man!
Cas. Is't possible?
Brut. Hear me, for I will speak.
Must I give way and room to your rash choler?
Shall I be frighted, when a madman stares?
Cas. Ye gods! ye gods! Must I endure this all?
Brut. All this! ay, more: Fret, till your proud heart break;
Go show your slaves how cholerie you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge? Must I observe you? Must I crouch
Under your sweaty humor? By the gods,
You shall digest the venom of your spleen,
Though it do split you: for, from this day forth,
I'll hold for my earth, yes, for my laughter,
When you are waspish.
Cas. Is it come to this?
Brut. You say, you are a better soldier:
Let me see how you make your young true,
And it shall please me well: For mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of noble men.
Cas. You wrong me every way; you wrong me,
Brutus: I said, an elder soldier, not a better:
Did I say, better?
Brut. If you did, I care not.
Cas. When Caesar liv'd, he durst not thus have mov'd me.
Brut. Peace, peace, you durst not so have tempted him.
Cas. I durst not!
Brut. No.
Cas. What! durst not tempt him?
Brut. For your life you durst not.
Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love,
I may do that I shall be sorry for.
Brut. You have done that you should be sorry for.
There's no terror, Cassius, in your threats;
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not.
Cas. Therefore I did send you.
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me;—
For I can raise no money by vile means:
By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachms, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirect. I did send
To you for gold to pay my legions,
Which you denied me: Was that done like Cassius?
Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!
Cas. I denied you not.
Brut. You did.
Cas. I did not—he was but a fool,
That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath rived my heart:
A friend should hear his friend's infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.
Brut. I do not, till you practise them on me.
Cas. You love me not.
Brut. I do not like your faults,
Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults.
Brut. A flatterer's would not, though they do appear
As huge as high Olympus.
Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come,
Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius,
For Cassius is wacey of the world:

Hated by one he loves; brat'd by his brother;
Check'd like a boarhound; all his faults observ'd,
Set in a note-book, learn'd and count'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth. 0, I could weep
My spirit from mine eyes!—There is my dagger,
And here my naked breast; within, a heart
Dearer than Phitus' mine, richer than gold:
If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth;
I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart:
Strike, as thou didst at Caesar; for I know,
When then didst hate him worst, thou lov'dst him better.

Than ever thou lov'dst Cassius.
Brut. S See thy dagger:
Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;
Do what you will, dishonor shall be honor,
O Cassius, and this hand with this heart
That carries anger, as the flint bears fire:
Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.
Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd
To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,
When grief, and blood ill-temper'd, vexeth him!
Brut. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd too.
Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.
Brut. And my heart too.
Cas. O Brutus!
Brut. What's the matter?
Cas. Have you not love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humor, which my mother gave me,
Made me forgetful?
Brut. Yes, Cassius; and henceforth,
When you are over-earnest with your Brutus,
He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so.
Poet. [Within.] Let me go in to see the generals:
There is some grudge between them, 'tis not meet
The brave so shun.
Luc. [Within.] You shall not come to them.
Poet. [Within.] Nothing but death shall stay me.
Enter Poet.

Cas. How now? What's the matter?
Poet. For shame, you generals: What do you mean?
Love, and be friends, as two such men should be;
For I have seen more years, I am sure, than ye.
Cas. His, ha; how vilely doth this cymric rhyme!
Brut. Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence.
Cas. Bear with him, Brutus; 'tis his fashion.
Brut. I'll know his humor, when he knows his time:
What should the wars do with these jigging fools?
Companion, since, hence.
Cas. Away, away, begone.

[Exit Poet.]

Enter Lucius and Titinius.
Brut. Lucius and Titinius, bid the commanders
Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.
Cas. Come, let Come yourselves, and bring Messala
with you,
Immediately to us. [Exit Lucius and Titinius.
Brut. Lucius, a houl of wine.
Cas. I did not think, you could have been so very angry
Brut. O Cassius, I am sick of many grieves.
Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use,
If you make nothing to accidential evil.
Brut. No man bears sorrow better.—Portia is dead.
Cas. Ha! Portia!
Brut. She is dead.
Cas. How 'scap'd I killing, when I cross'd you so?
O insupportable and touching loss!—
Upon what sickness?
Brut. Impatient of my absence;
And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony
Have made themselves so strong—for her death
That tidings came.—With this she fell distract,
And, her attendants absent, swallow'd fire.
Cas. And died so!
Brut. Even so.
Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Enter Lucius, with Wine and Tapers.
Brut. Speak no more of her.—Give me a bowl of wine:—
In this I bury all kindness, Cassius.
[Drinks.

* Follow. ]
Scene III.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge—
Fili, Lucius, till the wine o'erwash the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. [Drinks.

Re-enter Titinius, with Messala.

Bru. Come in, Titinius:—Welcome, good Messal.

Now sit we close about this taper here,
And call in question our necessities.
Cas. Portia, art thou gone?
Bru. No more, I pray you—

Messal. I have here received letters,
That young Octavius, and Mark Antony,
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition toward Philippi.
Mes. Myself have letters of the selfsame tenor.
Bru. With what addition?
Mes. That by subscription, and bills of outlawry,
Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
Hath sent to death a hundred senators.
Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree;
Mine speak of seventy senators, that died
By their subscriptions, Cicero being one.
Cas. Cicero one?
Mes. Ay, Cicero is dead,
And by that order of subscription—
And yon your letters from your wife, my lord?
Bru. No, Messal.
Mes. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?
Bru. Nothing, Messal.
Mes. That, methinks, is strange.
Bru. Why ask you? Hear you aught of her in yours?
Mes. No, my lord.
Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.
Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell:
For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.
Bru. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die,
To- morrow, Messal.

With meditating that she must die once,
I have the patience to endure it now.
Mes. Even so great men great losses should encourage.
Cas. I have as much of this in art as you;
But yet my nature could not bear it so.
Here shall we all our work alive. Where do you think
Of marching to Philippi presently?
Cas. I do not think it good.
Bru. Your reason?
Cas. This it is:
'Tis this letter that the enemy seek us:
So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,
Doing himself offence; whilst we, lying still,
Are full of rest, and defense, and quietness.
Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.
The people, 'twixt Titinius and this ground,
Do stand but in a forced election;
For they have gudg'd us contribution;
The enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresh'd, new-odd'd, and encouraged;
From which advantage shall we cut him off,
If at Philippi we do face him there,
These people at our back.

Cas. I hear me, good brother,
Bru. Under your pardon. — You must note beside,
That we have tried the utmost of our friends,
Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe:
The enemy increaseth every day,
We, at the height, are ready to decline.
The day is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows, and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now advow;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on:
Well on ourselves, and meet them at Philippi.
Bru. The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity;
Which we will negociate with a little rest.
There is no more to say!

Cas. Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.

Bru. Lucius, my groom. [Exit Lucius.] Farewell, good Messal. —

*Theory.

Good-night, Titinius:—Noble, noble Cassius,
Good-night, and good repose.

Cas. O my dear brother.

This was an ill beginning of the night:
Never come such division 'twixt our souls!
Let it not, Brutus.

Bru. Everything is well.
Cas. Good-night, my lord.
Bru. Good-night, good brother.

Tit. Mes. Good-night, lord Brutus.

Bru. Farewell, every one. [Exeunt Cassius, and Mes.

Re-enter Lucius, with the Gown.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument!
Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What, thou speak'st drowsily!
Poor knife, I blame thee not; thou art o'erwatch'd.
Cull Claudius, and some other of my men:
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro, and Claudius!

Enter Varro and Claudius.

Tar. Calls my lord.
Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent, and sleep;
It may be, I shall raise you by and by.
On business to my brother Cassius.

Tar. So please you, we will stand, and watch your pleasure.

Bru. I will not have it so; lie down, good sirs.

Luc. I shall, I will, to- morrow, I will.

[Servants lie down.

Luc. I was sure your lordship did not give it me.

Bru. Bear with me, good boy. I am much for-guarded.

Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile,
And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

Luc. Ay, my lord, an it please you.

Bru. It does, my boy;
I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty, sir.

Bru. Shall not urge thy duty past thy might;
I know, young bloods look for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It is well done; and thou shalt sleep again;
I will not hold thee long: if I do live,
I will be good to thee.

[Music and a Song.

This is a sleepy tune:—O mountain's slumber!
Lay'st thou thy headen mace upon my boy,
That plays thee music?— Gentle knife, good-

night.

I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee.

If thou dost not, thou break'st thy instrument:
I'll take it from thee, and, good boy, good-night.

Let me see, let me see:—Is not the leaf turn'd down,
Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

[He sits down.

Enter the Ghost of Cassar.

How ill this taper burns!—Ha! who comes here?
I think it is the weakness of mine eyes,
That shapes this monstrosity of apparition,
It comes upon me.— Art thou any thing?
Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stare!
Speak to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Yevil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee, thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well;

Then I shall see thee again!

[Exit Ghost.

Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.

Bru. He thinks, he still is at his instrument.

Lucius, awake.

Luc. My lord!

Bru. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so criest out?

Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Bru. Yes, that thou didst: Didst thou see any thing?

Sceptre.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Plains of Philippi.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered: you said the enemy would not come down, but keep the hills and upper regions; it proves not so: their battles are at hand; they mean to war us at Philippi here.

Ant. But, I am in their bosoms, and I know, wherefore they do it: they could be content to visit other places; and come down with fearful bravery, thinking, by this face, to insten in our thoughts that they have courage; but 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, generals: the enemies are on in gallant show; their bloody sign of battle is hung out, and something's to be done immediately.

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on; upon the left hand of the even field.

Oct. Upon the right hand I, keep thou the left. Why do you cross me in this exigent? Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so.

[March. Drum. Enter Brutus, Cassius, and their Army; Lucilius, Titinius, Masala, and others.

Brut. They stand, and would have parley. Vnt. I stand fast: Titinius: we must out and talk.

Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle? Ant. No, Cassar, we will answer on the charge.

Make forth, the generals would have some words.

Oct. Stir not until the signal.

Brut. Words before blows: is it so, countrymen?

Ant. Not that we love words better, as you do. Brut. Good words are better than bad strokes, Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus you give good words:

Witness the hole you made in Caesar's heart, crying, Long live! hail, Caesar!

Cas. Antony, the picture of your blows are yet unknown; but for your words, they rob the Hyble bees, and leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless too. Brut. O, yes, and soundless too; for you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony, and, very wisely, threat before you sing.

Vnt. Villains, you did not so, when your vile Hack'd one another in the sides of Caesar: you show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd like hounds, and how'd I, houndmen, kissing Caesar's feet, whilst dammed Cassa, like a cur, behind, struck Caesar on the neck. O flatteners! Cas. Flatterers! now, Brutus, thank yourself: this tongue had not offended so to-day, if Cassius might have ruled.

Oct. Come, come, the cause: if arguing make us sweat.

The proof of it will turn to rodder drops.

Look; I draw a sword against conspirators; when think you that the sword goes up again?—Never till Caesar's three and twenty wounds be well avenged; or till another Caesar have added slaughter to the troopers. Brut. Caesar, thou canst not die by troopers' hands, unless thou bring'st them with thee.

* Summon.

Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

Cla. Nor I, my lord.

Brut. Go, and command me to my brother Cassius! Sir bid him prove his powers betimes before, and we will follow.

Var. Cassius. It shall be done, my lord. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Oct. So I hope; I was not born to die on Brutus' sword. Brut. 0, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain, Young man, thou couldst not die more honourable.

Cas. A peevish school-boy, worthless of such honor, Join'd with a masker and a reveller; Ant. Old Cassius still! Oct. Come, Antony; away.—Defiance, traitors, hurl us in your teeth: it is our right to-day, come to the field; if not, when we have stomachs. [Exeunt Octavius, Antony, and their Army. Cas. Why now, blow, wind; swell, billow; and swim, bark! The storm is up, and all is on the hazard. Brut. No! Lucilius; hark, a word with you.

Luc. My lord.

Cas. [Brutus and Lucilius converse apart.]

Cas. Messala,—

Mess. What says my general?

Cas. This is my birth-day; as this very day Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala: Be thou my witness, that, against my will, As Pompey was, and I compelled to set Upon one battle all our liberties. You know, that I held Epicureans strong, And that I was a man of antique life; and I change me round, and, and partly credit things that do presage. Coming from Sardis, on our former ensign Two mighty eagles fell, and there they perch'd, Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands; Who to Philippi here consorted us. This morning are they fled away, and gone; And in their steads, do ravens, crows, and kites, Fly o'er our heads, and downward look on us, As we were sickly prey; their shadows seem A canopy most fatal, under which Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost. Mess. Believe not so. I but believe it partly; For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd To meet all perils very constantly. Brut. Even so, Lucilius.

Cae. Now, most noble Brutus, The gods to-day stand friendly; that we may, Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age! But, since the affairs of men rest still uncertain, Let's reason with the worst that may befall. If we do lose this battle, then is this The very last time we shall speak together: What are you then determined to do? Brut. Even by the rule of that philosophy, By which I did blame Cato for the death Which he did give himself— I know not how, But I do find it cowardly and vile, For fear of what might fall, so to prevent The time of life arming myself with patience, To stay the providence of some high powers That govern us below. Cas. Then, if we lose this battle, You are contented to be led in triumph Through the streets of Rome?

Brut. No, Cassius, no: think not, thou noble Roman, That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome: He bears too great a mind. But this same day Must end that work the ideas of March begun; And whether we shall meet again, I know not. Therefore our everlasting farewell take; — For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius! * Foremost. * Accompanied.
If we do meet again, why shall we smile;
If not, why then this parting was well made.
Call no more, hearken for ever, farewell, Brutus!
If we do meet again, we’ll smile indeed:
If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.
Brutus. Why then, lead on.—O, that a man might know
The end of this day’s business, ere it come!
But it sufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is known.—Come, ho! away!

SCENE II.—The Field of Battle.
A Larum. Enter BRUTUS and MESSALA.
Brutus. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills!
Unto the legions on the other side: [Loud A Larum.
Let them set on, and over me for ever.
But cold demeanour in Octavius’ wing,
And sudden push gives them the overthrow.
Ride, ride, Messala: let them all come down.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.
A Larum. Enter CASSIUS and TITINIUS.
Cassius. O, look, Titinius, look, the villains fly:
Myself have made my own turn’d enemy.
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I saw the coward, and did take it from him.
Titinius. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early.
Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly: his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony were all enclos’d.

Cassius. What news?

Titinius. None but that of the noble Brutus,
Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly: his soldiers fell to spoliation.
Whilst we by Antony were all enclos’d.
[Exeunt.

Pinarius. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off;
Mark Antony is in your tent, your lord!
Fly, therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.
Cassius. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius;
And take those tents, where I perceive the fire!
Titinius. They are, my lord.
Cassius. Titinius, if thou lov’st me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,
And here again: that I may rest assured,
Whether yond’r troops are friend or enemy.
Titinius. I will be here again, even with a thought.

Cassius. Go, Pinarius, get higher on that hill;
My sight was ever thuck; regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou thinkest about the field.
[Exeunt.

This day I breathed first: time is come round,
And where I did begin, there I shall end;
May my state be such as Sirrah, what news?
Pinarius. O my lord!
Cassius. What news?
Pinarius. Cassius. Enquiry round about with horsemen, that Make to him on the spur:—yet he spurs on,—
Now they are almost on him; now, Titinius!—
Now some light—O, he lights too—he’s taken
And hurt.

Shout. They shout for joy.
Cassius. Come down, behold no more—
O, coward that I am, to live so long; To see my best friend ta’en before my face!—

Enter Pinarius.

Pinarius. Come hither, Sirrah; In Partinius did I take thee prisoner; And then I spake thee, saving of thy life, That, when thou didst bid thyself die, Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine oath! Now be a freeman; and with this good sword, That ran through Caesar’s bowels, search this bosom. Stand not to answer: Here, take thou the hilt: And, when my face is cover’d, as ’tis now, Guide thou the sword.—Cassius, thou art reveng’d, Even with the sword that didst thy country’s friend.
Pinarius. So I am free, yet would not so have been, Durst I have done my will. O Cassius! Far from this country Pinarius shall run, Where my noble Roman shall take him. [Exeunt.

Re-enter TITINIUS with MESSALA.
Messala. It is but change. Titinius; for Octavius Is overthrown by noble Brutus’ power, As Cassius’ legions are by Antony.Directions for the officers.

Titius. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.
Messala. Where did you leave him?
Titius. At Messala’s house. There is no one, And with Cassius his bondman, on this hill.
Messala. Is not that he, that lies upon the ground?
Titius. He lies not like the living. O my heart!
Messala. Is not that he?
Titius. No, this was he, Messala, But Cassius is no more.—Setting sun! As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night, So in his red blood Cassius’ day is set.
The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone; Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are done.

Mistress of my success hath done this deed,
Messala. Mr. Mistrust of good success hath done this deed.
O hateful error, melancholy’s child!
Woe clest that ever met with the apt thoughts of men.
The things that are not! O error, amen conceiv’d,
Then never com’st unto a happy birth,
But kill the mother that engender’d thee.
Titinius. What, Titinius! Where art thou, Titinius?
Messala. I see him. Titinius: whilst I go to meet The noble Brutus, thrusting this report Into his ears: I may say thrusting it;
For piercing steel, and darts envought y’er, Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus, As tidings of this sight.
Messala. He is here, Messala, And I will seek for Pinarius the tidings.
[Exeunt.

SCENE I.—The Field of Battle.
A Larum. Enter BRUTUS, young CATO, STRABO, VOLENCEUS, and LUCILIUS.
Brutus. Where, where is Cassius? Where is Cassius?
Messala. Thy body lie!—Messala, thou art a lie! Messala. Lo, yonder; and Titinius mourning it.
Messala. Titinius’ face is upward.
Cato. He is slain.
Cato. O Julius Caesar, thou art in both worlds! Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords In our own proper entrails.
[Low A Larum.
Cato. Is he alive? Is he alive?
Cato. Some one home?—Betrays Titinius!— Is he alive? Is he alive?
Cato. Are you two Romans living such as these?— The last of all the Romans, fare thee well! It is impossible that ever Rome Should breed th’stout fellow.—Friends, I owe more tears To this dead man, than you shall see me pay.— I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time,— Come, therefore, and to Thessas send his body; His funeral shall not be in our camp, Lest it discomfort us.—Lucilius, come : And come, young Cato, let us to the field.— Labelo, and Flavius, set our battles on:—'Tis three o’clock; and, Romans, yet ere night We shall try fortune in a second fight.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.
A Larum. Enter, fighting, Soldiers of both Armies; then BRUTUS, CATO, LUCILIUS, and others.
Brutus. Yet, countrymen, O yet hold up your heads! Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go with me?
I will proclaim my name about the field: I am the son of Marcus Cato, but to thee to thy country’s friend; I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!—

Charges the Enemy.
Brutus. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, ho:— Brutus, my country’s friend, I know him well for Brutus. [Exit, charging the Enemy. Cato. If we suffer ourselves to be overpowered, and fall.

Inc. O yours and noble Cato, art thou down? Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius; And mayst be honor’d, being Cato’s son. 1 Sold. Yield, or thou diest.
Luc.  Only I yield to thee,
There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight:
[Offering Money.
Kill Brutus, and be honor'd in his death.
1 Sold. We must not.—A noble prisoner!
2 Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en.
1 Sold. I'll tell the news.—Here comes the general:

Enter Antony.
Brutus is ta'en; Brutus is ta'en, my lord.
Ant. Where is he?
Luc. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough;
I dare assure thee, that no enemy
Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus:
The gods defend him from so great a shame!
When you do find him, or alive, or dead,
He will be found like Brutus, like himself.
Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you,
A prize no less in worth; keep this man safe;
Give him all kindness: I had rather have Such men my friends than enemies. Go on,
And see what Brutus be alive, or dead:
And bring us word, unto Octavius' tent,
How every thing is changed.
[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Brutus, Dardanus, Clitus, Strato, and Volumnius.
Brut. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.
Clit. Statius show'd the torch-light; but, my lord,
He came not back; he is ta'en, or slain.
Brut. Sit thee down, Clitus: slaying is the word;
It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus,— [Whispering.
Clit. What, I, my lord? No, not for all the world.
Brut. Peace, then, no words.
Clit. I'll rather kill myself.
Brut. Hark thee, Dardanus!
[Whispers him.
Darr. O, Dardanus!
Clit. What ill request did Brutus make to thee!
Darr. To kill him, Clitus: Look, he meditates.
Clit. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,
That it runs over even at his eyes.
Brut. Come hither, good Volumnius: list a word.
Vol. What says my lord?
Brut. Why, this, Volumnius:
The ghost of Cæsar hath appear'd to me
Two several times by night; at Sardis, once;
And, this last night, here in Philipp's fields.
I know my hour is come.
Vol. Not so, my lord.
Brut. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.
Then fear not the word, Volumnius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pat;
It is more worthy to keep in ourselves,
Than farrily to push us. Good Volumnius,
Thou know'st, that we two went to school together;
Even for that our love of old I pray thee,
Hold thou my sword-hilts, whilst I run on it.
Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.
[Alarum still.

Clit. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying here.
Brut. Farewell!—to you;—and you;—and you,
Volumnius.—
Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep;
Farewell to thee, too, Strato.—Countrymen,
My heart doth joy, that yet in all my life,
I found no man, but he was true to me.
I shall have glory by this losing day,
More than Octavius, and Mark Antony,
By this vile conquest shall attain unto
So fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue
Hath almost ended his life's history:
Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest,
That have but labor'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within; Fly, fly, fly, Clit.
Brut. Hence; I will follow thee.
[Exeunt Clitus, Dardanms, and Volumnius.
I pr'ythee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:
Thou art a fellow of a good respect;
Thou hast been a most meeke minister.
Thy life hath had some smatch of honor in it:
Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,
While I do run upon it. With thee, Strato!
Strat. Give me your hand first: Fare you well, my lord.
Brut. Farewell, good Strato.—Cæsar, now be still,
I'll not thee with half so good a will.
He runs on his sword, and dies.

Oct. What man is that?
Mes. My master's man.—Strato, where is thy master?
Strat. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala;
The conquerors can but make a fire of him;
For Brutus only overcame himself,
And no man else hath honor by his death.
Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee, Brutus,
That thou hast prov'd Lucius' saying true.
Oct. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertain them.
Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?
Strat. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to thee.
Oct. Do so, Messala.
Mes. How did my master, Strato?
Strat. I held the sword, and he did run on it.
Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my master.
Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all:
All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar;
He only, in a general honest thought,
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle, and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, This was a man!
Oct. According to his virtue let us use him,
With all respect and rites of burial.
Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
Most like a soldier, order'd honorably.—
So, call the field to rest; and let's away.
To part the glories of this happy day.
[Exeunt.

* Receive into my service.
* Recommend.

CLEOPATRA, QUEEN OF EGYPT. OCTAVIA, SISTER TO CÆSAR, AND WIFE TO ANTONY.

CHALMEN, ATTENDANTS ON CLEOPATRA.

IRAS, OFFICERS, SOLDIERS, MESSENGERS, AND OTHER ATTENDANTS.

SCENE, dispersed; in several parts of the Roman Empire.

ACT I.

Enter Demetrias and Pullo.

Phi. Nay, but this dutrage of our general's,
O'erflows the measure: Those his goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and masters of the war
Have glowed like plated Mars, now bend, now turn,
The office and devotion of their view
Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart,
Which in the scuffles of great lights had burst
The buckles on his breast, renewed all temper;
And is become the bellows and the fan,
To cool a gipsy's lust. Look, where they come!

Flourish. Enter Antony and Cleopatra, with their trains; Eunuchs fanning her.

Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a trumpet's foot; behold and see.
Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.
Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.
Cleo. I'll set a bound how far to be belov'd,
Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven,
New earth, new carth.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. News, my good lord, from Rome.
Ant. Grates me:—The sum! Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony.

Fulvia, perchance, is angry: Or, who knows
If the scarce-bearded Cæsar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you. Do this, or this;
Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that;
Perform't, or else we damn thee.

Ant. How, my love! Cleo. Perchance, nay, and most like,
You must not stay here longer, your dismissal is come from Cæsar; therefore hear it, Antony.—
Where's Fulvia's process? Cæsar's, I would say?
—Both!—

Call in the messengers.—As I am Egypt's queen,
Then blushest, Antony, and that blood of thine
is Cæsar's homage: else so thy cheek pays shame,
When shrill-tongued Fulvia scolds.—The messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt! and the wide arch
Of the ranged empire fall! Here is my space;
Kings and emperors are clay: our dunghy earth alike
Feeds beasts as man: the nobleness of life is, to do thus; when such a mutual pair
Embracing,
And such a twin can do't, in which, I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to west?
We stand up peersless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood!

Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?—
I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony
Will be himself.

Ant. But stirr'd by Cleopatra.—

Now, for the love of Love, and her soft hours,
Let's not confound the time with conference harsh:
There's not a minute of our lives should stretch
Without some pleasure now: What sport to-night?

Cleo. O, hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fye, wrangling queen! Whom every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose every passion fully strives
To make itself, in thee, fair and admir'd!
No messenger; but time and all alone,
To-night, we'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Come, my queen;
Last night you did desire it:—Speak not to us.

[Exeunt Ant. and Cleop. with their train.

Dem. Is Cæsar with Antonius priz'd so slight?

Summons. Know. Counsel. 589
ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA. Act I.

Pho. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony, he comes too short of that great property which still should go with Antony; and I am full sorry that he approves the common liar, who Thus speaks of him at Rome: But I will hope of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy!

[Execut.]

SCENE II.—Another Room.

Enter CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord Alexas, sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen? O, that I knew this husband, which, you say, must change his forms with cardinals!

Sooth. Your will!

Char. Is this the man?—I'll you, sir, that know the Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy, a little I can read.

Alex. Show him your hand.

[Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly: wine enough, Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray, then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. It means in as a flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive.

Iras. Truth!

Sooth. You shall be more beloved, than beloved.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Iras. Good new, some excellent fortune! Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all; let me have a child at fifty, to whom I bid my heart go to do honor: find me in to marry with Octavius Caesar, and companion me with my mistress.

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve.

Char. O a excellent! I love long life better than figs.

Sooth. You have seen and proved a fairer former fortune than that which is to approach.

Char. Then, belike, my children shall have no names. Pr'ythee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb, And irtile every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch.

Alex. You think, none but your sheets are privy to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras hers.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be—drunk to bed.

Iras. There's a palm presses chastity, if nothing else.

Char. Even as the overfowling Nilus presageth famine.

Iras. Go, you wild bed-fellow, you cannot soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.—Pr'ythee tell her but a worky-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Iras. But how! but how! I give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she? Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it? Iris. Not in my husband's nose.

Char. Our worser thoughts heavens mend! Alexas, in every, his fortune;—0, marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Ibs, I be- seech thee! And let her die too, and give him a worse! and let worse-follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold! Good Ibs, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight; good Ibs, I beseech thee!

[Exeunt.

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man house-wived, so is it a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knife uncurt chopped: Therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly.

Char. Amen. Eno. Nay! if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they'd do't.

Char. Not he, the queen.

[Enter CLEOPATRA.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. No, lady.

Cleo. He was not here! I

Char. No, madam.

Cleo. He was disposed to mirth; but on a sudden A Roman thought hath struck him.—Enobarbus.

Eno. Madam.

Char. Seek him and bring him hither. Where's Alexas?

Alex. Here, madam, at your service.—My lord approaches.

[Enter ANTONY, with a Messenger and Attendants.

Ant. We will not look upon him: Go with us.

[Exeunt CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, ALEXAS, CHARMIAN, SOOTHSAYER and ATTENDANTS.

Mess. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field.

Ant. Against my brother Lucius! Mess. But soon that war had end, and the time's state Made friends of them, joining their force against Caesar; Whose hope doth shine in the war, from Italy, Upon the first encounter, drain them.

Ant. What worst?

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Ant. When it concerns the fool, or coward.—On: Things that are past, are done with me.—Tis thus: Who tells me true, though in his tale lie death, I bow him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Labinus. (This is still news) hath, with his Parthian force, Extends? Asia from Euphrates; His conquering banner shews, from Syria To Lydia, and to Ionia; Whilst—

Ant. Antony, thou wouldst say—

Mess. O, my lord.

Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general tongue.

Name Cleopatra as she's call'd in Rome; Rain thou in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults With such full license, as both truth and malice Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth The storm, that tells a hundred thousand When our quick winds lie still; and our ills told us, Is as our caring. Fare thee well a while. Mess. At your noble pleasure.

[Exit. Ant. From Sicyon how the news! Speak there. I1. The man from Sicyon—is there such one.

2 Att. He stays upon your will.

Ant. Let him appear,— These strong Egyptian letters I must break,

[Enter another Messenger.

Or lose myself in dotage.—What are you! 2 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where did she?

2 Mess. In Sicyon: Her length of sickness, with what else more serious Importeth thee to know, this bears. (Gives a letter.

Ant. [To Fortobuck—] [Exit Messenger.

There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it: What our contempts do often hurt us, We wish it out of our possession, the present pleasure, By revolution lowering, does become The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone, The hand could pluck her back, that showed' her on. I murmur from this enchaunting queen break out: Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know, My idleness doth hatch.—How now! Enobarbus!

[Orsino.

2 Some editions, minds.

Filling, ploughing: propose us to produce good seed.
Now, I must with haste from hence. Wherefore, when we have kill'd all our women: We see how mortal an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our departure, death's the word. Ant. Our business is done: Let us depart. Eno. Under no compelling occasion, let woman die: It was pity to cast them away for nothing; though, between them and a great cause, they should be esteem'd nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the Second of these his dying instants, did rap her heart twenty times upon a poorer moment: I do think, there is matter in death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in doing. Ant. She is cunning past man's thought. Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing; she is the finest part of pure love: We cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanacs can report: this cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as love. Ant. Would I had never seen her! Eno. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work; which not to have been blessed with would have discredited your travel. Ant. Fulvia is dead. Eno. Sir! Ant. Fulvia! Eno. Dead. Ant. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice. When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man, it is a plague to him, it shows to men, as the sailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the care to be lamented: this grief is crowded with consolation: your old smock brings forth a new petticoat:—and indeed the tears live in an onion, that should water this sorrow. Ant. The business she hath broach'd in the state, Cannot endure my absence. Eno. And the business you have broach'd here, cannot be without you: especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your absence. Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers Have notice what we purpose. I shall break The cause of our experience to the queen, And get her love to part. For not alone The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches, Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too Our not keeping our contriving friends in Rome. Petition us at home: Sextus Pompeius Hath given the dare to Caesar, and commands The king of the sea: our slippery people (Whose love is never link'd to the deserrer, Till his deserts are past) begin to throw Pompey the great, and all his dignities, Out of his son; who, hack in name and power, Higher than both in blood and life, stands up For the main soldier: whose quality, going on, The sides of the world may danger. Much is brooding, When we, like the courser's hair, hath yet life, And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure, To such whose place is under us, requires Our quick remove from hence. Eno. I shall do't.

SCENE III. Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexander. Cleo. Where is he! Char. I did not see him since. Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he does:— I did not send you!—If you find him sad, Say, I am dancing; if in mirth, report That I am suddenly sick: Quick, and return. Alexander. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly, You do not hold the method to enforce The like from him. Cleo. What should I do, I do not! Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing. Cleo. Thou teas'st like a fool: the way to lose him. Expedit. Look as if I did not send you.
Of excellent dissembling; and let it look Like perfect honor.
Ant. You'll heat my blood; no more.
Cleo. You can do better yet; but this is meekly.
Ant. Now by my sword.
Cleo. And target.—Still he mends;
But this is not the best: Look, pr'ythee, Charman,
Here's Herculean Roman does become
The carriage of his chafe.
Ant. I'll leave you, lady.
Cleo. Courteous lord, one word,
Sir; what part:—but that's not it:
Sir, you and I have lov'd,—but there's not it;
That you know well: Something it I would, —
O, my oblivion is a very Antony,
And I am all forgotten.
But that your royalty
Hold's idleness your subject, I should take you
For idleness itself.
Cleo. 'Tis sweating labor,
To bear such idleness so near the heart
As Cleopatra this. But, sir, forgive me;
Since my becoming kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you: Your honor calls you hence;
Therefore he deal to my unprized folly,
And all the gods go with you! upon your sword
Sits hand't victory! and smooth success
Be ste'red before your feet!
Ant. Let us go. Come;
Our separation so abides, and dies,
This, you residing here, go; yet with me,
And I, hence deceiting, here remain with thee.
Away.
[Exeunt.]

Enter Octavius Ceasar, Lepidus, and Attendants.

Ceas. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth know,
It is not Ceasar's natural vice to hate
One great competitor: From Alexandria
This is the news: Lie fishes, drinks, and wastes
The bunks of night in revel: is not more manike
Than Cleopatra; nor the queen Ptolemy
More manlike than he: hardly can advice, or Vouchsafed to think he had partners: You shall find there
A man, that is the abstract of all faults
That all men follow.
Lep. I must not think, there are
Evils enough to darken all his goodness:
His faults, in him, seen, as the spots of heaven,
More nery by night's blackness; iniceditary,
Rather than purchased; what he cannot change,
What than he chooses.
Ceas. You are too indulgent: Let us grant, it is not Amiss to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy;
To give a kingdom for a mirth; to sit
And keep the turn of uppling with a slave;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knives that smell of sweat: say, this becomes him,
(As his composure must be rare indeed,
Whom these things cannot blemish,) yet must Antony
No way excuse his soils, when we do bear
So great weight in his lightness: He is fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for't: but, to confound'such time,
That thou mayest see empty, and speak as loud
As his own state, and ours,—'tis to be chid
As we rate boys; who being mature in knowledge,
Paw their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Here's more news.

Mess. Thy biddings have been done; and every hour,
Most noble Ceasar, shalt thou have report
How 'tis abroad. Pompey strong at sea;
And it appears, he is below'd of those
That they may have lend'd Caesar; to the ports
The discounts repair, and men's reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Ant. I should have known no less:
It hath been taught us from the prudential state,
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Rejoice.
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Oblivious memory,
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Procured by his own fault,
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Visit him,
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Consumed,
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Dissembled.

That he, which is, was wish'd, until he were;
And the cobb'd man, ne'er lov'd, till ne'er worth
love.
Comes dear'd, by being lack'd! This common body,
Like a vagabond diaz upon the stream,
Go's to, and back, lackeving the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion.

Mes. Ceasar, bring thee word,
Menevates and Menas, famous pirates,
Make these sea serve them; which they ear and wound
With keels of every kind: Many hot introads
They in Italy, and the borders maritime.
Lack blood to think on, and doth youth revolt;
No vessel can peep forth, but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen; for Pompey's name strikes more
Than could his war resisted.

Ant. Antony.

Leave thy lascivious wassels5 When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa, at the battle.
Did famine follow; whom thou fought at, against,
Though timidly brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer; thou didst drink
The state's horses, and the gilded paddles;
Which beasts would cough at: thy palate then did deign
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge;
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The bars of trees thou browse'st; on the Alps
It is reported, thou didst eat strange flesh.
Which came this, that was it (it
Would stank this honor, that I speak it now)
Was borne before a soldier, that thy check
So much as lank'd not.
Lep. It is pity of him.

Ces. Let his shame's quickly
Drive him to Rome: 'Tis time we twain
Did show ourselves 't the field; and, to that end, ascehble
We immediate council: Pompey
Thrive's in our idleness.

Lep. To-morrow, Ceasar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly
Both what by sea and land I can be able,
To 'front this present time.

Ces. Till which encounter,
It is my business too. Farewell.

Lep. Farewell, my lord: What you shall know mean'time
Of strins abroad, I shall beseech you, sir,
To let me be paraker.

Mes. Doubt not, sir,
I knew it for my bond.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palac.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Charmian,—
Charmian,—
Charmian—
Charmian—
Charmian.

Cleo. Ha, ha!

Cleo. Give me to drink mandragora!

Cleo. Why, madam!

Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of time.
My Antony is away.

Cleo. You think of him.

Cleo. Too much.

Cleo. O, treason!
Cleo. Madam, I trust, not so.
Cleo. Thou, enmack! Mardian!

Mard. What's your highness' pleasure?
Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing; I take no

Mard. I say, enmack has: 'Tis well for thee,
That, being unseem'd, thy freer thoughts
May not fly forth of Egypt. Hast thou alection?

Mard. Yes, gracious madam.

Mard. Indeed.

Mard. Not in deed, madam: for I can do nothing
But what in deed is honest to be done:
Yet have I fierce aelection, and think,
What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O Charmian,
Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or Does he walk? or is he on his horse?—

\footnotesize{\textbullet} Enamoured by being raised.
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Turn pale.
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Beseeching: in the old copy it is ready, e. vassals.
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Crino.
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Stagnant, slimy water.
\footnotesize{\textbullet} By honest duty.
\footnotesize{\textbullet} A sleepy potion.
\footnotesize{\textbullet} Unammeud.
Do bravely, horse! for wot'st thou whom thou Pom'nest! The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm And burnosef't men.—He's speaking now, Or murmuring, Where's my serpent of old Nile? For so he calls me: Now itself myself. With most delicious poison.—Think on me, That am with Phœbus' amorous pinches black, And wrinkled deep in time! Broad-fronted Caesar, Where he has himself above the ground, I was a morsel for a monarch: and great Pompey Would stand, and make his eyes grow in my brow; There would be anchor his aspect, and die With looking on his like.

Enter Alexas. Alex. Sovereign of Egypt, hail! Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark Antony! Yet coming from him, that great medicine hath With his sweet gilded thee. How goes it with my brave Mark Antony? Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen, He kiss'd—the last of many doubled kisses,— This own pearl!—His speech sticks in my heart. Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it thence. Alex. Good friend, quoth he, Say, The form Roman to great Egypt sends This token of an opulent; To medle the petty present, I will piece Her opulent throne with kingdoms; All the east, Say thou, shall call her mistress. So he nodded, And soberly did mount a temerat't steed, Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke Was beauty dumb'd by him. Cleo. What, was he sad, or merry? Alex. Like to the time o' the year between the extreme Of hot and cold; he was nor sad nor merry. Cleo. O well-divided disposition!—Note him, Note him, good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note He was not sad: for he would shine on those That make their looks by his: he was not merry; Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay In Egypt with his joy: but between both; He heavenly mingle!—He's thou sad or merry, The violence of either thee becomes; So does it no man else.—Meth'lst thou my posts? Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers: Why do you send so thick? Cleo. Who's born that day When I forget to send to Antony, Shall die a beggar.—ink and paper, Charmian.— Welcome, my good Alexas.—Did I, Charmian, Ever love Caesar so? Char. O that brave Caesar! Cleo. Be choke'd with such another emphasis! Say, the brave Antony. Char. The valiant Caesar! Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth, If thou with Caesar paragon again My man of men. Char. I sing but after you. Cleo. My salad days; When I was green in judgment:—Cold in blood, To say, as I said then:—But, come, away; Let me internal paper he shall have every day A several greeting, or I'll unpeople Egypt.

[Exeunt]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Messina. A Room in Pompey's House. Enter Pompey, Menecrates, and Menas. Pompe. If the great gods be just, they shall assist The deeds of justest men. Men. Know, worthy Pompey, That that they do delay, they do not deny. Pompe. While's we are suitors to their causes, Decays The thing we sue for. Men. We, ignorant of ourselves, Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers Deny us for our good; so find we profit, By being of our prayers. Pompe. I shall do well: The people love me, and the sea is mine; My power's a crescent, and my auguring hope Say, it will come to the full. Mark Antony In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make No wars without doors: Caesar gets money, where He loses hearts: Lepidus flatters both, Of both is flatter'd, but he neither loves, Nor either cares for him. Men. Caesar and Lepidus Are in the field: a mighty strength they carry. Pompe. Where have you this?—It is false. Men. From Silvius, sir. Pompe. He dreams; I know, they are in Rome together. Looking for Antony: But all charms of love, Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan'd lip! Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both! Tie up the libertine in a field of bees, Keep his brain drinking; Epicurean cooks, Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite; That sleep and feeding may prolonge his honor, Even till a Leath'd dulness.—How now, Varrius! Enter Varrius. Var. This is most certain that I shall deliver: Mark Antony is every hour in Rome, Expected: since he went from Egypt, 'tis A space for further travel. Pompe. I could have given less matter A better car.—Menas, I did not think,

ACT II.

This amorous seafarer would have don'd his helm For such a petty war: his soldiers his Is twice as the other twain: But let us bear The higher our opinion, that our stirring Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck The ne'er fast-wearied Antony. Men. I cannot hope, Caesar and Antony shall well greet together: His wife, that's dead, did trespasses to Caesar; His brother war'd upon him; although, I think, Not mov'd by Antony. Pompe. I know not, Menas, How lesser enmities may give way to greater. We're not that we stand up against them all: Twere pregnant they should square between themselves; For they have entertained cause enough To draw their swords: but how the fear of us May cement their divisions, and bind up The petty difference, we yet not know, Be it as our gods will have it! It only stands Our lives upon, to use our strongest hands. Come, Menas. [Exeunt]

SCENE II.—Rome. A Room in the House of Lepidus. Enter Enobarbus and Lepidus. Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed, And shall become you well, to entreat your captain To soft and gentle speech. I shall entreat him To answer like himself: If Caesar move him, Let Antony look over Caesar's head, And speak as loud as Mars: By Jupiter, Were I the wearer of Antonius' beard, I would not shav'e to-day. Lep. Tis not a time For private stomaching. Lep. Every time Serves for the matter that is then born in it. Lep. But small to greater matter, may give way. Enob. If not the small come first. Lep. Your speech is passion; But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes The noble Antony.

[Exeunt]
Enter Antony and Ventidius.

Ant. And yonder, Caesar.

Enter Caesar, Mecenas, and Agrippa.

Ant. If we compose, I will have you, Ventidius.

Cas. I do not know, Mecenas; ask Agrippa.

Ant. Noble friends, that which combin'd us was most great, and let not a lesser action rend us. What's amiss, Mark? be gently heard: When we debate our trivial difference hound, do we commit murder in healing wounds? Then noble partners, (The rather, for I earnestly beseech,) Pour ye on your knees, each with sweetest terms, nor curstgrow to the matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well; were we before our armies, and to fight, I should do this.

Cas. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

Cas. Sit, sir!

Ant. Nay.

Then—

Cas. I learn, you take things ill, which are not so; or, being, concern you not.

Ant. I must be laugh'd at, if or for nothing; or a little, I should my mind of it consider; and with you Chiefly I the world: more laugh'd at, that I should once name you derogately, when to sound your name. It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt, Caesar.

Cas. No more than my residing here at Rome Might be you in Egypt: Yet, if you there Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, practis'd? Cas. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent, By what did here behull me. Your wife, and brother, Made wars upon me; and their contestation With home for you, you were the word of war. Ant. You do mistake your business; my brother never Did urge me in his act: I did inquire it: And have my learning from some true reports, That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather Discredit my authority with yours; And make the wars alike against my stomach, Having alike your cause! Of this, my letters Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel, As matter whole you have not to make it with, It must not be with this.

Cas. You praise yourself By laying defects of judgment to me; but You patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so, not so; I know you could not lack, I am certain on't, very necessity of this thought, that I, Your partner in the cause against which he fought, Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars. Which fronted mine own peace. As for my wife, I would you had her spirit in such another: The third of the world is yours; which with a snaffle You may play false, but not such a wife. Eno. Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women!

Ant. So much mearable, her quarrels, Caesar, Made out her unpatience, (which not wanted Shrewdness of policy too,) I grieving grant, Did you too much disquiet; for that, you must But say, I could not help it.

Cas. I wrote to you.

Ant. When riding in Alexandria; you did pocket up my letters, and with taunts Did make my misfortune out of audience.

Sir. He tell upon me, ere admitted; then Three kings I had newly taunted, and did want Of their revenue: the next day, I told him of myself; which was as much As to have ask'd him pardon: Let this fellow

Be nothing of our strife; if we contend, Out of our question? wipe him.

Cas. You have broken The article of your oath; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lev. Soft, Caesar.

Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak.

Lev. The honor'd sacred which he fall'd on now, Supposing that I lack'd it: But on, Caesar; The article of my oath,—

Ant. To lend me arms, and aid, when I required The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather; and then, when poison'd hours had bound me up From my own head, in hope, and then I may, I'll play the penitent to you: but mine honesty Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power Work without it: Truth is, that Pulia,

To have me out of Egypt, made wars here; For which myself, the ignorant motive, do So far ask pardon, as befits mine honor To stop in such a case. 'Tis nobly spoken.

Mec. If it might please you, to enforce no further The griefs between ye: yet to forget them quite, Were to remember that the present need Speaks to atoms? you.

Lev. Worthy spoke, Mecenas.

Exe. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the insult, you may, when you have no more words of Pompey, return it again: you shall have time to wrangle in, when you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only; speak no more.

Eno. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot.

Ant. You wrong this presence, therefore speak no more.

Eno. Go to, then; your considerate stone. Cas. I do not much dislike the matter, but The manner of his speech: for it cannot be, To retain in We-shall remain in friendship, our conditions So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What loop should hold us staunch, from edge to edge O' the world I would pursue it.

Agr. Give me leave, Caesar.

Cas. Speak, Agrippa.

Agr. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side, Adrian Octavia: great Mark Antony Is now a widower. Say not so, Agrippa; If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof Would well deserve a blush.

Ant. I am not married, Caesar: let me hear Agrippa further speak.

Agr. To hold you in perpetual amity, To make you brothers, and to knit our hearts With an unslipping knot, take Antony Octavia to his wife: whose beauty claims No worse a husband than the best of men; Whose virtue, and whose general graces, speak That which none else can utter. By this marriage, All little jealousies, which now seem great, And all great fears, which now import their dangers, Would then be nothing; truths would be but tales Where now half tales be truths: her love to both, Would, each to other, and all loves to both, Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke; For in this studied, not present thought, By duty rummated.

Ant. Will Caesar speak?

Cas. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa, If I would say, Agrippa, be it so, To make this good?

Cas. The power of Caesar, and His power unto Octavia.

Agr. May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shows, Dream of impediment!—Let me have thy hand: Further this act of grace; and, from this hour, The heart of brothers govern in our loves, And sway our great designs!

Cas. There is my hand.

Agr. A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother Did ever love so dearly: Let her live
SCENE III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

To join our kingdoms and our hearts; and never
Fly o'er our loves again!

Lep.

Happily, amen!

Ant.

I did not think to draw my sword against Pompey;

For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great,
Of late upon me: I must not think hard,
Let my remembrance suffer ill report:
At heel of that, defy him.

Lep.

Time calls upon us:

Of what sort Pompey presently be sought,
or else he seeks out us.

Ant.

And where lies he?

Cas. About the Mount Misenum.

Ant.

What's his strength
By land?

Cas.

Great, and increasing: but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Ant.

So is the fame.

Would, we had spoke together! Haste we for it:
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, despatch we
The business we have talk'd of.

Cas.

With most gladness;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I will lead you.

Ant.

Let us, Lepidus,
Not lack your company.

Lep.

Noble Antony,

Not lackness should detain me.

[Flourish.

Enter CAESAR, ANTONY, and LEPIDUS.

Mec. Welcome from Egypt, sir.

Emo. Half the heart of Caesar, worthy Mecenas!

Mec. Most honorable friend, Thespis!

Ant. Good Enobarbus!

Mec. We have come to be glad, that matters are so well digested. You stay'd well by it in Egypt.

Emo. Ay, sir; we did sleep day out of counten-cance, and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight wild bears roared whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there: Is this true!

Emo. This was but as a fly by an eagle: we had thee more monstrous matter of facts, which worthily deserved noting.

Mec. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be squar'd in her.

Emo. When she first met Mark Antony, she purs'd up his heart upon the river of Cydnus.

Ant. There she appeared indeed; or my reporter
得意 well for her.

Emo. I will tell you:
The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burn'd on the water; the poop was beaten gold:
Himself the sails, and so perfumed, that
The winds were love-sick with them: the oars were silver;

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water, which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. For her own person,
It beggar'd all description; she did lie
In her own soul, (cloth of gold, of tissue.)
O'er-pictures that Venus, where we see,
The fancy out-work nature: on each side her,
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With diverse-color'd fans, whose wind did seem
To blow the delicate checks which they did cool,
And what they undid, did.

Ant.

Emo. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tender her the eyes,
And made their bends adornments; at the helm
A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tassels
Here with the tassels of those flower-soft hands,
That yardly frame the oars. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs, the city east
Her people out upon her; and Antony,
Enthron'd in the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the whir; which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.

Rare Egyptian!

Emo. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her supper; she replied:
It should be better, he became her guest;
Which she entreated; Our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of no woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast;

* Suit with her merits.

For and, for his ordinary, pays her heart,

For what his eyes eat only.

Ant.

Royal wench!

She made great Caesar lay his sword to bed;
He plough'd her, and she cropp'd.

Emo. I saw her once

Hap more times through the public street:
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and panted,
That she did make defect, perfection,
And, breathless, power breathe forth.

Mec. Now Antony must leave her utterly.

Emo. Never; he will not.

Ant.

I.e. me with her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety: other women
Clay'th appetites they feed; but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies. For vilest things
Become themselves in her: that the holy priests
Blessed when she is rinsed.

Mec. If beauty, wisdom, modesty can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him.

Ant.

Let us go,—

Good Enobarbus, make yourself my guest,
Whilst you abide here.

Emo.

Humbly, sir, I thank you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Caesar's House.

Enter CAEChrome, ANTONY, OCTAVIA between them;
ATTENDANTS, and a SOOTHsAYER.

Ant. The world, and my great office, will some times
Divide me from your bosom.

Oct. All which time
Before the gods my knee shall bow in prayers
To them for you.

Ant.

Good-night, sir.—My Octavia,
Read not my blemishes in the world's report:
I have not kept my square; but that to come
Shall all be done by the rule. Good-night, dear
Emo.

Octa. Good-night, sir.

Cas. Good-night.

Ant. Now, sirrah! you do wish yourself in Egypt.

Sooth. Would I had never come from thence,
or you
Thither!

Ant.

If you can, your reason?

Sooth.

I see't in
My motion, have it not in my tongue: But yet like you again to Egypt.

Ant.

Say to me,
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Caesar's, or mine

Sooth. Caesar's.

There!

O Antony, stay not by his side:
Thy demon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Caesar's is not; but near him, thy angel
Become's a bear, as being overpowered; therefore Make space enough between you.

Ant.

Speak this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee; no more, but when to thee.

If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to lose; and, of that natural luck,
He beats thee 'gainst the odds; thy lustre thickens,
When he shews by: I say again, thy spirit
Is all afraid to govern thee near him;
But, he away, 'tis noble.

Ant.

Get thee gone:

Say to Ventidius, I would speak with him.

[Exeunt Soothsayer.

He shall to Parthia.—Be it art, or hap,
He hath spoken true: the very dice obey him;
And in our sports, my better cunning fain
Under his chance: if we draw lots, he specks:
His cocks do win the battles still of mine,
When all is not to be sought, with his quails
Better beat mine, in hop and at odds. I will to Egypt
And though I make this marriage for my peace,

Enter VENTIDIUS.

I the east my pleasure lies:—O, come, Ventidius,
You must to Parthia; your commission's ready:
Follow me, and receive it.

[Exeunt.

Want.

The ancients used to match quails as we match cocks
Indecently.
SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter Lepidus, Marcus, and Agrippa.

Lep. Trouble yourselves no further: pray you hasten your generals after.

Agg. Sir, Mark Antony
Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

I'll shew you in your soldier's dress, Which will become you both, farewell.

We shall, as I conceive the journey, be at mount5
Before you, Lepidus.

Lep. Your way is shorter, My purposes do draw me much about;
You'll win two days upon me.

Agg. Sir, good success!

Lep. Farewell. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Give me some music; music, madam, Of us that trade in love.

Attends. The music, ho!

Cleo. Enter Mardian:

Cleo. Let it alone; let us to billiards.

Cleo. Charmian.

Cleo. My heart is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman as an uncommon play'd,
As with a woman:—Come, you'll play with me, sir! Madam, as well as I, honest Mardian.

Cleo. And when good will is show'd, though it come too short,
The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now—
Give me mine angle,—We'll to the river: there
My music playing fair off, I will betray
Tawny-hind's fishes; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think there every one: an Antony,
And say, Ah! ha! you're caught.

Char. 'Twas merry, when you wager'd on your angling; when your diver
Did hang a saltfish on his hook, he which
With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time!—O times!—
I laugh'd him out of patience; and that night
I laugh'd him into patience; and next morn,
Er' the ninth hour, I drank him to his bed;
Then put my tires1 and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan. O! from Italy;

Enter a Messenger.

Cleo. Ram thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears,
Tell me, long time have been haring.

Mess. Madam, madam,—

Cleo. Antony's dead!—

If thou say so, villain, thou kille'st thy mistress;
But well and free,
If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here
My bluest veins to kiss; a hand, that kings
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First, madam, he's well.

Cleo. Why, there's more gold. But, sirrah, mark; we use
To say, the dead are well; bring it to that,
The gold I give thee, will I melt, and pour
Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mess. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo. Well, go to, I will;
But there's no goodness in thy face: If Antony
Be free and healthcare,—why so tart a flavor?
To trumpet such good tidings! If not well, Thou shouldst come like a fury crown'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man.1

Mess. Will'rt please you hear me?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee, ere thou speakest;
Yet, if thou say, Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Caesar, or not captive to him,
I'll set thou in a shower of gold, and hail
Rich pen to upon thee.

Mess. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Caesar.

Cleo. Thou'rt an honest man.

Mess. Caesar and he are greater friends than ever,
Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Cleo. I do not like but yet; it does alей
The good precedence: I ye upon but yet:
But yet is as a gaoler to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor, Pray thee, friend,
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear.
The good and bad together: He's friends with Cæsar;
In state of health, thou say'st; and, thou say'st, free,
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear.

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you?—Hence,—
Horrible villain! or I'll spurn thine eyes
Like hairs before me; I'll unhaire thy head;
Thou shalt be whip'd with wire, and stedw in Smarting in l'ning pickel.

Mess. Gracious madam, I, that do bring the news, made not the match.

Cleo. Say, 'h's not so, a prov'ce I have giv thee,
And may my fortunes proud: the blow thou hast
Shall make thy peace, for moving me to rage;
And I will beat thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.

Mess. He's married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue, th' hast liv'd too long;
Mess. Freely, madam.

Cleo. Nay, then I'll run:—
What mean you, madam! I have made no fault:
Cleo. Enter Messenger.

Cleo. Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some innocents 'scape not the thunderbolt.
Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures
Turn all to serpents!—Call the slave again;
Though I am mad, I will not bite him.—Call,
Char. He is afraid to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him:—
These hands do lack nobility, that they strike
A meaner than myself; since I myself
Have given myself the cause.—Come hitter, sir.

Re-enter Messenger.

Though he be honest, it is never good
To drop bad tidings. Give to a gracious message
A host of tongs; but let ill tidings tell
Themselves, when they be felt.

Mess. Have I done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?
I cannot hate thee worse than I do,
If thou again say, Yes.

Mess. He is married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo. O, I would, thou didst;
So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scaled snakes! Go, get thee hence;
Hast thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldst appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.

Cleo. He is married!

Cleo. Take no offence, that I would not offend
To punish me for what you make me do.

Cleo. He is married?

Mess. He is married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo. O, I would, thou didst;
So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scaled snakes! Go, get thee hence;
Hast thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldst appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.

Cleo. He is married!

Cleo. Take no offence, that I would not offend
To punish me for what you make me do.

Cleo. He is married?

Mess. He is married, madam.

A cistern for scaled snakes! Go, get thee hence;
Hast thou Narcissus in thy face, to me

Cleo. He is married!

Cleo. Take no offence, that I would not offend
To punish me for what you make me do.

Cleo. He is married!

To punish me for what you make me do.

Cleo. He is married?

Mess. He is married, madam.
SCENE VI.—Near Misenum.

Enter POMPEY and MEXAS, at one side, with Drum and Trumpet; at another, CAESAR, Antony, ENobarBUS, Mecenas, with Soldiers bearing a Trumpet;

Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you mine;
And we shall talk before we fight.
Cae. Most meet, That first we come to words; and therefore have we Our written purposes before us sent;
Which, if thou hast considered, let us know If 'twill tie up thy discontented sword;
And carry back to Sicily much tall youth That else must perish here.

Pom. Those matters alone of this great world, Chief factors for the gods,—I do not know, Wherefore my father should avengers want, Having a son, and friends; since Julius Caesar, Who at Philippi the great Brutus shone, There saw you laboring for him. What was it, That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire? And what Made the all-hon'rd, honest, Roman Brutus, With the arm'd rest, courteous of beauteous freedom, To drench the Capitol; but that they would Have one man but a man! And that is it,
Hath made me rig my navy; at whose burden The anger'd ocean foams; with which I meant To scourge the ingratitude that despiteful Rome Cuts on my noble father.

Cae. Take your time.
Ant. Thou canst not bear us, Pompey, with thy sails!
We'll speak with thee at sea; at land, thou know'st How much we do o'er-count thee.

Pom. At land, indeed, Thou dost o'er-count me of my father's house; But, sir, the eagle cooks not for himself, Remain in't, as thou may'st.
Lep. (For this is from the present, how) you take The offers we have sent you. There's the point. Ant. Which do not entreat to, but weigh What it is worth embraced.
Cae. And what may follow, To try a larger fortune.

Pom. You have made me offer Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Rid all the sea of pirates; then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome; This I agree upon, To part with unack'd edges, and bear back Our targets un дальted.

Cae. Ant. Lep. That's our offer.

Pom. Know, then, I came before you here, a man prepar'd To take this offer: But Mark Antony, Put me to some impatience:—Though I lose The praise of it by telling, you must know, When Caesar and your brothers were at blows, Your mother came to Sicily, and did find Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey; And am well studied for a liberal thanks, Which I do owe you. Let me have your hand: I did not think, sir, to have met you here.

Ant. The beds it the east are soft; and thanks to Pompey.

That call'd me, timelier than my purpose, hither, For I have gain'd by it.

Cae. Since I saw you last, There is a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not What counts' harsh fortune casts upon my face; But in my bosom she never come, To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. Well met here.

Pom. I hope so, Lepidus.—Thus we are agreed: I crave, an epistle may be written And seal'd between us.

Cae. That's the next to do.

Pom. We'll feast each other, ere we part; and let us Draw lots who shall begin.
Ant. That will I, Pompey.

Pom. No, Antony, take the hot; but, first, Or last, your fine Egyptian cookery Shall have the fame. I have heard, that Julius Caesar Grew fat with feasting there.

Ant. You have heard much.

Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.

Ant. And fair words to them.

Pom. Then so much have I heard:
And I have heard, Apollodorus carried—

Cae. No more of that:—He did so.

Pom. What, I pray you!

Cae. A certain queen to Caesar in a mistress, Pompey, I know thee now:—How far'st thou, soldier?

Cae. Well: And we'll am like to do: for, I perceive, Four feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand; I never hated thee; I have seen thee fight, When I have envied thy behavior.

Cae. I never lov'd you much: but I have prais'd you, When you have well deserv'd ten times as much As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness, It nothing ill becomes thee. Aboard my galley, I invite you all: Will you lend, lords?

Cae. Ant. Lep. Show us the way, sir.

Pom. [Exit Pompey, Caesar, Antony, Lepidus, Brutus, and Attendants.]

Men. Thy father, Pompey, would never have made this treaty.—[Aside] —You and I have known, sir.

Men. At sea, I think.

Men. We have, sir.

Men. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Men. I will be such a man that will praise me, though it cannot be denied what I have done by land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water.

Men. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety; you have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

Men. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand. Men. If our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Men. All men's faces are true, whatsoever their hands are.

Men. But there is never a fair woman has a true face.

Men. No slander; they steal hearts.

Men. We come hither to fight with you. Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Men. If he do, sure he cannot keep it back again.

Men. You have said, sir. We looked not for Mark Antony here: Pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Men. Caesar's sister is called Octavia.

Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Cains Marcellus.

Men. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius. Men. Pray you, sir!

Men. This true.

Men. Then is Caesar and he for ever knit together.

Men. If were bound to divine of this unity, I would not be a conjurer so.

Men. I think the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties.

Men. I think so too. But you shall find, the band that seems to tie their friendship together,
Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith:
What's else to say?
Be jolly, lords.

Ant. These quicksands, Lepidus,
Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Wit thou be lord of all the world?
Pom. What say'st thou?

Men. Wit thou be lord of the whole world?
Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it, and,
Although you think me poor, I am the man
Will give thee all the world.
Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.
Thou art, it thou darst be, the earthy Jove:
What's ocean plashes? or sky incepts,
Is thine, if thou wilt have.
Pom. Show me which way.

Men. These three world-sharers, these competitors,
Are in thy vessel: Let me cut the cable:
And, when we are put off, fail to their throats:
All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou shouldst have done,
And not have spoken't! In me, 'tis villany;
In thee, it had been good service. Thou must know,
It is no profit that cloth lend man honor:
Mine honor, it, Repeat, that e'er thy tongue
 Hath so betray'd thine act: being done unknown,
I should have found it afterwards well done;
But must be seen in it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. For this!

[Aside.
I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more.—
Who seeks, and will not take, when once 'tis offer'd,
Shall never find it more.

This health to Lepidus.
Ant. Bear him ashore.—I'll pledge him for it.
Pom. Here's to thee, Menas.

Men. For this I thank thee, Lepidus.

Menas, welcome.

Men. Fill till the cup be hid.

[Pointing to the Attendant who carries off Lepidus.

Why?

Men. I knew well forbear it.

This health to Lepidus.

Men. The third part of the world, man: Seest not?
Men. The third part then is drunk: 'Would it were all,
That it might go on wheels!

Pom. Drink thou thus; increase the reeds.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. Get thee towards it.—Strike the vessels, ho!
Here is to Caesar.

Cas. I could well forbear it.

It's monstrous labor when I wash my brain,
And it gruses faster.

Ant. Be a child o' the time.

Cas. Possess'd? it, I'll make answer: But I had rather fast.
From all, four days, than drink so much in one.

Eua. Ha, my brave emperor! [To Antony,
Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals,
And celebrate our drink?

Ant. Let's not, good soldier.

Ant. Come, let us all take hands;

That the conquering wine hath steep'd our sense
In sweet and delicate Lute.

Eua. All take hands.—

Make battery to our ears with the loud music:—
The while, I'll pace you: Then the boy shall sing,
The holding every man shall hear, as loud
As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. Exeunt SERVANTS.]

Pomp. [Aside.]

S O N G.

Come, come, monarch of the vine,
Plump'ry Bacchus, with pink cup:—

In thy cups our cares he drown'd;
With thy grease our hairs be crown'd;

Cup us, till the world go round;
Cup us, till the world go round.

Cas. What would you more!—Pompey, good-night.
Good brother, [Exeunt.]

Act III.

SCENE I.—A Plain in Syria.

Enter Ventidius, as offer conferred, with Silius, and other Romans, Officers and Soldiers; the dead Body of Marcus Crassus borne before him.

Ven. Now, daring Parthia, art thou struck; and now Plea'd fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death Make me a revenger.—Hear the king's son's body Before our army—Thy Parucus, Orodes, Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

Sili. Noble Ventidius, Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm, The festive Parthians follow; spur through Media, Mesopotamia, and the shelters whither The king's son is gone; so thy grand captain, Antony Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head. Ven. O Silius, Silius, I have done enough: A lower place, and well, May make too great an act: For learn this, Silius; Better leave undone, than by our deed acquire Too high a fame, when he who won is ouraway: Cesar and Antony have ever won More in their officer, than person: Sosius, One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant, For quick accumulation of renown, Which he achieved by the minute, lost his favor; Who does i' the wars more than his captain can, Becomes his captian's captain; and ambition, That god's virtue, which makes choice of loss, Than gain, which darkens him. I could do more to do Antonius good, But 'would offend him; and in his offence Should be my performance perch. Sit. Thou hast, Ventidius, That without which a soldier, and his sword, Grants scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to Antony.

Ven. I'll humbly signify what in his name, That magick word of war, we have effected: There with his banners, and his well-paid ranks, The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia We have jaded out o' the field. Sit. Ven. He purposeth to Athens: whither with what haste The weight we must convey with us will permit, We shall appear before him.—On, there; pass along. [Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa and Enobarbus, meeting.

Aggr. What, are the brothers parted?
Enn. They have despatch'd with Pompey, he is gone:
The other three are sealing. Octavia weeps To part from Rome; Cesar is sad; and Lepidus, Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled With the green-sickness.

Octav. Caesar was the son of Orestes, king of Parthia.

Enn. Take heed you fall not—[Exeunt Pompey, Caesar, Antony, and Attendants.

Menas. I'll not on shore.

Men. No, to my cabin,—These drums, these trumpets, blasted! what!—Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell To these great fellows: sound, and be hang'd, sound out.

[Flourish of Trumpets, with Drums.

Enn. Ho, says 'a!—There's my cap.

Men. Ho!—noble captain! Come. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

Scene I.—A Camp opposite Parthenium.

Enter Pompey, Cæsar, Antony, and Octavia.

Enn. Spake you of Caesar? How! the nonpareil! Cæs. O, thou Arabian bird! Enn. Would you praise Caesar, say,—Cæsar—go to further. Cæs. Indeed, he pl'y'd them both with excellent praises. Enn. But he loves Caesar best;—Yet he loves Antony: Ho! he's a soldier, a soldier, a soldier;—and the sword. Enn. Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho, his love To Antony. But as for Caesar, Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder. Cæs. Both he loves. Enn. They are his shars, and he their beetle. This is to horse.—Adieu, noble Agrippa. Cæs. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell. Enter Caesar, Antony, Lepides, and Octavia.

Cæs. No further sir.

Cæs. You take from me a great part of myself; Use me well in it.—Sister, prove such a wife As my thoughts make thee, and as my further hand Shall pass on thy approbation.—Most noble Antony, Let not the piece of virtue, which is set Betwixt us, as the cement of our love, To keep it unbent, he the ram, to batter The fortress of it: for better might we Have loved without this mean, if on both parts That be not cherish'd.

Enn. Make me not offended In your distrust.

Cæs. I have said.

And. You shall not find, Though you be therein curious, the least cause For what you seem to fear: So, the gods keep you, And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends! We will have part.

Cæs. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee well; The elements he kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort! fare thee well. Octa. My noble brother!—

And. The April's in her eyes: It's love's spring, And these the showers to bring it on—Be cheerful. Octa. Sir, look well to my husband's house; and—

Enn. What, Octavia?

Octa. I'll tell you in your ear. And. Her bargain will not obey her heart, nor can Her heart inform her tongue: the swain's down feather, That stands upon the swell at full of tide, And other way inclines.

Enn. Will Caesar weep? [Aside to Agrippa.

Cæs. He has a cloud in's face.

Enn. He were the worse for that, were he a horse; So is he, being a man.

And. Why, Enobarbus? When Antony found Julius Caesar dead, He cried almost to roaring; and he wept, When at Philippi he found Brutus slain. Enn. That year, indeed, he was troubled with a rheum; What willingly he did confound, he wail'd: Believe it, till I weep too.

SCENE IV.—Athens. A Room in Antony’s House.

Enter Antony and Octavia.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia; not only that,— That were excusable, that, and thousands more Of sensible import—but he hath waged New wars ’gainst Pompey, made his will, and read it To public ear:

Spoke scandal of me: when perforce he could not But pay the terms he had exacted, cold and sickly He vended them; most narrow measure lent me: When the best hunt was given him, he not took’t; Or did it from his teeth,

Oct. O my good lord, Believe not all; or, if you must believe, Stock, not all. A more unhappy lady, If this division chances, he’s er’st stood between, Praying for both parts,

And the good gods will mock me presently, When I shall pray, O, bless my lord and husband! Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud, O, bless my brother! Husband win, win brother, Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway

Twist these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,

Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks Best to preserve it: If I lose mine honor, I lose myself; better I were not yours,

Than you are now ornaments. But, as you requested, Yourself shall go between us: The mean time, lady, I’ll raise the preparation of a war Shall stain your brother: Make your nearest haste; So your desires are yours.

Oct. Thanks to your lord.
The love of power make me, most weak, most weak,

Your recommenced Wars twist you tramway would Be as if the world should cleave, and that slan men Should underslip the rub.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins Turn you to displeasure that way: for our parts Can never be so equal, that your love Can equally move with them. Provide your going; Choose your own company, and command what cost Your heart and mind to.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Enobarbus and Eros, meeting.

Eno. How now, friend Eros!

Eros. There’s strange news come, sir.

Eno. What, man?

Eros. Caesar and Lepidus have made wars upon Pompey.

Eno. This is old: What is the success?

Eros. Caesar, having made use of him in the wars against Pompey, presently denied him rivalry: He would not let him partake in the glory of the action: and not resting here, accuses him of letting his maners he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal, seizes him: so the poor third is up, till death shall end his misfortune.

Eno. Then, world, thou hast a pair of chaps, no more: And through them all the food thou hast, They’ll grip the one the other. Where’s Antony?

Eros. He’s walking in the garden—thus; and Enobarbus. The rush swords, the hours before him; cries For, Lepidus! And threateth the throat of that his officer, that murder’d Pompey.

Eros. Our great navy’sriged.

Eros. For Italy, and Caesar. More, Domitius! My lord desires you presently: my news I might have told hereafter.

Eno. ’Twill be naught: But let it be.—Bring me to Antony.

Eros. Come, sir.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Rome. A Room in Caesar’s House.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Mecenas.

Caesar. Contemplating Rome, he has done all this:

And more;

1 Indistinct, through his teeth.
2 Disgrace.
3 What follows?
4 i.e. Lepidus.
5 Equal rank.
6 Action.
SCENE VII.—ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

In Alexandria,—here's the manner of it,—
I' the market-place, on a tribunal'sd, Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd at the feet, sat
Cesaron, whom they call my father's son;
And all the unwiso issue, that their lust
Since then hath made between them. Unto her
He gave the Establishment of Egypt; made her
Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydna, an Absolute queen.

Ces. *This in the public eye?
Ces. I'the common show-place, where they ex-nerse.
His son he there proclaim'd, The kings of Kings:
Great Ptolemy, and the Parthian,
He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy, he assign'd
Syria, Sicilia, and Phoenicia: She
In the habitations of the goddess of
That very afternoon; and oft before gave audience,
As 'ts reported, so.

Let Rome be thus Inform'd.
Who, quacks'éd with his insolence
Already, will their good thoughts call from him,
Ces. The people know it; and have now receive'd
His accusations.

Ags. *Whom does he accuse?
Ces. Caesar; and, that, having in Sicily
Sextius Pompeius spoil'd, we have not rated
His part of the isle: they does he say, he lent me
Some shipping unreserved: lastly, he trets,
That Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should be depos'd; and, being, that we detain
All his revenue.

Ags. *Sir, this should be answer'd.
Ces. *This done already, and the messenger gone.
I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel;
That he, a high authority abus'd;
And did deserve his change; for what I have con-
quer'd.
I grant him part; but then, in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I
Demand the like.

Ces. He'll never yield to that.
Ces. Not must not then be yielded to in this.

Enter OCTAVIA.

Oct. Hail, Caesar, and my lord! hail, most dear
Cesar!
Ces. That ever I should call thee, cast-away!
Oct. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause.
Ces. Why have you stoll'n upon us thus? You come not
Like Caesar's sister: The wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The majesty of horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appear; the trees by the way
Should have borne men; and expectation faint,
Longing for what it had not: nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven,
Ras'd by your populous troops: But you are come
A market maid to Rome; and have prevented
The extent of our love, which, left untouch'd,
Is often left unvold: we should have met you
By sea, and land; suppying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Oct. Good my lord,
To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free-will. My lord, Mark Antony,
Hath sent word that you预备 for war, acquired
My grieved ear withal; whereon, I beg'd
His pardon for return.

Ces. Which soon he granted,
Being an obtruct' between him and his.

Octa. Do not say so, my lord.

Ces. I have eyes upon him,
And his affairs come to me on the wind.
What be he now?

Octa. My lord, in Athens.

Ces. No, my most wronged sister; Cleopatra
Hath soli'd him to her. He hath given his empire
Up to a whore; who now are living.
The kings o' the earth for war: He hath assembled
Bocceus, the king of Lybia; Archelaus
Of Cappadocia; Philadephos, king
Of Cappadocia; the Thracian king, Adalass;
King Medus of Arabia; king of Pont;
Sick, disgusted. *Assigned. *Show, token,

Herod of Jewry; Mithridates, king
Of Comagene; Ptolemaeus and Ambrosius,
The kings of M'de, and Lycaonum, with a
More larger list of seas.'

Octa. Ah me, most wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two friends,
That do afflict each other!
Octa. *Welcome hither:
Your letters did withhold our breaking forth;
Till we perceive' d how you were wrong led,
And in our negligent duty.
Ces. You are not troubled with the time, which drives
O'er your content these strong necessities:
But let determin'd things to destroy
Hold unbelov'd this moment. Welcome to Rome:
Nothing more dear to me. You are abused
Beyond the mark of thought: and the high gods,
To do you justice, make them ministers
Of us, and every hour with you. Best of comfort;
And ever welcome to us.

Octa. Welcome, lady.
Mec. Welcome, dear madam.
Each heart in Rome does love and pity you:
Only the adulterous Antony, most laige
In his abominations, turns you off;
And gives his patent regime's to a trull,
That insults it against.

Octa. Is it so, sir?
Mec. Most certain. Sister, welcome: Pray you,
Be ever known to patience: My dearest sister!

SCENE VII.—Antony's Camp near the Pronomorary of Actium.

Enter CLEOPATRA AND ENOBARBUS.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.
Enob. But why, why, why?
Cleo. Thou hast forspoke'my being in these wars,
And say'st, it is not fit.

Enob. Well, is it? is it?
Cleo. 'Tis not? Denounce against us, why should not we
Be there in person?
Enob. Aside. Well, I could reply:
If we should serve with horse and mares together,
The horse were merely 1 hust; the mares would bear
A soldier, and his horse.

Cleo. What's t'you say?
Enob. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony;
Take from his heart, take from his brain, from his time,
What should not then be spared. He is already
Traduced for levity; and 'is said in Rome
That Photinus an cunmich, and your muids,
Manage this war.

And sink Rome; and their tongues rot,
That speak against us! A charge we bear it thewar,
And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind.

Enob. Nay, I have done:
Here comes the emperor.

Enter ANTONY AND CASSIUS.

Ant. 'Is not strange, Cassius,
That from Tarentum, and Brundisium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in 'toryne— You have heard on't sweet!
Cleo. Cerehy is never more admired,
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well become the best of men,
To taunt at slackness—Cassius, we
Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! What else?
Ant. Why will my lord do so?
Cleo. For he dares us to it.
Ant. So hath my lord dared him to single fight.
Cleo. Ay, and to wage this battle at Tharsalia,
Where Caesar fought with Pompey: But these offers,
Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off;
And should you, so.

Enob. Your ships are not well mann'd:
Your mariners are mutineers, repeacers, people
Ingross'd he lost that he met in Cesar's fleet
Are those, that often have 'gainst Pompey fought:

Their ships are yere; yours, heavy. No disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepar’d for land.
Aunt. By sea, by sea.
Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiery you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of yon’ hard-mouthed, leave unexercised
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forgo
The way which promises assurance; and
Grow up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
From other security. I’ll fight at sea.
Aunt. I have sixty sails? Caesar none better.
Our overplus of shipping will we burn;
And, with the rest full-main’d from the head of Act
Beat the approaching Caesar. But if we fail,
Enter a Messenger.
We then can do at land.—Thy business?
Mess. The news is true, my lord; he is desir’d;
Caesar has taken Tivyme.
Aunt. Can he be there in person? ’tis impossible;
Strange, his power should be.—Cænius,
Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land,
And our twelve thousand horse:—We’ll to our ship;
Enter a Soldier.
Away, my Thetis!—How now, worthy soldier!
Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea;
Trust not to rotten planks: Do you misdoubt
This sword, and these my wounds? Let the Egyptians,
And the Phænicians, go a-ducking; we
Have used to conquer, standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.
Aunt. Well, well, away.
[Exeunt, Antony, Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.
Sold. By Hercules, I think, I am’t the right.
Thou, soldier, think’st, but his whole action grows
Not in the power on’t: So our leader’s led,
And we are women’s men.
Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not?
Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Justinius,
Pothicola, and Cælius, are for sea:
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Caesar’s
Carries beyond belief.
Sold. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distinctions, as Beguiled all space.
Can. Who’s his lieutenant, hear you? Sold. They say, one Taurus.
Can. Well I know the man.
Aunt. Enter a Messenger.
Mess. The emperor calls for Camillus.
Can. Will you this news to the tune’s with labor, and throes forth[1];
Each minute, some. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—A Plain near Actium.
Enter Caesar, Taurus, Officers, and others.

Can. Taurus,—
Taur. My lord.
Can. O sir, strike not by land; keep whole;
Provoke not battle, till we have his all.
Do not exceed the prescript of this scroll;
Our fortune lies upon this jump. [Exeunt. Enter Antony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on you side o’th’ hill,
In eye of Caesar’s battle from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. [Exeunt.
Enter Camillus, marching with his Land Army
one way over the slaves; and Taurus, the Lieutenants of Caesar, the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a Sea-Fight.

A Taurum. Re-enter Enobarbus.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can behold
no longer:
The Antonius, the Egyptian admiral,
With all his sixty, fly, and turn the rudder;
To see ’t, mine eyes are blasted.

[Name of Cleopatra’s ship.

Enter Scared.

Scarc. Gods, and goddesses, All the whole synod of them?
Eno. What’s thy passion?
Scarc. The greater candle of the world is lost
With very ignorance; we have kiss’d away
Kings and provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?
Scarc. On our side like the toke’d[5] pestilence,
Where death is sure. You ribatt-rid out of Egypt,
Whom leprosy o’take: if the midst o’ the pestilence,—
When Vintage like a pair of twins appear’d,
Both the same, or rather ours the rider,—
The brize[6] upon her, like a cow in June,—
Hoists sails, and flies.

Eno. That I beheld: mine eyes
Did sicken at the sight on’t, and could not Endure a further view.

Eno. She once being loofd,[8]
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,
Chips on his sea-wins, and like a dying mallard,
Leaving the flight in height, flies after her:
I never saw an action of such shame;
Experience, manhood, honor, ne’er before
Did violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack!

Eno. Enter Camillus.

Eno. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinketh last lamentably. Had our general
Been what he knew himself, it had gone well;
0, he has given example of our flight,
Most grossly by his own.
Eno. Are Antony and you thereabouts? Why then, good-night;

[Aside.

Eno. Our fortune is no worse.
Scarc. Tis easy to say, and there we will attend
What further comes.

Eno. To Caesar will I render
My legions and my horse: six kings already
Show the way of yielding.

Eno. I’ll yet follow
The wounded chance of Antony, though my reason
Sits in the wind against me. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palatace.

Enter Antony and Attendants.

Ant. Hark, the land bids me tread no more upon’t,
It is ashamed to bear me! Friends, some hither,
I am settled! in the world, that I
Have lost my way for ever:—I have a ship
Laden with gold; take that, divide it: fly,
And make your peace with Caesar.

[Aside.

Ant. I have fled myself; and have instructed
Cowards to run, and show their shoulders.—Friends, be gone;
I have myself resolved’ upon a course,
Which has no need of you; be gone:
My treasure’s in the harbor, take it,—O,
I follow’d that I blush to look upon;
My very hairs do mutiny; for the white
Reprieve the brown for rashness, and them
For fear and doing.—Friends, be gone: you shall Have letters from me to some friends, that will Sweep your way for you. Pray you, look not sad,
Nor make replies of loathing; take the hint
Which I was dispartly proclaims; let that be left
Which leaves myself: to the sea-side, straightway:
I will possess you of that ship and treasure,
Leave me, I pray, a little: ’tis, pray you now:—
Nay, do not so; indeed, I have lost command,
Therefore I pray you:—I’ll see you by and by.

[Silts down.

Enter Eros and Cleopatra, led by Charmian and Iras.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him:—Comfort
him:—
Iras. Do, most dear queen,
Chir. De! Why, what else?
Cleo. Let me sit down. 0 June! Ant. No, no, no, no.
Eros. See you here, sir.
Scott. Brought close to the wind.

[Related, heightened.
Scene XI. Antony and Cleopatra.

Ant. O fye, fye, fye.
Char. Madam,—
Iras. Madam! O good empress!—
Eros. Sir, sir.
Ant. Yes, my lord; yes;—He, at Philippi, kept
His sword even like a dancer; while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius; and twas I,
That the mad Brutus ended: he alone,
I know not how: but 'twas without practice
In the brave squares of war: Yet now,—No matter.
Cleo. Ah, stand by.
Eros. The queen, my lord, the queen.
Iras. Go to him, madam, speak to him;
He is unparalleled with very shame.
Cleo. Well then,—Sustain me,—O! of Eros. Most noble sir, arise: the queen approaches;
Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her; but
Your comfort makes the rescue.
What has I offended reputation;
A most unnoble swerving.
Eros. Sir, the queen.
Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt? See,
How I convey my shame out of thine eyes.
By looking back on what I have left behind
'Stroy'd in dishonor.
Cleo. O my lord, my lord! For My fearful sakes! I little thought,
You would have followed.
Ant. Egypt, thou know'st too well,
My heart was to thy mother tied by the strings,
And I should tow me at her feet after thou hadst
Thy full supremacy thou know'st; and that Thy neck might from the bidding of the gods
Command me.
Cleo. O, my pardon.
Ant. Now I must
To the young man soul humble treaties, dodger
And gather in the shifts of lowness who
With half the bulk of the world play'd as I please'd,
Making and marring fortunes. You did know
How much you were my conqueror; and that
My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all causes.
Cleo. O, pardon, pardon.
Ant. Fall not a tear, I say: one of them rates
All that is won and lost: give me a kiss;
Even this requises me.—We sent our schoolmaster;
Is he come back?—Love, I am full of lead:
Some wine, within there, and our viands:—Fortune knows,
We scorn her most, when most she offers blows.
[Exeunt.}

Scene XI.—Cæsar's Camp in Egypt.
Enter Cæsar, Doliabella, Thryesus, and others.

Cæs. Let him appear that's come from Antony,—
Know you him?
Dol. Cæsar, 'tis his schoolmaster:
A man that is plunged, when he will, in
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing,
Which did have superfluous wings for messengers,
Not many moons gone by.
Enter Euphorines.

Cæs. Approach, and speak.
Eup. Such as I am, I come from Antony:
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the mower-duck to the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea.
Cæs. Exp. Lord of his fortunes, he salutes thee, and Requires to live in Egypt: which not granted,
He leaves his requests; and to thee says,
To him breathe between the heavens and earth,
A private man in Athens: This for him.
Ner. Cleopatra does confess thy greatness;
Submits her to thy might; and of thee craves
The circle* of the Plutarch for her heirs,
Now hazarded to thy grace.
Cæs. For Antony,
I have no care to his request. The queen
Of audience, nor desire, shall half fail, so she
From Egypt drive her all-disgrieved friend,
Or take his life there: This if she perform,
She shall not see unharm'd. So to them both.
Eup. I will.
Cæs. Exp. To his: I will.
Ner. Exp. Wilt thou hear his words?
Eup. He has described to me, with what ardor,
The imperial greatness of the Roman Cæsar.
Cæs. Exp. Euphorines, schoolmaster to Antony's children.
Ner. Exp. Fought by his officers.
Ant. Exp. Tasted of his faculties.
Eup. Exp. In equal value.
Fu. Exp. Euphorines, schoolmaster to Antony's children.
Hark! I hear.

Enter Thryesus.

Cæs. Cæsar's will!—
Thyr. Hear it apart.
Cæs. None but friends; say boldly.

Cæs. Conforms himself to this breach of his fortune.
Thyr. The only cause of dispute.
Cæs. Circumstances of splendor.
Cæs. Are of a piece with them.

Euphorines. To try thy eloquence, now 'tis time: Despatch;
From Antony win Cleopatra: promise
[To Thryesus.
And in our name, what she requires; add more,
From thine own conduct, promises of friendship.
In their best fortunes, strong; but want will purgur
The enemy's defiance: Try thine cunning, Thryesus;
Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we
Will answer as a low.
Thyr. Cæsar, I go.
Cæs. Observe how Antony becomes his flaw,*
And what thou think'st his very action speaks
In every power that moves.
Cæs. I shall.

Scene XI.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?
Eno. Think, and die.
Cleo. Is Antony, or we, in fault for this?
Euphorines. That which would make his will Lord of his reason. What although you fled
From that great face of war, whose several ranges
Frighted each other? why should he follow?
The itch of his ambition should then have
Have nick'd his captiuncus: at such a point,
When half to the half world oppos'd, he being
The merest question! Twas a shame no less
Than was his loss, to cause your flying flag,
And leave his navy gazing.
Cleo. Priy'he, peace.
Enter Antony, with Euphorines.

Ant. Is this his answer?
Eup. Ay, my lord.
Ant. The queen
Shall then have courtesy, so she will yield
Us up.
Eup. He says so.
Ant. Let her know it.—
To the boy Cæsar send this grizzled head,
And he will till thy wishes to the brim
With principalities.
Cleo. That head, my lord?
Ant. To him again; tell him he wears the rose
Of youth upon him; from which the world should

Enter Euphorines.

Eup. Yes, like enough, high-batt'ed Cæsar will Unstate his happiness, and be staged to the show,
Against a stranger.—I see, men's judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes: and things exterior
Do draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. I that he should dream,
Knowing all measures, the full Cæsar will Answer his emptiness!—Cæsar, thou hast subdued
His judgment too.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. A messenger from Cæsar.
Cleo. What, no more ceremony!—See, my women!—
Against the thrown rose may they stop their nose,
That knell'd unto the buds.—Admit him, sir,
Eno. Mine honesty, and I, begin to square.

The loyalty, well held to fools, does make
Our faith more folly:—ye, he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a tamen lord,
Does conquer him whom he did his master conquer,
And earns a place i' the story.

Enter Thryesus.

Cleo. Cæsar's will!—
Thyr. Hear it apart.
Cleo. None but friends; say boldly.

[Aside.

Cleo. Conforms himself to this breach of his fortune.
1 The only cause of dispute.
2 Circumstances of splendor.
3 In age and power.
4 Are of a piece with them.
5 Quarrel.
Thy. So, happily, are they friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, sir, as Caesar has;
Or needs not us. If Caesar please, our master
Will leap to be his friend: For us, you know,
Whose he is, we are; and that's Caesar's.

Thy. So—

Thau. the thon, thou most renown'd; Caesar entreats,
Not to consider in what case thou stand'lt.
Further than he is Caesar.

Cleo. Go on: Right royal.

Thy. He knows, that you embrace not Antony
As you did love, but as you fear'd him.

Cleo. O

Thy. The scars upon your honor, therefore, he Does pity, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserv'd.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows
What is most right: Mine honor was not yielded,
But conquer'd merely.

Eno. To be sure of that, [Aside.]

Cleo. I will ask Antony,—Sir, sir, thou'lt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee.

[Exit Eosinaraus.

Thy. Shall I say to Caesar
What you require of him? for he partly begs
To be desired to give. It much would please him, that
Of his fortunes you should make a staff
To lean upon: but it would warm his spirits,
To hear from you he had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud,
The universal landlord.

Cleo. What's your name?

Thy. My name is Thyreus.

Most kind messenger,
Say to great Caesar this: In disputations
I kiss his conquering hand: tell him I am prompt
To lay my crown at his feet, and there to kneel:
Tell him it from his almighty breath I hear
The doom of Egypt.

Thy. To your noblest course,
With fortune and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can.
No chance may shake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.

Your Caesar's father,
Oft, when he hath mused of taking kingdoms in,
Re-low'd his hips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses.

Re-enter Antony and Eosinaraus.

Ant. Favors, by Jove that thunders!—
Who art thou, fellow? One, that but performs
The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To have command obey'd.

Eno. You will be whipp'd.

Ant. Approach, there—Ay, you kite!—Now gods and devils!
Authority melts from me: Offlate, when I ried, Ha!
like a king, my kings would go forth,
And cry, Your will? Have you no ears? I am
Enter Attendants.

Antony yet. Take hence this Jack, and whip him.

Eno. This better playing with a lion's whole,
Than with an old one dying.

Ant. Moon and stars! Whip him; weren't twenty of the greatest tribunes
That do acknowledge Caesar, should I find there
Sparing with the hand of heare all? Call her name
Since she was Cleopatra?]—Whip him, fellows;
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whose alms for mercy: Take him hence.

Thau. Mark Antony.

Ant. Tug him away: being whipp'd,
Bring him again: This Jack of Caesar's shall Bear us an enmity to him.

[Exit Mark Antony.

Ant. You have been a boggar evermore;
But when we in our viciousness grow hard,
Supposed to be an error for depletion. e. & by proxy.
Obeyed. grant me the favor. Conquering.
Scorn'd. A form of contempt. Servants.

[O misery on't!] the wise gods send our eyes,
In our own filth drop our clear judgments; make us
Adore our errors: laugh at us, while we strut
To our confusion.

Cleo. O, is it come to this?

Ant. I found you as a modest, cold upon
Dead Caesar's bier: marry, you were a fragment
Of Cæsar's manners: besides what better hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fume, you have
Luxuriously pick'd out:—For, I am sure,
Though you can guess what temperance should be,
You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this? Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards,
And God give him! be familiar with
My play-fellow, your hand; this kingly seat,
And plitger of high hearts!—O, that I were
Upon the hill of basan, to outgrow
The hoard'd herd! for I have savage cause;
And to proclaim it civilly, were like
A halter'd neck, which does the hangman thank
For being yare about him.—Is he whipp'd?

Re-enter Attendants, with Thyr. Eos. I. Ant. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. Cry'd he! and begg'd he pardon? I. Ant. He did ask favor.

Ant. It that thy father live, let him repent
Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou sorry
To ask the knew'd I was: he makes me angry;
And at this time most easy 's to det'.'

Thau. When my good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shut their fires
Into the abyss of hell.

My speech, and what is done; tell him, he has Hipparchus, my enfranchis'd handmaid, whom
He has measure was ship, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like, to quiñ'te me: Urse it thou:
Hence, with thy stripes, be gone.

[Exit Thyr. Eos. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack, our terrane moon
Is now eclips'd; and it portends alone
The fall of Antony !

Cleo. Ant. must stay his time.

Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes
With one that tics his points?

Cleo. Not know me yet;

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah, dear, if I be so,
From my cold heart let heaven engender guilt,
And poison it in the source; and the first stone
Drop upward, and by its fall it determines;
Dissolve my life! The next Caesar's! smite
Till, by degrees, the memory of my womb,
Together with my brave Egyptians all,
By the disencriding of this pelleted storm,
Lie graceless; till the flies and gnats of Nile
Have buried them for prey?

Ant. I am satisfied.

Cleo. Cæsar sits down in Alexandria; where
I will oppose his fate. Our force by land
Hath nobly held; our sever'd navy too
Have kept again, and fleet; threat'ning most see.

Where hast thou been, my heart?—Dost thou hear
Lady from the field I shall return once more
To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;
I and my sword will crown our chronicle;
There is hope in it yet.

Ant. That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciously: for when nine hours
Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives
Of me say so; but now, I'll set my teeth
And send to darkness all that stop me. Come,
Let's have one other gaudy night: call to me
All my sad captives, till our bowls; once more
Let's in the midnight hell.

• Cleop. Close up. Ready, handy. • Requite.

• Earthly. Dissolves. • Her son by Julius Caesar.

• Molting. • Float. • Trilling.
Act IV.

SCENE I.—Cæsar's Camp at Alexandria.

Enter Cæsar, reading a Letter; Agrrippa, Me-
Cenax, and others.

Cæsar. He calls me boy; and chides, as he had

To beat me out of Egypt: my messenger

He hath whip'd with rods; dareces me to personal

Contact.

Cæsar to Antony: Let the old ruffian know,

I have many other ways to die; meantime,

Laugh at his challenge.

Me. Cæsar must think.

When one so great beems to rage, he's hunted

Even to talking. Give him no breath, but now

Make boot of his distraction: Never anger

Made good guard for itself.

Cæs. Let our best heads

Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles

We mean to fight:—Within our files there are,

Of those that serv'd Mark Antony but late,

Enough to pitch him in.

See it be done;

And rouse the army; we have store to do,

And they have car'd the waste. Poor Antony!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antony, Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian,
Iras, Alexas, and others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Dominius.

Eno. No.

Ant. Why should he not?

Eno. He thinks, being twice better of fortune,

He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,

By sea and land I'll fight: or I will live,

Or fall in my dying honor in the blood

Shall make it live again.

Won't thou fight well?

Eno. I'll strike; and cry, Take all.

Ant. Well said; come on.—

Call forth my household servants; let's to-night

Enter Servants.

Be bounteous at our meal.—Give me thy hand,

Thou hast been rightly honest;—so hast thou;

And thou,—and thou,—and thou,—you have serv'd

me well,

And kings have been your fellows.

Cleo. What means this?

Eno. 'Tis one of those odd tricks, which sorrow

shews.

Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too.

I wish I could be made so many men;

And all of you clapp'd up together:

And Antony: that I might do service,

So good as you have done.

Serv. The gods forbid!

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-night:

Scorn not my cups, and make as much of me,

As when my empire was your fellow too,

And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. What does he mean?

Eno. To make his followers weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night;

May be, it is the period of your duty:

Hapily, you shall not see me more; or if,

A mangled shadow; perchance to-morrow

You'll serve another master. I look on you,

As one that takes his brave. Mine honest friends,

I turn you not away; but, like a master

* Take advantage.

I'll make death love me; for I will contend

Even with his pestilent scythe.

Exit. Cæsar, Cleopatra, and Attendants.

Eno. Now he'll out-stare the lightning. To be furious

Is, to be frightened out of fear; and in that mood,

The dove will peck the ostrich: and I see still,

A diminution in our captain's brain

Restores his heart: When valor preys on reason,

It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek

Some way to leave him.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

Married to your good service, stay till death:

Tend me to-night two hours. I ask no more,

And the gods yield you not—

Eno. What mean you, sir,

To give them this discomfort! Look, they weep;

And I, an ass, am ominous; for shame!

Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho!

Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus!

Grace grow, where those drops fall! My heartly

friends.

You take me in too dolorous a sense;

I speak to you for your comfort: did desire you

To burn this night with torches? Know, my hearts,

I hope well to-morrow; and will lead you,

Where rather I'll expect victorious lie,

Than death and honor. Let's to supper; come,

And drown consideration.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Before the Palace.

Enter two Soldiers to their guard.

1 Sold. Brother, good night; to-morrow is the day.

2 Sold. It will determine one way: fare you well.

Heard you of nothing strange about the streets?

1 Sold. Nothing. What news?

2 Sold. Behike, 'tis but a rumor:

Good-night to you.

1 Sold. Well, sir, good-night.

[Exeunt.

2 Sold. Soldiers,

Have careful watch.

3 Sold. And you: Good-night, good-night.

[The first two place themselves at their Posts.

4 Sold. Here we: [They take their Posts].

If to-morrow

Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope

Our landmen will stand up.

3 Sold. 'Tis a brave army,

And full of purpose.

Music of Haulbow under the Stage.

4 Sold. Peace, what noise?

1 Sold. List, list!

2 Sold. Mark!

1 Sold. Music 'tis the air.

3 Sold. Under the earth.

4 Sold. It signs well,

Does not it?

3 Sold. No.

1 Sold. Peace. I say. What should this mean?

2 Sold. 'Tis the good here, whom Antony lov'd,

Now leaves him.

1 Sold. Walk; let's see if other watchmen

Do hear what we do. [They a chance to another Post.

2 Sold. How now, masters!

Sold. How now!

How now? do you hear this?

[Several speaking together.

1 Sold. Ay; is it not strange!

3 Sold. Do you hear, masters! do you hear!

1 Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have quarter.

Let's see how 'twill give off.

Sold. [Several speaking.] Content: 'Tis strange.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antony and Cleopatra; Charmian and others attending.

Ant. Eros! prime armor, Eros!

Cleo. Sleep a little ° Ostrich.

* Reward.

° Bodes.
SCENE VI.—Caesar's Camp before Alexandria.

Flourish. Enter Caesar, with Agrippa, Enobarbus, and others.

Ces. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight: our will is, Antony be took alive; make it so known.
Agr. Caesar, I shall. [Exit Agrippa. Ces. The time of universal peace is near; prove this a prosperous day, the three-fook'd world shall hear the olive freely.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Antony is come into the field.

Ces. Go, charge Agrippa: plant those that have revolted in the van. That Antony may seem to spend his fury upon himself. [Exit Ces. Caesar, and Alexas did revolt; and went to Jewry, on affairs of Antony: there did persuade Great Herod to incline himself to Caesar, and leave his master Antony: for this pains, Caesar hath hang'd him. Caudinis, and the rest. That fell away, have entertainment, but no honorable trust. I have done ill; of which I do accuse myself so sorely, that I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Caesar's.

Sold. Enter Antony, Eros, Officers, and Soldiers.

Ces. Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with his beauty overplus: the messenger came on my command, and by thy note is now, unloading of his mules.
Eros. I give it you.
Sold. Mock me not, Eros. Caesar I tell you true: Best that you saved the bragger Out of the host; I must attend mine office, or have would done't myself. Your emperor continues still a Jew. Soldier. Eros. I am alone the villain of the earth, and feel I am so most. O Antony, Thou mine of bounty, how wouldst thou have paid My better service, when even my nature Thou dost so crown with gold! This blows my heart. If with a thought break it not, a swifter means Shall outstrike thought: but thought will do't, I feel. I fight against thee! No: I will go seek Some duch, wherein to die: the fool's best fits My better part of life. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Field of Battle between the Camps. Alarmus. Drums and Trumpets. Enter Agrippa and others.

Agr. Retire, we have engaged ourselves too far: Caesar himself has work, and our oppression exceeds what we expected. [Exit. Alarmus. Enter Antony and Scared, wounded. Sear. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed! Had I done so at first, we had driven them home With clouts about their heads.
Ant. Thou bleed'st apace. Sear. I had a wound here that was like a t, But now 'tis made an H. They do retire. Sear. We'll beat 'em into bench-holes; I have yet room for six score or more.

Enter Eros.

Eros. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage serves for a fair victory.

Sear. Let us score their backs, and snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind; 'tis sport to nail a runner.
Agr. I will reward thee for thy sprightly comfort, and un-told For thy good valor. Come thee on.
Sear. I'll halt after. [Exit. SCENE VIII.—Under the Walls of Alexandria. Alarmus. Enter Antony, marching; Scared and Forces.

Agr. We have beat him to his camp: RUN one man to the queen; and let the queen know of our guess:—To-morrow, before the sun shall see us, we'll spill the blood that has to-day escaped. I thank you all.

Swells. Cuts.
SCENE X. ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA

For thy hand's sake, and have fought
Not as you serv'd the cause, but as it had been
Each man's like mine; you have shown yourselves
Heresy.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your fate; whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds, and kiss
The honor'd gashes wide.—Give me thy hand!" — [To SCARES.

Enter Cleopatra, attended.

To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee.—O thou day o' the World.'s great score snatched from us.

And joint.

My nighttime Is.

We have beat them to their beds. What, girl!

Do something mingle with our brown; yet have we
A brain that nourishes our nerves, and can Get goal for goal of youth. Behold this man;
Command unto his lips thy favoring hand:—
Kiss it, my warior:—He hath bought to-day,
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had
 Destroy'd in such a shape.

Cleo.

I'll give thee, friend,
An armor all his gold; it was a king's.

He has deserve'd it here; it is enchanted
Like holy Pharaoh's car.—Give me thy hand;
Through Alexandria make a jolly march;
Bear our hack'd targets like the men that owe
Them.

And our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all shall sup together;
And drink carouses to the next day's flight.
With drums and royal perils.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's car;
Make mingle with our rattling tambourines;
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds together.

Appraising our approach. — [Exeunt.

SCENE X.—CAESAR'S Camp.

Sentinels on their Post. Enter ENOBARCUS.

1 Sotl. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard; The night
Is shifty; and, they say, we shall embattle
By the second hour o' the morning.

2 Sotl. This last day was
A shewed one to us.

Era. O, hear me witness, night—

3 Sotl. What man is this!

Era. Breathe to witness me, O thou blessed moon,
Wherein my revolting sight profusely
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did
Before thy face repeat!—

1 Sotl. Enobarbus! Peace; Hark further.

Era. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
The poisonous damp of night dispense upon
That life, a very rebel to my will.
May hang no longer on me; Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault;
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,
And finish all foul thoughts. O Antony,
Noble than my revolt is infamous,
Forgive me in thine own particular;
But let the world rank me in register
As false a revenger, and as forgiving:
O Antony! O Antony! — [Dies.

2 Sotl. Let's speak
To him.

1 Sotl. Let's hear him, for the things he speaks
May concern Caesar.

3 Sotl. Let's do so. But he sleeps,

1 Sotl. Swoons rather; for so bad a prayer as his
Was never yet for sleeping.

2 Sotl. Go we to him.

3 Sotl. Awake, awake, sir; speak to us.

2 Sotl. Hear you, sir! — [Embrace.

1 Sotl. Beauty united with power, was the popular character-

4 Sotl. Armor of proof.

5 Sotl. Own.

1 Sotl. The hand of death hath rought him.

[Drums afer off. Demurely wake the sleepers. Let us bear him
To the court of guard: he is of note: our hour
Is fully out.

3 Sotl. Come on, then; — He may recover yet. — [Exeunt with the Body.

SCENE X.—Betw een the two Camps.

Enter Antony and SCARES, with Forces, marching.

Ant. Their preparation is to-day by sea;

Sear. For both, my lord

Ant. I would, they'd fight the other, or in the air,
We'd fight there too. But this it is; our feet
Upon the hills adjoining to the city,
Shall stay with us: order for sea is given;
They have put forth the same: I am here,
Where their appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavor. — [Exeunt.

Enter Caesar and his Forces, marching.

Car. But being charged, we will be still by land,
Which, as I take 't, we shall; for his best force
Is forth to man his galley's. — To the vales,
And hold our best advantage. — [Exeunt.

Re-enter Antony and SCARES.

Ant. Yet they're not join'd: Where yonder pine does stand,

I shall discover all: I'll bring thee word
A waver, how 'tis like to go. — [Exit.

Sear. Swallows have built
In Cleopatra's sails their nests: the augurers
Say, they know not, — they cannot tell: look grain;
And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony
Is valiant and deserv'd; and, by starts,
He fretted fortunes give him hope, and fear,
Or what he has, and has not.

Alarum off, us at a Sea-Fight.

Re-enter Antony.

Ant. All is lost;
This foul Egyptian hath betray'd me;
My dear hand yieldeth to the foe; Luck, my yonder
They cast their caps up, and carouse together
Like friends long lost.—Triple-turn'd whore! this thou
Hast sold me to this novice; and my heart
Makes only wars on thee.—But them all fly:
For when I am revenged upon my charm,
I have done all:—Bid them all fly, become,
E, E.

Sear. O sun, thy armour shall I see no more:
Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do weshake hands.—All come to this! — The hearts
That spank their wealth and houses, to whom I gave Their wishes, do discandy, melt their sweets
On blossoming Caesar; and this pine is bark'd,
That over-topp'd them all. — Be traitor! am
O this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm,
Whose eyebeck'd forth my wars, and call'd them
t lome;
Whose bosom was my crownet? my chief end,
Like a right gipsy, bath, at last and ever.
Herein I'd mee to the very heart of loss.—
What, Eros, Eros!

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah! thou spell! Avant!

Cleo. Why is my lord enraged against his love?

Ant. Vanish; or I shall give thee thy deserving
And blemish Caesar's triumph. Let him take thee
And hose thee up to the shouting plebeians;
And give his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all the sea; most mist-master-like, be shown
For poor'st diminutives; to dole; and let Patient Octavia plump thy visage up
With her prepared nails. — [Exit Cleopatra. Tis well
They gone.

If it be well to live: But better twice
Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many.—Eros, ho! —

1 Cleopatra first belonged to Julius Caesar, then to An-

2 Antony, and now, as Antony supposes, to Augustus.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

ACT IV.

Scenes XI and XII. - Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Help me, my women! O, he is more mad Than Thanatos' for his shield; the boar of Thessaly Was never so emboss'd; I thirst to view the monument; There lock yourself, and send him word you are dead.

The soul and body rive not more in parting, Than greatness going off.

Cleo. To the monument: -

Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself; See, and as you spoke was, Antony, And word it, pythons, strangely: Hence, Mardian; and bring me how he takes his death.

- To the monument.

SCENE XI.-Another Room. Enter Antony and Eros.

Ant. Eros, thou yet beholdst me!

Eros. Ay, noble lord.

Ant. Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish; A vapor, sometime, like a bear, or lion, A toreador's citadel; a pendent roc; A doted mountain, or blue promontory With trees upon't, that nod unto the world, And mock our eyes with air: Thou hast last seen these signs: They are black vesper's pagenets.

Eros. Ay, my lord. Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a thought,
The rack doth diminish; and makes it indistinct, As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord.

Ant. My good friend, Eros, now thy captain is Even such a body: here I am Antony; Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knife. I made these wars for Egypt, and the queen, Whose heart, I thought, I had, for she had mine: Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto A million more, now lost, - she, Eros, has Pack'd cards with Caesar, and lab'd play'd my glory Unto an enemy's triumph.

Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us Ourselves to end ourselves, -o, thy vile lady!

Eros. She has robbed me of my sword.

Ant. Hence, saucy cumch; peace; she hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mur. Death of one person can be paid but once; And that she has discharged, what thou wouldst do, Is done unto thy hand; the last she spoke Was, Antony! most noble Antony! Then in the midst a tearing gout did break The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips: she render'd life, Thy name so buried in her. Dead then!

Ant. Dead. Dead. Ant. Eros, unarmed; the long day's task is done, And we must sleep: - That thou depart'st hence safe, Does pay thy labor richly: Go, - off, pluck off.

[Exit Mur.]

[Exit Mardian.]

The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides! Heart once be stronger than thy sufferings, Crack thy frail case! - Apace, Eros, apace, No more a soldier; - Bruised pieces go; You have been nobly borne. - From me a while.

[Exit Eros.]

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now All length is torture; - Since the torch is out, Lie down, and stray no further: Now all labor Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles itself With strength: Stow then, and all is done - Eros! I come, my queen: - Eros! Stay for me: Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in hand, And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze: Dido and her Aeneas shall want troops, And all the haunt be ours. - Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter Eros.

Eros. What would my lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra died, I have liv'd in such dishonor, that the gods Detest my baseness, 1 that with my sword Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back With ships made cities, condemn'd myself, to lack The strength of a woman; less noble mind Than she, which, by her death, our Cesar tells, I am conqueror of myself. Thou art sworn, Eros, That, when the exigent should come, (which now is come), I at one stroke will end me.

The inevitable prosecution Of Disgrace and horror, that, on my command, Thou then would'st kill me: do't; the time is come:

Thou strik'st not me, 'tis Cesar thou defiest, Put color in thy check.

Eros. The gods withhold me! Shall I do that, which all the Parthian darts, Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

Ant. Wouldest thou be window'd in great Rome, and see Thy master thus with plain'd arms, bending down His cragile neck, his face subdued To penetrative shame; whilst the wheel'd seat Of fortunate Cesar, drawn before him, branded His baseness that ensued?

Eros. I would not see'.

Ant. Come then; for with a wound I must be cured.

Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast fast found Most useful for thy country.

Eros. O, sir, pardon me.

Ant. When I did make thee free, swear'st thou not then To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once, Or thy grandest services are all But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.

Eros. Turn from me then that noble comenation, Whereon the worships of the whole world lies.

Ant. Lo thee! - [Turning from him.]

Eros. My sword is drawn.

Then let it do at once.

The thing why thou hast drawn it.

Eros. My dear master, My captain, and my emperor! let me say, Before I strike this bloody stroke, Farewell. Ant. 'Tis said, man - and farewell.

Eros. Farewell, great chief! Shall I strike now? Ant. Now, Eros, Eros. Why, there then! - [Falls on his sword. Thus do I escape the sorrow Of Antony's death.

Die.

Ant. Thrice nobler than myself!

Thou tearest me, O valiant Eros, what I should, and thou couldst not. My queen and race Have, by their brave instruction, got upon me A nobleness in record: But I will be A braver man in death, and run into As to a lover's bed. - Come then; and, Eros, Thy master dies thy scholar; to do thus [Flitting off his sword,]

Enter Percibates and Guard.

Guard. What's the noise?

Ant. I have done my work ill, friends: O, make an end Of what I have begun.

Guard. The star is fallen.

Ant. I. And time is at his period.

All. Ah, and woe!

Ant. Let him that loves me strike me dead.

SCENE XIII.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Be breath'd with me; if knife, drugs, serpents, have Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe:
Your love Octavia, with her modest ways, and still our inclinations, I shall acquire no honor Demurring up on me.—But come, come, Antony.— Help me, my women,—we must draw thee up;—
Assist, good friends.

Ant. O, quick, or I am gone.

Cleo. Here's sport indeed!—How heavy weighs my lord! Our strength is all gone into heaviness, That makes the weight: Had I great Juno's power, The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up, And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little,— Wishes were ever foids;— O, come, come, come:
[They draw Antony up.
And welcome, welcome! die, where thou hast liv'd: Quicken? with kisssg; had my lips that power, Thus would I wear them out.
All. A heavy sight!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying:
Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.
Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me ral so high, That the idle housewife Fortune break her wheel, Provoked by my absence.

Ant. One word, sweet queen: Of Caesar, seek your honor, with your safety,—0!
Cleo. They do not go together.

Ant. Gentle, hear me: None about Caesar trust, but Proculeion.
Cleo. My resolution, and my hands, I'll trust: None about Caesar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end, Lament not sorrow, but please your thoughts, In feeding them with those my former fortunes. Wherein I liv'd, the greatest prince of the world, The noblest; and do now not basely die, Nor cowardly: put off my helmet to my countryman, a Roman, by a Roman Vanhant vanquish'd. Now, my spirit is going; I can no more.

[Execut, bearing Antony.

SCENE XIII.—A Monument.

Enter above, CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. O Charmian, I will never go from hence.
Char. Be comforted, dear madam.
Cleo. No, I will not.
All strange and terrible events are welcome, But comforts we despise: our size of sorrow, Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
Enter DIOMEDES.

As that which makes it,—How now! Is he dead?

Cleo. His death's upon him, but not dead.

Look out on the other side your monument, His guard have brought him thither.

Enter ANTONY, borne by the Guard.

Cleo. O thou sun,
Be the great sphere thou mov'st in!—darkling stand
The varying shore o' the world!—O Antony! Antony, Antony! Charmian, help; help, iras; Help, friends below: Let's draw him hither.

Ant. Not Caesar's valor hath o'erthrown Antony, But Antony's hath triumph'd on itself.

Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony Should conquer Antony; but we 'tis so!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying; only
I here importune death awhile, until
Of many thousand kisses the poor last I lay upon thy lips.—

Cleo. I dare not, dear, (Dear my lord, pardon,) I dare not,
Lest I be taken: not the imperious show
Of the full-fortuned Caesar ever shall

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Cæsar’s Camp before Alexandria.

Enter Cæsar, Agrippa, Doliabella, Messenias, Gallus, Proculeius, and others.

Cæs. Go to him, Doliabella, bid him yield; being so foolish, tell him, he mocks us by the parables that he makes.

Dol. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit Doliabella.

Enter Decretas, with the Sword of Antony.

Cæs. Wherefore is that! and what art thou, that dar’st appear thus to us?

De. I am call’d Decretas; Mark Antony I serv’d, who best was worthy Best to be serv’d; whilst he stood up and spoke, He was my master; and I were my life, To spend upon his haters; if thou please To take me to thee, as I was to him I’ll be to Cæsar; if thou pleasest not, I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is’t thou say’st?

De. I say, O Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should make A greater crack: The round world should have shook From its foundations.

And citizens to their dens.—The death of Antony Is not a single doom; in the name lay A moiety of the world.

De. He is dead, Cæsar; Not by a public minister of justice, Nor by a fired knife; but that self hand, Which writ his honor in the acts it did, Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it, Splitted the heart.—This is his sword; I robb’d his wound of it; behold it stain’d With his most noble blood.

Cæs. Look you sad friends, To wash the eyes of kings.

Agr. And strange is it, That nature must compel us to lament Our most persecuted deeds.

Waged equal with him.

His taints and honors

Agr. A rarer spirit never

Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us Some means to make us men. Cæsar is touch’d.

Mec. When such a spacious mirror’s set before him, He needs must see himself.

Cæs. O Antony! I have follow’d thee to this:—But we do lack Diseases in our bodies: I must perfirce Have shown to thee such a declining day, For look on time; we could not stand together In the whole world; but yet let me lament, With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts, That thou, my brother, my companion, In top of all design, my mate in empire, Friend and companion in the front of war, The arm of mine own body, and the heart Where mine his thoughts did huddle,—that our Unreconcileable, should divide Our equalships to this.—Hear me, good friends;— But I will tell you at some winter season; Enter a Messenger.

The business of this man looks out of him, We’ll hear him what he says.—Whence are you? I have follow’d thee to this:—But we do lack Diseases in our bodies: I must perfirce Have shown to thee such a declining day, For look on time; we could not stand together In the whole world; but yet let me lament, With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts, That thou, my brother, my companion, In top of all design, my mate in empire, Friend and companion in the front of war, The arm of mine own body, and the heart Where mine his thoughts did huddle,—that our Unreconcileable, should divide Our equalships to this.—Hear me, good friends;— But I will tell you at some winter season; Enter a Messenger.

The business of this man looks out of him, We’ll hear him what he says.—Whence are you? Mess. A poor Egyptian yet. The queen my messenger. Confi’d in all she has, her monument, Of thy intents desires instruction: That she preparedly may frame herself To the way she’s force to. Cæs. Did her have good heart; She soon shall know of us, by some of ours, How honorable and how kindly we Determine for her: for Cæsar cannot live To be ungentle. Mess. So the gods preserve thee! [Exit.]

Cæs. Come hither, Proculeius: Go, and say, We purpose her no shame: give her what comforts The quality of her passion shall require; Lost, in her greatness, by some mortal stroke She do defeat us: for her life in Rome Would be eternal in our triumph: Go, And, with your speediest, bring us what she says, And by you find her.

Pro. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit Proculeius.

Cæs. Gallus, go you along.—Where’s Doliabella, To second Proculeius! [Exit Gallus.

Agr. Mec. Doliabella! Cæs. Let him alone, for I remember now How he’s employed; he shall in time be ready. Go with me to my tent; where you shall see How hardly I was drawn into this war; How calm and gentle I proceeded still In all my writings: Go with me and see What I can show in this. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A Room in the Monument.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. My dissolution does begin to make A better hit: To’s paltry to be Cæsar! Not being fortunate, he’s but fortune’s knife; A minister of her will; And it is great To do that thing that ends all other deeds; Which stumps accidents, and tucks up change; Which sleeps, and never palates more the dungen, The beggar’s nurse and Cæsar’s.

Enter, to the Gates of the Monument, Proculeius, Gallus, and soldiers.

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the queen of Egypt; And bids thee study on what fair demands Thou mean’st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. [Within.] What’s thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. [Within.] Antony Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceived, That have no use for trusting. If your master Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him, That majesty, to keep decorum, must No less be than a kingdom: if he please To give me conquer’d Egypt for my son, He gives me so much of mine own, as I Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer, You are fallen into a princely hand, fear nothing; Make your full reliance freely to my lord, Who is so full of grace, that it flows over On all that need: Let me report to you Your sweet dependency; and you shall find A conqueror, that will pray in aid for kindness, Where he for grace is kneel’d to.

Cleo. [Within.] Pray you, tell him I am his fortune’s vassal, and I send him The greatness he has got. I hourly learn A doctrine of obedience; and would gladly Look him in the face.

Pro. This I’ll report, dear lady. Have comfort; for I know, your plight is pitied Of him that could it.

Cleo. You see how easily she may be surpriz’d; For she Proculeius, and two of the Guard, ascend the Monument by a ladder placed over a Window, and having descended, come behind Cleopatra. Some of the Guardumber and open the Gates.

Guard her till Cæsar come. [To Gallus and the Guard. Exit Gallus.

[Drawing a Dagger.]

Pro. Hold, worthy lady, hold: [Seizes and disarms her. Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Relieve’d, but not betray’d.]

Servant.
SCENE II. ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA. 611

Cleo. What, of death too, sir?

Pro. Cleopatra.

Cleo. Do not abuse my master's bounty, by the undoing of yourself: let the world see His nobleness well acted, which your death Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, death? Come hither, come, come, and take a queen Worth many labes and beggars.

O temperance, lady! Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir; If idle talk will once be necessary, I'll not sleep neither. This mortal house I'll ruin, Do Caesar what he can. Know, sir, that I Will not wait pinn'd at your master's court; Not have the ship's boats'd with the sober eye Of dull Octavia. Shall they host me up, and show me to the shrouding clouds of Censoring Rome! Rather a ditch in Egypt Be gently grave to me! rather on Niph's mod Lay me stark naked, and let the water-dies Blow me into abolishing! rather make My country's high pyramids my gibbet, And hang me up in chains! You do extend These thoughts of horror further than you shall Find cause in Caesar.

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dot. Proculois, What thou hast done thy master Caesar knows, And he hath sent for thee: as for the queen, I'll take her to my guard. So, Dolabella, It shall content me best: be gentle to her.— To Caesar I will speak what you shall please, [To CLEOPATRA.

Cleo. If you'll employ me to him. Say, I would die. [Execut Proculois and soldiers.

Dot. Most noble empress, you have heard of me? Cleo. I cannot tell. Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard or known. You laugh, when boys, or women, tell their dreams, Is not your trick?

Dot. I understand not, madam. Cleo. I dream'd, there was an emperor Antony; O, such another sleep, that I might see But such another man!

Dot. If it might please you, Cleo. His face was as the heavens; and therein stuck A sun, and moon; which kept their course, and glittered The little O, the earth. Cleo. Most sovereign creature,—Cleo. His legs besmir'd the ocean; his regard arm Cress'd the world: his voice was propertied As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends; But when he meant to quaff and shake the orb, He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty, There was no winter in't; an autumn was, That grew the more by reaping: his delights Were dolphin-like; they show'd his back above The element they liv'd in: in his livery Walk'd crowns, and crownlets: realms and islands were As plates dropp'd from his pocket. Cleo. Think you, there was, or might be, such a man As this I dream'd of?

Dot. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods. But, if there be, or ever were one such, It's past the size of dreaming; Nature wants stuff To vie strange forms with fancy: yet, to imagine An Antony, were nature's piece against fancy Condemning shadows quite.

Dot. Hear me, good madam: your loss is as yourself; great: I desiring comfort; As answering to the weight: Would I might never O'errake pursued success, but I do feel, By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots My very heart at root.

Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits
Through the ashes of my change.—Wert thou a man,
Thou wouldst have mercy on me.
Cleo. Forbear, Selenus. [Exit Selenus.
Cleo. Be it known that we, the greatest, are misthought.
For things that others do; and, when we fail,
We answer others' merits in our haste,
Are therefore to be pitied.
Antony. Cleopatra.
Not what you reserve 'd nor what acknowledg'd,
But we 't the roll of conquest: still be it yours,
Bestow on it your pleasure; and believe,
Cesare's no merchant, to make present you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be careful;
Make not your thoughts your princes: no, dear queen;
For we intend so to dispose you, as Yourself shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep:
Our care and justice is so much upon you,
That we remain your friend: And so, adieu.
Cleo. My master, and my lord!—
Cleo.
Not so: Adieu.
Cleo. He words he; girls, he words me, that should Be noble to myself; but hack thee, Champion.
Jesu. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done,
And we are for the dark.
Cleo. Hie thee again:
I have spoke already, and it is provided;
Go, put it to the haste.
Char. Re-enter DOLABELLA.
Dol. Where is the queen?—Behold, sir. [Exit Champion.
Cleo. Farewell, and thanks, [Exit Dol. Now, Iras, what think'st thou?
Then, an Egyptian puppet, shall be shown
In Rome, as well as 1 mechanical slaves
With greasy aprons, rules, and hangmans, shall Uplift us to the view; in their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclosed,
And forced to drink their vapor.
Iras. The gods forbid!
Cleo. Nay, tis most certain, Iras: Sance lietors
Will catch at us, like strumpets: and skill rhymer
Bald at us out o' time: the quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels; Antony
Shall be brought drunkon forth, and I shall see
Some squaking Cleopatra boys; my greatness
Of the posture of a whore.
Iras. O the good gods!
Cleo. Nay, that is certain.
Iras. I'll never see it; for, I am sure, my nails
Are stronger than mine eyes.
Cleo. To be out their preparation, and to conquer
Their most absurd intents.—Now, Champion!—
Enter Champion.
Char. Show me, my woman, like a queen.—Go fetch
My best attire:—I am again for Cydnus,
To meet Mark Antony:—SIRAH, Iras, go,
Not noble Champion, we'll depart indeed.
And, when thou hast done this charge, I'll give thee leave
To play till doomsday.—Bring our crown and all.
Wherefore this noise!—
[Exit IRAS. A Noise within.
Guard. Here is a rural fellow,
* Lively.
* Female characters were played by boys.

That will not be denied your highness' presence;
He brings you figs.
Cleo. Let him come in.
How poor an instrument
May do a noble deed! he brings me sportily.
My resolution's placed, and I have nothing
Of woman in man: Now from head to foot
I am marble-constant: now the fleeting moon
No planet is of mine.
Re-enter guard, with a Coal bringing a Basket.
Guard. This is the man.
Cleo. Avoid, and leave him.
Hast thou the pretty worm of Nilus there,
That kills and pains not?
Cleo. Do, I have him: but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal; those, that do die of it, do seldom or never recover.
Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have died on?
Clown. Very many, men and women too, I heard
Of one no longer than yesterday: a very honest woman, but something given to lie; as a woman sleek; not do, but in the way of honesty:
how she died of the biting of it, what pains she felt.—
Truly, she makes a very good report o' the worm:
But he that would believe all that they say, shall never be saved! be that they do: But this is most fallible, the worm's an odd worm
Cleo. Get thee hence; farewell.
Cleo. I wish you all joy of the worm.
Cleo. Farewell. [Clown sets down the Basket.
Clown. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do him kind.
Cleo. Ay; farewell.
Clown. Look, you, the worm is not to be trusted, but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.
Cleo. Think no more:—it shall be feded.
Clown. Very good: give it nothing, I pray you,
for it is not worth the feeding.
Cleo. Will it not by chance?
Clown. You must not think I am so simple, but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know, that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil eat it not. But, truly, these same whore-son devils do the gods great harm in their women;
in every ten that they make, the devils mar rive.
Cleo. Well, get thee gone; farewell.
Clown. Yes, forsooth; I wish you joy of the worm. [Exit.
Re-enter IRAS, with a Bole, Crown, &c.
Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown; I have Immortal longings in me: Now no more
The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip:—
Aare, yare, good Iras: quick,—Medithinks, I hear
A voice: I see him: I hear rouse himself.
To praise my noble art; I hear him mock
The luck of Caesar, which the gods give men
To extend their after-thought: Husband, husband, I come:
To that name my courage prove my title!
I am fire, and air; my other elements
I give to baser life.—So, have you done
Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips.
Farewell, kind Champion;—Iras, long farewell.
[Offers them. Iras falls and dies.
Have I the asp in my lips?—death all!
If thou and nature can so gently part
The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch,
Which hurts, and is desired. Dest thou lie still?
If thou dost vanish, thou tellst the world
It is not worth leaving living.
Char. Dissolve, thick cloud and rain; that I may say,
The gods themselves do weep!
Cleo. This proves me base—
If she first meet the enlaid Antony,
He'll make demand of her; and spend that kiss,
Which he hath been a while. Come, let me depart,
To the Asp, which she applies to her Breast.
With thy sharp teeth this knot intrusive
Of life at once finite: poor venomous fool,
Be an agony, and depart. O, couldst thou speak
That I might hear thee call great Caesar, ass
Unprejudiced! [Exit.
Cleo. O eastern star! Peace, peace!
* Act according to his nature.
* Make haste.
* Unpolish'd, to leave me to myself.
SCENE II.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,
That sucks the nurse asleep!

Char.
O Antony! Look!
O, break!

Cleo.
As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle,—
O Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too:—
[Apply another Aasp to her Arm.]
What should I say—

Guard.
In this wild world!—So, fare thee well,—
Now boast thee, death! in thy possession lies
A less unparalleled.—Downy windows, close;
And golden Phoebus never be beheld
Of eyes again so royal! Your crown's awry;
I'll mend it, and then play.

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

1 Guard. Where is the queen?
Char.
Speak softly, wake her not.
1 Guard. Cesar hath sent—
Char.
Too slow a messenger.
[Apply the Aasp.]
O, come; apace, despatch; I partly feel thee.
1 Guard. Approach, ho! All's not well: Cesar's beguil'd.
2 Guard. There's Dolabella sent from Cesar;—
call him.
1 Guard. What work is here?—Charman, is this well done?
Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess
Descended of so many royal kings.
Ah, soldier!

Enter Dolabella.

Dol.
How goes it here?
2 Guard.
All dead.
Dol.
Cesar, thy thoughts
Touch their effects in this: Thyself art coming
To see perform'd the dreadful act, which thou
So sought'st to hinder.

[Within.]
A way there, way for Cesar!

Enter Cesar and Attendants.

Ces.
Bravest at the last;
She level'd at our purposes, and, being royal,
Took her own way.—The manner of their deaths!
I do not see them bleed.

Dot.
Who was last with them?
1 Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her tigs:
This was his basket.
Ces.
Poison'd, then.
1 Guard.
O Cesar,
This Charman liv'd but now; she stood, and spoke
I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress; tremblingly she stood,
And on the sudden drop'd.
Ces.
O noble weakness!
If they had swallow'd poison, 'twould appear
By external swelling: but she looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace.

Dot.
Here, on her breast,
There is a vent of blood, and something blown:
The like is on her arm.
1 Guard. This is an aspic's trail: and these fig-leaves
Have slinc upon them, such as the aspic leaves
Upon the caves of Nile.
Ces.
Most probable,
That so she died; for her physician tells me,
She hath pursued conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed;
And bear her women from the monument:—
She shall be buried by her Antony;
No grave upon the earth shall clip it in it
A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them; and their story is
No less in pity than his glory, which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall,
In solemn show, attend this funeral;
And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see
High order in this great solemnity.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Britain. The Garden behind Cymbeline’s Palace.

Enter two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. You do not meet a man, but frowns: our bloods
No more obey the heavens, than our courtiers;
Still seem, as does the king’s?
2 Gent. But what’s the matter?
1 Gent. His daughter, and the heir of his kingdom,
He purposed to his wife’s sole son, (a widow,
That late he married,) hath refer’d herself
Unto a poor but worthy gentleman: She’s wedded;
Her husband banish’d; she imprison’d; all
Is outward sorrow; though, I think, the king
Be touch’d at very heart.

2 Gent. None but the king?
1 Gent. He, that hath lost her too; so is the queen,
That most desir’d the match: But not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king’s looks, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they say or at.

2 Gent. And why so?
1 Gent. He, that hath miss’d the princess, is a thing
Too bad for bad report; and he that hath her
(1 mean, that married her,—alack, good man!—
And therefore banish’d,) is a creature such
As to seek through the regions of the earth
For six his like, there would be something falling
In him that should compare. I do not think,
So far an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but he.

2 Gent. You speak him fair.
1 Gent. I do extend him, sir, within himself; Crush him together, rather than unfold
His measure duly.

2 Gent. What’s his name, and birth?
1 Gent. I cannot delve him to the root: His father
Was call’d Sicilus, who did join his honor,
1 Inclination, natural disposition.
2, 3, 4. You praise him extensively.

614

Against the Romans, with Cassibelen:
But had his titles by Tenanius, whom
He serv’d with glory and adm’r’d success;
So gain’d the sub-division, Leonatus:
And had, besides this gentleman in question,
Two other sons, who, in the wars o’ the time,
Died with their swords in hand; for which their father
(Then old and kind of issue,) took such sorrow,
That he quit being; and his gentle lady,
Dag of this gentleman, our theme, deceas’d
As he was born. The king, he takes the babe
To his protection; calls him Posthumus;
Breeds him, and makes him of his bed-chamber;
Put him to all the learnings that his time
Could make him the receiver of; which he took,
As we do air, fast as ‘twas minister’d; and
To his spring became a harvest: Ly’d in court
(Which rare it is to do) most prais’d, most lov’d;
A sample to the young; to the more mature,
A glass that fent’ed them; and to the graver,
A child that guided dotards; to his mistress,
For whom he now is banish’d,—her own price;
Proclaims how she esteem’d him and his virtue;
By her election may be truly read,
What kind of man he is.

2 Gent. I honor him
Even out of your report. But, pray you, tell me,
Is she sole child to the king?
1 Gent. His only child.
He had two sons, (if this be worth your hearing,
Mark it,) the eldest of them at three years old.
1 the swathing clothes the other, from their Nursery were stolen; and to this hour, no guess in knowledge
Which way they went.

2 Gent. How long is this ago?
1 Gent. Some twenty years.
2 Gent. That a king’s children should be so convey’d!
So slackly guarded! And the search so slow,
That could not trace them!

2, 3, 4. The father of Cymbeline. Formed their manners.
Cymbeline.

Act I. Scene III.

1 Gent. Howsoever 'tis strange, Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at, Yet it is true, sir.

2 Gent. I do well believe you.

1 Gent. We must forbear: Here comes the gentleman, The queen and princess. [Exeunt.]

Scene II.—The same.

Enters the QUEEN, POSTHUMUS, and IMOGEN.

Queen. No, be assured, you shall not find me, daughter.

Post. I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitting The pangs of bard'd affections; though the king Hath charged you should not speak together.

[Exit QUEEN.]

Imo. Dissembling courtesie! How fine this tyrant Can tickle where she wounds!—My dearest husband, I something feyn my father's wrath; but nothing, [Always reserv'd my holy duty,] what His rage can do on me; you must be gone; And shall here abide the hours shot Of angry eyes; not comforted to live, But that there is this jewel in the world, That I may see again.

Post. My queen! my mistress! O, lady, weep no more; lest I give cause To be suspected of more tenderness Than yours can furnish. I will become a man! I will remain The loyallest husband that did e'er plight troth. My residence in Rome, at one Philaris's; To who my father was a friend, to me Known but by letter; thither write, my queen, And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send, Though ink be made of gold.

Re-enter QUEEN.

Queen. Be brief, I pray you: If the king come, I shall incur I know not How much of his displeasure: Yet I'll move him Aside.

To walk this way: I never do him wrong, But he does buy my injuries, to be friends; Pays dear for my oldness. [Exit Post.]

Should we be taking leave As long a term as yet we have to live, The state of the earth to depart would grow: Adieu! Imo. Nay, stay a little: Were you but riding forth to air yourself, Such parting were too petty. Look here, love; This diamond was my mother's; take it, heart; But keep it till you woo another wife, When imogen is dead.

Post. How! how! how another?— You gentle gods, give me but this I have, And scare up my embracements from a next With bonds of death!—Remain thou here [Putting on the Ring.]

While sense can keep it on! And sweetest, fairest, As I my poor self did exchange for you, To you, so infinite loss; so in our tribes I still win of you; For my sake, wear this; It is a memento of love; I'll place it Upon this fairest prisoner. [Putting a Bracelet on her Arm.]

Imo. O, the gods! When shall we see again?

Enter Cymbeline and Lords.

Post. Alack, the king! Cymb. Thou basest thing, avoid; hence, from my sight! If, after this command, thou frant'st the court With thy unworthiness, thou diest: Away! Thou art poison to my blood. Close up

Post. The gods protect you! And bless the good remainders of the court! I am gone. [Exit.]

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death More sharp than this is.

Cymb. O disloyal thing, That shouldst repair my youth; thou hast And a year's age on me! [Exit.]

Imo. I beseech you, sir, Harm not yourself with your vexation! I Am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare Subdues all pangs, all fears.

Cymb. Fast grace! obedience! Imo. Fast hope, and in despair; that way; past grace.

Cymb. That might'st have had the sole of my queen! Imo. O, bless'd, that I might not! I chose an eagle, And did love a pittance. Imo. Thou took'st a beggar; wouldst have made my throne A seat for baseness. Imo. No; I rather added A lustre to it. Cymb. O thou vile one! Imo. Sir, It is your fault that I have loved Posthumus: You bred him as my play-fellow; and he is A man, worth any woman; overbears me Almost the sum he pays. Imo. What!'art thou mad! Imo. Almost, sir: Heaven restore me!—Would I were A next-bred's daughter! and my Leonatus Our neighbor shepherd's son!

Re-enter QUEEN.

Cymb. Thou foolish thing!— They were again together: you have done [To the Queen.]

Not after our command. Away with her, And pen her up.

Queer. 'Beshoo your patience—Peace, Dead lady daughter, peace—Sweet sovereign, Leave us to ourselves; and make yourself some comfort.

Out of your base advice! Cymb. Nay, let her languish A drop of blood a day; and, being aged, Die of this folly. [Exit.]

Enter Pilanto.

Queer. Fye!—you must give way: Here is your servant.—How now, sir? What news! Pis. My lord your son drew on me. Master. Ha! No harm, I trust, is done? Pis. There might have been, But that my master rather play'd than fought, And had no help of anger: they were parted By gentleness at hand.

Cymb. I am very glad of it. Pis. Your son's my father's friend; he takes his part— To draw upon an exile!—O brave sir!— I would they were in Afric both together; Myself by with a needle, that I might prick The poor back.—Why came you from your master? Pis. On his command: He would not suffer me To bring him to the haven: left these notes Of what commands I should be subject to, When it pleased you to employ me.

Cymb. This hath been Your faithful servant; I dare lay mine honor, He will remain so. Pis. I humbly thank your highness, Queer. Pray, walk a while.

About some half hour hence, I pray you speak with me: you shall, at least, Go see my lord aboard: for this time, leave me. [Exeunt.]

Scene III.—A public Place.

Enter CLOTERN and two Lords.

Lord. Sir, I would advise you to shift a shirt; the violence of action hath made you reek as a satyr; teeth and punctures out, air comes in: there's none abroad so wholesome as that you vent.

1. A more exquisite feasting.

2. A kite.

3. Cattle-keeper.

4. Consideration.
Clo. If my shirt were bloody, then to shift it—
Has not he hurt him?
2 Lord. No; faith: not so much as his patience.
[Aside.]
1 Lord. Hurt him! his body's a passable carcass,
If it be not hurt; it is a thoroughfare for steel if it be not hurt.
2 Lord. His steel was in debt; it went o' the backside of the town.
[Aside.]
Clo. The hearse would not stand me.
2 Lord. No; but he fled forward still, toward your face.
1 Lord. Stand you! You have had enough of your own; but he added to your having; gave you some ground.
2 Lord. As many inches as you have ocean's
Pains, or wishes. [Aside.]
Clo. I would they had not come between us.
2 Lord. So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground. [Aside.]
Clo. And that she should love this fellow, and refuse me!
1 Lord. Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together: She's a good sign, but I have seen small reflection of her wit.
2 Lord. She blemishes upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. [Aside.]
Clo. Come, I'll to my chamber: 'Would there had been some hurt done!
2 Lord. He were not such unless it had been the fall of an ass, which is of no great hurt. [Aside.]
Clo. You'll go with us!
1 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.
Lir., Nay, come, let's go together.
2 Lord. Well, my lord. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter BORCHEN and PHARONIO.

Irau. I would thou gav'st unto the shores o' the haven
And question'd every sail; if he should write,
And if I have it, 'twere a paper lost
As offer'd mercy is. What was the last
That he spoke to thee?
Pha. Twas, His queen, his queen! Irau. Then wert'ard his handkerchief? Pha. And kiss'd it, madam. Irau. Senseless then! happier therein than I!—
And that was all?
Pha. No, madam; for so long
As he could make with this eye or ear
Distinguish him from others, he did keep
The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the sides and stirs of his mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship.
Irau. Pha. Thou shouldst have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To ater-eye him.
Irau. Pha. I would, madam, so I did.
Irau. I would have broke mine eye-strings;
Crack'd them, but
To look upon him; till the diminution
Of space had pointed him sharp as my needle:
Nay, follow'd him till he had melt'd from
The smoothness of a giant to air; and then
Have turn'd mine eye and wept.—But, good Pharionio,
When shall we hear from him?
Pha. Irau. Be assured, madam,
When his next vantage.
Irau. I did not take my leave of him, but had
Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him,
How I would think on him, at certain hours,
Such thoughts, and such lamentations make him wear
The sides of Italy should not betray
Mine interest, and his honor; or have charg'd him,
At the sixth hour of noon, at noon, at midnight,
To be his adorer, and thus make him weep:
Then the terrors of the storm, then the Shakes all our buds from growing.

* To understand the force of this idea, it should be remembered that anciently almost every son had a motto, or Opportunity.

* Meet me with reciprocal prayer.
Scene VI.  CYMBELINE.

Iack. As fair, and as good, (a kind of hand-in-hand comparison,) had been something too fair, and too good, for any lady in Britain. If she went before others I have seen, as at a diamond of yours, she would have beheld, I have not but believe she excelled many: but I have not seen the most precious diamond that is, nor you the lady.

Post. I praised her, as I rated her: so do I my stone.

Iack. What do you esteem it at?

Post. More than the world enjoys.

Iack. For your part, my fair mistress is dead, or she's out-prized by a trifle.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold, or given; if there were wealth enough for the purchase: but the gift is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Iack. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which, by their grace, I will keep.

Iack. Yet, if you wear her, in time I think you, though strange fowl light upon neighboring ponds. Your ring may be stolen, too: so, of your brace of unspeakable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other cannot a country claim, or a that-way accomplished counter, would hazard the winning both of first and last.

Iack. Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier, to convince the honor of my mistress; if, in the holding or loss of that, you term her frail, I do nothing doubt, you have store of thieves; notwithstanding I fear not my Presenting a small Box.

Post. Let us leave here, gentleman.

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy signer, I think him, makes no stranger of me: we are familiar first.

Iack. With five times so much conversation, I should get ground of your fair mistress: make her go back even to the yielding; had I admittance and opportunity to friend.

Post. No, no.

Iack. I dare, therefore, pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring; which, in my opinion, over-values every thing: I come against your confidence, than her reputation: and, to bar your offence herein too, I durst attempt it against my lady in the world.

Post. I could abuse in too bold a persuasion; and I doubt not you sustain what you're worthy of, by your attempt.

Iack. Well that's it.

Post. A repulse: Though your attempt, as you call it, deserves more; a punishment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this: it came in too suddenly; let it die as it was born, and I pray you, be better acquainted.

Iack. Would I had put my estate, and my neighbor's, on the approbation of what I have spoke.

Post. What, lady would you choose to assault Iack. Yours: whom in constancy, you think, stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring, that, commend me to the court where your grace, I think, is the moit: for nothing is so more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honor of hers, which I imagine so coveted.

Post. I will wage against your gold, gold to it: my ring I hold dear as my finger; 'tis part of it.

Iack. You are a friend, and therein the wiser. If you buy ladies' flesh at a million of a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting: But, I see, you have some religion in you, that you fear.

Post. This is but a custom in your tongue; you bestow it in a purpose, I am sure, I hope.

Iack. I am the master of my speeches; and would undergo what's spoken, I swear.

Post. Will you!? I shall but lend my diamond till your return:—Let there be covenants drawn between us: My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match; here's my ring.

Iack. I will have it no lay.

Iack. By the gods it is one:—If I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoyed the dearest bodily part of your mistress, say ten thousand ducats, or whatso where froward she comes off, and leave her in such honor as you have trust in, she your jewel, this your jewel, and my gold are yours:—provided, I have your commendation, for my more free entertainment.

Post. I embrace these conditions; let us have articles betwixt us:—only, thus far you shall answer. If you make your voyage upon her, and if nothing return but I have wronged you, I am no further your enemy, she is not worth our debate: if she remain unauco, (you not making it appear otherwise,) for your ill opinion, and the other covenants you have made to her charity, you shall answer me with your sword.

Iack. Your hand; a covenant: We shall have this thing enough by lawful counsel, and straightway,

Post. Will this hold, think you! Phi. Signor Iackimo will not from it.

[Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Britain. A Room in Cymbeline's Palaces.

Enter QUEEN, Ladies, and CORNELIUS.

Queen. Whiles yet the dews on ground, gather those flowers; Make haste: Who has that of the names?

Now, master doctor; have you brought those drugs? Cor. Pleafeth your highness, ay: here they are, madam; they are Prepared a small Box.

But I beseech your grace, without ointence: My conscience bids me ask, wherewith you have Commanded of me these most poisonous commodities.

Which are the movers of a languishing death; But, though slow, deadly! Queen. Thou ask'st me such a question: Have I not been Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes! distil! preserve! yea, so, That our great king himself doth woe me oft Ty'd up in his politics: for my own practice, (Unless you think me deviish, I'st not meet That I did amplify my judgment in Other conclusions;) I will try the forces Of these thy compounds on such creatures as We count not worth the hanging, (but none human,) To try the vigor of them, and apply Allayments to their act, and by them gather Their several virtues, and effects.

Cor. Your highness Shall from this practice but make hard your heart: Besides, the seeing these effects will be Both noisome and infectious.

Queen. O, content thee.

[Enter PISARIO.

Here comes a flattering rascal: upon him [Aside. Will I first work: he's for his master. And counsel to my son. Now, Pisario?—Doctor, your service for this time is ended; Take your own way.

Cor. I do suspect you, madam;[Aside. But you shall do no harm. Queen. Hark thee, a word.—[To Pisario.

Cor. I do not like her. She doth think, some Strange lingering poisons: I do know her spirit, And will not trust one of her malice with A drug of such damn'd mixture: Tis she has, Will stupefy and dull the sense awhile: Which first, per chance, she'll prove on cats and dogs; Then afterward up higher; but there is No danger in what show of death it makes. More than the locking up the spirits a time, To be more fresh, reviving. She is bold With a most false effect; and I the truer, So to be false with her.

Queen. No further service, doctor, Until I send for thee.

Cor. I humbly take my leave.

[Aside. Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think, in time She will not quench; and let instructions enter Where folly now possesses? Do thou work; When thou shalt bring me word, she loves my son,
I'll tell thee, on the instant, thou art then
As great as is thy master; greater; for
His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is last gasp: Return; he cannot take Continue where he is; to shift his being?
Is to exchange one misery with another;
And every day that comes, comes to decay
A man's work in him: What shift the king expect,
To be obedient on a thing that leaves?
Who cannot be new built; nor has no friends,
[Exit Queen drops a Box; Pisanio takes it up.]
So much as to prop him?—Thou talk'st up
Thou know'st not what; but take it for thy labor:
It is a thing made, which hath been
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial:—Nay, I prythee, take it;
It is an earnest of a further good
That should then follow. Tell thy mistress how
The case stands with her; do, as from thyself.
Think what a chance thou changest on; but think
Thou hast thy mistress still; to lost, my son,
Who shall take notice of thee? I'll move the king
To any shape of thy preferment, such
As thou'lt desire; and then myself, I chiefly,
That set thee on to this desert, am bound
To load thy merit richly. Call my women:
Think on my words. [Exit Pisanio and Ladies.]
To taste of too.—So, so;—well done, well done;
The violets, cowslips, and the primroses,
Bear to my closet.—Fair thee well. Pisanio:
Think on my words. [Exeunt Queen and Ladies.]
Pis. And shall do:
And when to my good lord I prove untrue,
I'll change my self: there's all I'll tell you. [Exit.
SCENE VII.—Another Room in the same.
Enter Imogen.
Iuo. A father cruel, and a step-dame false;
A foolish suitor to a wedded lady,
That hath her husband banish'd;—O, that husband
My supreme crown of grief! and those repeated
Vexations of it! Had I been thief-stolen,
As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable
Is the place that's glorious; Blessed be those
How mean sover, that have their honest wills,
Which seasons comfort.—Who may this be! Fye!
Enter Pisanio and Iachimo.
Pis. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome;
Comes from my lord with letters.
Iach. Change you, madam? The worthy Leonatus in safety,
And greets your highness dearly.
[Present a Letter. Thanks, good sir:
If she be furnished with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird; and I
Have lost the wager. Baldness, be my friend! Amen, amen; then head to foot or,
Or, like the Parthian, I shall flying fight;
Rather, directly fly.
Iach. [Reads.]—He it is of the noblest note, to whom kindness I am most infinitely tied. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust.
LEONATUS.
So far I read aloud:
But even the very middle of my heart
Is warm'd by the rest, and takes it thankfully,—
You are as welcome, worthy sir, as I
Have lost the wager: Baldness, be my friend! Amen, amen; then head to foot or,
Or, like the Parthian, I shall flying fight;
Rather, directly fly.
Iach. [Reads.]—He it is of the noblest note, to whom kindness I am most infinitely tied. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust.
LEONATUS.
Upon the number'd beach! and can we not
Partition make with spectacles so precious
Twixt fair and foul? Ill. What makes your admiration?
Iach. It cannot be the eye; for apes and monkeys,
Twixt this and such shews, would chatter this way, and Contemn with mows the other: Nor I the judgment:
For idiots in this case of favor, would
Be wisely definite. Nor to the appetite:
Sluttery, to such neat excellence oppos'd,
Should make desire vomit emptiness,
Not so engulf'd to feed.
Iach. What is the matter, travellor? Ill. What, dear sir,
Thus raps you? Are you well? Ill. Thanks, madam; well?—Beseech you, sir, Assured desire To Pisanio.
My man's abode where I did leave him; he
Is strange and peevish. I was going, sir,
To give him welcome. [Exit Pisanio.
Iach. Continues well my lord! His health, he sees you!
Iach. Well, madam. Ill. Is he disposed to mirth? I hope he is.
Iach. Exceeding pleasant; none a stranger there
So merry and so gamesome: he is call'd
The Britain rover.
Iach. When he was here, he did incline to sadness; and oft-times
Not knowing why.
Iach. I never saw him sad. There is a Frenchman his companion, one
An eminent musician, that, it seems, much loves
A Gallian girl at home, he furnishes
The thick sighs from him: whilsts the jolly Briton
(Your lord, I mean) laughs from his free lungs,
Eres! Can any man behold, think, that man,—who knows
By history, repart, or his own proof;
What woman is, yet, what she cannot choose
But must be—will his free hours languish for assurance?
Iach. Will my lord say so?
Iach. Ay, madam; with my eyes in flood with laughter.
It is a recreation to be, And hear him mock the Frenchman: But, heavens know,
Some men are more than blame.
Iach. Not he, I hope.
Iach. Not he: But yet heaven's bounty towards him might Be used more thankfully. In himself, 'tis much:
In you,—which I count his, beyond all talents,—
Whilst I am bound to wonder, I am bound
To pity too.
Iach. What do you pity, sir?
Iach. Two creatures heartily.
Iach. Am I one, sir? You look on me: What wretch discern you in me,
Deserves your pitty? Lamentable! Wha! To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
The dungeon by a snuff!—I pray you, fair
Deliver with more openness your answers
To my demands, Why do you pity me?
Iach. That others do.
Iach. I was about to say, enjoy your—But
It is an office of the gods to venge it,
Not mine to speak on.
Iach. You do seem to know
Something of me, or what concerns me: Pray you, (Since doubting things go ill often hurts more
Than to be sure they go: For certainties
Either are not so pleasant, or so timely knowing,
The remedy then born, d'scover to me
What both you spur and stop!—
Iach. Had I this check
To hath my lips upon; this hand, whose touch
Whose every touch would force the feeder's soul
Making mouths.
Iach. Shy and fidget. [What you seem anxious to utter, and yet withhold.

Note: The above text is a transcription of the dialogue from Act I, Scene VII of Shakespeare's play "Cymbeline."
To the oath of loyalty; this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye, Fixing it only here: should I (damned then) Shake off my gait like a castle, built That mount the Capitol; join griples with hands Made hard with hourly falsehood; (falsehood, as With labor,) then he creeping in like Base and indelicate as the smoky light That’s fed with stinking tallow; it were fit That all the plagues of hell should at one time Encounter such revolt.

Troilus. My lord, I fear, I have forgot Britain.

Iach. And himself. Not I. Indeed to this intelligence, pronounce The beastry of his change: but 'tis your graces That, from my mutest conscience, to my tongue, Charms this report out.

Troilus. Let me have no more.

Iach. O dearest soul! your cause doth strike my heart With pity, that doth make me sick. A lady So far, and listened to an emissary. Would make the greatest king’s command to be partner’d With tomboys, hired with that self-exhibition Which your own collars yield! with discend’d ventures, That play with all infirmities for gold, Which rottenness can lend nature! such boil’d stuff As well might poison poison! be revenged; Or she, that bore you, was no queen, and you Recoil from your great stock.

Revenged.

How should I be revenged? If this be true, (As I have such a heart, that both mine ears Must not in haste abuse,) if it be true, How should I be revenged?

Iach. Should he make me Live like Diana’s priest, betwixt cold sheets; While he is vauling variable rampes, In your despite, upon your purse! Revenge it. I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure; More noble than that ringmate to your bed; And will continue fast to your affection, Still close, as sure.

Troilus. What ho, Pisania!

Iach. Let me my service tender on your lips.

Troilus. Away!—do condemn mine ears, that have So long attended thee.—If thou wilt honorable, Thou wouldst have told this tale for virtue, not For such an end thou seek’st; as base, as strange. Thou wrotest a gentleman, who is as far From thy report, as thou from honor; and Solicit’st here a lady, that disdain’s Thee and the devil, even so, what’s this, Pisania!—The king, my father, shall be made acquainted Of thy assault: if he shall think it fit, A saucy stranger in his court, to mart As in a Romish stew, and to extimate His beauty mind to us; he hath a court He little cares for, and a daughter whom He not respects at all.—What ho, Pisania!—

Iach. O happy Leonatus! I may say:

The credit that thy lady hath of thee, Deserves thy trust; and thy most perfect goodness, Her assured credit,—blessed live you long! A lady to the worthiest sir, that ever Country called his! and you, his mistress, only For the most worthiest! sir! Give me your pardon. I have spoke this, to know if you will decline Being deeply-rooted; and shall make your lord, That which he is, new oer: And he is one The truest manner’d; such a holy witch, That he enchanted sometimes unto him: Half all men’s hearts are his.

Iach. You make amends.

Iach. He sits 'nonest men, like a descended god: He hath a kind of honor sets him off, More than a mortal seeming. Be not angry, Most mighty princess, that I have adventur’d To try your taking of a false report; which hath honor’d with confirmation your great judgment In the election of a sir so rare, Which you know, cannot err: The love I bear him Made me to fond you thus; but the gods made you, Unlike all others, chasteless. Pray, your pardon.

I. Troilus. All’s well, sir: Take my power i’ the court for you.

Iach. My humble thanks. I had almost forgot To entreat your grace but in a small request, And yet of moment too, for it concerns Your lord; myself, and other noble friends, Are partners in the business.

Troilus. Pray, what is’t?

Iach. Some dozen Romans of us, and your lord, (The best beaker of our wine,) have mingled sums, To buy a present for the emperor; Which I, the factor for the rest, have done In France: ‘tis plate, of rare device; and jewels, Of rich and exquisite form: their values great; And I am something curious, hot as the strange. To have them in safe stowage: May it please you To take them in protection.

Troilus. Willingly; And pawn mine honor for their safety: since My lord hath interest in them, I will keep them In my bed-chamber.

Iach. They are in a trunk, Attended by men: I will make bold To send them to you, only for this night: I must abound to-morrow.

Troilus. O, no, no.

Iach. Yes, I beseech; or I shall short my word, By lengthening my return. From Gallia I cross’d the seas on purpose, and on promise To see your grace.

Troilus. I thank you for your pains; But not away to-morrow!

Iach. Therefore, I shall beseech you, if you please To greet your lord with writing, do’t to-night. I have outstood my time; which is maternal To the tender of our present.

Troilus. I will write. Send your trunk to me; it shall safe be kept, And truly yielded you: You are very welcome.

Exeunt.
1 Lord. It is not fit, your lordship should undertake every companion that you give offence to.

Clo. No, I know that; but it is fit, I should commit offence to my inferiors.

2 Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say. 1 Lord. Did you hear of a stranger that's come to court to-night? Clo. No, I know't; and I know not on't. 2 Lord. He's a strange fellow himself, and knows it not.

[Aside.]

1 Lord. There's an Italian come; and, 'tis thought, one of Leonatus's friends.

Clo. Leonatus! a banished rascal; and he's another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger?

1 Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit I went to look upon him? Is there no derogation in't?

1 Lord. You cannot derogate, my lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.

2 Lord. You are a fool, granted, therefore your issue, being foolish, do not derogate. [Aside.]

Lady. Come, I'll go see this Italian. I have lost to-day at bows, I'll win to-night of him. Come, go.

2 Lord. I'll attend your lordship. [Exit Cloots and first Lord.]

That such a crafty devil as his mother Should yield the world this ass! a woman, that Bears all down with her brain; and this her son Comes from the two from twenty-five in part, And leave eighteen. Alas, poor princess, Thou divine Imogen, what thou endur'st! Before thy father by the nay-man govern'd; A mother hourly crying plots: a woe More hateful than the soul expulsion Is of thy dear husband, than that horrid act Of the crime he'd make! The heavens hold firm The walls of thy dear honor; keep unshak'd That temple, thy fair mind; that thou may'st stand, To enjoy thy banish'd lord, and this great land! [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Bed-chamber; in one Part of it a Truck.

Imogen reading in her Bed; a Lady attending.

Lady. Who's there? my woman Helen? Helen. Please you, madam. Lady. What hour is it?

Helen. Almost midnight, madam.

Imogen. I have read three hours, then; mine eyes are weak—

Fold down the leaf where I have left: To bed; Take not away the tape, leave it burning; And thou canst awake by four o'clock, I pr'ythee, call me. Sleep bath seiz'd me wholly. [Exit Lady.]

To your protection I commend me, gods! From silver vases, and the temples of the night, Guard me, beseech ye! [Steps. Lachino, from the Truck.]

Truck. The crickets sing, and man's o'er-labor'd sense

Repairs itself by rest; Our Tarquin thus Did softly press the rushes ere he wak'n The chastity he wounded.—Cytherea, How bravely thou becom'st thy bed! Fresh lily! And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch! But kiss; one kiss! Ruhees unparagon'd, How dearly they don't! 'Tis her breathing that Perverse the chamber things. The flame o' the taper Bows toward her; and would under-peep her lids, To see the enclosed lights, now canopied Under the windows: White and azure, laced With blue of heaven's own line.——But my design To note the chamber:—I will write all down:— Such and such pictures:—There the window:—

Such

The adornment of her bed:—The arras, figures, Why, such, and such:—And the contents o' the story,—

Ah, but some natural notes about her body, Above ten thousand manner movables Would testify, to enrich mine inventory:

* It was anciently the custom to strew chambers with rushes.

* i.e. The white skin laced with blue veins.

O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her! And be her sense but as a monument, Thus in a chapel lying!—Come off, come off!—

As slippery as the Gordian knot was hard!—[Taking off her Bracelet]

'Tis mine; and this will witness outwardly, As strongly as the conscience does within, To the madding of her lord. On her left breast Music was couched, like the crimson drop I' the bottom of a cowlisp: Here's a voucher, Stronger than ever law could make; this secret Will force him think I have pick'd the lock, and

The treasure of her honor. No more.—To what end?

Why should I write this down, that's riveted, Screw'd to my memory? she hath been reading late The tale of Teseus; here the leaf's torn down, Where Philomel gave up;—I have enough; To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it. Swift, swift, you dragons of the night!—that dawning May bare the raven's eye; I lodge in fear; Though this a heavenly angel, hell shall never give o'er. First, a very excellent, good-conceited thing; after, a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it,—and then let her consider.

SCENE III.—An Ante-chamber joining Imogen's Apartment.

Enter Cloots and Lords.

1 Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in loss, the most coldest that ever turned up ace. Cloots. It is true, my lord; and this my lordship:—

1 Lord. But not every man patient, after the noble temper of your lordship: You are must hot, and fursome, when you win.

Cloots. Winning would put any man into courage: If I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough: It's almost morning, is't not?

1 Lord. Day, my lord.

Cloots. I would this music would come: I am advised to give her music o' the mornings; they say, it will penetrate.

Enter Musicians.

Come on; tune: If you can penetrate her with your lingering, so; we'll try with tongue too: if none do well, let her remain; but I'll never give o'er. First, a very excellent, good-conceited thing; after, a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it,—and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hark! hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings, His steps to water at those springs On chasteled flowers that lies; And wanking Mary-buds begin To swell their own green eyes; With every thing that pretty bin: My lady sweet, arise; Arise, arise.

So, get you gone: If this penetrate, I will consider your music the better: if it do not, it is a vice in her ears, which horse-hairs, and cat-eguts, nor the voice of unpared eunuch to boot, can never amend.

[Execunt Musicians.

Enter Cymbeline and Queen.

2 Lord. Here comes the king.

Cloots. I am glad I was up so late; for that's the reason I was up so early: He cannot choose but take this service I have done, fatherly.—Good-morrow to your majesty, and to my gracious mother.

Cyn. Attend you hear the door of our stern daughter? Will she not forth?

Cloots. I have assailed her music with music, but she vocalizes no notice.

Cyn. That exile of her minion is too new; She hath not yet forgot him: some more time Must wear the print of his remembrance out, And then she's yours.

Queen. You are most bound to the king, Who lets go by no 'vantages, that may Preier you to his daughter: Frame yourself * Cupped.

* Will pay you more for it.
Enter a Messenger.

Mess. So like you, sir, ambassadors from Rome;
The one is Caius Lucius. A worthy fellow, albeit he comes on angry purpose now; but that's no fault of his: We must receive him Accustomed to the honor of his shadow, and towards himself his goodness forespent on us.

We must extend our notice.—Our dear son, When you have given good-morning to your mistress, Attend the queen, and us: we shall have need To employ you towards this Roman.—Come, our queen.

[Exeunt Cvm, Queen, Lords, and Mess.

Clo. If she be up, I'll speak with her; if not, Let her be still, and dream.—By your leave, ho!—

[Knocks.

Enter a Lady.

Lady. Who's there, that knocks?

Clo. A gentleman.

Lady. No more?—

Clo. Yes, and a gentlewoman's son.

Lady. That's more than some, whose tailors are as dear as yours, Can justly boast of: What's your lordship's pleasure?

Clo. Your lady's person; is she ready?

Lady. Ay, To keep her chamber.

Clo. There's gold for you; sell me your good report.

Lady. How! my good name? or to report of you What I shall think is good?—The princess—

[Knocks.

Enter Imogen.

Clo. Good-morrow, fairest sister: Your sweet hand.

Im. Good-morrow, sir: You lay out too much pains For purchasing but trouble; the thanks I give, Is telling you that I am poor of thanks, And scarce can spare them.

Clo. Still I swear I love you. If you but said so, too deep as deep with me: If you swear still, your recompense is still That I regard it not.

Clo. This is no answer. But that you shall not any yield, being silent, I would not speak. I pray you, spare me: I'faith, I shall unfold equal discourtesy.

To your best kindness: one of your great knowing Should learn, being taught, forbearance.

Clo. To leave you in your madness, 'twere mine: I will not.

Clo. Fools are not mad folks.

Im. Do you call me fool?

Imo. As I am mad, I do; If you'll be patient, I'll no more be mad; That cures us both. I am much sorrier, sir, You put me to forget a lady's manners, By being so verbal: and learn now, for all, That I can know my heart, nor be pronunt, By the very truth of it, I care not for you; And am so near the lack of charity,
Are men more order'd, than when Julius Cesar
Smile at their lack of skill, but find their courage
Worthy hisrowning at; their discipline
Now armed with their courages] will make known
To their approvers; they are people, such
That lend upon the world.

Enter Iachimo.

Phi. See! Iachimo! Post. The swiftest harts have posted you by land;
And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails,
To make your vessel nimble.

Welcome, sir.

Phi. Post, I hope, the briefness of your answer made
The speediness of your return.

Iach. Your lady
Is one the fairest that I have look'd upon.

Post. And therewithal, the best; or let her beauty
Look through a casement to allure false hearts,
And be false with them.

Iach. Here are letters for you.

Post, Their letter good, I trust.

Iach. 'Tis very like.

Phi. Was Caius Lucius in the Britton court,
When you were there?

Iach. He was expected then,
But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet.—
Sparkles this stone as it was wont? or is not Too dull for your good wear?

Iach. If I had lost it,
I should have lost the worth of it in gold.
I'll make a journey twice as far, to enjoy
A second sight of such sweet shortness, which
Was mine in Britton; for the ring is won.

Post. The stone's too hard to come by,
Not a whit,
Your lady being so easy.

Iach. Make not, sir,
Your loss your sport; I hope, you know that we Must not continue friends.

Iach. Good sir, we must,
If you keep covenant: Had I not brought
The knowledge of your mistress home, I grant
We were to question further: but I now
Profess myself the winner of her honor,
Together with your ring; and not the wronger
Of her, or you, having proceeded but
Both your wills.

Post. If you can make't apparent
That you have tasted her in bed, my hand,
And ring is yours: if not, the soul opinion
You had of her pure honor, gains, or loses,
Your sword, or mine; or masterless leaves both to who shall find them.

Iach. Sir, my circumstances,
Be no near the truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to believe: whose strength
I will confirm with oath; which, I doubt not,
You'll give me leave to spare, when you shall find
You need it not.

Proceed.

Post. First, her bed-chamber;
(Watch, I confess, I slept not; but, profess,
Had that was well worth watching?] It was hang'd
With tapestry of silk and silver; the story,
Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And Cyprus swell'd above the banks, or for
The press of boats, or pride: A piece of work
So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive
In workmanship and value; which I wonder'd
Could be so rarely and exactly wrought,
Since the true life on't was—

Post. This is true;
And this you might have heard of her, by me
Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars
Must justify my knowledge.

Post. So they must,
Or do your honor injury.

Iach. The chimney
Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece,
Chaste decorum, loathing: never saw I figures
So likely to report themselves; the catter
Was as another Nature, dumb; outwent her,
Motion and breath left out.

Post. To those who try them.

This is a thing,
Which you might from relation likewise reap;
Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iach. The roof o' the chamber
With golden cherubins is fretted: Her andronis! (I had forgot them) were two winking Cupids
Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely
Depending on their brands.

Post. This is her honor!—
Let it be granted, you have seen all this, (and
Be given to your remembrance,) the description
Of what is in her chamber, nothing saves
The wager you have laid.

Iach. Then, if you can,
((Pulling his Reserve.)
Be pale! 1 beg but leave to air this jewel: See—
And now 'tis up again: It must be married
To that your diamond; I'll keep them.

Jove!—
Once more let me behold it: Is it that
Which I left with her!

Iach. Sir, (I thank her,) that:
She hadipp'd it from her arm; I saw her yet;
Her pretty action did o'ertell her gift,
And yet embrac'd it too: She gave it me, and said,
She priz'd it once.

Post. May be, she pluck'd it off,
To send to me.

Iach. She writes so to you! doth she!

Post. O, no, no, no; 'tis true. Here, take this too;
((Gives the Ring.)
It is a basiulx unto mine eye,
Kills me to look on't.—Let there be no honor,
Where there is beauty; truth, where semblance,
love,
Where there's another man: The vows of woman
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Than they are to their virtues; which is nothing:—
O, above measure, false!—

Phi. Have patience, sir,
And take your ring again; 'tis not yet won;
It may be probable she last it on,
Who knows, if one of her women, being corrupted,
Hath stolen it from her!

Post. Very true;
And so, I hope, he came by't: Back my ring—
Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this; for this was stolen.

Iach. By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.

Post. Hack you, he swears; by Jupiter he swears,
Tis true—nay, keep the ring—tis true: I am sure,
She would not lose it: her attendants are
All sworn and honorable:—They induced to steal it;
And by a stranger!—No, he hath enjoy'd her:
The consequence of her meantime;
Is this,—she hath bought the name of whom thus dearly,
There, take thy hire; and all the fiends of hell
Divide themselves between you!

Phi. Sir, be patient:
This is not strong enough to be belov'd
Of one persuaded well of—
Never talk on';
She hath been col'd by him.

Iach. If you seek
For further satisfying, under her breasts
(Worthy the pressing) lies a mole, right proud
Of that most delicate lodging; by my liege,
I kiss'd it; and it gave me present hunger
To feed again, though full. You do remember
This stain upon her!

Post. Ay, and it doth confirm
Another stain, as big as hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.

Iach. Will you hear more?

Post, Spare your arithmetic: never count the marks
As once, and a million!

Iach. I'll be sworn,—

Post. No swearing.
If you will swear you have not done't, you lie;
And I will kill thee, if thou dost deny.

Thou hast made me cuckold.

Iach. I will deny nothing

1 Ornamented iron bars which support wood burnt in chimneys.

The badg; the token.
Post, O, that I had her here, to tear her limb-meal! I will go there, and do it; 'tis the court; before her father;—I'll do something—[Exit.]

Post. Quite beside the government of patience!—You have won; Let's follow him, and pervert the present wrath Against him a prisoner.

Joth. With all my heart. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Posthumus.

Post. Is there no way for men to be, but women Must be half-workers! We are bastards all; And that most vehemently, whose fathers Did call my father, was I know not where. When I was stamp'd; some conveir with his tools Made me a counterfeir. Yet my mother seem'd The Dame of that time; so did my uncle. The nonpareil of this:—O vengeance, vengeance! Me of my faithfull pleasure she restrain'd, And pray'd me, or, forbearance! did it with A patience so racy, the sweet view on't Might well have warm'd old Saturn; that I thought her

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Britain. A Room of State in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Queen, Clown, and Lords, at one Door; and at another, CAIUS LUCIUS and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Cæsar with us?

Luc. Then Julius Cæsar (whose remembrance yet Lives in men's eyes; and will to ears, and tongues, Be theme, and hearing ever) was in this Britain, And conquer'd it, Cæsar, Cassiblan, Cusar, (Famous in Cæsar's præsage, no whit less Than in his feats deserving it,) for him, And his succession, granted Rome a tribute, To the number of a thousand thousand pounds; which by that late Is left unenter'd.

Que. And, to kill the marvel, Shall be so ever.

Clon. There be many Cæsars,

Cym. Ere such another Julius. Britain is A world by itself; and we will nothing pay, For enhancing our own noses.

Que. That opportunity, When then they had to take from us, to resume We have again.—Remember, sir, my liege, The bargains your ancestors; together with The natural bravery of your isle; which stands As Neptune's park, ribbed and paved in With rocks uncalculated, and roaring waters; With sands, that will not bear your enemies' boats, But suck them up to the top-hast. A kind of con quest Cæsar made here: but made not here his brag Of cause, and war, and crook'd nose:—with shame, (The first that ever touch'd him,) he was carri'd From off our coast, twice beaten: and his shipping (Poor ignorant babbles!) on our terrible seas, Landed; all sheelds moved upon their surges, could'd As easily against our rocks; for joy whereof. The famed Cassiblan, who was once at point (O, great fortune!) to master Cæsar's sword, Made Lundi's town with rejoicing fires bright, And Britons strut with courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid: Our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time; and, as I said, there is no more such Cæsars: other of them may have crooked noses; but to owe such straight arms, none.

(Enter Posthumus, let your mother end.)

Clon. We have yet many among us can gripe as hard as Cassiblan: I do not say, I am one; but I have a hand.—Why tribute! why should we pay tribute? If Cæsar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the moon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else, sir, no more tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know,

Till the injurious Romans did extort This tribute from us, we were free Cæsar's ambition (Which swell'd so much that it did almost stretch The sides o' the world,) against all color, here Did put the yoke upon us; which to shake off, froward becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon ourselves to be. We do say then to Cæsar, Our ancestor was that Munius, which Ordain'd our laws; (whose use the sword of Cæsar Had too much mingled;) whose repair, and frus rhese, Shall, by the power we hold, be our good deed, Though Rome be therefore angry? Munius, Who was the first of Britain, which did put His brows within a golden crown, and call'd Himself a king.

Luc. I am sorry, Cymbeline, That I am to pronounce Augustus Cæsar, (Cæsar, that hath more kings his servants, than Thyself domestic officers,!) theme enemy: Receive it not, my liege, for war, and confusion, In Cæsar's name pronounce I cannot see a look For fury not to be resisted:—Thus detested, I thank thee for myself.

Cym. Thou art welcome, Caius. Thy Cæsar knighted me; my youth I spent Much under him; of him I gather'd honor Which he, to seek of me again, perforce, Believes me keep at attendance? I am perfect, That the Pantomims and Dalmatians, for Their liberties, are now in arms; a precedent Which, not to read, would show the Britons cold So Cæsar shall not find them.

Let proof speak.

Clo. His majesty bids you welcome. Make past time with us a day, or two, longer: If you seek us afterwars in other terms, you shall, as we in our salt-water girdle: if you beat us out of it, it is yours; if you fall in the adventure, our cows shall fare the better for you; and there's an end.

Luc. So, sir.

Cym. I know your master's pleasure, and thine: All the reman is, welcome. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Pirando.

Pir. How! of adultery! Wherefore write you not What monster's her accuser?—Leonatus! O, master! what a strange mixture Is fallen into thy ear! What false Italian (As poisonous tongue'd, as handed) hath prevail'd On thy too ready hearing!—Desolate! No: At the extremity of desaines. Well informed.
Cymbeline, Act III.

She's punish'd for her truth; and undergoes,
More goddess-like than wife-like, such assaults
As would take in some virtue,—O, my master!
They find to her as low as
Thy fortunes.—How! that I should murder her!
Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I
Have made to thy command!—I, her!—her blood!
If it be so to do good service, never Let me be counted serviceable. How look I
That I should seem to lack humanity
So much as this fact costs to! Do't: The better
[Reading.
That I have sent her, by her own command,
Shall give her opportunity.—O damn'd paper!
Black ink that's on thee! Senseless hand, Art thou a foolard for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without! Lo, here she comes.

Enter Imogen.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.
Ino. How now, Pisanio!
Pis. Madam, here is a letter from my lord.
Ino. Who! thy lord! that is my lord, Leonatus?
O, learn'd indeed were that astronomer,
That knew the stars, as I his characters;
He read the future open.—You are gods,
Let what is here contain'd relish of love,
Of my lord's health, of his content,—yet not,
That we two are asunder, let that grieve him.—
[Some cries are heard on the stage:] that is one of them,
For it doth plain love.—of his content,
All but in that!—Good wax, thy leave: Bless'd be
You bees, that make these locks of counsell! Lovers,
And men in dangerous bonds, pray not alike;
Though forfathers you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables—Good news, gods!
[Reading.
Justice, and your father's wrath, should he take me to his dominion, could not be so cruel to me, as you. Other dearer creatures, would not even once but I do not wonder. The three lilies
At Milford-Haven. What your own love will, out of this, advise you, follow. So, he wishes you all hap-iness, that remains loyal to his row, and your, interests in her.
Leonatus prosecuting,
O, for a horse with wings!—Hearst thou, Pisanio?
He is at Milford-Haven: Read, and tell me
How far's thither. If one of mean affairs
May plead it in a week, why may not
I fill up the time in a day?—Lo, how crowded
[Long'st, like me, to see thy lord; who Long'st,—
O, let me hate,—but not like me—yet long'st,—
But in a fitter kind:—O, not like me;
For mine's beyond beyond,) say, and speak thick.
[Love's counsellor shall fill the bares of hearing,
To make the summer of the season.
To this same blessed Milford: And, by the way,
Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as
To inherit such a haven: But, first of all,
How we may steal from hence; and for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going
And our return, to excuse: but first, how get hence;
Why should excuse be born or ceg hegot?
We'll talk of that hereafter. Pr'ythee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
Twixt hour and hour?
Twice score, twixt sun and sun, and
Madam, 's enough for you; and too much too.
Indo. Why, why, what that 'tide to his execution, man,
Could never go so slow! I have heard of riding
Waters,
Where horses have been nimble than the sands
That run t' the clock's behalf:—But this is foolery:
Go, but a man with a sickness; say
She'll home to her father; and provide me, pre-

ently,
A riding suit; no costlier than would fit
ANothingkin's housewife.

Pis. Madam, you're best consider.
Ino. I see before me, man, nor here, nor here,
Nor what ensues; but have a fog in them,
That I cannot look through. Away, I pr'ythee;

To take in a town, is to conquer it.

Confederate
Crowd one word on another, as fast as possible.
A freholder.

Do as I bid thee: There's no more to say;
Accessible is none but Milford way.

SCENE III.—Wales, A Mountains Country, with a Care.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arthurines.

Bel. A good day not to keep house, with such Whose roof's as low as ours! Stoop, boys: This gate
Instructs you how to adore the heavens; and bows
To morning's holy office. The gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turds on, without
One molested to the sun.—Hail, hail, Milford! We House i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Gu. Hail, heaven!
Ar. Hail, hail, heaven!
Bel. Now, for our mountain sport; Up to you hill,
Your legs are young; I'd tread these flats. Con-

When you above perceive me like a crow,
That it is place which lessens, and sets all,
And you may then revolve what tales I have told you.

Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:
This service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd: To apprehend thus,
Sparing a profit from all things, banish'd,
And often, to our comfort, shall we find
The shar'd beetle in a safer hold
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O, this life
Must, rather than attend for a cheerful
Richer, than doing nothing for a babe;
Pronder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him, that makes them fine,
Yet that they would not purchase: no life to ours!

Gu. Out of your proof you speak: we, poor un-

flee'd;
Have other wing'd from view o' the nest; nor know not
What air's from home. Haply, this life is best,
If quiet life be best; sweeter to you,
That to your present known; well corresponding
With your stildage: but, unto us, it is
A cell of ignorance; travelling a-bed;
A prison for a debtor, that do not dare
To stride a limb.

Arv. What should we speak of,
When we are old as you when we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December, how,
In this singleing cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away! We have seen nothing:
We are beastly; subtle as the fox, for prey;
Like wardlike as the wolf, for what we eat;
Our food to chose to what may taste, our cup
We make a quire, as doth the prison bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speak!
Did you but know the city's naunes,
And left them knowing the art o' the court,
As hard to leave, as keep; whose top to climb
Is certainly falling, or so slippery, that
The fear's as bad as falling; the toil of the war,
A pain that only seems to seek out danger
I the name of fame and honor; which dies i the
And hath as oft a sandrous epitaph,
As record of fair act; nay, many times.
Both ill deserve by doing well; what's worse,
Mind power at the censure.—This, this story
The world may read in me: My body's mark'd
With Roman swords; and my report was once
First with the best of note: Cymbeline lov'd me;
And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off: Then was I as a tree,
Whose boughs did bend with fruit; but in one night,
When we little thought, what mischance it was,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather.

Gu. Uncertain favor!
Bel. My fault being nothing, (as I have told you oft)
But that two villains, whose false oaths provoked
Before my perfect honor, sware to Cymbeline,
Was coupl'd at with the Romans; and
Follow'd my banishment: and, this twenty years,
Out, shut, walk proudly, Sealy-winged.
I. i.e. Compared with ours. To overpass his bound.
This rock, and these descenes, have been my world; Where I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid More pious debts to heaven, than in all The for-end of my time.—But, up to the moun- tain.
This is not hunters' language:—He that strikes The venison first, shall be the lord of the feast; To him the other two shall minister; And to the young shepheards in place of greater state. I'll meet you in the val- lyes.

How hard it is to hide the sparks of nature! They know little; they are sons to the king; Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. They think, they are mine: and, though train'd up thus mainly I the eye, whereon they bow, their thoughts do hit The roofs of palaces; and nature prompts them, in simple and low things to prince it, much Beyond the trick of others, This Polydore.— The herb of Cymbeline, and thou needst The king he father call'd Guidercius, Jove! When on my three-foot stool I sat, and tell The warlike feats I have done, his spirits fly out Into my story; say, Thus mine enemy fell: And thus I set my foot on his neck; even then The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats, Strains his young avenes, and puts himself in Scare torture.
That acts my words, The younger brother, Cadwal, (Once, Arviragus,) in as like a figure, Strikes a lesson into my speech, and shows much more His own conceiving. Hack! the game is round!'— O Cymbeline! heaven, and my conscience, knows, Thou didst unjustly banish me: whereon, At three and two years old, I stole these babes; Thinking to bar thee of succession, as Thou relst of my hands. Enrphile, Thou wast their nurse; they took thee for their mother And every day do honor to her grave: Myself, Belarius, that am Morgan call'd, They take for natural father. The game is up.
The time inviting thee? the perturb'd court,
For my being absent: whereunto I never Purpose return! Why last thou gone so far,
To heabent, when thou hast on thy stand,
The elected deer before thee?

Pis. But to win time
To lose so bad employment: in the which
I th'consider'd of a course: Good lady,
Hear me with patience.

Imo. Talk thy tongue weary; speak:
I have heard, I am a strumpet, and mine car.
Therein false struck, can take no greater sound,
Nor tent to bottom that. But speak,

Pis. Then, madam,
I thought you would not back again.
Most like;
Bunzing me here to kill me.

Pis. Not so, neither:
But if I were as wise as honest, then
My purpose would prove well. It cannot be,
But that thy master is abused;
Some villain, ay, and singular in his art,
Hath made thee hold this cursed service.

Imo. Some Roman countenance.

Pis. I'll give but notice you are dead, and send him
Some bloody sign of it; for 'tis commanded
I should do so: You shall be miss'd at court,
And that will well confirm it.

Imo. Why, good fellow,
What shall I do the while? Where abide? How live?
Or in my life what comfort, when I am
Dead to my husband?

Pis. If you'll back to the court,—

Imo. No court, no father; nor no more ado
With that harsh, noble, simple, nothing:
That Cloten, whose love-suit hath been to me
As form a siege.

Pis. If not at court,
Then not in Britain must you hide.

Imo. Where, then?
Hath Britain all the sun that shines? Day, night,
Are they not but in Britain! I' the world's volume
Our Britain seems as of it, but not in it;
In a great pool, a swan's nest; Pr'ythee, think,
There's lives out of Britain.

Pis. I am most glad
You think of other place. The ambassador
Lucius the Roman, comes to Milford-Haven.
To morrow: Now, if you could wear a mind
Jack as your fortune is; and but disguise
That, which, to appear itself, must not yet be,
But must resemble you; you should then strike
A course pretty, and full of view: yea, happly, near
The residence of Posthumus: so high, at least,
That though his actions were not visible, yet
Rome and her already hourly to your car,
As truly as he moves.

Imo. O, for such means!
Thien peril to my modesty, not death on't,
I would adventure.

Pis. Well, then, here's the point:
You must forget to be a woman; change
Command into obedience; fear, and meekness,
(The handmaid of all women, or, more truly,
Woman its pretty self,) to a wagyard course;
Ready in places, quick-answer'd, saucy, and
As peradventure as the may; you must forget
That rarest treasure of your check,
Exposing it (but, 0, the harder heart!
Aack, no remedy!) to the greedy touch
Of non-kissing Titan; and terrible
Your laborsome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Juno angry.

Imo. Nay, be brief:
I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make yourself but like one;
For thinking this, I have already in it
(Thy in my cloak-bag,) doublet, hat, hose, all
That answer to them: Would you, in their serving,
And with what imitation you can borrow
From the currier, of such a season, let proper
Lucius present himself, desire his service, tell him
Whereon you are happy, (Which you'll make him
Know
If that his head have car in music,) doubtless,
With joy he will embrace you; for he's honorable,
And, doubting that, most holy. Your means abroad
You have me rich; and I will never fail
Beginning, nor supplyment.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The gods will diet me with. Pr'ythee, away:
There's more to be consider'd; but we'll even
All that good time will give us; This attempt
I'm soidier to, and will abide it with
A prince's courage. Away, I pr'ythee.

Pis. Well, madam, we must take a short farewell:
Lest, being miss'd, I be suspected
Of your carriage from the court. My noble mistress,
Here is a box: I had it from the queen;
What's in't is precious; if you are sick at sea,
Or stomach-quaint'n at land, a dram of
That will distil thine embitter. Pr'ythee take shade,
And fit you to your manhood:—May the gods
Direct you to the best!

Imo. Amen: I thank thee.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Queen, Cloten, Lucius, and Lords.

Cym. Thus far; and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, royal sir.
My emperor hath wrote; I must from hence;
And am right sorry that I must report ye
My master's enemy.

Cloten Our subjects, sir,
Will not endure his yoke; and for our self:
To show less sovereignty than they must needs
Appear unconquered.

Luc. So, sir, I desire of you
A conduct over land, to Milford-Haven:—
Madam, all joy befall thy grace, and you!
Cym. My lords, you are appointed for that office:
That of honor in no point omits:—
So, farewell, noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my lord.

Cloten Receive it friendly: but from this time forth
I will it as your enemy.

Luc. Sir, the event
Is yet to name the winner: Fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my lords;
Till he have crossed the Severn.—Happiness!
[Exeunt Lucius and Lords.

Queen. He goes hencerowning; but it honors us,
That we have given him cause.

Cloten 'Tis all the better;
You valiant Britons have their wise in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor
How it goes here. It fits us, therefore, truly,
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness:
This nation that he already hath in Goldi
Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves
His wrath for Britain.

Queen. 'Tis not sleepy business;
But must be look'd to speedily, and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus,
Made us forward. But, my gentle queen,
Where is our daughter? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to us hath render'd
The duty of the day: She looks us like
A first more mad of malice, than of duty:
We have noted it,—Call her before us; or
We have been too slight in sufferance.
[Exit an Attendant.

Queen. Since the exile of Posthumus, most retir'd
Hath her life been; the cure whereof, my lord,
'Tis time must do. 'Beseech your majesty,
Tobear sharp speeches to her: she's a lady
So tender of rebukes, that words are strokes,
And strokes death to her.

Re-enter an Attendant.

Cym. Where is she, sir? How can her contempt be answer'd?

Cloten. Please you, sir,
Her chambers are all lock'd; and there's no answer
That will be given to the loud'st of noise we make Queen. My lord, when last I went to visit her,
She pr'ythee'd me to excuse her keeping close;
Whereat constrain'd by her intimacy,
She should that duty unpay'd to you,
As for your subsistence abroad, you may rely on me.
Cymbeline

Scene VI.

Which daily she was bound to proffer: this
She wish'd me to make known; but our great court
Made me to blame in memory.

CLO. Her doors lock'd! so for Posthumus—
Not seen of late! Grant, heavens, that, which I fear, Prove false! [Exit.

Queen. Son, I say, follow the king.

That man that hers, Pisania, her old servant,
I have not seen these two days.

Queen. [Exit CLOTON.

Pisania, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus—
He hath a drug of mine: I pray, his absence
Proceed by swallowing that; for he believes
It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where she is come? Haply, despair hath seiz'd her;
Or, wringing with terror of her love, she's flown to her desir'd Posthumus: Gone she is
To death, or to dishonesty: and my end
Cannot make good any of either: She being down,
I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter CLOTON.

How now, my son! 'Tis certain she is fled;
Go in, and cheer the king; he rages; none
Dare speak about him.

Queen. All the better: May
This night forestall him of the coming day?

CLO. I love and hate her: for she's fair and royal;
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite
Than lady, ladies, woman; from every one
The best she hath, and she of all compounded,
Outselling them all: I love her therefore; But Disdaining me, and throwing favors on
The low Posthumus, slander her judgment.
That what's else rare, is choked; and, in that point,
I will conclude to hate her, nay, indeed,
To be revenged upon her. For, when fools
Enter PIRANXO, with the Clothes.

Shall—Who is here? What are you packing, sirrah?
Come hither: Ah, you precious pandr! Villain,
Where is thy lady? or, by Jupiter,
I will not ask again. Close villain,
I will have this secret from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to find it. Is she with Posthumus?
From whom so many many weights of baseless cannot
A dram of worth be drawn.

Pis. Alas, my lord,
How can she be with him? When was she miss'd?
He is in Rome.

Clo. Where is she, sir? Come nearer;
No further halting; satisfy me home,
What is become of her?

Pis. Oh, my all-worthy lord!

Discover where thy mistress is, at once.
At the next word.—No more of worthy lord,—
Speak, or thy silence on the instant is Thy condemnation and thy death.

Pis. Then, sir,
This paper is the history of my knowledge
Touching her flight. [Presenting a Letter.

Clo. Let's see:—I will pursue her
Even to Augustus' throne.

She's not so far; and this, or perish,
She's renegron; and what he learns by this [Aside.

May prove his travel, not her danger.

Pis. Humph! Haply,

Pis. I'll write to my lord she's dead. O Imogen.
Safe may'st thou wander, safe return again! [Aside.

Clo. Sirrah, is this letter true?

Pis. Yes, sir, as I think.

Clo. It is Posthumus' hand; I mean, sirrah, if thou wouldst not be a villain, but do me true service;
undergo those employments wherein I should have cause to use thee, with a serious induence—that is, what villain so mean thou do. ne to perform it, directly and truly.—I would think thee an honest man; thou shouldst neither want my means for thy relief, nor my voice for thy preference.

Pis. Well, my good lord.

Clo. Wilt thou serve me? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stuck to the bare fortune of that beggar Posthumus, thou canst not in the justest course of subversion be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serve me?

Pis. Sir, I will.

Clo. Give me thy hand, here's my purse. Hast any of the master's garments in thy possession?

Pis. I have, my lord, at my lodgings, the same suit he wore when he took leave of my lady and mistress.

Clo. The first service thou dost me, fetch that suit hither: let it be thy first service: go.

Pis. I shall, my lord. [Exit. Clo.

Clo. That at Milford-Haven—I forget to ask him one thing: I'll remember anon:—Even there, thou villain, Posthumus, will I kill thee—I would these garments were come. She said upon a time, (thou knowest of it I now belie rich from my heart,) that she held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. With that last true—To Milford-Haven I ravish her: First kill him, and in her eyes: there shall she see my valor, which will then be a torment to her contempt. He on the ground, my speech of insufficiency, that I have been in the military when my lips hath danc'd, (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the clothes that she so praised,) to the court I'll lead her back, fast her home again.
She hath despised me rejoycantly, and I'll be na-
thy in my revenge.

Re-enter PIRANXO, with the Clothes.

Be those the garments!

Pis. Ay, my noble lord.

Clo. How long is't since she went to Milford-
Haven?

Pis. She can scarce be there yet.

Clo. Brinz this apparel to my chamber; that is the second thing that I have commanded thee: the third is, thou shalt be a voluntary mate to my design. Be but duteous, and true prerogive shall render itself to thee. My revenge is now at Milford: 'Would I had wings to follow it!—Come, and be true to me.

Pis. Thou bid'st me to my loss: for true to thee,
Were to prove false, which I will never be,
To him that await true—To Milford: do you hear?
Flow, flow, you heavenly blessings, on her! This fool's speecross'd with slowness; labor be his need.

SCENE VI.—Before the Cave of Belarius.

Enter IMOGON, in Boy's Clothes.

IMOGON. I see a man's life is a tedious one:
I have tired myself; and for two nights together
Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick,
But that my resolution helps me.—Milford, When
This month's wearied-top Pisania should't he,
Thou wast within a ken: O Jove! I think,
Foundations fly the wretched: such, I mean.
Where they should be relev'd. Two beggars told me,
I could not miss my way: Will poor folks lie,
That have affections on them; knowing 'tis
A punishment, or trial? Yes; no wonder,
When rich ones scarce tell true: To hypocrin fulness
Is ever to be; but even before thee,
A poor man is ever to be poor man.

At point of sink for food.—But what is this?
Here is a path to it? 'Tis some savage hold:
I were best not call: I dare not call yet: famine,
Ere clesing, makes o'er thee nature, makes it vallant.
Pleas, and peace, breed concoctions; hardiness ever
Of hardness is mother.—Ho! who's there here?
If any thing that's evil, speak it; if savage,
Take, or let us speak!—Ho! I give no answer
But to the man that doth best set out my sword:
and if mine enemy
But fear the sword like me, he'll scarcely look on.
Such a foe, good heavens! [She goes into the Cave.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Artogall.

BEL. You, Polydore, have prov'd best woodman, 2

And are master of the feast; Cadwal, and I,
Will play the cook and servant; 'tis our match

2 Best hunter.
The sweet of industry would dry, and die,
But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs
Will make what's homely, savoury: Weariness
Can snore upon the flint, when restive sloth
Finds the down pillow hard.—Now, peace be here,
 Poor house, that keepst thyself!

Gut. I am thoroughly weary.
Arc. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite.
Gut. There's cold meat! the cage; we'll browse on that,
Whilst what we have kill'd be cool'd.
Bel. Stay; come not in: [Looking in.
But that it eats our victuals, I should think.
Here were a tairy.
Gut. What's the matter, sir?
Bel. By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,
 An earthly paragon!—Behold divineness
No elder than a boy!

Enter Imogen.

Imo. Good masters, harm me not:
Before I enter'd here, I call'd; and thought
To have been kill'd, or bought, what I have took:
Good, I have stolen naught; nor would not, though I had.
Good strew'd o' the floor. Here's money for my meat:
I would have left it on the board, so soon
As I had made my meal; and parted
With prayers for the provider.
Gut. Money, youth?
Arc. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt!
This is the better reckoning, but of these
Who worship dirty gods.
Imo. I see you are angry:
Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should
Have died, had I not made it.
Bel. Whither bound?
Imo. To Milford-Haven, sir.
Bel. What is your name?
Imo. Fidele, sir; I have a kinsman, who
Is bound for Italy; he embark'd at Milford:
To whom being going, almost spent with hunger,
I am fallen into this solace.
Bel. P'thoe, fair youth,
Think us no churls; nor measure our good minds
By this rude place we live in. Well encounter'd!
'Tis almost night: you shall have better cheer.
Ere you depart; and thanks, to stay and eat it.—
Boys, bid him welcome.
Gut. Were you a woman, youth, I should woo hard, but he your groom.—In honesty, I bid you for, as I'd buy.

Imo. I'll make't my comfort,
He is a man; I'll love him as my brother:—
And such a welcome as I'd give to him,
After long absence, such is yours.—Most welcome!
Be sprightly, for you fall 'mongst friends.

Imo. How! 'mongst friends!

If brothers?—Would it had been so, that
They had been my father's sons! then had my Axide.

price

Been less heard so more equal ballasting
To thee, Posthumus.

Bel. He wrings at some distress.
Gut. Would I could fre'e!
Arc. Or 1; what'ever it be,
What pain it cost, what danger! Gods!
Bel. Harl, boys, [Whispering.

Imo. Great men,

That had a court no bigger than this cave,
That did attend themselves, that had the virtue
Which their own conscience could them, (buying by
That nothing gift of dutoing multitudes,)
Could not out-per these twain. Pardon me, gods!
I'll change my sex to be companion with them,
Since Leonatius' false.
Bel. It shall be so:
Boys, we'll go dress our hunt.—Fair youth, come in:
Discourse is heavy, fasting; when we have sup'd,
We'll merrily demand thee of thy story,
So far as thou wilt speak it.

Gut. Pray, draw near.
Arc. The night to the owl, and morn to the lark, less welcome.
Imo. Thanks, sir.
Arc. I pray, draw near. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Rome.

Enter two Senators and Tribunes.

Sen. This is the tenor of the emperor's writ:
That since the common men are now in action
'Gainst the Pannonians and Dalmatians:
And that the legions now in Gallia are Full weak to undertake our wars against
The fallen-off Britons: that we do incite
The gentry to this business: he creates
Lucius proconsul: and to you the tribunes,
For this immediate levy, he commands
His absolute commission. Long live Caesar!

Tr. Is Lucius general of the forces?

Sen.

Tr. Remaining now in Gallia?

Tr.

[Exeunt.

my commendations. My horse is tied up safe: Out word, and to a sore purpose! Fortune! put them into my hand! This is the very description of their meeting-place; and the fellow dares not deceive me.

SCENE XI.—Before the Cave.

Enter, from the Cave. Belarius, Gudierrez,
Arrivaus, and Imogen.

Bel. You are not well. [To Imogen.] remain
here in the cave:
We'll come to you after hunting.

Arc. Brother, stay here:
[To Imogen.

Are we not brothers?

Imo. So man and man should be;
But clay and clay differs in dignity;
Whose dust is both alike.—I am very sick.
Arc. Go you to hunting, I'li abide with him.

Imo. So sick I am not; yet I am not well:
But not so citizen a wanton, as
To seem to die, and sick: So please you leave me;
Such to your journal course: the breach of customary
Is breach of all. I am ill; but your being by me
Cannot amend me: Society is no comfort
Keep your daily course.
To one not sociable: I'm not very sick.
Since I can reason of it. Pray you, trust me here:
I'll rob none but myself; and let me die,
Stealing so poorly.

Cymbeline. I love thee; I have spoken it:
How much the quantity, the weight as much,
As I do love my father.

Bel. What? how? how? how?

Arr. If it be sin to say so, sir, I spoke it.
In my good brother's fault: I know not why
I love this youth; and I have heard you say,
Love's reason without reason; the bar at door,
And a demand, who's shall die, I'd say.

My father, not this youth.

Bel. O noble strain! [Aside.]

O worthiness of nature! breed of greatness!
Cowards father cowards, and base things sire base:
Nature hath meal, and bran; contempt, and grace.

I am not their father; yet who this should be,
Poth miracle itself, let's be before me—
'Tis the tenth hour of the morn.

Arr. I wish ye sport.

Arr. You health.—So please you, sir.

[Aside. These are kind creatures. Gods,
What lies I have heard!
Cur courtiers say, all's savage, but at court:
Experience, O, thou disprosv't report!
The impious seas breed monsters; for the dish,
Each tributary river has sweet fish.
I am sick still; heart-sick—Pisania,
I'll now taste of thy drug.

Gut. He said, he was gentle, but unfortunate;
Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arr. Thus did he answer me: yet said, hereafter
I might know more.

Bel. To the field, to the field.—
We'll leave you for this time: go in, and rest.
Arr. We'll not be long away.

Bel. For you must be our housewife.

Arr. Well, or ill, I am bound to you.

Bel. And so shalt be ever.

[Exit Mogen.

This youth, howe'er distress'd, appears, he hath had Good ancestors.

Arr. How angel-like he sings!

Gut. But his next cookery! he cut our roots in characters;
And sauc'd our broths, as Juno had been sick,
And he his dicer.

Arr. Nobly he yokes
A smiling with a sigh: as if the sigh
Was that it was, not for being such a smile?
The same mocking the sign of sigh, that it would fly
From so divine a temple, to compunction
With winds that sailors rack at.

Gut. That grief and patience, rooted in him both,
Mingle their spurs together.

Arr. Grow, patience!
And let the stinking elder, grief, untwine.
His perishing root, with the increasing vine!

Bel. It is great morning. Come; away:—Who's there!

Enter Cloten.

Clo. I cannot find those runagates; that villain
Hath knock'd me—1 am faint.

Those runagates?

Mean's he not us? I partly know him; 'tis
Cloten, the son of the queen. I fear some ambush.
I say him not these many years, and yet
I know 'tis he:—We are held as outlaws:—Hence.

Gut. He is but one; you and my brother, search
What companies are near: pray you, away;
Let alone with us.

[Exeunt Belarius and Arviragus.

Clo. Soit! What are you
That fly me thus? some villain mountaineers?
I have heard of such.—What slave art thou?

Gut. A thing
More slavish did I never, than answering
As, being, without a knock.

Clo. Thou art a robber,
A law-breaker, a villain: Yield thee, thief.

*Imperial. Well-born. Spur's are the roots of trees.

Gut. To who? to thee? What art thou? Have not
An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?
Thy words, the grandeur, there bigger; for we bear not
My dagger in my mouth. Say, what thou art;
Why I should yield to thee?

Clo. Thou villain base,
Know'st me not by my clothes?

Gut. No, nor thy tailor, rascal,
Who is thy grandfather; he made those clothes,
Which, as it seems, make thee.

Clo. Thou precious varlet,
My tailor made them not.

Hence then, and thank
The man that gave thee them. Thou art some fool;
I am loath to beat thee.

Clo. Thou injurious thief,
Hear but my name, and tremble.

Gut. What's thy name?

Clo. Cloten, thou villain.

Gut. Cloten, thou double villain, be thy name,
I cannot tremble at it; were't head, or adder, spader,
I would move me sooner.

Clo. To thy further fear,
Nay, to thy mere confusion, thou shalt know
I'm son to the queen.

Gut. I'm sorry for't; not seeming
So worthy as thy birth.

Clo. Art not afraid?

Gut. Those that I reverence, those I fear; the wise;
At fools I laugh, not fear them.

Clo. Die the death:
When I have stain thee with my proper hand,
I'll follow those that even now fled hence,
And on the gates of London's town set these heads:
Yield, rustic mountaineer. [Exeunt, fighting.

Enter Belarius and Arviragus.

Bel. No company's abroad.

Arr. None in the world: You did mistake him, sure.

Bel. I cannot tell: Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blur'd those lines of favor
Which then he wore; the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his: I am absolute,
'Twas very Cloten.

Arr. In this place we left them;
I wish my brother make good time with him,
You say he is so fell.

Bel. Becoming scarce made up,
I mean, to man, he had not apprehension
Of roaring terrors; for the effect of judgment
Is the cause of fear: But see, thy brother.

Re-enter Gerard, with Cloten's Head.

Gut. This Cloten was a fool: and a purse,
There was no money in't: not hercules
Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had none:
Yet I not doing this, the fool had borne
My head as I do his.

Bel. What hast thou done?

Gut. I am perfect, what: cut off one Cloten's head,
Son to the queen, after his own report;
Who call'd me traitor, mountaineer, and swore,
With his own single hand he'd take us in;
Displace our heads, where [thank the gods! they grew,
And set them on Lud's town.

Bel. We are all undone,
Gut. Why, worthy father, what have we to lose
But, that he swore to take, our lives? The law
Protecteth us: Then why should he be fonder,
To let an arrogant piece of flesh thrust us?
Play judge, and executioner, all himself;
For we do fear the law! What company
dever you abroad!

Bel. No single soul
Can we set eye on, but, in all safe reason,
He must have some attendants. Though his humor
Has nothing but inclination; ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse; not frenzy, not Absolute madness could so far have raved,
To bring him he's alone: Although, perhaps,
It may be heard at court, that such as we
Cave here, hunt here, are outlaws, and in time
May make some stronger head: the which he hearing,
[As it is] he little breaths. But I swear
He'd fetch us in: yet 'tis not probable
To come alone, either he so undertaking,

1 Countenance. 2 Conqueror, subdue.
Or they so suffering: then on good ground we fear,
If we did bear this body hath a tall
More perilous than the head.

Arr. Let ordinance
Come as the gods foresay it: howsoever,
My brother hath done well.

Bel. I had no mind
To hunt this day: the boy Fidele's sickness
Did make my way long lour.

Guil. With his own sword,
Which he did wave against my throat, I have ta'en
His head from him: I'll throw it into the creek
Behind our rock: and let it to the sea,
And all the fishes he's the queen's son, Cloten:
That's all I reck. [Exit.

Bel. I fear, 'twill be revenged:
'Would, Polydore, thou hadst not done! though valor
Becomes thee well enough.

Arr. So the revenge alone pursued me!—Polydore,
I love thee brotherly: but envy much,
Thou hast rob'd me of this deed: I would, revenges,
That possible strength might meet, would seek us
And put us to our answer.

Bel. Well, 'tis done:
We'll hunt no more to-day, nor seek for danger
Where there's no profit, I pr'ythee, to our rock;
You and Fidele play the cooks: I'll stay
Till hasty Polydore return, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Arr. Poor sick Fidele!
I'll willingly to him: To gain his color,
I'd let a parish of such Clotens' blood,
And cause myself for charity. [Exit.

Bel. O thou goddess,
Thou divine Nature, how thyself thou blazon'st
In these two proude boys? They are as gentle
As gazels, blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head: and yet as rough,
Their royal blood enchaufed, as the rust'd wind,
That by the top doth take the mountain pine,
And make it's stern steepy make the vale.
'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To royalty unlearn'd; honor untought;
Civility not seen from other; valor,
That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop
As if it had worn'sd! Yet still it's strange
What Cloten's being here to us portends;
Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter General.

Guil. Whose my brother!
I have sent Cloten's chit-poll down the stream,
In embassy to his mother; his body's hostage
For his return.

Arr. [Solemn musick.]
Hark, Polydore, it sounds! But what occasion
Had Cadwal now to give it motion? Hark!

Bel. Is he at home?

Guil. What does he mean? since death of my dearst mother
It did not speak before. All solemn things
Should answer solemn accents. The matter!
Triumphs for nothing, and lamenting toys;
Is jollity for apes, and grief for boys.

Re-enter Artirages, bearing Images as dead, in his arms.

Bel. Look, here he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his arms,
Of what we blame him for:

Arr. The bird is dead,
That we have made so much on. I had rather
Have skip'd from sixteen years of age, to sixty,
To have turn'd my leaping-time into a crutch,
Than have seen this. 0 sweetest, fairest lily;
My brother wears not thee one-half so well,
As when thou grew'st thyself.

Bel. O, melancholy! Who ever yet could sound thy bottom? find
The coaze, to show what coaze thy shaggy ears?
Might the seadler harbor in?—Thou blessed thing!
Jove knows what man thou might'st have made;
but I,

Cure. Tristes! A school-smiling, unhappily vessel.

Thou diest, a most rare boy, of melancholy—
I found you him?

Arr. Stark, as you see:
Thus smiling, as some elf had tickled slumber,
Not as death's dart, being laught at his right Cheek?

Reposing on a cushion.

Guil. Where?

Arr. Of the floor;
His arms thus leaped: I thought he slept; and put My clouted brogues off from off my feet, whose rude
ness
Answer'd my steps too loud.

Guil. Why, he but sleeps:
If he be gone, he'll make his grave a bed;
With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
And worms will not come to thee.

Arr. With fairest flowers,
Whilst summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave: Thou shalt not lack
The flower, that's like thy face, pale primrose; nor
The azur'd hare-bell, like thy veins; nor
The leaf of echantine, whom not to slander,
Out-sweet'd could not thy breath: the radiant would
With charitable bill, (0 bill, sore-shaming,
Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
Without a monument!) bring thee all this;
Yes, much, and Muriold besides, when flowers are none, to winter-ground'd thy corse.

Guil. Pr'ythee, have done,
And do not play in weech-like words, with that
Which is so serious. Let us bury him,
And not protract with admiration what
Is now due debt.—To the grave.

Arr. Say, where shall's lay him?

Guil. By good Euripiile, our mother.

Bel. Be't so:
And hauk, Polydore, though now our voices
Have got the mannieach crack, sing him to the ground,
As once our mother: use-like note, and words,
Save that Euripiile must be Fidele.

Guil. Cadwalad,
I cannot sing: I'll weep, and word it with thee:
For notes of sorrow, out of tune, are worse
Then priests and lames that lie.

Arr. We'll speak it, then.

Bel. Great griefs, I see, medicin the less: for Cloten
Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys:
And, though he came our enemy, remember,
He was paid for that: Though mean and mighty,
But riding together, have one dust: yet reverence
(That angel of the world) doth make distinction
Of place between high and low, Our foe was princely;
And though you took his life, as being our foe,
Yet be him as a prince.

Guil. 'Pray you, fetch him hither
Thersites' body is as good as Ajax,
When neither are alive.

Arr. If you'll go fetch him, we'll say our song the while.—Brother, begin.

Guil Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the east;
My father hath a reason for't.

Arr. Tis true.

Guil. Come on then, and remove him.

Arr. So,—begin.

SONG

Guil. Fear no more the heat of the sun,
Nor the furious winter's rage:
Thou weary laboring, panting, sighing wretch,
Thou hast to bear the冬天's rage.
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Arr. Fear no more the frown of the great,
That art past the tyrant's stroke:
Care? no more to clothe, and eat;
To live the reed is as the oak:
The steeples, towers, palaces, must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Stiff. Shoes plated with iron.

* Prob. A corrupt reading for either round thy corse.
Scene II. Cybeline.

After your will, have cross'd the seat attending
You here at Milford-Haven, with your ships:
They are here in readiness.
Luc. But what from Rome? Cap. The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners,
And gentlemen of Italy; most willing spirits,
That promise noble service: and they come
I under the conduct of bold Fadimino,
Sienna's brother.
Luc. When expect you them? Cap. With the next benefit o' the wind.
Luc. This forwardness
Makes our hopes fair. Command, our present numbers
Be master'd; bid the captains look to.—Now, sir,
What have you dream'd, of late, of this war's purpose?
South. Last night the very gods show'd me a
(I fast, and pray'd for their intelligence:) Thus:
I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, win'd
From the spongy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sunbeams: which portends
(Unless my sense abuse my divination)
Success to the Roman host.
Luc. Dream often so,
And never false.—Soft, ho! what trunk is here.
Without his top! The ruin speaks, that sometime
It was a worthy building.—How! a page!—
Or dead, or sleeping on him! But dead, rather:
For nature doth abhor to make his bed
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.—
Let's see the boy's face.
Cap. He is alive, my lord.
Luc. He'll then instruct us of this body.
Young one,
Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems,
They crave to be demand'd: Who is this,
Thou mock'st thy beauty pillow? Or who was he,
That, otherwise than noble nature did,
Hath alter'd that good picture! What's thy interes?
In this sad week? How came it? Who is it?
What art thou?
Imo. I am nothing; or, if not,
Nothing to be worse better. This was my master,
A very valiant Britain, and a good,
That here by mountaineers lies slain.—Alas!
There are no more such masters: I may wander
From east to occident, cry out for service,
Try many, all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.
Luc. Back, good youth! Thou mov'st no less with thy conduct
Than thy master in bleeding: Say his name, good friend.
Imo. Richard du Champ. If I do live, and do
No harm by it, though the gods hear, I hope [Draught.
They'll pardon it.—Say you, sir! Luc. Thy name? Imo. Pake.
Luc. Thou dost approve thyself the very same:
Thy name well fits thy faith; thy faith, thy name.
Will take thy chance with me! I will not say,
Thou shalt be so well master'd; but, be sure,
No less belov'd. The Roman emperor's letters,
Sent by a consul to me, should not sooner
Than thine own worth, prefer thee: Go with me.
Imo. I'll follow, sir. But first, a'nt please the gods
I'll hide my master from the flies, as deep
As these poor pickaxes can dig: and when
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I have strew'd
His grave,
And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep, and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you,
So please you entertain me.
Luc. Ay, good youth;
And rather father thee, than master thee.—
My friends,
The gods hath ta'en us, men duties: Let us
Find out the prettiest daisied plot we can,
And make him with our pikes and particans
A grave: Come, arn him.—Boy, he is prefer'd
By two to us; and he shall be inter'd,
As soldiers can. Be cheerful; wipe thine eyes.
Some falls are means the happier to arise.
[Exit.]
SCENE III.—A Room in Cymbeline’s Palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Lords, and Perkin.

Cym. Again; and bring me word how ‘tis with her;
A fever with the absence of her son;
A madness, of which her life’s in danger:—
Heavens,
How deeply you at once do touch me! Imogen, The great part of my comfort, gone; may queen Upon a desperate bed; and in a time
When fearul wars point at me; her son gone, So needed for this present: It strikes me, past The hope of comfort.—But for thee, fellow,
Who needs must know of her departure, and
Just seem so ignorant, we’ll enforce it from thee
By a sharp torture.

Sir, my life is yours;
I humbly set it at your will: But for my mistress,
I know nothing where she remains, why gone,
Nor when she purposes return. Beseech you, my highness.
Hold me your loyal servant.
1 Lord. Good my liege,
There was that she was missing, he was here;
I dare be found true, and shall perform
All parts of his subjection loyally.
For Cloten—
There wants no diligence in seeking him,
And will, no doubt, be found.
Cym. The time’s troublesome:
We’ll slip you for a season; but our jealousy
Does yet depend.
1 Lord. So please your majesty, The Roman legions has all from Gaul paused, Are landed on your coast; with a supply
Of Roman gentlemen, by the senate sent.
Cym. Now for the counsel of my son and queen,—
I am amaz’d with matter, 2 Lord. Good my liege,
Your preparation can afford no less
Than what you hear of: come more, for more
The want is, but to put those powers in motion,
That long to move.
Cym. I thank you; Let’s withdraw;
And meet the time as it seeks us. We fear not What can from Italy annoy us; but
We grieve at chances here.—Away. [Exeunt.]
1 Lord. I heard no letter from my master, since
I wrote him, Imogen was slain: ’Tis strange:
Nor hear I from my mistress, who did promise
To yield me often tidings: Neither know I
What is belted to Cloten; but remain
Perplex’d in all. The heavens still must work:
Wherein I am false, I am honest; not true, to be true.
These present wars shall find I love my country,
Even to the notch of the king, or I’ll fall in them.
All other doubts, by time let them be cleared.
Fortune brings in some boats, that are not steer’d.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Before the Cave.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.
Guil. The noise is round about us.
Bel. Let us from it.

Arr. What pleasure, sir, find we in life, to lock
It from action and adventure?
Guil. Nay, what hope
Have we in hiding us? this way, the Romans
Must or for Britons slay us; or receive us
For barbarous and unnatural revolts.
During their use, and slay us after.
Bel. Sons,
We’ll higher to the mountains; there secure us.
To the king’s party there’s no going: news
Of Cloten’s death (we being not known, not muster’d)
Among the bands) may drive us to a render.
Wherein have lived; and so extort from us
That which we’ve done, whose answer would be death
Drawn on with torture.
Guil. This is, sir, a doubt,
In such a time, nothing becoming you,
Nor satisfying us.
Arr. It is not likely,
That when they hear the Roman horses neigh,
Befoul their quarter’d fires, have both their eyes
And ears so coldly importantly as now,
That they will waste their time upon our note, to Know from whence we are.
Bel. Of many in the army: many years,
Though Cloten then but young, you see, not wore him
From my remembrance. And, besides, the king
Hath not deserv’d my service, nor your loves;
Who find in my exile the want of advising
The certainty of this hard life; nay hopeless
To have the courtesy your cradle promis’d,
But to be still but summer’s tarnings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter.
Guil. Than be so,
Better to cease to be. Pray, sir, to the army:
I and my brother are not known; yourself,
So out of thought, and thereto so o’ergrown,
Cannot be question’d.
Arr. By this sun that shines,
I’ll thither: What thing is it, that I never Did see more die? scarce ever look’d on blood,
That but of coward harcs, hot goats, and vension;
Never bestrid a horse, one that had
A rider like myself, who ne’er wore rowel
Nor iron on his heel; I am ashamed
To look upon the holy sun, to have
The benefit of his bless’d beams, remaining
So long a poor unknown.
Guil. By heavens, I’ll go:
If you will bless me, sir, and give me leave,
I’ll take the better care; but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me, by
The hands of Romans!
Arr. So say I; Amen.
Bel. No reason I, since on your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should reserve
My crack’d one to more care. Have with you, boys:
If in your country wars you chance to die,
That is my bed too, lads, and there I’ll lie:
Lead, lead. — The time seems long; their blood
Thinks scorn, Till it fly out, and show them princes born.
[Aside.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Field between the British and Roman Camps.

Enter Posthumus, with a bloody Handkerchief.
Post. Yea, bloody cloth, I’ll keep thee; for I wish’d
Thou shouldst be color’d thus. You married ones,
If each of you would take this course, how many Mist and anger wres: much better than them selves,
For wrying? but a little—O, Peace!
Every good servant does not all commands:
No bound, but to do just ones.—Gods! if you
Should have ev’n vengeance on my faults. I never
* Confounded by a variety of business.
* Noticing.
2 Deriving from the right way.

Had life to put on this; so had you sav’d
The noble Imogen to repeat; and struck
Me, wretch, more worth your vengeance. But,
Eneas,
You stoute some hence for little faults; that’s love,
To have them fall no more: you some permit
To second ills with ills, each elder worse;
And make them dread it to the door’s thrift.
But I’ll to the island of: Do your best wills,
And make me bless’d to obey! I am brought Latter
Among the Italian gentry, and to fight
Against Diany’s kingdom: ’Tis enough
* Revellers.
* An account
* Notice.
* Incite, instigate.
That, Britain, I have kill'd thy mistress; peace! I'll give new wound to thee. Therefore, good heavens, hear patiently my purpose: I'll disrobe of these Halmain words, and suit myself. As does a Briton peasant: so I'll fight Against the part I come with; so I'll die For the right, O Imogen, even for whom my life Is, every breath, a death in this; and this, unknown, Pitted nor hated, to the face of peril Myself I'll dedicate. Let me make men know More men than me, than my last show.

Gods, put the strength of the Leonati in me! To shame the guses of the world, I will begin The fashion, less without, and more within. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter of oneside, Lucius, Iachimo, and the Roman Army; at the other side, the British Army; Leonatus Posthumus following it, like a poor Soldier; They march over, and so out. Alarums. Then enter again in skirmish. Iachimo and Posthumus; he vanquisheth and disarmeth Iachimo, and then leaves him.

Lack. The heaviness and guilt within my bosom Takes off my manhood: I have belied a lady, The princess of this country, and the air on't Revengeth enterably me; Or could this card? A vestige of nature's, have subdued me, In my profession? Kindships and honors borne, As I wear mine, are titles but of scorn. If that thy gentility, Britain, go before The man and husband, he exceeds our laws, the odds Is, that we scarce are men, and you are gods. [Exit.

The Battle continues, the Britons fly; Cymbeline is taken: then enter to his rescue, Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus. Bel. Stand, stand! We have the advantage of the ground.
The lane is guarded: nothing routs us, but The villany of our fears.

Guil. Arr. Stand, stand, and fight! Enter Posthumus, and seconde the Britons. They rescue Cymbeline, and execute. Then enter Lucius, Iachimo, and Iagoen.

Luc. Away, boy, from the troops, and save thyself.
$$ For friends kill friends, and the disorder's such As war were hood-wink'd.

Luc. It is a day turn'd strangely: or betimes Let's reinforce, or fly. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field. Enter Posthumus, and a British Lord.

Lord. Canst thou from where they made the stand I did: Though you, it seems, come from the fiers. Luc. Post. No blame be to you, sir; for all was lost, But that the heavens fought: the kinz himself Of his wings destitute, the army broken, And but the backs of Britons seen, all flying Through a straight lane; the enemies full-hearted, Lolling the tongue with slaughter'stongue, having work More plentiful than tools to do, struck down Some, slay'd others, with a straight path, some falling Merely through fear; that the steel path was damn'd.

With dead men; hurt behind, and cowards living To die with lengthen'd shame.

Lord. Where was this lane! Post. Close by the battle, ditch'd and wall'd with turf, Which was advantage to an ancient soldier,— An honest one. I warrant; who deserv'd So long a breeding, as his white beard came to, In doing this for his country—stirr'd the lane, He, with two striplings, led more haste to run The country base, than to commit such slaughter; With faces fit for masks, or rather tamer Than those for preservation case, or shame.) Made good the passage; cry'd to those that fled, *Clown. *A country game called prisoner-bears, vulgarly prisoner-bears. Our Britain's hurt's die flying, and our men: To darkness' feet, souls that fly backwards! Stand; Or we are Romans; and will give you that Like beasts, which you know beastly; and many, many, But to look back in froun; stand, stand,—These three, Three thousand confident, in act as many. (For though the formers are the file, when all The rest do nothing,) with this word, Stand, stand, Accommodated by the place, more charming, With the hundred fancies, which could have turn'd A distast to a bace. [Exeunt all but Lucius. Part, shacle, part, spirit new; that some turn'd coward But by example, (O, a sin in war Dam'd in the first beginners!) try to look The way that they did, and to grin like lions Upon the piles of the hunters. Then began A-top I'll, on a high chaser, a retire, anon, A rout, confusion thrice: Forthwith they fly. Chickens, the way which they stoop? eagles; slaves, The strifes which victors made; and now our cowards (Like fragments in hard voyages) became The life o' the need; having sound the back-door open Of the ungarded hearts, heavens, how they wound! Some, slain before; some, dying; some, their friends O'erborne I the former wave: ten, chased by one, Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty: Those, that would die or e're resist, are grown The mortal bags of the field.

Lord. This was strange chance! A narrow lane! an old man, and two boys! Post. Nay, my lord, nor wonder at it: You are made Rather to wonder at the things you see, Than to work any. Will you rhyme upon, And vent it for mockery! Here is one: Two boys, and an old man yield a boy, a lane, Preserve'd the Britons, was the Romans' lane. Lord. Nay, be not angry, sir. Post. Who dares not stand his foe, I'll be his friend: For if he'll do, as he is made to do, I know he'll quickly fly my friendship too. You have put me into rhyme.

Lord. Farewell, you are angry. [Exit.

Post. Still going! — This is a lord! O noble minesty! To be in the field, and ask, what news of me! To-day, how many would give their honors To have say'd their carcasses! took heels to do, And yet died too! I, in mine own woe char'd, Could not hear news any, were there, or here I did bid the man; nor do, nor is, nor was Nor felt him where he struck: Being an ugly monster. 'Tis strange! that the hides him in fresh cups, soft beds, sweet words; or hath more minstrels than we That draw his knives the war.—Well, I will find him; For being now a favorer to the Roman, No more a Briton, I have resumed again The part I came in: Fight I will no more, But yield me to the veriest hand, that shall Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Here made by the Roman; great the answer be Britons must take: For me, my ransom's death; On either side I come to spend my breath; Which man before here I keep, nor I again, But end it by some means for Imogen.

Enter two British Captains, and Soldiers.

1 Cap. Great Jupiter he prais'd! Lucius is taken: 'Tis thought the old man and his sons were angels, 2 Cap. There was a fourth man, in a silly habit, That save the Roman with them. So 'tis reported: But none of them can be found.—Stand I who is that?

Post. A Roman; Who had not now been drooping here, if seconds Had answered him. Lay hands on him: a dog! A leg of Rome shall not return to tell What crowes have peck'd them here: He hangs his service. As if be better note; bring him to the king, Enter Cymbeline, attended: Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Pisanio, and Roman Captives. The * Bug-bears, terrors. * Encounter.
Capsians present Posthume's to Cymbeline, who delivers him over to a Gailer: after which, all go out.

SCENE IV.—A Prison.

Enter Posthume's and two Gaullers.

1 Gail. You shall not now be stolen, you have locks upon you:
So, grab as you find pasture.

2 Gail. Ay, or a stomach. [Exeunt Gaullers.

Post. Most welcome bondage! for thou art a way,
I think, to liberty: Yet I am better
Than one that's sick o' the gout; since he had rather Groan in perpetuity, than be cured
By the sure physician, death, who has the key
To unbar these locks. My conscience! thou art fetter'd
More than my shanks, and wrists: You good gods,
The penitent instrument, to pick that bolt,
Then free for ever! Isn't enough, I am sorry!
So children temporal do oppose;
Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent?
I cannot do it better than in grievances,
Desire'd, more than constraint'd: to satisfy,
If of my freedom 's the main part, take
No such rendering of me than yours.
I know, you are more element then vile men,
Whose of their broken debtors take a third,
A sixtieth part, letting the rest thrive again
On their abatement: that's not my desire:
For Imogen's dear life, take mine; and though
'Tis not so dear, yet 'tis a life; you could't:
'Twixt your man's and your woman's hands of flowers:
Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake:
You rather mine, being yours: And so, great powers,
If you will take this audit, take this life,
And cancel these troths. O Imogen! I'll speak to thee in silence. [He sleeps.

Solemn Music. Enter, as an Apparition, Scillus; Leonatus, Father to Posthumus, an old Man, attired like a Warrior: leading in his Hand an ancient Meteor, his Wife, and Mother to Posthumus, With Music before them. Then, after other Music, follow the two young Leonatti, Brothers to Posthumus, with wofulnes, as they died in the Wars. They circle Posthumus round, as he lies sleeping.

Sici. No more, thou thunder-master, show,
Thy spite on mortal flies;
With Mars fell out, with Juno chide,
That ever people suffer.
Rates and revenges,
Hath my poor boy done ought but well;
Whose head I never saw;
I died whilst in the life to stay'd, and Attending nature's law.
Whose father then (as men report,
Thou orphan's father art)
Shouldst have been, and shielded him
From this earth-vesting smart.
Molt. Lucina lent not me her hand,
But took me in my throes:
That from me was Posthumus rapt,
Came crying 'mōnest his feet,'
A thing of pity!
Sici. Great nature, like his ancestry,
Mounted the stuff so fair,
That he deserv'd the praise of the world,
As great Scillius' heir.
I knew, when once he was mature for man,
In Britain where was he
That could stand up his parallel;
Or fruitful object be
In eye of Imogen, that best
Could deem his deity!
Molt. With marriage wherefore was he mock'd,
To be exiled and thrown
From Leonatti seat, and cast
From her his dearest one,
Sweet Imogen!
Sici. Why did you suffer Iachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his nobler heart and brain,
With needless jealousy;
And to become the gok' and scorn
O' the other's villany!
Fetters. The fool.

2 Bro. For this, from stiller sets we came,
Our parents, and as twain,
That striking in our country's cause,
Fell bravely, and were slain;
Our fathers, and Tenderius' right,
With honor to maintain.

1 Bro. Like hardiment, Posthumus hath to Cymbeline perform'd;
The Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why hast thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due;
Being all to doors turn'd!
Sici. Thy crystal window ape; look out;
No longer exercise,
Upon a valiant race, thy harsh
And potent injuries.
Molt. Since, Jupiter, our son is good,
Take off his miseries.
Sici. Peep through thy marble mansion: help!
Or we poor ghosts will cry
To the shining synod of the rest,
Against thy deity.

2 Bro. Help, Jupiter; or we appeal,
And from thy justice fly.

Juverin descends in Thunder and Lightning, siting in an Eagle. He throws a Thunderbolt.
The Ghosts fall on their knees.

Jup. No more, you petty spirits of region low,
Oftend our hearing: hush!—How dare you,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt, you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebellling coasts!
Poor shadows of Elysium, hence and rest.
Upon your heads, and ravening hands of flowers:
Be not with mortal accidents opprest;
No care of yours it is, you know 'tis ours.
Whom best I love, I cross; to make my gift,
The thunderer's delay'd, doth content
Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift:
His comforts thrive, his trials well are spent.
Our jovial star reign'd at his birth, and in
Our temple was he en-marrried.—Rise, and ride!—
He shall be lord of lady Imogen,
And happier much by his affliction made.
This tablet lay upon his breast; wherein
Our pleasure his full fortune doth confine;
And so, away: no further with your din.
Express impatience, lest you stir up mine.
Mount, eagle, to my palace crystalline. [Ascends.

Sici. He came in thunder: his celestial breath
Was sulphurous to smell: the holy eagle
Swoop'd as to foot us: his ascension is
More noble thy adulter'd fields: his royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloys his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd.

All. Thanks, Jupiter!

Sici. The marble pavement close: he enter'd
His radiant roof:—Away! and to be blest,
Let us with care perform his great hehest.

[Ghost vanish.

Post. [Waking.] Sleep, thou hast been a grand-sire, and begot
A father to me: and thou hast created
A mother and two brothers: But (O scorn!)
Gone! they went hence so soon as they were born.
And so I am awake.—Poor wretches that depend
On greatness' favor, dream, as I have done;
Wake, and find nothing. But, alas, I scarce
Many dream to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favors; so am I,
That have this golden chance, and know not why.—
What were once haunt this ground! A book? O, rare one!
Be not, as in our flogged world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers; let thy effects
So follow, to be most unlike our couriers,
As good as promise.

[Reads.] When as a lion's head shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a safely closed, or keep'd, breach, which, being dead many years, shall after revive, be joined at the old stock, and freshly grow; then shall Posthumus end his matrices, be rich, be fortunate, and dwell in peace and plenty.
'Tis still a dream; or else such stuff as madmen
Tongue, and brain not either both, or nothing;
Or senseless speaking, or a speaking such Scene V.—Cymbeline's Tent.

Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Posthumus, Officers, and Attendants.

Cym. Stand by my side, you whom the gods have made
Preservers of my throne. Woe is my heart,
That the poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whose eyes shone as guided arrows, whose naked breast
Step'd before target of proof, cannot be found:
He shall be happy that can find him, if
Our care can make him so.

Bel. I never saw
Such noble fury in so poor a thing:
Such strength and valour in one that promised nought
But bravery and purchasing.

Cym. No tidings of him?
Pis. He hath been search'd among the dead and living
But no trace of him.

Cym. To my grief I am

The heir of his reward; which I will add
To you, the liver, heart, and brain of Britain,
[To Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.]
By whom, I grant, she lives: "Tis now the time
To ask of whence you are:—report it.

Bel. Sir,
In Cambria we are born, and gentlemen:
Further to boast, were neither true nor modest,
Unless I add, we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees;
Arise, my knights of the battle: I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities according to your estates.

Enter Cornelia and Ladies.

There's no more courtly face. Why so sadly
Greet you our victory! You look like Romans,
And not o' the court of Britain.

Cor. Hail, great king! To your happiness, I must report
The queen is dead.

Cym. Whom worse than a physician
Would this report become! But I consider,
By medicine he may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor, too.—How ended she?
Cor. With horror, madly dying, like her life;
Which, being cruel to the world, concluded
Next eras of herself, that she might
I will report, so please you: These her women
Can trip me, if I err; who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Pray thee, say,
Cor. First, she confess'd she never lov'd you; only
Affected greatness got by you, not you;
Married your royalty, was wife to your place;
Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew this: And, but she spoke it dying, I would Not believe her lips in opening it. Proceed.
Cor. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand to love
With such integrity, she did confess
Was as a scorpio to our sight; who, I live,
But that her flight prevented it, she had
T'a'en off by poison.

Cym. Most delicate friend! Who 's can read a woman!—Is there more?
Cor. More, sir, and worse. She did confess, she had
For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and hang;
By inches waste you: In which time she purposed,
By watching, weeping, 'tendance, kissing, to Overcome you with her show: yes, and in time,
(When you were nigh) to put with her courtiers
To work her son into the adoption of the crown.
But failing of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shameless desperate: open'd, in despite
Of heaven and men, on her purpose: repented
The evils she hatch'd were not effect'd: so,
Despairing, died.

Cym. Heard you all this, her women?
Lady. We did so, please your highness.

Cym. Mine eyes
Were not in fault, for she was beautiful;
Mine ears, that heard her lilt'ry; nor my heart,
That think'd her like her seeming: if it had been Vicious,
To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter!
That it was only thus, thou may'st say,
And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, the Soothsayer, and other Roman Prisoners, guarded; Posthumus behind, and Iocen.

Thou com'st not, Caesars, now for tribute; that
The Britons have razed out, though with the loss
Of many a bold one; whose known men have made
Suit
That their good souls may be appeas'd with slaughter
Of you their captives, which ourself have granted:
So think of your escape: our parts require it.

Luc. Consider, sir, the chance of war: the day
Was yours by accident; had it gone with us,
We should not, when the blood was cool, have Threatened
Our prisoners with the sword. But since the gods
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call'd ransom: let it come: sufficeth,
A Roman with a Roman's heart can suffer:
Augustus lives to think on't: And so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing only
I will extract; My hoy, a Briton born,
Let him be ransom'd: never master had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasions, true,
So fast so mistrustful: let his virtue join
With my request, which, I'll make, your highness
Cannot deny: he hath done no Briton harm,
Though he have serv'd a Roman: save him, sir, and
And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I have surely seen him.

His favor is familiar to me,
Boy, thou hast look'd thyself into my grace,
And art mine own.—I know not why, nor wherefore.

To say, live, boy: never thank thy master: live:
And ask of Cymbeline what boon thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty, and thy state, I'll give it; Yea, though thou do demand a prisoner,
The noblest to en.

I, I.  I humbly thank your highness.

Luc. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad;
And yet, I, know thou wilt.

No, no, slack! There's other work in hand: I see a thing
Ritter to me as death: thy life, good master,
May shuffle for itself.

Luc. The boy disdains me. He leaves me, scorns me: Briefly, die thy joys, that Place them on the truth of girls and boys.
Who stands so perpleas'd? Cym. What wouldst thou, boy, I love thee more and more: think more and more What's best to ask. Know'st thou him look'st on?
Will have him live? Is he thy kin? thy friend?
Imo. He is a Roman; no more kin to me,
Than I to your highness; who, being born your vassal,
Am something nearer.

Cym. Wherefore cry'st he so? Luc. 'Twill, I tell you, sir, in private, if you please To give me hearing. Cym. Ay, with all my heart. And lend my best attention. What's thy name? Imo. Fidele, sir. Cym. Thou art, my good youth, my page;
I'll be thy master: Walk with me; speak freely.

Cymbeline and Imogen converse apart. Imo. Bel is not this boy reviled from death! One sand another.

Not more resembles: That sweet rosy lad, Who died, and was Fidele—What think you?
Girl. The same dead thing alive.
Bel. Peace, peace! see further, he eyes us not; forbear;
Creatures rosy be alike: were he, I am sure
He would have spoke to us.

Girl. But we saw him dead.
Bel. He sent me; let's see further.

Ps. speak. It is my mistress: [Aside.

Since she is living, let the time run on,
To good, or bad.

Cymbeline and Imogen come forward.

Cym. Come, stand thon by our side;
Make thy demand aloud.—Sir, [To Imo.] step you forth,
Give answer to this boy, and do it freely: Or, by our greatness, and the grace of it,
Which is our honor, bitter torture shall
Winnow the truth from falsehood.—On, speak to him.

Imo. My boon is, that this gentleman may render Of whom he had this ring.
Post. What's that to him? [Aside.

Cym. That diamond upon your finger, say,
How came it yours?
Post. It was a present me to leave unspoken that Which, to be spoke, would torture thee.

Cym. How me? Post. I am glad to be constraint'd to utter that Which thou desirest me to conceal. By villainy I got this ring; 'twas Leonatus' jewel; Though thou didst disbanished (and which more may grive thee,
* Ready, dexterous.
* Countenance.
Scene V.

Cymbeline.

767

Spir, and throw stones, cast mire upon me, set
The doz of the street to bay me: every villain
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus; and
Be villainy less than 'twas!—O Imogen?
My queen, my life, my wife! O Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen!

Imo. Peace, my lord; hear, hear—
Pis. Shall we have a play of this? thou scornful page,
There lies thy part. [Striking her: she falls]
Pis. Mine and your mistress, and your lord Posthumus!—
You meek, kind Imogen till now!—Help, help!—
Marry honor'd lady!
Pis. Does the world go round?
Pis. How come these staggars on me!

Cym. Wake, my mistress! If this be so, the gods do mean to strike me
To death with mortal joy.
Pis. How fares my mistress?

Imo. O, get thee from my sight;
There gav'st me poison: dangerous fellow, hence!
Breathe not where princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen!
Pis. Lady,
The gods throw stones of sulphur at me, if
That box I gave you was not thought by me
A precious thing: I had it from the queen.

Cym. New matter still!

Pis. It poison'd me.

Imo. What is this, gods!—
I left one thing which the queen confer'd,
Which must approve thee honest: if Pisano
Have, said she, given his mistress that confection
Which I gave him for a cordial, she is serv'd
As he would serve a rat.

Cym. What's this, Cornelius? Cour.
The queen, sir, very o't! importun'd me
to tempt poisons for her; still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge only.
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dozes,
Of no esteem: I, dreaming that her purpose
Was more dangerous, did compound for her,
A certain stuff, which being ta'en, would cease
The present power of life; but in short time,
All offices of nature should again
Do their due functions. —Have you ta'en of it?

Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. There was our error.

Gut. This is sure, Fidele.

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded lady from you?
Think, that you are upon a rock; and now
This man again. —Enveloping him.
Post. Hang there like fruit, my soul,
Till the tree die!

Bel. How now, my flesh, my child! What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me?

Imo. Your blessing, sir. [Kneeling.
Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame you not;
You had a motive for't.

To GUIDERSIS AND AMAZETS.

Cym. My tears that fall,
Prove holy-water on thee! Imogen,
Thy mother's death.

Gut. I am sorry for't, my lord,
But she was hard, and 'twas in her love to me,
That we meet here so strangely: but her son
Is gone, we know not how nor where.

Pis. No fear is from me. I'll speak truth. Lord Cloten,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn; ta'm'd at the mouth, and swore
If I discover'd not which way she was gone,
It was my instant death: By accident,
I had a legned letter of my master's
Then in my pocket; which directed him
To search her on the mountains near to Milford,
Where, in a frenzy, in my master's garments,
Which he enforced from me, away he went
With his purpose, and with oath to violate
My lady's honor: what became of him,
I farther know not.

Gut. Let me end the story:
I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the gods foretell I
I would not thy good deeds should froth my lips
Pluck a hard sentence: pr'ythee, valiant youth,
Be not again.

Gut. I have spoke it, and I did it.

Cym. He was a prince.

Gut. A most unceiv'd one: The wrongs he did me
Were more than can be numbered; for he with Language with that would make me spurn the sea,
If it could so roar to me: I cut off his head;
And am right glad, he is not standing here
To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorry for thee:
By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our law: Thou art dead.

Bel. That headless man
I thought had been my lord.

Cym. Bind the offender,
And take him from our presence.
Bel. Stay, sir king:
This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyself: and hath
More of thee merited, than a band of Clotens
Had ever seen for. —Let his arms alone.

They were not born for bondage:

Cym. Why, old soldier,
Wilt thou under the worth thou art unpaid for,
By tasting of our wrath! How of descent
As good as we?

Arc. In that he spoke too far.

Cym. And thou shalt die for't.

Bel. We will die all three:
But I will prove, that two of us are as good
As I have in you. —My sons, I trust,
For mine own part, unfold a dangerous speech,
Though, haply, well for you.

Arc. Your danger is Our's.

Gut. And our good his,
Have at it, then.—
By leave: —Thou hast, great king, a subject, who Was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him? he is
A banisli'd traitor.

Bel. He is it that hath Assumed this age: indeed, a banish'd man;
I know not how, a traitor.

Arc. Take him hence;
The whole world shall not save him.

Bel. Not too hot:
First pay me for the nursing of thy sons;
And let it be confiscate all, so soon
As I have receiv'd it.

Cym. Nursing of my sons?
Bel. I am too blunt and saucy: Here's my knee;
See I arise, I will prefer my sons;
Then, spare not the old father; so, my sons,
These two young gentlemen, that call me father,
And think they are my sons, are none of mine:
They are the issue of your boys, my liege,
And blood of your begetting.

Cym. How! my issue?

Bel. So sure as you your father's, I, old Morgan,
Am that Belarius whom you sometime banish'd.
Your pleasure was my reproach, my punishment
Itself, and all my treason: that I suffer'd,
Was all the harm I did. These gentle princes
(For such, and so they are) these twenty years
Have I ta'en up; they have not slighted me,
Yet, could I put into them; my breeding was, sir, as
Your highness knows. Their nurse, Euriphile,
Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children
Upon my banishment: I mov'd her to: —
Having receiv'd the punishment before,
For that which I did then: Beaten for loyalty
Excited me to treason: Their dear loss,
The more of you 'twas felt, the more it shaped
Unto my end of stealing them. But, gracious sir,
Here are your sons again; and I must lose
Two of the sweetest companions in the world:—
The bequestion of these covereth her.
Fall on their heads like dew! for they are worthy
To inlay heaven with stars.

Cym. Thou weep'st, and speakest.
The service, that you three have done, is more
Unlike than this thou tell'st: I lost my children;
If these be they, I know not how to wish
A pair of worthier sons.

Bel. Forbid.
Bel. Be pleas'd a while.—This gentleman, whom I call Polydore, is the most worthy prince, as yours, is true Guiderius; this gentleman, my Cadwal, Arvigillus, your younger princely son; he, sir, was lapp'd in such a curious mantle, brought by the hand of his queen-mother, which, for more probation, I now with ease produce. Guiderius had Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star; It was a mark of wonder. Bel. This is he; Who hath upon him still that natural stamp; It was wise nature's end in the donation, That this evidence now. O, what am I A mother to the birth of three? Ne'er mother Rejoiced deliverance more:—Bless'd may you be, That after this strange starting from your orbs, You may reign in them now!—O Imogen, Thou hast lost by this a kingdom. Ino. I have got two worlds by't.—O my gentle brother, Have we thus met? O never say hereafter, But I am true speaker; you call'd me brother, When I was but your sister; I you brothers, When you were so indeed. Did you e'er meet? Act. Ay, my good lord. Gun. And at first meeting lov'd; Continued so, until we thought he dead. Cor. By the queen's dram she swallow'd. Cym. O rare instinct! When shall I hear all through? This fierce abridge-ment Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in.—Where! how liv'd you? And when came you to serve our Roman captive? How parted with your brothers? how first met them? Why fled you from the court? and whither? These, And your three motives to the battle, with I know not how much more, should be demanded; And all the other by-de-aren'd ere your orbs, From chance to chance just but the time, nor place, Will serve long interrogatories. See, Posth'mus anchors upon Imogen; And she, like harmless lightning, throws her eye On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting Each object with joy; the counterchange Is severally in all. Let's quit this ground, And make the temple with our sacrifices.— Thou art my brother; so we'll hold thee ever. To Belarius. Ino. You are my father too; and did relieve me, To see this gracious season. Cym. All employed, Save these in bonds: let them be joyful too, For they shall taste our comfort. Luc. My good master, I will yet do you service. Cym. The forlorn soldier, that so nobly sought, I would have well become this place, and grac'd The thankings of a king. Post. I am, sir, The soldier that did company these three I here beseeching: 'twas a timely for The purpose I then follow'd:—That I was he, Speak, lachino: I had you down, and might Have made you finish. Ino. I am down again: [Kneeling. But now my heavy conscience sinks my knee, As then your force did. Take that life, beseech you, Which I so often owe: but, your ring first; And here the bracelet of the true princess, That ever swore her faith. Cym. Kneel not to me; The power that I have on you, is to spare you; The malice towards you, to forgive you; Live, And deal with others better. Cym. Nobly doom'd: We'll learn our freeness of a son-in-law; Pardon the word to all. Arr. You holp us, sir, s. i. c. Which ought to be rendered distinct by an ample narrative. As you did mean indeed to be other brother; Joy'd are we, that you are. Post. Your servant, princes.—Good my lord of Rome, Call forth your soothsayer. As I slept, methought, Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back, Appeard to me, with other splendid shows? Of mine own kindred: when I waked, I found This label on my bosom; whose containing Is so from sense and hardness, that it can Make no collection of it; let him show His skill in the construction. Luc. Phælomus,— South. Here, my good lord. Luc. Read, and declare the meaning. South. [Reads.] When, as a lion's whelp shall, To himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be lapp'd branches, which, being deck'd with many garlands, shall after view, to the old stock, and fresh' t'en crown; then shall Posth'mus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty. Thou, Leonatus, art the lion's whelp; The hit and apt construction of thy name, Being Leonatus, doth import so much: The piece of tender air, thy virtuous daughter, Which we call modest air; and modest she, To Cymbeline. South. We term it matter: which matter I divine, Is this most constant wife; who, even now, Answering the letter of the oracle, Unknown to you, unsought, were chipp'd about With this most tender air. Cym. This hath some seeming. South. The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline, Persuades thee: and thy lapp'd branches point Thy two sons forth: who, by Belarius stolen, For many years thought dead, are now reviv'd, To the majestic cedar joint; whose issue From hence Britain peace and plenty. Luc. Well, My peace we will begin:—And, Caius Lucius, Although the victor, we submit to Caesar, And to the Roman empire; paying tribute To pay our wonned tribute, from the which Were dissuaded by our wicked queen; Whom heavens, in justice,[both on her and hers,] Have laid most heavy hand. South. The fingers of the powers above do tune The harmony of this peace. The vision Which late was known to Lucius; ere the stroke Of this yet scarce-cold battle, at this instant Is full accomplish'd: For the Roman eagle, From south to west on wing soaring aloft, Less'd herself; and, in the beams of the sun So vanish'd: which foreshew'd our princely eagle, The imperial Caesar, should again unite His favor with the radiant Cymbeline, Which shines here in the west. Cym. Laud we the gods; And let our crooked smokes climb to their nostrils From our bless'd altars! Publish we this peace To all our subjects. Set we forward: Let A Roman and a British ensign wave Friendly together: so through Lud's town march: And in the temple of great Jupiter, Our two in unison; seal it with feasts,— Set on there;—Never was a war did cease, Ere bloody hands were wash'd, with such a peace. [Execute.]

A SONG, SINGD BY GUIDERIUS AND ARRIBACES OVER FIDILE, SUPPOSED TO BE DEAD.

By Mr. William Collins.

To fair Fidile's grassy tomb, Soft mounds and village kinds shall bring Each opening sweet, of earliest bloom, And rife all the breathing spring.

No wailing ghost shall dare appear To weep with shraks his quiet grove; But shepherd bulls ensamble here, And melting virgins own their love.

No wither'd witch shall here be seen,
No goblins lead their nightly crew:
The female fays shall haunt the green,
And dress thy grave with pearly dew.

The red-breast off at evening hours
Shall kindly lend his little feet;
With hourly moss, and gather'd flowers,
To deck the ground where thou art laid.

When howling winds, and beating rain,
In tempests shook the sylvan cell;
Or mock the chase on every plain,
The tender thought on thee shall dwell,

Each lonely scene shall thee restore;
For thee the tear be duly shed:
Beloved, till life could charm no more;
And mourn'd, till pity's self be dead.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. Before the Capitol.
The Tomb of the Andronicis appearing; the Tribunes and Senators aloft, as in the Senate.—Enter, below, Saturninius and his Followers, on one side; and Bassianus and his Followers, on the other; with Drum and Colors.
Sat. Noble patriots, patrons of my right, Deliver the justice of my cause with arms; And, countrymen, my loving followes, Plead my successive title with your swords; I am his first-born son, that was the last That ware the imperial diadem of Rome; Then let my father’s honors live in me, Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.
Bas. Romans,—friends, followers, favorers of my right,—If ever Bassianus, Caesar’s son, Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome, Keep then this passage to the Capitol; And suffer not dishonor to approach The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate, To justice, continence, and nobility: But let desert in pure election shine; And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.
Enter Marcus Andronicus aloft, with the Crown.
Marc. Princes that strive by factions, and by friends, Ambitiously for rule and empire,— Know, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand A special party, have by their common voice, In election for the Roman empery, Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius, For many good and great deserts to Rome; A nobler man, a braver warrior, Lives not this day within the city walls: He by the senate is acc’ted home, From weary wars against the barbarous Goths;—

That, with his sons, a terror to our foes, Hath yok’d a nation strong, train’id up in arms. Ten years are spent, since first he undertook This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms Our enemies’ pride: Five times he hath return’d Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons In coffins from the field; And now at last, laden with honor’s spoils, Returns the good Andronicus to Rome, Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms, Let us entreat,—By honor of his name, Whom, wothily, you would have now succeed, And in the Capitol and senate’s right, Whom you pretend to honor and adore,— That you withdraw you, and abate your strength: Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should, Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.
Sat. How fair the tribe speaks to calm my thoughts!
Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so do I sally In thy uprightness and integrity, And so I love and honor thee and thine, Thy noble brother Titus and his sons, And her, to whom my thoughts are humbled all, Gracious Lavinia, Rome’s rich ornament, That I will here dismiss my loving friends; And to my fortunes, and the people’s favor, Commit my cause in balance to be weigh’d.
[Exeunt the Followers of Bassianus.
Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my right, I thank you all, and here dismiss you all; And to the love and favor of my country Commit myself, my person, and the cause.
[Exeunt the Followers of Saturninius. Rome, be as just and gracious unto me, As I am confident and kind to thee.— Open the gates, and let me in.
Bas. Tribunes! and me, a poor competitor.
[Sat. and Bas. go into the Capitol, and exeunt with Senators, Marcus, &c.
To Titus, his Father. It is well to know that there is a Roman who hesitates to sacrifice his country to his country's storms. Let him, therefore, think seriously of this matter. To Rome, then,

scene II.-The same.
Enter a Captain and others.

Curt. Romans, make way; the good Andronicus,
Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
Successful in the battles that he fights,
With honor and with fortune is return'd,
For his reproach was but a prelude to his sword,
And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

Flourish of Trumpets, &c. Enter Mithras and Martius, after them, two Men bearing a Coffin
cover'd with black; then Quintus and Lucius.

After them, Titus Andronicus; and then Tamora, with Aaron, and other Goth's, prisoners; Soldiers and People, following. The Bearers set down the Coffin, and Titus speaks.

Tit. Hark, ye Romans, victorious in thy mourning weals!
Lo, as the bark that hath discharg'd her fraught,
Returns with precious hind to the bay,
To where we commence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,
Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To re-establish his country with his tears;
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome,—
That great defender of this faire City,
Stand gracious to the signs that we intend:
Romans, of five and twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that Pris'm had,
Behold the remains, alive! These,
That survive, let Rome reward with love;
These, that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors;
Here hath Andronicus given me leave with my sword,
Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why sufferest thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the drearful shore of Styx!—
Make way to lay them by their brethren.

(The Tomb is opened.

There live in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars!
O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hast thou in store,
To which I never will need to return! Luc. Give us the most gracious prisoner of the Goths,
That we may hew his limbs, and, on a pile,
Ad manes fratum sacriifica heis flesh,
Before this earthly prison of their bones;
That so the shadows be not unappas'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth?
Tit. I give him you; the noblest that survivals,
The eldest of them, who didst, in former days,
Tomb. Stay, Roman brethren:—Gracious conqueror,
Victorious Titus, rue the tears shed,
And ever's tears in future shall incline:
And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
0, think my son to be as dear to me.
Suffreth not, that we are brought to Rome,
To beauty thy triumphs, and return,
Captive to thee, and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets,
For valiant doings in their country's cause? O! if the sight for ever shame the bosom:
We pitied in thine, as in these.
Andronicus, stand not thy tongue with blood;
What dost thou draw near the nature of the gods?
Draw near them then, and perform our wish:
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge;
Thrice noble Titus, spare my first-born son,
From the knife without, sav'd without, and pardon me.
These are their brethren, whom they have before,
Alive, and dead; and for their brethren slain,
Religious they ask a sacrifice:
To this your son is mark'd; and die he must,
To appease their groaning shades that are gone.
Luc. Away with him! and make it fire straight;
And with our swords, upon a pile of wood.
Let's new in his arms, till they be clean consumm'd.

[Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Muties, with Albanus.

Tam. O cruel, irreligious pitie! O0, what is this half so barbarous?

Dea. Oppose not Seytlin to ambitious Rome.

Albanus goes to rest; and we survive
To tremble under Titus' threatening look.

It was supposed that the ghosts of unbloodied people appeared to solicit the rites of funeral.

Then, madam, stand resolv'd; but hope within.
The selfsame gods, that arm'd the queen of Troy
With opportunity of sharp revenge
Upon the Thracian truant in his tent,
May favor Tamora, the queen of Goths,
(When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was queen),
To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Muties, with their Swords.
Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd
Our Roman rites; Albanus' limbs are lay'd,
And entrails feed the sacrificing fire,
Whose smoke, like meseune, doth perfume the sky.

Re-enter Marcus, and Renatus. Marcus has been maacht, but toinary welcome them,
And with loud thrones welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus
Make this his last of farewell to their souls.

[Dreadful Trumpets sound, and the Coffins laid in the Tomb.

In peace and honor rest you here, my sons;
Rome's richest champion, repose you here
Secure from worldly chances and misships.
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells,
Here grow no damned grinches; here are no storms,
No noise, but silence and eternal sleep.

End of Act I.
Tt. Content thee, prince: I will restore to thee
The people's hearts, and wean them from them-

Bus. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,
But honor thee, and will do till I die;
My faction, if thou strengthen with thy friends,
I will most thankfully be: and think of men
Of noble minds, is honorable need.

Tit. People of Rome, and people's tribunes here,
I ask your voices, and your sufferings.
Will you bestow them on Andronicus?

Tit. Tribunes, I thank you: and this suit I make,
That thou createst thy emperor's eldest son,
Lau. I mean my lord; and for that, I will,
Reflect on Rome, as Titus's' rays on earth,
And ripen justice in this common-wealth:
Then if you will elect by my advice,
Crown him, and say—Long live our emperor!

Marc. With voices and appliance of every sort,
Patricians, and plebeians, we create
Lord Saturninus Rome's great emperor;
And say—Long live our emperor Saturnine.

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favors done
To us in our election this day,
I hold thee thee in part of thy deserts.
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness;
And, for an omen, Titus, to advance
Thy name, and honorable family,
Lau. I will make my emperor:
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,
And in the sacred Pantheon her espousal;
Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and, in this match,
I hold me highly honor'd of thy grace:
And here in sight of Rome, to Saturnine—
King and commander of our common-weal,
The wide world's emperor—do I condescend
My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners:
Possess well worthy Rome's imperial lord;
Receive them then, the tribute that I owe,
Munificent and humblest at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life.
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gods,
Rome shall record; and, when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget your folly to me.

Tit. Now, madam, are you prisoner to an em-

[To TAMORA.

To him, that for your honor and your state,
We shall yield you nobly, and your fellows.

Sat. A godly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose, were I to choose anew.—
Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance;
Though in a charge of war hath wrought this change of cheer.
Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome:
Princely shall be thy usage every way.
Read on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes; Madam, he comforts you,
Can make you greater than the queen of Goths.—
Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this?

Lau. Not, my lord; sit! trust me.

Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia.—Romans, let usage:
Record this house we set our princes in;
Proclaim our honors, lords, with drum and trumpet.
Bus. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine.

[Setting LAVINIA.

Tit. How, sir? Are you in earnest then, my lord?
Bos. Ay, noble Titus: and rest you well.
To do myself this reason and this right.

[THE EMPEROR COURTS TAMORA IN DUMB SHOW.

Marc. SATURNUSrine our Roman justice;
That in all justice were the virtuous slave.
Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live;
Tit. Traitours, avaint! Where is the emperor's
guard?

Tresso. His majesty; Lavinia is surprised.

Sat. Surprised! by whom?

Bus. By him that justly may
Bear his betr'hood from all the world away.

[Exit MARCUS AND BASSIANUS, with LAVINIA.

Mal. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.

Mal. My lord, you pass not here.

Tit. What, villain, boy bar?

[Exit LUCIUS.

LUC. My lord, you are unjust, and more than so
In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine:
My sons have never so dishonored traitor,
Restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will: but not to be his wife,
That is another lawful promise's end.

[Exit SATURINE. Now, if the emperor needs her not,
Not her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock:
I'll trust, by leisure, him that mocks me once;
They never, nor thy master's hundred sons,
Conferred all this to dishonor me.

Was there none else in Rome to make a stale of,
But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus,
Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,
That said'st, I beg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. 0 monstrous! what reproachful words are these?

Sat. But, go thy ways; go, give that changing piece
To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:
A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to hand with thy lawless vice.
To rule the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of [Seizing her arm. That, like the stately Phoebe 'mongst her nymphs

Dost overshine the gallant's dames of Rome,—
If thou be pleased with this my sudden choice,
Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And will create thee empress of Rome.

Luc. Speak, queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?

And hence wear by all the Roman gods,—
Sith priest and holy water are so near,
And ladders burn so bright, and every thing
In readiness for Hypermnestra stand,
I will not resolute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place
I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I

If Saturnine advance the queen of Goths,
She will a handmaid to his desires,
A loving mother to his young prince.

Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon.—Lords, accompany.

Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride,
Sent by the heavens to your prince Saturnine,
Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquer'd:
There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

[Exeunt SATURNUS, AND HIS FOLLOWERS, TAM-
ORA, AND HER SON; AGRUS, AND GOTHAS.

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride:
Titus, when wert thou to walk alone,
Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and TAMORA
Marc. O, Titus, see, 0 see, what thou hast done
In a barbarous rage; I, a virtuous slave,
Bury him where you can, he comes not here.

Marc. My lord, this is imperty in you:
My nephew Mutins' deeds do plead for him;
He most wronged me; with his brother
Quint. Mort. And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. And shall! What villain was it spoke that word?

Quint. That would vouch't in any place but here,
A stalking-horse, a ruffler was a bully. I invited.
Scene II.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Tue. What! would you bury him in my despi tea?
Marc. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tid. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest,
And, with these boys, mine honor thou hast
My foes I do repute you every one;
So trouble me no more, but get you gone.
Marc. Hearken to me, Titus.
Quin. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.

[Marcus and the Sons of Titus kneel.
Marc. Brother, for in that name doth nature

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature speak.

Tid. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.
Marc. Renowned Titus, more than half my soul—
Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us all,—
Marc. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter
His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,
That died in honor and Lavinia's cause.
Thou art a Roman, be not barbarous.
The Greeks, upon advice, did bury Ajax,
That slew himself; and wise Ligius' son
Did graciously plead for his funerals.
Let not young Mutius then, that was thy joy,
Be buried his entrance here.

Tid. Rise, Marcus, rise:—
The dismalst day is this that e'er I saw,
To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome!—
Well, bury me, and I'll go to heaven.

[Mutius is put into the Tomb.
Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy friends,
Till wealth with trophies do adorn thy tomb!
All. No man shed tears for noble Mutius:
He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.
Marc. My lord,—to step out of these dreary damps,—
How comes it, that the subtle queen of Gods
Is of a sudden thus advanced in Rome?
Tid. I know not; Marcus; but, I know, it is;
Whether by device or no, the heavens can tell:
Is she not then beholden to the man
That brought her for this high good turn so far?
Yes, and will nobly him remunerate.

Flourish. Recenter, at one side. SATURNINES, attended: TAMORA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, and AARON: at the other, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, and others.

Sat. So, Bassianus, you have play'd your prize;
God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride.

Bass. Am I not of yours, my lord? I say no more,
Nor wish no less; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,
Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.
Base. Madam, I charge you, my lord, to suffer bay own,
My true-betrothed love, and now my wife!
But let the laws of Rome determine all:
Meanwhile I am possess'd of that is mine,
Sat. 'Tis good, sir: You are very short with us;
But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.
Bass. My lord, what I have done, as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall do with my life.

Tid. But you give your grace to know,
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This noble gentleman, lord Titus here,
Is in opinion, and in honor wrong'd;
That, in the rescue of Lavinia,
With his own hand did shy his youngest son,
In zeal to you, and highly mov'd to wrath
To be control'd in that he frankly gave:
Receive him then to favor, Saturnines;
That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,
A father, and a friend, to thee, and Rome.

Tid. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds;
'Tis thou, and those, that have dishonor'd me:
Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,
How I have lov'd and honor'd Saturnines!
Tam. My worthy lord, it ever Tamora
Was reigned in these princely eyes of thine,
Then hear me speak indifferently no more:
And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.
Sat. What! madam! be dishonor'd openly,
And basely put it up without revenge!
Tam. Not so, my lord: The gods of Rome fore-fend,
I should be author to dishonour you!
But, on mine honor, dare I undertake
For good lord Titus' innocence in all,
Whose fury, not disbursed, speaks his griefs:
Then, at my suit, look graciously on him;
Lose not so noble a friend on vain suppose;
Nor with some looks afflict his gentle heart,—
My lord, be rul'd by me, be won at last;
Dissemble all your griefs and discontents:
You are but newly planted in your throne;
Lest then the people and patricians too,
Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,
And so supplicate us for ingratitude.
(Which being reputed to be a heinous sin,)
Yield at entreats, and then let me alone,
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family,
The cruel father, and his traitorous sons,
To whom I sted for my dear son's life;
And make them know, what 'his to let a queen
Kneel in the streets, and beg for grace in vain.—
Come, come, sweet emperor,—come, Andronicus,
Take up this good old man, and cherish the heart
That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.
Sat. Rise, Titus, rise; my empress hath prevail'd.
Tid. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord:
These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.
Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily.
And must advise the emperor for his good.
This day all quarrels die, Andronicus:—
And let it be mine honor, good my lord,
That I have reconcil'd your friends and you.
For you, prince Bassianus, I have pass'd
My word and promise to the emperor.
That you will be more mild and tractable,—
And fear not, lords,—and you, Lavinia,—
By my advice, all laid on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.
Luc. We do, and vow to heaven and to his high-

Tid. That, if ever we did, was mildly, as we might,
Tend ring our sister's honor, and our own.
Marc. That on mine honor here I do protest.
Sat. Away, and talk not; trouble us no more,—
Tam. Or may, sweet emperor, we must all be friends:
The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace;
I will not be denied. Sweet heart, look back.
Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother's here,
And at my lovely Tamora's entreats,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults.
Stand up.
Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend; and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides,
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends;
This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.
Tid. To-morrow, an it please your majesty,
To hunt the panther and the hare with me,
With hounds and hound, we'll give your grace bonjour.
Sat. Be it so, Titus, and gramercy too.
—Exeunt.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before the Palace.

Enter Aaron.

Aaron. New clombeth Tamora Olympus' top,
Sallet out of fortune's sotl: and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder's crack, or lightning's flash;
Advanced above pale envy's threatening reach.
As when the golden sun salutes the morn,
And having girt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glistening coach,
And overlooks the highest-peering hills;
So Tamora—
Upon her wit doth earthly honor wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her crown.
Then, Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts
That is so aloft thy imperial mistresses,
And mount her pitch: whom thou in triumph long
 Hast prisoner held, letter'd in amorous chain,
And hasted bound to Aaron's charming eyes,
That is so promethian tied to Cæcrops.
Away with stivish weeds, and idle thoughts!
I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new-made emperess.
To wait, and fit her to the queen's
This goddess, this Seraphim;—this queen,
This siren, that will charm Rome's Saturnine,
And see his shipwreck, and his common-wealth's
Holes!—that storm is this!

Enter Chiron and Demetrius, before.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge,
And manners, to intrude where I am graded;
And may, for ought thou know'st, be affected;
Oh! Demetrius, thou dost overween in all;
And so in this to bear me down with braues,
'Tis not the difference of a year, or two,
Make me less gracious, thee more fortunate;
I am able, and as fit as thou, T. serve, and do to deserve my mistress' grace;
And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.

Aar. Clubs! Clubs! those lovers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvis'd,
Gave you a dancing-rapier by your side,
Are you so desperate crown, to threat your friends?
Go to; have your hate gned within your sheath,
Till you know better how to handle it.
Meanwhile, sir, with the horse-knell I have,
Full well shalt thou perceive how much I dare.

Aar. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave! [They draw.

Dem. Why, how now, lords?
So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
And maintain such a quarrel openly!
Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge;
I would not for a million of gold.
The case were known to them, it most concerned;
Nor would your noble mother, for much more,
Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome.
For shame, put up.

Aar. Not I; till I have sheath'd
My rapier in his bosom, and withal,
Thrust these reproachful speeches down his throat,
That he hath breath'd in my dishonor here.
Oh! for that I am perfidious and full resolv'd—
Foul-spoken coward, that thunder'st with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing darst perform.

Aar. Away, I say.—

Now by the gods, that warlike Gods adore,
This petty brabblo will undo us all,—
What, gods—and think you I am not how dangerous
It is to jut upon a prince's right?
What, is Lavinia then become so loose,
Or Bassanias so degenerate?
That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd,
Without controlment, justice, or revenge!
Young lords, beware!—so should the empress know
That is so vulgar, the more munificent not please.
Oh! I care not, I, knew she all the world;
I love Lavinia more than all the world.

Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some manner choice;
Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aar. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not, in Rome
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brook competitors in love?
I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
By this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths
Would I propose, to achieve her whom I love
Aar. To achieve her!—How!

Dem. Why mak'st thou it so strange?
She is a woman, therefore may be wroth;
She is a woman, therefore may be won;
She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd,
What, man! more water glisthen by the mill
Than wots the mudder of; and easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive; we know:
Though Bassanias be the emperor's brother,
Better than he have yet worn Vulcan's badge.

Aar. Ay, and as good as Saturninus may.

Dem. Then why should he despair, that knows to court
With word, fair looks, and liberality?
What! hast thou not full often struck a doe,
And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?

Aar. Why, then, it seems, some certain snatch or so
Would serve her turns.

Chi. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Aar. Would you had hit it too
Then should not we be tind with this ado.
Why, hark ye, hark ye,—And are you such fools,
To squander for this? Would it offend you then
That both should speed?

Chi. Faith, not me.

Dem. So I were one.

Aar. For shame, be friends; and join for that you jar.

'Tis policy and stratagem must do
That you affect; and so must you resile
That what you cannot, as you would, achieve,
You must perforce accomplish as you may.
Take this of me: Lavinia was not more chaste
Than this Lavinia, Bassanias' love.
A spe elder course than lingering languishment
Must we pursue, and I have found the path.
My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;
There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:
The forest walks are wide and spacious;
And many unrequited plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rank and villany:
Sing thee a thither then this dainty doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words.
This way, or not at all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our empress, with her sacred wit,
To villany and vengeance consecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend;
And she shall file our engines with advice,
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.
The emperor's court is like the house of fame
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, of ears:
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and dumb
There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your turns;
There soar the lust, shadow'd from heaven's eye,
And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.

Dem. Sit juxta et mecum, till I find the stream
To cool this heat, that is so nigh to calm these Per Stgia, per manes relax.

[Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus, with Hunters, &c.

Marc. Lucius, Quentus, and Martius.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morr is bright and grey [Silence.

[Quarrel.

[By nature

[Saved here signifies scourged; a Latifenda.
The fields are fruargt, and the woods are green:
Uncouple here, and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride;
And raise the prince; and range the hunter's peal,
That all the court may echo with the noise.
Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To tend the emperor's person carefully;
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Horns wind a Peal. Enter SATURNUS, TAMORA, BASSIANUS, LATINA, CHIRON, DEMETRIS, and Attendants.

Til. Many good-mourners to your majesty;—
Madam, to you as many and as good;—
I promised your grace a hunter's peal.
Sat. And you have run it lustily, my lords,
So what too early for new-married ladies.
Bas. Latina, how say you?
Lav. I say, no;
I have been awake two hours and more,
And curtailed with a counsel-keeping let us have,
And to our sport;—Madam, now shall ye see Our Roman hunting.

(To TAMORA.
Marc. I have dogs, my lord,
Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory top.
Til. And I have horse will follow where the game
Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.
Dec. From us, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound,
But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground. [Execute.]

SCENE III.—A desert Part of the Forest.

Enter AARON, with a Bag of Gold.

Aar. He that had wit would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it;
Let him, that thinks of me so abjectly,
Know, that this gold must coin a stratagem;
Which, cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent piece of villany;
And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest.

That have their limbs out of the empress' chest.

Enter TAMORA.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad.
When every thing doth make a cheerful boast!
The birds chant melody on every bush;
The bees, who lie rolled in the-enamelled sun;
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground:
And then, as if in snoring, my lord,
To solace thee, Aaron, let us sit,
And— whilst the babbling echo notes the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-toned horns,
As if a double hunt were once at hand,—
Let us speak, and prate our yellowtering,
And—after conflict, such as was now—
The wandering prince of Bido once enjoyed,
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtailed with a counsel-keeping cave,—
We may, each wreathed in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;
Whiles hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,
Be unto us, as is a nurse's song.

Or, happily, to bring her babe asleep.

Aar. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,
Saturn is dominator over mortal dreams:
What signifies my deadly-standing eye,
My silence, and my cloudy melancholy!
My heave of woolly hair that now uncurls,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution?
No, madam, these are no venereal signs;
Vexations in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood, and revenge are hammering in my head.
Hark, Tamora,—the empress of my soul,
Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee.
This is the day of doom for Bassianus;
His Philomel must lose her tongue to-day:
Thy son make palace of her chastity,
And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.
Seest thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee,
Possess,
* Possess.

And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll:—
Now question me no more, we are espied;
Here comes a parcel of our hopes to bed,
Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.
Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life!
Aur.—And, more, great empress, Bassianus comes
Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons
To back thy quarrels, what'so'er they be. [Exit.

Enter BASSIANUS and LATINA.

Bas. Who have we here! Rome's royal empress, Uniform'd of her well-heseeming troop!
Or is it Dana, habitu'd like her?
Who hath abandoned her holy groves,
To see the general hunting in this forest?
Tam. Saucy controller of our private steps!
Had I the power, that some say is hers,
Thy temples should be planted presently.
With horns, as was Acteon's; and the hounds
Should drive upon thy new-transformed limbs,
Unfurnished at thy assurance.

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,
If I thought you had a goodly zit in hornig;
And to be doubted, that your Moor and you
Are singly for your try experiments:
Jove shun your husband from his hounds to-day!
'Tis pity they should take him for a stag.
Bas. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian
Doth make me lose the honour of his book is his Spotted, detested, and abominable.
Why are you soquerster'd from all your train?
Dismous'd in your snow-white goodly steed,
And wander'd hither to an obscure spot,
Accompanied with a barbarous Moor,
If soul desire had not conducted you!
Lav. And, being interrupted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauceness,—I pray you, let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-color'd love;
This valley fits the purpose passably well.
Bas. The king, my brother, shall have note of this.
Lav. Ay, for these slips have made him noted
Good kinl; to be so michly abused!

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter CHIPON and DEMETRIS.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother,
Why does your highness look so pale and wan?
Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?
These two have 'ticed me hither to this place,
A barren, debased vale, you see, it is:
The trees, with scarce shoots yet; and, the dry and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baneful mistletoe.
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven.
And when they should be done this ancient retreat,
They told me here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand fends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many arches,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly,
No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straight they told me they would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew;
And leave me to this miserable death,
And then they call'd me foul adulteress,
Lascivious Goth, and all the bitter terms
That ever ear did hear to such effect,
And had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed,
Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,
Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.
Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

Enter BASSIANUS.

Chi. And this for me, struck home to show my strength
[Shattering him likewise.
Lav. Ay, come, Semiramus,—say, barbarous
Thou art!
For no name fits thy nature but thy own!
Tam. Give me thy poniard; you shall know, my heart,
Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.
Dem. Stay, madam, here is more belongs to her:
Part. * Hedge-hogs.
First, thrust the corn, then after burn the straw:
This munition stood upon her chastity,
Unto her virginal vow, her loyalty,
And with that painted hope it vainly might
And shall she carry this unto her grave?
This do I know, I would increase my care.
Drat hence her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.
Tam. But when you have the honey you desire,
Let that waste which is as fresh as these distill'd rain flowers?
A very fatal place it seems to me—
Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?
Mort. O, brother, with the damnest object
That ever man's eyes met! and that must be constant.
Aar. [Aside.] Now I will fetch the king to find them here:
That he thereby may give a likely gage,
How these were they that made away this brother [Exit Aaron.
Mort. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out
From this unhallow'd and blood-stained hole!
Quin. I am surprised with an uncouth fear:
A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints;
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.
Mort. To prove thou hast a true-divining heart,
And thou look down into the very soul,
And see a fearful sight of blood and death.
Quin. Aaron is gone and my compassionate heart
Will not permit mine eyes to close my hold.
The thing whereat it trembles by surprise:
O, tell me how it is: for 'ne'er till now
Was I a child, to fear I know not what.
Mort. Thro' Bassianus' lies embrac'd I am here,
All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,
In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.
Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know 'tis he?
Mort. I do his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole,
Which, like a taper in some monument,
Both shine upon the dead man's earthy cheeks,
And shows the ragged entrails of this pit;
So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus,
When he by night lay bathed in maiden blood.
O brother, help me with thy fainting hand,
If fear hath made thee faint, as me at bath—
Out of this felt devouring receptacle,
As hateful as Coecytus' nasty mouth.
Quin. With such thy hand, that I may help thee out;
Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,
I may be pull'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.
I have no strength to pull thee to the brink.
Mort. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help.
Quin. Thy hand once more; I will not lose again
Till thou art here aloft, or I below;
Thou canst not come to me, I come to thee.
[Quin. Dies.

Enter Saturninus and Aaron.
Sat. Along with me.—I'll see what hole is here
And what he is, that now is leap'd into it.
Say, who art thou, that lately didst descend
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?
Mort. The unhappy son of old Andronicus;
Brought hither in a most uncivility hour,
To find thy brother Bassianus dead.
Sat. My brother dead! I know thou dost but jest
He and thy lady both are at the lodgings.
I upon the north side of this pleasant chase:
'Tis not an hour since I left him there.
Mort. I know not where you let him all alive,
But, out alas! here have we found him dead.

Enter Tamora, with Attendants; Titus Andronicus, and Lucius.
Tam. Where is my lord the king?
Sat. Here, Tamora; though grief'd with killing grief.
Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?
Sat. Not now is the sexton dost thou search my wound;
Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.
Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ,
[Reads.] [Enter a letter
The compact of this timeless tragedy;
And wonder greatly, that man's face can fold
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

[Exit.}
ACT III. SCENE I.
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Sal. [Reads.] An if we miss to meet him hand-some.—

Sweet huntman, Bassianus 'tis, we mean,—
Do thou so much as dig the ground for him;
Thou know'dst our meaning: Look for thy reward
Among the nettles at the elder-tree,
Which overshadows the mouth of last pit,
Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.
Do this, and purchase us thy honest friends.

O, Tamora! was ever heard the like!
This is the pat, and this the elder-tree.

Look, sirs, if you can find the huntman out,
That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aer. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.

Sal. Two of thy whelps, [To Tar.] tell ears of bloody kind,
Have here bereft my brother of his life—
Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison;
There let them bide, until we have devis'd
Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tona. What are they in this pit? O wondrous thing!

Sal. How easily murder is discovered!

Till. High emperor, upon my feeble knee
I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed,
That cause of every fault of my accursed
Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them.—

An. If it be prov'd! ye see it is apparent—

Till. Who found them, Tamora? O, yes! the king himself
An. Andonnicus himself did take it up.

Till. I did, my lord: yet let me be their bail:
For by my father's reverend tomb, I vow,
They shall be ready for the king's hostile laws,
To answer their suspicion with their lives.

Sal. Thou shalt not bail them: see, thou follow us.

Some being the murder'd body, some the murderers:
Let them not speak a word, the guilt is plain:
For, by my soul, were there worse end than death,
That end should then these should be execut'd.

An. Andonnicus, I will entreat the king;
Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.

Till. Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them.

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, with Latnia; her hands cut off, and her Tongue cut out.

Dem. So now, go, tell an if thy tongue can speak,
When she that cut thy tongue, and ravish'd thee.

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so;
And, if thy stumps will let thee, write the scribe.

Dem. See, how with signs and tokens she can speak.

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy hands.

Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash;

And so I crave her to her silent walks.

Chi. An I were my case, I should go hang myself.

Dem. If thou hast hands to help thee knit the cord.

Enter Marcus.

Marc. Who's this,—my niece, that flies away so fast?
Cousin, a word; Where is your husband—
If I do dream, 'twould all my wealth would wake me!
If I do dream, see some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!

Speak, gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches! those sweet ornaments
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in;
And might not gain so great a happiness,
As half thy love? Why dost not speak to me?—

Ahs, a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Both rise and fall between thy rose lips,
Comming and going with thy honey breath.

But, sure, some Terence hath defac'd thee;
And, lest thou shouldst detect him, cut thy tongue.

Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame!
And, now, discomposing all these lily hands,
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,—

Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titus' face,
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.

Shall I speak for thee? I shall! I do so!

O, that I knew thy heart! and knew the breast,
That I might rai1 at him to ease my mind!

Sorrow conceal'd, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart; and wert it not for thee,
Fair Philomela, she lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind;
So, love, so, I'll use her golden words;

But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;
A crazier Terence hast thou met within
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
That could have better sew'd than Philomel.

O, had the monster seen those lily hands,
Trouble, like aspen-leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them,
He would not then have touch'd them for his love:

Or, had he heard the heavenly harmony,
Which that sweet tongue had made,
He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell asleep,
As Cercerns at the Thracian poet's feet.

Chi. Come, Marcus, come; I'll speak for thee:
For such a sight will blind a father's eye:

One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;
What will whole months of tears thy father's eye?

Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee;
O, could our mourning case thy misery!

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of Justice.

with Marcus and Quintus, bound, passing on to the Place of Execution: Titus going before, pleading.

Till. Hear me, grave friends! noble tribunes, stay! For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have wander'd;
And for these bitter tears, which now you see
Filling the aged wrinkled in my cheeks;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,
Whose souls are not corrupted as his thought!
For two and twenty sons I never wept,
Because they died in honor's lofty bed.

For these, these, tribunes, in the dust I write
My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears.

Let my tears stain the earth's dry appetite;
My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.

[Exeunt Senators, Tribunes, y c. with the Prisoners.

O earth, I will befriend thee more with rain,
That shall distil from these two ancient urns,
Which you shall April shower with fresh showers;
In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still;
In winter, with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time on thy face.
So thou, my heart, to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter Lucius, with his Sword drawn.

O, reverend tribunes! gentle aged men!
Unbend my sons, reverse the doom of death;
And let me say, that never wept before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O, noble father! I am loath to think thy vain;
The tribunes hear you not, no man is by,
And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Till. Ah, Lucius, for thy brother's sake let me plead:
Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Till. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did hear,
They would not mark me; or, if they did mark,
All bootless to them, they'd not pity me.

* Orpheus.
Therefore I tell my sorrows to the stones;
When the birds they cannot answer, or less,
Yet in some sort they're better than the tribunals,
For that they will not intercept my tale;
When I do weep, they humbly at my feet
Receiv'd and carried, and round about some fountain;
Looking all downwards, to behold our cheeks
How they are stain'd? like meadows, yet not dry
With miry slime left on them by a flood!
And in the fountain shall we gaze some time,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearing,
And made a brine-pit with our bitter tears!
Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine?
Or shall we leave our tongues, and in dumb shows
Pass the remainder of our hateful days?
What shall we do? Let us that have our tongues,
And with the fountain shall we gaze some time,
To make us wonder'd at in time to come.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for at your
See how my wretched sister sob and weeps.
Marc. Patience, dear niece:—good Titus, dry thy

Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I wot,
Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine.
For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine
Luc. Ah, my Lavinia, I will wipe thy checks.

Tit. O, Marcus, Marcus! I understand her
Signs: had she a tongue to speak, now would she say
That other brother which I said to thee;
His napkin, with his true tears all her own,
Can do no service on her sorrowful checks:
O, what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as Hamo is from bliss!

Enter AARON.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor  Sends thee this word.—That, if thou love thy sons,
Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,
Take any one of them in his own hand,
And send it to the king: for he the same  Will send thee either both thy sons alive;
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.
Tit. O, gracious emperor! O, gentle Aaron!
Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise?
With all my heart, I'll send the emperor
My hand:
Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?
Luc. Stay, father; for that noble hand of thine,
That hath thrown down so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: and in the same turn:
My youth can better spare my blood than you;
And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.
Marc. Not one of your hands hath not decreed
Rome,
And read'd not the bloody battle-axe,
Writing destruction on the enemy's castle!
A word of both but high decrees
My hand had been but idle; it is serve
To ransom my two nephews from their death;
Then have I kept it to a worthy end.
Auu. Nay, come, agree whose hand shall go along,
For fear they die before their pardon come.
Marc. My hand shall go.
Luc. By heaven, it shall not go
Tit. Sirs, strive no more: such wucher'd he's as these Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.
Aar. The better father, I shall be thought thy son,
Let me redeem my brothers both from death.
Marc. And, for our father's sake, and mother's
Now let me show a brother's love to thee.
Tit. Agree between you; I will spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Marc. [To EXCELSIOR AND Marcus]

Til. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both
Lest my thy hand, and I will give thee mine.
Aar. As I can, that be call'd deceit; I will be honest,
And never, whilst I live, deceive men so:—
But I'll deceive you in another sort,
And that you'll say, ere half an hour can pass.

Asst. [Aside.]

He cuts off Titus's hand.

* The River Nile.

9 Handel widow.

Enter LUCIUS and MARCUS.

TITUS. Now, stay your strife; what shall be, is de- spatch'd.

Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand; Tell him, it was a hand that warded him From the rashness and dangers bid him fear; More hath it merited, that let it have. As for my sons, say, I account of them As jewels purchased at an easy rate.

And yet dear too, because I bought mine own. AOR. I go, Andronicus: and for thy hand, Look by and by to have thy sons with thee: Their heads, I mean,—O, how this villany! [Aside.

Both fat me with the very thoughts of it! Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace, And I will have his soul's head work for me.

Tit. Then, I heretofore, and for this, as I do, And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Tit. Then, I heretofore, and for this, as I do, And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.
Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep lancets:
Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.
Marc. Alas, the tender boy, in passion mov'd,
Doth the deep wound to see his grandsire close.
Tid. Peace, tender sapling! thou art made of tears,
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

[Marcus strikes the Dish with a Knife.]
What dost thou, Marc? Marcus with thy knife?—
Marc. At that I have that kill'd, my lord; a fly.
Tid. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart:
Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny:

And which of these two, Marcus or thy knife?

[Enter Tullus, carrying a bag full of leaves.]

Marc. Pardon me, sir; 'twas a black ill-favord leaf.

Like to the empress' Moor; therefore I kill'd him.
Tid. O, O, O,
Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;
Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor,
Come, hence; purposely to poison me.—
There's for thy skill, and that's for Tamar.
Ah, sirrah!—
Yet I do think we are not brought so low,
But that between us, we can kill a fly.
That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.
Marc. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on him,
He takes his shadows for true substances.
Tid. Come, take away.—Lavinia, go with me:
I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee
Sad stories, chance'd in the times of old.—
Come, buy, and go with me; thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read, when mine begins to dazzle.

—Exeunt

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before Titus's House.

Enter Titus and Marcus. Then enter young Lucius, Lavinia running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia
Follows me everywhere. I know not why:—
Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes!
Ah, sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.
Marc. Stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thing aught.
Tid. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.
Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did.
Marc. What means this? What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?
Tid. Fear her not, Lucius;—somewhat doth she mean:
See, Lucius, see, how much she makes of thee:
Somewhither would she have thee go with her.
Ah, boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee,
Sweet poetry, and Tully's Orators.
Canst thou not guess wherefore she pleaseth thee thus?
Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess,
Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her:
For I have heard my grandsire say full oft,
Extremity of griefs would make men mad;
And I have read that Hecuba of Troy
Ran many a mile, because that made me fear:
Although, my lord, I know, my noble aunt
Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did,
And would not, but in fury, fright my youth:
Which makes me down to throw my books, and fly:
Causeless, perhaps: But pardon me, sweet aunt:
And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go,
I will most willingly attend your ladyship.
Marc. Lucius, I will.

[Lavinia turns over the Books which
Marcus has let fall.

Tid. How now, Lavinia!—Marcus, what means this
Some book there is that she desires to see:—
Which is it, girl, of these!—Open them, boy.—
But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd;
Come, and take choice of all my library,
And so beguin thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.—
What lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?
Marc. I think, she means, that there was more than one Confederate in the fact. — Ay, more there was:—
Or else to heaven she heaves them for revenge.
Tid. Lavinia, art thou Ovid's Metamorphoses?
My mother gave thee.
Boy. Good grandsire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorphoses;
My mother gave it me.
Boy. Boy. For love of her that's gone,
Perhaps she cul'd it from among the rest.
Tid. So! see, how busily she turns the leaves!
Help her!—

Tully's Treatise on Eloquence, entitled Orator.
TITUS

Scene II.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Aaron, Chiron, and Demetrius, at one Door; at another Door, young Lucius and an Attendant, with a bundle of Weapons, andVerses upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius;
He hath some message to deliver us.
Aur. Ay, some mad message from his mad dadfather.
Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greet your honors from Andronicus:—
And pray the Roman gods confound you both.

Dem. Gramercy, lovely Lucius: What's the news?
Boy. That you are both the dearer'd, that's the news,
For villains mark'd with rape. [Aside.] May it never see you.

My grandsire, well advis'd, hath sent me by
The goodliest weapon of his armory,
To gratify your honorable youth,
As circular as the heavens of Rome:
And so I do, and with his gifts present.
Your lordships, that whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well:
And so I do, you know, to this height,
Bloody villains.

[Exeunt Boy and Attendant.

Dem. What's here? A scroll; and written round about:

Let's see.

Integer vita, sacerisque purus,
Non ego Maevi iactus, nec area,
Chi. O, 'tis a verse in Horace; I know it well:
I read it in the grammar long ago.

Aur. Ay, just—a verse in Horace;—right, you have it.

Now, what a thing it is to be an ass!
Here's no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt;
And sends the weapons wrapp'd about
With this line.

That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick.

But were our witty empress well a-foot,
She might apply had Anna, Marcus; lead
But let her rest in her unrest awhile,—
And now, young lords, was't not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,
Careless, to be advanc'd, and all such:
It did me good, before the palace gate,
To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

4 The point of a spear. 4. 6. Grand merit; great thanks.

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Basely insinuate, and send us gifts.

Aur. Had I not reason, lord Andronicus?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly?

Dem. I would we had a thousand Roman dames
At such a day, by turn to serve our lust.
Chi. A charitable wish, and full of love.

Aur. Here lacks but your mother for to say amen.
Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.

Dem. Come, let us go; and pray to all the gods
For our beloved mother in her pains.
Aur. Pray to the devils; the gods have given us
This.

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish thus?

Chi. Belike, for joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Soft; who comes here!

Enter a Nurse, with a Black & Moor Child in her Arms.

Nur. Good-morrow, lords:—

O, tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor?

Aur. Well, more or less, or ne'er a whit at all,
Here Aaron is: and what with Aaron now

Nur. O, gentle Aaron, we are all undone
Now help, or woe betide thee evermore!

Aur. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep?
What dost thou wrap and humbleable arms?

Nur. O, that which I would hide from heaven's eye,
Our empress' shame, and state Rome's disgrace;
She is deliver'd; lords, she is deliver'd.

Aur. To whom?

Nur. I mean, she's brought to bed.

Aur. Give her good rest! What hath she sent here?

Aur. Why, then she's the devil's dam; a joyful issue.

Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue;
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad
Amongst the fairest breeders of our city.

The empress scarce sees it: there, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aur. Out, out, you whore! is blinck so base a hue?
Sweet blowe, you are a beantious bosom, sure,

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done?

Aur. Done! that which thou
Cannot undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.

Nur. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.
Woe to her chance, and damn'd her lost choice!

Accursed the offspring of such foul a fraud!

Chi. It shall not live.

Aur. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must: the mother wills it so.

Aur. What? the mother? then no man but I
Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I'll break the tadpole on my rapier's point;

Nur. Nurse, give it me; my sword shall soon despatch it.

Dem. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels.

[Takes the Child from the Nurse, and drawn,
Stay, murderious villains! will you kill your brother?

Now, by the burning havoc of the sky!
That shone so bright when this boy was got,
He dies upon my seminar's sharp point,
That touches this my first-born son and heir!

I tell you, you mean it; not I care for these.

With all their threatening band of Typhon's brood,
Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,
Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.

What, what! ye vanguards, shallow-hearted boys!
Ye white-lim'd wals! ye ace-house painted signs!
Coast-black is better than another hue,
In that it scarce to bear another hue:

For all the water in the ocean
Can never turn a swain's black legs to white,
Although she love them hourly in the flood.

Tell the empress from me, I am of age
To keep mine own; excuse it she can.

Dem. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistress thus?

Aur. My mistress is my mistress; this, myself.

The visor and the picture of my youth:
This, before all the world, do I let pass.
This, maugre all the world, will I keep safe,
Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Splt. In spite of
Dem. By this our mother is for ever shamed.
Chi. Rome will despise her for this foul escape.
Tit. What shall I do? I must prevent her death.
Dem. I blush to think upon this ignorance.
Aur. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears;
Fye, treacherous hue! that will betray with blush
The close eneles and counsels of a woman's heart?
Here's a young lad framed of another leer?
Look how the black slave smiles upon the father;
As who should say, Old iat, I am those own.
He is young, his father, lords; sensibly
Of that self-blood that first gave life to you;
And, from that womb, where you imprison'd were,
He is exasperated and come to light:
Now, by your people's sufferage
Although my seal be stamped in his face.
Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress?
Aaron. What, nurse! what, Aaron, what to do, and we will all subscribe to thy advice;
Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.
Aur. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.
My son and I will have the wind of you;
Keep there: Now talk at pleasure of your safety,
[They sit on the Ground.]
Dem. How many women saw this child of his?
Aur. Why, so, brave lords! when we all join in league,
I am a lamb; but if you brave the Moor,
The clouded bow, the mountain lioness.
The bath is not so as the eunuch's—
But, say again, how many saw the child?
Nur. Corinna, the midwife, and myself;
And no one else but the deliver'd empress.
The empress, the midwife, and yourself:
Two may keep counsel when the third's away:
Go, to the empress; tell her, this I said:—
[Slipping her.
Weke, weke,—so cries a pig prepared to the spit.
Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron! Wherefore didst thou this?
Aur. O, lord, sir, 'tis a deed of policy:
Shall she live to betray this guilty couch? a long-bonzed babbling goose! no lords, no,
And now he it known to you my full intent.
Not far, one Milletus, live, my countryman;
His consort yesternight was brought to bed;
His child is like to her, fair as you are:
Go pac^ with him, and give the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumstance of all;
And how by this their child shall be advanced,
And be received for the emperor's heir,
And substituted in the place of mine.
To calm this tempest whirling in the court;
And make the emperor consider his own.
Hark ye, lords, ye see, that I have given her phys-
[Pointing to the Nurse.
... You must needs bestow her funeral;
The fields are near, and you call not rooms:
This done, see that you take no longer days,
But send the midwife presently to me.
The nurse, and the nurse's whole away,
Then let the ladies tattle what they please.
Chi. Aaron, I see thou wilt not trust the air
With secrets.
Dem. For this care of Tamora,
Herself, and hers, are highly bound to thee.
[Exeunt Demetrius and Chiron, bearing off the Nurse.
Aur. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow flies;
There to dispose this treasure in mine arms,
And secretly to greet the empress's friends.—
Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave, I'll hear you hence;
For you on that place puts us to our heart.
I'll make you feel on berries, and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and such the goat,
And cabin in a cave; and bring you up
To be a warrior, and command a camp. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Public Place.

Enter Titus, bearing Arrows, with Letters at the Ends of them; with him Marcus, young Lucius, and other Gentlemen, with Bows.
Tit. Come, Marcus, come;—Kinsman, this is the way—
Sir boy, now let me see your archery;
Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight:
Tarma Astrea relinquat:
[i.e., Innomacy. * Complexion. 4 Contrive, bargain with.
Be you remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's fled.
Sir, take you to your tools. You, cousins, shall seal the death to the empress's heart, and stamp it out.
Happily you may find her in the seas;
Yet there's as little justice as at law:—
No: Pulsibus and Sempronius, you must do it;
Tis you must dig the grave and put her in it, and
And pierce the immost centre of the earth:
Then, when you come to Plato's region,
I pray you, deliver him this petition:
Tell him, it is for justice, and for God;
And that it comes from old Andronicus.
Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome—
Ah, Publius,—Well; well; I mage thee miserable,
What time I thee the people's suffrances
On him that thus doth tyrannize over me:—
Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all,
And if you take, the man of war they sent to you;—
This wicked emperor may have shipp'd her hence,
And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.
Marc. O, Publius, is not this a heavy case,
To see this noble uncle thus distrust'd?
Publ. Therefore, my lord, it highly concerns,
By day and night to attend him carefully;
And feed his humor kindly as we may.
Tell time heget some careful receipt.
Marc. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy.
Join with the Goths; and with revengeful war
Tell him of Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Sempronius.
The. Publius, how now! how now, my masters!
What have you met with her?
Publ. No, my good lord; but Pluto sends you word,
If you will have Revenge from hell, you shall:
Marc. Of course, sir; she is so emply:
He thinks, with Jove in heaven; or somewhere else,
So that perforce you must needs stay a time.
Tit. He doth me wrong, to feed me with delays.
I'll dive into the burning lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heels,— Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we;—
No big-bod'd men, framed of the cyclops' size but Marcus, I, to Marcus, I may steal to the very back.
Yet wrong? with wrongs, more than our backs can bear;
And sit there is no justice in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven; and move the gods,
To send down justice for to wreak our wrongs;
Come to this gear. You are a good archer, Marcus:
[He gives them the Arrows.
Ad Jovem, that's for you; Here, ad Apollinion.—
Ad Marutem, that's for myself:—
Here, boy, to Pallus;—Here, to Mercury;
To Phoebus, and Juno, not to Saturnus.
You were as good to shoot against the wind—
To it, boy, Marcus, loose when I bid,
O my word, I have written to effect;
There's not a god left unsusceptible.
Marc. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the court;
We will affright the emperor in his pride:
Tit. Now masters, draw. [They shoot.] O well said, Lucius!
Good boy, in Virgo's lap; give it Pallus,
Marc. My lord, I am a mile beyond the moon;
You will not give me Jupiter by the
Tit. Ha! Publius, Publius, what hast thou done?
See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.
Marc. I do, my Lord, and was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot,
The bull, being gall'd, gave Ari's such a knock,
That down iell both the ram's horns in the court;
And who should find them but the empress' villian?
She laugh'd and told the Moor, he should not choose
But give them to his master for a present.
Tit. Why, there it goes: God give your lordship joy.
[Enter a Clown, with a Basket and Two Pigeons.
News, news from heaven! Marcus, the post is come.
Sirrah, what tidings! have you any letters? shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?
Clo. Ho! the gibbet-maker! he says, that he has them taken down again, for the man must not be hanged till the next week.
* Strained. 1 Sces. 2 Revenge.
Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow? wouldst thou speak with us?

Clos. Yes, forsooth, an your mistership be imperial.

Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor.

Clos. Their he, God, and Saint Stephen, give you good den:—I have brought you a letter, and a couple of pigeons here.

[Enter SATURNINIUS reads the Letter.]

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clos. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah, and fast the hang'd.

Clos. Hang'd! By'r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end. [Esc. guard'd.]

Shall I endure this monstrous villany?

I know from whence this same device proceeds;

May this be borne!—as it his traitorous sons,

That died by hand of mother or our trollops?

Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully.

Go drag the villain hither by the hair;

Nor age, nor honor, shall shape privilege:

For this strong mock, I'll be thy slaughter-man;

Sly, frante wretch, that help'st to make me great,

In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter EMILIUS.

What news with thee, Emilius?—Emilius!—Emilius. Arm, arm, my lords; Rome never had more need.

The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil.

They either march amain, under conduct Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus; Who threat's, in course of this revenge, to do As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?

Tam. His men are much mistaken, and the head As flowers with frost, or grass beat down with storms.

Ay, now begin our sorrow's to approach:—

Is he the common people love so much? Myself hath often overheard them say,

(When I have walked like a private man.) That Lucius is a prince, that Lucius is a prince,
And they have wish'd that Lucius were their emperor.

Sat. Why should you fear? is not your city strong?

Sat. Ay, but the citizens favor Lucius;

And will revolt from me, to succor him.

Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious, like thy name.

Is the sun dimm'd, that the swine fly in it?

The eagle suffers little birds to sing,

And is not careful what they mean; thereby

Knowing that with the shadow they destroy things

He can at pleasure stilt their melody:

Even so may'st thou the giddy men of Rome,

Then cheer thy spirit; be thou emperor,

I will enchant the old Andronicus:

With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous,

Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep;

When as the one is wounded with the bait,

The other rooted with delicious feasts.

Sat. But he will not entertain his son for us.

Tam. If Tamora entertain him, then he will:

For I can smooth, and fill his aged car

With golden treasures; that, were his heart

Almost impenetrable, his old ears deaf.

Yet should both car and heart obey my tomez:—

Go thou before, be our ambassador.

Emilius. Say, that the emperor requests a parley

Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting.

Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.

Sat. Emilius, do this message honorably:

And if he stand on hostage for his safety,

Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.

Emilius. Your bidding shall I do effectually.

Tam. Complain to Lucius.

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus;

And temper him with all the art I have,

To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goths.

And now, sweet emperor, be thou revived,

And bury all thy fears in my devices.

Sat. Then go successfully, and plead to him. [Exeunt.}
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.

Enter Lucius and Goth, with Drum and Colors.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends, I have received letters from great Rome, Which signify what hat they bear their emperor, And how desirous of our sight they are. Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness, insolent, and unpatience of your wrongs: And, wherein Rome hath done you any strath, Let him make treble satisfaction.

1 Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the great Andronicus.

Whose name was once our terror, now our comfort: Whose high exploits, and honorable deeds, Instructive Rome requites with far less, Be hold in us: we'll follow where thou leadest.—

Like stingling bees in hottest summer's day, Led by their master to the flower'd fields,—

And be avenged on cursed Tamora.

Luc. And, as he saith, so say we all with him.

Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all. But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth, leading Aaron, with his Child in his Arms.

2 Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stray'd, To gaze upon a ruinous monastery; And as I earnestly did fix mine eye Upon the warded building, suddenly I heard a child cry underneath a wall: I made unto the noise: when soon I heard The crying babe control'd with this discourse:

Peace, harmless slave; half me, and half thy dam! Did not thy bowery whereon thy bow art, But hast lent thee but thy mother's look, Villain, thou must have been an emperor: But where is the bail and curb are made white, They never do beget a coat-black calf.

Peace, villain, peace! even thus he ratest the babe.—

For heav'n hear thee to a true day, both God; Who, when he knows thou actst the emperor's, Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake. With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him, Surfaced him suddenly; and grasp'd what him hither, To use as you think needful of the man.

Luc. O worthy Goth! this is the incarnate devil
That robbed Andronicus of his good hand; This is the peal that pleas'd your empress' eye; And here's the base fruit of his burning lust.—

Say, wall-eyed slave, whether wouldst thou convey This great image of thy head-like face! Why dost thou speak? What! dear! No; not a word! A halter, soldiers; hang him on this tree, And by his side his fruit of basely.

Aar. Touch not the boy, he is of royal blood.

Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.—

First, hang the child, that he may see it sprawl; A sight to wet the father's soul within.

[They ascend a ladder.

Luc. Save the child; And hear it from me to the empress.

If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous things, That hardly may advantage thee to hear: If thou wilt not, tell them what I may tell: I'll speak no more; but vengeance rot you all! Luc. Say on, and, if it please me which thou Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd. Aar. An if it please thee? why, assure thee, Lucius.

"I will very well to hear what I shall speak; For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres, Acts of black night, abominable deeds, Conspiraies of mischief, treason; villanies Run to hear, yet pitiously perform'd:

But this shall all be buried by my death. Unless thou swear to me, my child shall live."

Luc. Tell on thy mind: I say, thy child shall live. Aar. Swear, that he shall, and then I will begin. Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believest no god; That god I know, how canst thou believe an oath? Aar. What if I do not? as, indeed, I do not: Yet—for I know thou art religious, And hast a thing within thee, called conscience; Which of thy popish tricks and cursed treachery, Which I have seen thee careful to observe,—

Therefore I urge thy oath;—For that, I know, And keeps the oath, which by that god he swears; To that I'll urge him:—Therefore thou shalt vow By that same god, what god soe'er it be, That I dost not and hast use repentance; To save my boy, to nourish, and bring him up; Or else I will discover naught to thee.

Luc. Even by my god, I swear to thee, I will. Aar. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress,

Luc. O most insatiate, luxurious woman! Aar. Tut, Lucius! this was but a deed of charity, To that which thou shalt hear of me anon.

Twas her two sons that murder'd Bastianus: She sent thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her, And cut her hands; and trimm'd her as thou seest.

Luc. O, detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming? Aar. By thy very soul, was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd; and 'twas Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O, barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself! Aar. I spoke that, I was their tutor to instruct them; That codding spirit had they from their mother, As sure a card as ever won the set: They that had the doing of it, And the deed itself, and brought it there; She brought it with her to the guilty hole, To save her dead corpse of Bastianus lay: I wrote the letter that thy father found, And bid the gold within the letter mention'd, Coferedicate with the queen, and her two sons: She had not done, that thou hast cause to rue, Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it! I play'd the cheater for thy father's hand; And when I had it, drew myself apart, And spake with heart my wish, and my desire, And pr'y me through the crevice of a wall; When, for his hand, he had his two sons' heads: Behold his tears, and laugh'd so heartily, That they have done a thousand things like to his; And when I told the empress of this sport, She swounded almost at my pleading tale, And, for my tidings, gave me twenty kisses.

Gods! What canst thou say all this, and never blush? Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds? Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more. Even now I curse the day, and, yet I think, Few come within the compass of my curse, Wherein I did not some notorious ill: As kill a man, or else devise his death; Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it; Accept a wage for honest service, and forswear it; Set deadly enmity between two friends; Make poor men's cattle break their necks; Set false alarms, and hay-stacks in the night; And bid the strangers question them with their fears Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves, And set them upright at their dear friends' doors, Even when their sorrow's almost were forgot; And on their skins, as on the barb of a bow, Have with my knife carved, in Roman letters, Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead. And therefore I have done a thousand dreadful things, As willingly as one would fly a Trot, like a servile footman, all day long;
And when I cannot do from duty's strength
Until his very downfall in the sea.
And day by day I'll do this heavy task,
So thou destroy Rape and Murder there.

Enter TITUS, then, and what's from the enemy:
Thus, in this strange and sad habitation
And say, I am Revenge, sent from below,
To join with him, and right his helious wrongs, had he in his study, where, the time to
To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge;
Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him,
And who shall be immediately deliver'd.
I speak, what says our general!
I say, let the emperor give his pledges
Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,
We will come.—March away.

TITUS. This closing with him fits his lunacy:
Whate'er I lose, to feed his brain-sick fits,
Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches,
For no less to defend you and to save.
I am Revenge, and Murder, you are welcome too:
How like the emperor and his sons you are!
Well are you fitted, had you a Moor?
Could not all Hell afford such a devil!
For, well I wot, the emperor never wags,
And, in her company there is a Moor;
And, would you represent our queen bright,
The heaven's correction you have sent on well.
Welcome, welcome, let me see the Moor.
I am not thy name, but I must play my theme.

TITUS. Long have I been forbidden, and all for thee:
Welcome, welcome, let me see the Moor.
I am not thy name, but I must play my theme.
I am not thy name, but I must play my theme.

TITUS. Long have I been forbidden, and all for thee:
Welcome, welcome, let me see the Moor.
I am not thy name, but I must play my theme.
I am not thy name, but I must play my theme.

TITUS. Long have I been forbidden, and all for thee:
Welcome, welcome, let me see the Moor.
I am not thy name, but I must play my theme.
I am not thy name, but I must play my theme.
Or else I'll call my brother back again,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.

Tit. [To his Son]. What say you, boys! will you abide with him,

Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor,
How I have govern'd our determined jests;
Yield to his humor, smooth and speak him fair,
And marry with him, till I come again.

Tit. I know them all, though they suppose me
mad;
And will over-reach them in their own devices,
A pair of cursed hell-hounds, and their dam.

Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure, leave us here.

Tit. Farewell, Andronicus: Revenge now goes
To lay a compleat to betray thy foes.

Tit. I know, thou dost; and, sweet Revenge,
farewell.

Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be em-
ploy'd?

Tit. Tit. You, come here, come, very goodly enough for you to do —
Publius, come with Caesar, and Valens! —
Enter Senators and others.

Pub. What's your will?

Tit. Enter you these two?

Pub. [Hautboy sound.] The Company sit down at Table.

Enter Senators and TAMORA, with Tribunes,
Senators, and others.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord: welcome, dear queen.
Welcome, ye warlike Gods; welcome, Lucius.
And welcome all; although the cheer be poor,
'Twill fill your stomachs; please you eat of it.

Sal. Why art thou thus attired, Andronicus?

Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,
To entertain your highness, and your empress.

Tam. We are beholden to you, good Andronicus.

Tit. And your highness knew my heart, you were.
My lord emperor, resolve me this: Was it well done of rash Virginius,
To shay his daughter with his own right hand,
Because she was enured, staid, and deflourd?

Sal. It was, Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, mighty lord?

Sal. Because the girl should not survive her shame.

Tit. And by her presence still renew his sorrows.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;
A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant.

Sal. Why dost thou speak so to me, as if I were not a woman?

Tit. You, in your jealousy, I shall be so.

Sal. What? came you to me thus?

Tit. [Hautboy sound.] The Company sit down at Table.

Tit. [Hautboy sound.] The Company sit down at

Sat. Go, fetch them hither to us presently.

Tit. Why, there they are, both, baked in that pie; Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred:
'Tis true, 'tis true; witness my bloody hand, sharp point. [Killing TAMORA.]

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed.

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?
There's need for meed, death for a deadly deed.

[Kills SATURNINUS. A greatTamou. The People in confusion disperse. MARCUS, LUCIUS, and their Followers, ascend the Steps before Titus's House.]

Marc. You sad-faced men, people and sons of By uproot sever'd, like a flitch of fowl
Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,
O, let me teach you how to knot again
This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf.
These broken limbs again into one body.

Sen. Last Rome herself be bane unto herself;
And she, whom mighty kingdoms court'sy to,
Like a barren and desolate casuist,
Do shameful execution on herself.
But if my frosty signs and claps of time,
Grieve witnesses of true experience,
Observe produce you to attend me lords—
Speak, Rome's dear friend; [To LUCIUS] as erst our ancestor,
When with his sov'reign tongue he did discourse
The first book, Divine, the story of the tale that hurly-burly burning night,
When subtle Greeks surpris'd king Pram's Troy.
Tell us what Shem hath bewitch'd our ears,
Or what the light brought the future eminence in,
That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.
My heart is not compact of slant, nor steel;
Nor can I utter all our bitter grief.
But flakes of tears will drown what I oratory,
And break my very utterance; even i' the time
When it should move you to attend me most,
Lending your kind commiseration.
Here is a captain, let him tell the tale;
Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble audience, be it known to you,
That cursed Chlor and Cimon's betrothed.
Were they that murdered our emperor's brother;
And they it were that ravished our sister:
For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded;
Our father's tears droped; and hotly cozen'd
Of that true hand, that ought Rome's shield out,
And sent her enemies into the grave.
Lastly, myself unhindly banished.
The gates are closed, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg relief among Rome's enemies,
Who down'd their cunty in my true tears,
And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend;
And in time turn'd-father, I know to to,
That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood,
And from her bosom took the enemy's point,
Sheathing the steel in my adventuous body.
Alas! you know, I am no warrior, J.
My scars can witness, doubt although they are,
That my report is just, and full of truth.

But, soft; methinks, I do digress too much;
Our worthier cause, the emperor's life,
For when no friends are by, men praises themselves.

Marc. Now is my turn to speak: Behold this child.

[Pointing to the Child in the arms of an Attendant. Our son was thus Tamora delivered;
The issue of an irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes:
The villain is alive in 'Titus' house,
Handed as he is, to you for true;
Now judge, what cause had Titus to Revenge these wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,
Or more than any living man could bear?
Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Romans?

Marc. Have we done ought amiss? Show us wherein,
And hold us now, the poor remainder of Andronicus,
They made a mutual closure of our house.
Speak, Romans, speak; and, if you say, we shall,
Lo, hand-in-hand, Lucius and I will fall.

[Exit. Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,
And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,
Lucius our emperor; for well I know,
The common voice do cry, it shall be so.

Rom. [Several speeches.] Lucius, all hail! Rome's royal emperor! Lucius, &c. desist.

Marc. Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house;

[To an Attendant.
And hither tale that misbelieving Moor,
To be adjust'd some direful slaughtering death,
As for his punishment, let me have one.

Rom. [Several speeches.] Lucius, all hail; Rome's gracious governor!

Luc. Thanks, gentle Romans: may I govern so,
To heal Rome's burdens, and wipe away her woze!
But, gentle people, give me aim awhile—
For nature puts me to a heavy task—
Stand all about— but, uncle, draw near you,
To shed obsequious tears upon this trunk:
O take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,
[Recess Titus.
These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,
The last true duties of thy noble son are.

Marc. Tears for fear, and loving kisses for, thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O, were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and undesigned, and world beseech them.

Luc. Come hither, boy; come, come, and learn of us
To melt our showers; Thy grandsire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he dance thee on his knee,
Sum thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meet, and agreeing with timely infancy;
In that respect then, like a loving child,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,
Because kind nature doth require so;
Friends should associate friends in grief and woe;
Bid him farewell; commit him to the grave;
Do him that kindness, and take leave of him.

Boy. O grandsire, grandsire! even with all my heart
Would I were dead, so you did live again—
O lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping;
My tears will choke me, if I open my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with Aaron

I Rom. You said Andronicus, have done with woes;
Give sentence on me, my reverend lord;
That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and damn him.
There let him stand, and rave and cry for food;
If any one relieves or pitied him,
For the offence he dies. This is our doom:
Some stay, to see him fasten'd in the earth
Aur, O. why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb?
I am no babby, 1, that, with base prayers,
I should repent the evils I have done;
Ten thousand, worse than ever yet I did;
Would I perform, if I might have my will;
If one good deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very soul.

Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor hence,
And give him burial in his father's grave:
My father, and Launia, shall withfeud With closed doors to our house, and henceforth;
As for that honsious tiger, Tamora,
No funeral nor, man in mournful weeds,
No mournful bell shall ring her burial;
But throw her to the lion's mouth, and lands of prey:
Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity;
And, being so, shall have like want of pity.
See justice done to Lucius the half-father'd Moor,
By whom our heavy losses had no clothing;
Then, afterwards, to order well the state,
That like events may ne'er it ruinate. [Exeunt.]

That the reader may know through how many regions the scene of this drama is dispersed, it is necessary to observe that Antioch was the metropolis of Syria; Tyre, a city of Phenicia, in Asia; Tharsus, the metropolis of Cilicia, a country of Asia Minor; Mytilene, the capital of Lesbos, an island in the Aegaean Sea; and Ephesus, the capital of Ionia, a country of the Lesser Asia.

ACT I.

Enter Gower. Before the Palace of Antioch.

To sing a song of old was sung,
From ashes ancient Gower is come;
Assuming man's inmisibles,
To glad your ear, and please your eyes.
It hath been sung at festivals,
On ember-eves, and holy days,
And lords and ladies of their lives
Have read it for restoratives;
Purpose to make men glorious;
Et quo antiquus, co melius.
If you, born in these latter times,
When wit's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that to hear an old man sing,
May to your wishes pleasure bring,
I lie would wish, and that I might
Waste it for you, like taper-light—
This city then, Antioch the great
Built up for his choicest seat:
The fairest in all Syria;
(I tell you what mine authors say:) This king unto him took a phære, Who died and left a female heir, So buxom, blithe, and full of grace, As heaven had lent her all his grace; With whom the father living took, And her to incest did provoke; Bad father! to entice his own To evil, should be done by none. By custom, what they did begin, Was, with long use, account no sin The beauty of this shipwreck dame Made many princes thither prone,

1 Chorus: in the character of Gower, an ancient English poet, who has related the story of this play in his Con-
2 Tessio Amantis. 3 i.e. That of old. * Whitousshakes, &c.
4 Wife: the word signifies a mate or companion.

To seek her as a bed-fellow. In marriage-pleasures play-fellow: Which to prevent, he made a law, (To keep her still, and men in awe,) That whose ask'd her for his wife, His riddle told not, lost his life: So for her many a wight did die, As you grim looks do testify? What now ensues, to the judgment of your eye I give, my cause who best can justify. [Exit.

SCENE I—Antioch. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antiochus, Pericles, and Attendants.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre, you have at large receiv'd The danger of the task you undertake.

Per. I have, Antiochus, and with a soul Embolden'd with the glory of her praise, Think death no hazard, in this enterprise. [Music. Ant. Bring in our daughter, clothed like a bride, For the embracements even of Jove himself; At whose conception, (till Lucina reign'd,) Nature this dowry gave to glad her presence, The senate-house of planets all did sit, To knit in her their best perfections.

Enter the Daughter of Antiochus.

Per. See, where she comes, apparel'd like the king.

Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king Of every virtue gives renown to men! Her face, the book of praises, where is read Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence Sorrow were ever rash'd, and lusty wrath Could never be her mild companion.

* Pointing to the scene of the palace gate at Antioch, on which the heads of those unfortunate wights were fixed.
Ye gods, that made me man, and sway in love,
That have inflam'd desire in my breast,
To taste the fruit of ye celestial tree,
Or die in the adventure, be my highway.
As dead a son and servant to my will,
To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles,

Per. That would be death to great Antiochus.

Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;
For death-like draçons here allright thee hard;
Here lie like heaven, but seeming hell.
A countless glory, which desert must gain:
And which, without desert, because thine eye
Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
You can behold, the fame, the power, the conclave
Drawn by report, advent'rous by desire,
Tell thee with speechless tongues, and semblance pale.
That, without covering, save you field of stars,
They stand here martyr, slain in Cupid's wars;
And with dead check advise thee to desist.
For going on death's death, whom none resist.

Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hast taught
My frail mortality to know itself,
And by those fearful objects to prepare
This body, like to them: to what thine end
For death remember'd, should be like a mirror,
Who tells us, life's but breath; to trust it, error.
I'll make my will then; and as sick men do,
Who know the world, which is like heaven, but feeling woe,
Grasp not at earthly joys, as erst they did;
So I hequeath a happy peace to you,
And all good men, as every prince should do;
My soul to the earth from whence they came,
But my unsought fire of love to you.

The Daughter of Antiochus.

Thus ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow, Antiochus,
Scorning advice.

Ant. Read the conclusion, then;
Which read, and not explained, 'tis decreed,
As thou, my son, hast played thee, this play'st thou.

Dough. In all, save that, may'st thou prove prosperous.
In all, save that, I wish thee happiness!

Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists,
Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness and courage.

[He reads the Riddle.]

I am no viper, yet I feed
On mother's flesh, which did me breed;
I sought a husband, in which labor,
I found that kindness in a lady.
He's father, son, and husband mild;
I mother, wife, and yet his child.
How they may be, and yet be two,
As you will live, resolve if you.

Sharp physic is the last; but you power;
That give heaven countless eyes to view men's acts,
Why cloud they not their sights perpetually.
If this be true, which makes me pale to read it?
Fair glass of light, I lov'd you, and could still.
[Enter the Daughter of the Princess.]

Not were this glorious casket stord' with ill:
But must you tell,—now, my thoughts revolt;
For he's no man on whom perfection cast,
That knowledge sin within, without the gate.
You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings;
Who, unac'd to make man his lawful music,
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to hearken;
But, being play'd upon before your time,
Hill only dance at so harsh a chime:
Good sooth, I care not for you.

Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not, upon thy life,
For that's an article within our law,
As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expir'd;
End it now, or receive your sentence.

Per. Great king,
Few love to hear the sins they love to act;
'Twould brand yourself too near for me to tell it.
Who's a book of all that man's found?
He's more secure to keep it shut, than shown;
For vice repeated, is like the wand'r'ng wind,
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself;
And yet the end of all is bought thus dear,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear:
To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts
Cop'd hills towards heaven, to tell, the earth is worn.
By man's oppression, and the poor worm doth die for't.
Kings are earth's gods: in view their law's their will;
And if I shalb ye, who dares say, love doth ill?
It is enough you know; and it is fit,
What helping more known grows worse, to smother it.
All love the wond that their first beings bred,
Then give me this once leave like leave to love my head.

Ant. Heaven, that I had thy head! he has found
The meaning:—
But I will gaze'v with him. [Aside. Young prince

Though, by the tenor of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,
We might proceed with regard of your days?
Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree
As your fair self, doth tune us otherwise:
Forty days longer do we respect you;
But, by which time our secret be unknown,
This mercy shows, we'll joy in such a son;
And until then your entertain shall be,
As doth befit our honor, and your worth.

[Exit Antiochus, his Daughter, and Attendants.

Per. How cormesy would seem to cover sin!
When what is done is like a hypocrite,
I wish you do a good in nothing but in sight.
If it be true that I interpret false,
Then were it certain, you were not so bad,
As with foul incest to abuse your soul:
Where now you're both a father and a son,
By your untimely claspings with your child;
[Which pleasure fits a husband, not a father;]
And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the dangerous of father's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison bred.

Ant. You wish it so far, not a father.
And an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the dangerous of father's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison bred.
[Which pleasure fits a husband, not a father;]
And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the dangerous of father's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison bred.

Per. As I wish it to be so far, not a father.
And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the dangerous of father's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison bred.
[Which pleasure fits a husband, not a father;]
And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the dangerous of father's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison bred.
[Which pleasure fits a husband, not a father;]
And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the dangerous of father's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison bred.
[Which pleasure fits a husband, not a father;]
PEKICLES, Prince of Tyre. Act I. Scene III.

ANT. Thaiard, adieu! till Pericles be dead.

My heart can lend no succor to my head. [Exit.

Scene II.—Tyre. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Pericles, Helianthus, and other Lords.

Per. Let no one disturb us: Why this change of

The sad companion, dull-eyed melancholy,

By me so used a guest is, not an hour,

In the day's glorious walk, or peaceful night.

(The too much care one should sleep,) can breed me quiet.

Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes shun them.

And danger, which I feared, is at Antioch,

Whose arm seems far too short to hit me here:

Yet neither pleasure's art can joy my spirits,

Nor can the other side disturb me:

Then it is thus: the passions of the mind

That have their first conception by mis-deed,

Have after-nourishment and life by care:

And what was first but fear what might be done,

Grows elder now, and cares it be not done.

And so with me;—the great Antiochus

(Years whom I am too little to contend,

Since he is great, can make his will his act)

Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence;

Nor boots it me to say, I honor him,

If he suspect I may dishonor him:

And what may break his blash in being known,

He'll stop the course by which it might be known:

With hostile forces he'll overspread the land,

And for the ease of war will look so huge,

Amazement shall drive couriers from the state:

Our men be vanquish'd, ere they do resist,

And subjects punish'd that never thought offence:

Which care of them, not pity of myself.

(Who am no more but as the tops of trees,

Which fence the roots they grow by, and defend them)

Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish,

And punish that before, that he would punish.

1 Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast!

2 Lord. And keep your mind, till you return to us,

Peaceful and comfortable!

Hel. Peace, peace, my lords, and give experience tongue.

They do our king, the flatter him:

For flattery is the hollows hiss up sun:

The thing which is flatter'd, but a spark,

To which that breath gives heat and stronger glowing.

Whereas proofed, obedient, and in order,

Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err.

When signior Sossi here does proclaim a peace,

He doth it, making war upon your life:

Prince, pardon me, or strike me, if you please;

I cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else: but let your cares o'ershow

What shipping, and what incident to our haven,

And then return to us. [Exit Lords.] Helianthus, thou

Has not need'd us: what sweet thou in our looks?

Hel. An eager hour, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dart in princes' fowls,

How dart thou thine wings move anger to our face?

Hel. How dost thou the plants look up to heaven,

From whence they have their nourishment?

Per. Thou know'st I have power to Take to my life.

Hel. [Kneeling.] I have ground the axe myself; Do you but strike the blow.

Per. Rise, pr'ythee, rise; Sit down, sit down; thou art no more

Thine for it; and high heaven forbid,

That kings should let their cars hear their faults bid;

I'll counsel, and servant for a prince,

Who for the most part bear a piece thy servant,

What wouldst thou have me do?

Hel. With patience bear

Such grief as do thyself upon yourself.

Per. Thou speakest like a physician, Helianthus; Who minister'st a potion unto me,

That thou wouldst tremble to receive thyself.

Therefore, we will go to Antioch,

Where, as thou know'st, against the face of death

I bought the purchase of a glorious beauty,

From whence an issue I might propagate,

Bring arms to princes, and to subjects joys.

Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder,

The rest, (dark in his ear,) as black as incest;

When by thy knowledge found, the sinful father

Seem'd not to strike, but smooth; but thou know'st this,

'Tis time to fear, when tyrants seem to kiss.

With fear which grew in me, I little red,

Under the covering of a careful night.

Who seem'd my good protector; and being here,

Brought me what was past, what might succeed.

I knew him tyrannous; and tyrant's fears,

Decrease not, but grow faster than their years;

And should he doubt it, (as no doubt he doth,) That I should open to the listening air,

How a worthy tyrant's bloody hand is shed.

To keep his hand of blackness unaided eye,—

To stop that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,

And the king's dispenser of wrong that I have done him;

When all for mine, if he may call offence,

Must feed war's blow, who spares not innocence;

Which love to (all of which thyself art one), Who now reprovet for me it—

—Alas, sir! [Exit.

Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,

Music to my mind, a thousand doubts

How I might stop this tempest, ere it came;

And finding little comfort to relieve them,

I thought it princely charity to grieve them.

Hel. Well, by lord, since you have given me leave to speak,

Freely I'll speak. Antiochus you fear,

And justly too, I think you fear the tyrant,

Who does usurp power by public war, or private treason,

Will take away your life.

Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,

Tell thy brave rage and anger be forgot,

Or Desirius do cut his thread of life.

Your rule direct to any: if to me,

Day serves not light more faithful than I'll be.

Per. I do doubt thy faith:

But should it wrong my liberties in absence—

Hel. We'll mingle bloods together in the earth,

From whence we had our being and our birth.

Per. I, too, do now look from thee then, and to

Tharsus

Intend my travel, where I'll hear from thee;

And by whose letters I'll dispose myself.

The care I had and have of subjects' good.

On thee I lay, whose wisdom's strength can hear it,

I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath;

Who shuns not to break one, will sure crack both:

But much of gold and great gold is so round life,

That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince,

Thou show'st a subject's shine, I a true prince. [Exit.

Scene III.—Tyre. An Antechamber in the Palace.

Enter Thaiard.

Thai. So, this is Tyre, and this is the court. Here must I kill Pericles: and, if I do not, I am sure to be hanged at home: his dangerous.—Well, I perceive he was a wise fellow, and had good dealing; but I'll hang bid ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets. Now do I see he had some reason for it: for a king bid a man be a villain, he is bound by the incivility of his birth to be one.—Hush, here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter Helianthus, Escanes, and other Lords.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow-peers of Tyre,

Further to question of your king's departure. His ear and commission, left in trust with me,

Both speak sufficiently, he's gone to travel.

Thais! How! the king gone! [Aside.

Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied,

Why, all were anxious of your loves:

He would depart, I'll give some light unto you. Being at Antioch—

Hel. Royal Antiochus (on what cause I know not) Took some displeasure at him; at least he judged so,

And doubting lest he had err'd or sign'd,

To show his sorrow, would correct himself; 1

In our different spheres. 2

Overcome.
Pericles, what our Rise, Must I'll present me. Peace to the lords of Tyre! We have no reason to desire it, since Commended to our master, not to us: Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire,— As friends to Antiochus, we may feast in Tyre.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Tarsus. A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter Cleon, Dionyzia, and Attendants.

Cle. My Dionyzia, shall we rest us here, And, by relating tales of others' griefs, See it will teach us to forget our own!

Dio. That were to blow at fire, in hope to quench it;

For who digs hills because they do aspire, Throstles down one mountain, to cast up a higher.

O my distressed lord, even such our griefs:

Here they're but felt, and seen with mistful eyes,

But like to groves, being topl'd, they higher rise.

Cle. O Dionyzia,

Who watch'd food, and will not say he wants it, Or can conceal his hunger, till he famish'd!

Our tongues and sorrows do sound deep our woes

In these our eyes do weep, till lungs

Fetch breath that may proclaim them louder; that,

If heaven number, while their creatures want,

They may awake their habits to comfort them. I'll then discourse our woes, felt several years, And, wanting breath to speak, help me with tears!

Dio. I'll do my best, sir.

Cle. This Tharsus, o'er which I have government,

(A city on whom plenty held fall hand.)

For riches, shew'd herself even in the streets;

Whose towers bore heads so high, they kiss'd the clouds.

And strangers ne'er beheld, but wonder'd at;

Whose men and dames so joc'd, and adorn'd,

Like one that had no glass to trim them by:

Their tables were stord' of full, to glad the sight,

And not so much to feed on, as delight;

All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great,

The magic of help grew odious to repeat.

Cle. But see what heaven can do! By this our change,

These mouths, whom but of late, earth, sea, and air,

Were all too little to content and please,

Although they gave their creatures in abundance,

As houses are fill'd for want of use—

They are now starv'd for want of exercise:

Those palates, who, not yet two summers younger,

Must have inventions to delight the taste,

Would now be glad of bread, and beg for it;

Those infants, who, to trouble up their labors,

Thought taun't too curious, are ready now

To eat those little darlings whom they lov'd:

So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and wife

Draw lots, who first shall die to lengthen life:

Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping;

Here may sink, yet those which see them fall

Have scarce strength left to give them burial.

Is not this true!

Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness it.

Cle. O, let us see, that of Pinctus's cup

And her pesterous so largely taste,

With their superfluous riots, near these tears!

The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?

Cle. Here.

Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st, in haste,

For comfort is too far for us to expect.

Lord. I have descried, upon our neighboring shore,

A portly sail of ships make bitherward.

Cle. I thought as much.

One sorrow never comes, but brings an heir,

That may succeed as his inheritor;

And so in ours: some neighboring nation,

Taking advantage of our misery,

 Hath stiff'd these hollow vessels with their power,

To beat us down, the which are down already;

And make a conquest of unhappy me,

Whereas no glory's got to overcome.

Lord. That's the least fear: for, by the semblance

Of their white flags display'd they bring us peace,

And come to us as favorers, not as foes.

Cle. Then speak'st like bears untutor'd to repeat;

Who makes the easiest show, means most deceit,

But bring they what they will, what need we fear?

The ground's the lowest, and we are hale-there.

To tell their general, we attend him here,

To know for what their eyes open, and whence he comes,

And what he craves.

Lord. I go, my lord. [Exit.

Cle. We have peace, if he on peace consist;

If war, we are unable to resist.

Enter Pericles, with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hear you are,

Let not our ships and number of our men,

Be, like a beacon light, to anaze your eyes.

We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,

And seen the desolation of your streets:

Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,

But to relieve them of their heavy load;

And these our ships you happily may think

Are, like the Trojan horse, want fill'd within,

With bloody views, expecting overthrow,

Are stored with corn, to make your needy bread,

And give them life, who are hunger-starv'd, half dead.

All. The gods of Greece protect you!

And we'll pray for you.

Per.

Rise, I pray you, rise;

We do not look for reverence, but for love.

And harborage for ourselves, our ships, and men

Cle. The which when any shall not gratify,

Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,

To give it our children, or ourselves.

The curse of heaven and men succeed their ews!

Till when, (the which, I hope, shall never be seen,)

Your grace is welcome to our town and us.

Per. We shall, on our welcome we accept; feast here

A while,

Until our stars that frowr, lend us a smile. [Exit.]

ACT II.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king

His child, I wise, to meet bring;

A better prince, and benign lord,

Prove事宜 both in deed and word.

He quiet then, as men should be,

Till I hath pass'd necessity,

I'll show you those in trouble's reign.

To jet is to strait, to walk proudly.

To serve fondly.

Thinks all is writ by he spoken can:

And, to remember what he does,

Gild his statute glorious:

But tending to the contrary

Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?

Gree. Good Helicanie hath stood at home, Not to eat honey, like a drone, From others' labors; forth he strive The even had, keep thee alive, And to fulfill his prince's desire, Sends word of all that hap in Tyre: How Tharaid came full bent with sin, And haughty, to murder him; And that in Tharsus was not best Longer for him to make his rest: He have put forth to sea, Where when men been, there's seldom case: For now the wind begins to blow; Thunder above, and deeps below, Make such unquiet, that the sea Should house safe, it's wreck'd and split; And he, good prince, having all lost, by waves from coast to coast is lost: All perishing of man, of sea, Ne'ath way escape but himself; Till fortune, tired with doing bad, Threw him ashore, to give him glee: And here the greatness of your rulers, To have bequeath all his and all his fortunes; And having thrown him from your watry grave, Here to have death in peace, is all he'll crave.

Enter three Fishermen.

1 Fish. What, ho, Piche!
2 Fish. Ho! come, and bring away the nets.
3 Fish. What, Patch-breech, I say!
4 Fish. What say you, master?
5 Fish. Look how thou strivest now! come away, or thou art through with a waston.
6 Fish. Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us, even now.
7 Fish. Alas, poor souls, it grieved my heart to hear you wish to help them, when, wide-awake, we could scarce help ourselves.
8 Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much, when I saw the populous, how he bounded and tumbled! they say, they are half fish, half flesh; a plague upon them, they never come, but I look to be washed, Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.
9 Fish. Why, as men do a-land: the great ones eat the little ones: I can compare our rich masters to nothing so fitly as to a whale; 'a plays and tumbles, driving the poor try before him, and at last devours them all at a mouthful. Such's the right of kingship, when no man in the land, who never leave sweping, till they've swallowed the whole parish, church, steeples, bells, and all.

Per.

3 Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have had that day in the beleth.
4 Fish. Why, man,
5 Fish. But you were not he should have swallowed me too: and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a pangling of the bells, that he should never have left, till he cast bells, steeples, chime up again, but that the good king Simonides were of my mind—
6 Fish. Simonides!
7 Fish. We would purge the hand of these drones, that roll the heavy, or we might unreele all that may men approve, or any detect!

2 Fish. Honest! good fellow, what's that! if it be a day fits you, scratch it out of the calendar, and nobody will look after it.
Per. Nay, see, the sea hath cast upon your coast—
7 Fish. Cast thou catch any fishes then?
Per. I never practis't.
8 Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve sure; for here's not to be got now andays, unless thou cast fish for't.
Per. What have I been, I have forgot to know; but I had a dream teaches me to think on: A man shrunk up with cold: my veins are chill, And have no more of life, than may suffice To give my tongue that heat, to ask your help; What if you shall refuse, when I am dead, For I am a man, pray see me buried.
1 Fish. Die, quotha! Now gods forbid! I have a gowan here; come, put it on; keep thee warm. Now, thou hast a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting days, and morece', puddings and flapjacks; and thou shall be welcome.
Per. Thank you, sir.
2 Fish. Hark you, my friend, you said you could not give per, I did but crave.
2 Fish. But crave! Then I'll turn craver too, and I shall scarce whipping.
Per. Why, are all your barggeys whipped, then?
1 Fish. O, not all, my friend, not all; for if all your barggeys were whipped, I would wish no better office than to be beadle. But, master, I'll go draw up the net.
Per. I'll tell him honest mirth becomes their labor!
1 Fish. Hark you, sir; do you know where you are?
Per. Not well.
1 Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis, and our king, the good Simonides.
Per. The good king Simonides, do you call him?
1 Fish. Ay, sir; and he deserves to be called, for his peaceable reign, and good government.
Per. He is a happy king, since from his subiects He gains the name of good, by his government.
1 Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's journey; and I'll tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birth-day: and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world, to just and tourncy for her love.
Per. But did my fortunes equal my desires, I'd well to break one theeches and many debts.
1 Fish. O, sir, things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully deal for—his wife's soul.

Re-enter the two Fishermen, drawing up a Net.
2 Fish. Help, master, help, here's a fish hangs in the net, will not go by to the fry: it is a sea perch, or perch, or perch, it is a fish.
Per. I thought it hardly come out. Ha! bots out, 'tis come at last, and 'tis turned to a rusty armor.
Per. An armor, friends! I pray you, let me see it.
2 Fish. See more, what's this? I have seen them. Thou gave me somewhat to repair myself; and, through it was none own, part of mine heritage, Which my dead father did bequeath to me.
1 Fish. Yes, sir; and he deserves to be called, even as he is his life.
Per. Keep it, my Fishers, if it has been a shield
2 Fish. Twart me and death, and (pointed to this brace!)
Per. For I scarce would keep it; in the necessity,
2 Fish. Well, what way did you leave it?
Per. I kept where I kept, I so dearly loved it;
2 Fish. Till the rough seas, that spare not any man,
Per. Too much, and well, and well, and well;
2 Fish. Thank thee for't;
2 Fish. I'll ship thyrecke's no more ill,
Per. Since I have here my father's gift by will.
1 Fish. What mean you, sir!
2 Fish. That of you, kind friends, this coat of worth,
2 Fish.

Enter SIMONIDES, THAISI, Lords, Knights, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph ?
Lords. They are, my liege;
And now your coming to present themselves.

Return them, we are ready; and our daughter,
In honor of whose birth these triumphs are,
Shall here, like beauty's child, whose nature get
For me to see, and seeing, wonder at.

[Exit a Lord.
Thais. It pleaseth you, my father, to express
My commendations great, whose merit's less.
Sim. 'Tis fit it should be so; for princes are
A model, which heaven makes like to itself;
As jewels lose their glory, if neglected,
So princes, though victorious, if not respected.
'Tis now your honor, daughter, to explain
The labor of each knight, in his device.
Thais. Which, to preserve mine honor, I'll perform.

Enter a Knight; he passes over the Stage, and his Square presents his Shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?
Thais. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father;
And the device he bears upon his shield,
is a black Aithon, reaching at the sun;
The word, Lux tua-vita mihi.
Sim. He loves you well, that holds his life of you.

[The second Knight passes.

Who is the second, that presents himself?
Thais. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;
The device he bears upon his shield,
is an arm'd knight, that's conquer'd by a lady:
The motto thus, in Spanish. Piu per du vero que per fueras.

[The third Knight passes.
Sim. And what's the third?
Thais. The third, of Antioch;
The device, a wreath of chivalry,
The word, Ne pomer proverxit opus.

[The fourth Knight passes.
Sim. What is the fourth?
Thais. A burning torch, that's turned upside down:
The word, Quod me attoll, ne extinct.
Sim. Which shows that beauty hath his power and will,
Which can as well inflame, as it can kill.

[Fifth Knight passes.

That. The fifth, a hand environed with clouds;
Holding out gold, that's by the turquoise tried:
The motto thus, Sic spectacula tides.

Keeping.
A kind of loose breeches.
More by sweetness than by force.

The sixth Knight passes.
Sim. And what's the sixth and last, which the knight himself
With such a graceful courtesy deliver'd?
Thais. He seems a stranger; but his present is
A wither'd branch, that's only green at top;
The motto, In hoc spes sigma.
Sim. A pretty moral;
From the deepened state wherein he is,
He hopes by you his fortunes yet may flourish.
Lords. He had need mean better than his outward show
Can any way speak in his just commend:
For, by his rusty outside, he appears
To have practis'd more the whipstock, than the lance.

Lord. Nor shall it well may be a stranger, for he comes
To an honor'd triumph, strangely furnish'd.
Lord. And on set purpose let his armor rust,
Until this day, to scour it in the dust.
Sim. Upon his head, so cold, it seems we scan
The outward habit by the inward man.
But stay, the knights are coming; we'll withdraw
Into the gallery.

[Exeunt.

[Great shouts; and all cry, The mean knight!

SCENE III.—The same. A Hall of State.—A Bouquet prepared.

Enter SIMONIDES, THAISI, Lords, Knights, and Attendants.

Sim. Knight.

To say you are welcome, were superfluous.
To place upon the volume of your deeds,
As in a title-page, your worth in arms,
Were more than you expect, or more than's fit
Since every worth, in such commendations,
Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast:
You are my guests.

Thais. But you, my knight and guest,
To whom this wreath of victory give,
And crown you king of this day's happiness.

Sim. Give it by what you will, the day is yours;
And here, I hope, is none that envies it.
In framing artists, art hath thus decreed,
To make some good, but others to exceed:
And you're her labor'd scholar. Come, queen o' the feast.

[For, daughter, so you are,] here take your place:
Marchal the rest, as they deserve their gage.

Knights, We are honor'd much by good Simonides.

Sim. Your presence gales our days; honor we love,
For who sees honor, hates the gods above,
Marsh. Sir, you're my place.

Per. Some other is more fit.

1 Knight. Contend not, sir; for we are gentlemen,
That neither in our hearts, nor outward eyes,
Envy the great, nor do the low despise.

Sim. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Sit, sit; sit.

Per. By Jove, I wonder; that is king of thoughts,
These rites resist me; she not thought upon.

Thais. By Juno, that is queen
Of marriage, all the words that I eat
Do seem unsavory, wishing him my meat;
Sure he's a gallant gentleman.

Sim. He's but
A country gentleman;
He has done no more than other knights have done,
Broken a stall, or so; so let it pass.

Thais. To me he seems like diamond to glass.

Per. You king's to me, like to my father's picture,
Which tells me, in that glory once he was;
Had princes sit, like stars, about his throne,
And he the sun, for the moon to reverence;
None that beheld him but, like lesser lights,
Did vail their crowns to his supremacy;
Where now his son's a glow-worm in the night,
The which has fire in darkness, not in light;
Whereby I see that time's the king of men,
For he's their parent, and he is their grave,
And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What are you merry, knights?

[Inc. These delicacies go against my stomach.]
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

Scene I.—Tyre. A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter Helicanus and Escanes.

Hel. No, no, my Escanes; know this of me,—Anchises from incest liv'd not free;
For which the most high gods did him nothing more;
To withhold the vengeance that they had in store,
Due to this heinous capital offence,
Even in the height and pride of all his glory.
When he was seated, and his daughter with him,
In a chariot of most splendid value,
A fire from heaven came, and shrivell'd up
The body even to the loathing; for they so stark
That all those eyes ador'd them, ere their fall;
Scorn now their hand should give them burial.

Esc. 'Twas very strange.

Hel. And yet but just; for though
This king was great, his greatness was no gaad
To bar heaven's shall, but sin had his reward.

Esc. 'Tis very true.

Enter three Lords.

1 Lord. See, not a man in private conference,
Or council, has respect with him but this.
2 Lord. It shall no longer grieve without reproof.
3 Lord. Follow me then: Lord Helicanus, a word.
Hel. Welcome! and welcome: Happy day, my lords.

1 Lord. Know that our griefs are risen to the top,
And now at length they overflow their banks.

Hel. Your graces, for what! wrong not the prince you love.

1 Lord. Wrong not yourself then, noble Helicanus.
But if the prince do live, let us salute him,
Or knowledge of his death's made known by his breath.
If in the world he live, well seek him out;
If in his grave he rest, well find him there.
And be resolv'd he lives to govern us,
Or death gave ancient funeral to our general,
And leaves us to our free election.
2 Lord. Whose death's, indeed, the strongest in our council:
And knowing this kingdom, if without a head,
(I like goodly buildings left without a roof)
Will soon to ruin fall, your noble self,
That princes only know how to rule, and how to reign,
We thus submit ourselves,—our sovereign.

All. Live, Lord Helicanus!

Hel. Try honor's cause, forbear your suffrages,
If you love prince Pericles, let's hear.
Take I your wish, I leap into the seas,
Where's hourly trouble for a minute's case.
A twelvemonth longer let me then entreat you
To forgo your choice in the absence of the king;
If in time which expir'd, he return not.
I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.
But if I cannot win you to his love;
To search like noblemen, like noble subjects,
And in your search spend your adventurous worth;
Whom you find, and win unto return,
You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.

[To the Arches, and exits.]

1 Lord. And, since lord Helicanus enjoyn us,
We with our travels will endeavor it.

Hel. Then you love us, we you, and we'll cleasp
When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands.
[Exeunt.

Scene V.—Pentapolis. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Simonides, reading a Letter, the Knights meet him.

1 Knight. Good-morrow to the good Simonides.

Sim. Blessings, from my daughter this I let you know,
That for this twelvemonth, she'll not undertake
A married life.
Her regard to herself is only known,
Which from herself by no means can I get.
2 Knight. Nay, we not get access to her, my lord.

Sim. Faith, by no means; she hath so strictly Tied her
To her chamber, that it is impossible.

1 Knight. That she is in the livery of Cynthina's
This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vow'd,
And on her virgin honor will not break it.
3 Knight. Though loath to bid farewell, we take our leave.

Sim. So
They're well despatch'd; now to my daughter's love,
She tells me here, she'll wed the stranger knight,
Or never more to view nor day nor light.

Mistress, 'tis well, your choice agrees with mine,
I like that well,—not how absolute she's in,
Not minding which or what I dislike or not.
Well, I commend her choice;
Enter Flowers.

Flowers. Now sleep y'elsh'd! hath the rout, no din but snores, the house about
Made houder by the o'er-fed breast,
Of this most pompos marriage-feast,
The cat, with yene of burning coal,
Now croches 'fore the mouse's hole;
And crickets sing at the oven's mouth,
As the bitter for their drouth.
It's men hath brought the bride to bed,
Where, by the loss of maidenhead,
A babe is moulde;—Be attend,
And time that is so briefly spent,
With your fine medicines, oxen, eat.

What's dun as in show, I'll plain with speech.

Dumb show. Enter PERICLES and SIMONIDES at one door, with attendants; a Messenier meets him, Kneels, and gives Pericles a Letter. Pericles shows it to Simonides; the Lords kneel to the former. Then enter DAMAS with child, and Lychorida. Simonides shows his Daughter the Letter; she replies; she and Pericles take leave of her father, and depart. Then Pericles, &c. refute.

Flowers. By many a dearn and painful perch,| Of Pericles the careful search,

Sim. By the gods, I do applaud his courage.

Flowers. Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts
That never relish'd of a base descent.

Sim. I came unto your court, for honor's cause,
And not to be a rebel to her state;
And he that otherwise accounts of me,
This event shall prove his honor's enemy.

Flowers. Per. No!

Enter Simonides.

Flowers. Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter Thaisa.

Flowers. Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair,
Resolve your angry father, if my tongue
Did e'er solicit, or my hand subscribe
To any syllable that made love to you?

Thaisa. Why, sir, say if you had,
Who takes offence at that would make me glad?

Flowers. Sim. I, or I will make you—man and wife.

Thaisa. Per. That's all your hands and lips must seal it too;
And being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy;
And for a farther grief,—God give you joy!

Flowers. What, are you both pleased?

Thaisa. Yes, if you love me, sir.

Flowers. Per. Even as my life, my blood that fosters it.

Thaisa. Sim. What, are you both agreed?

Flowers. Yes, please your majesty.

Thaisa. Sim. It pleases me so well, I'll see you wed;
Then, with what haste you can, get you to bed.

ACT III.
Upon the winds command, bind them in brass,
Having cal'd them from the deep! O still thy deaf'ning,
Thy drowsy thunders; gently quench thy nimble
Sulphureous lightnings—O how, Lychoria,
How does my queen?—Thou storm, thou! venomous!
With thou spit all thyself?—The seaman's whistle
Is as a whisper in the ears of death,
Unheard.—Lychoria!—Lucina, O
Dinest patiences, and midwife, gentle
To seize that ery by night, craft thy deity
Aboard our dancing boat; make swift the pangs
Of my queen's trials!—Now, Lychoria——

Enter Lychorida, with an infant.

Lyc. Here is a thing
Too rare for such a place, who, if it had Conceit, would die as I am like to do.
Take in your arms this piece of your dead queen.
Per. How! how, Lychoria!

Lyc. Your queen, sir; do not assist the storm.
Here's all that is left of living—your,
A little daughter; for the sake of it,
Be main', and take comfort.

Per. O you gods!
Why do you make us love your goodly gifts,
And snatch them straight away? We, here below,
Recall not what we give, and therein may
We honour with yourselves.

Lyc. Patience, good sir,
Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild may be thy life!
For a more bruis'd birth had never babe:
Quiet and gentle thy conditions!
For thou'rt the ruddiest welcome'ud to this world,
That e'er was prince's child. Happy what follows!
Thou hast as chiding a nativity.
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make,
To herald thee from the womb! even at the first,
Thy lost is more than can thy portage quit.
With all thou canst and here—Now the good gods
Throw their best eyes upon it!

Enter two Sailors.

1 Sail. What courage, sir! God save you.

Per. Courage enough; I do not fear the flaw;
It is that lone to me the worst. Yet, for the love
Of this poor infant, this fresh—new sea-farer,
I would, it would be quiet.

1 Sail. Mark the billows there; thou wilt not,
Wilt thou? Blow, and split thyself.

2 Sail. But sea-room, on the brine and cloudy
Billow kiss the moon, I care not.

1 Sail. Sir, your quay must overboard; the sea
Works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie till the ship be cleared of the dead.

Per. That's your supersition.

1 Sail. Pardon us, sir; with us at sea it still had been observed; and we are strong in earnest.
Therefore briefly yield her; for she must overboard
straight.

Per. Be it as you think meet.—Most wretched
queen!

Lyc. Here she lies, sir.

Per. A terrible child-bed hath thou had, my dear,
Not light, no fire: the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly; nor have I time
To give thee hallowed to thy grave, but straight
Must carry thee, scarcely coll'd, in the ooze.
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And aye—remaining lamps, the holching whale,
And humming water must o'erwhelm thy corpse,
Living and famous—Lychoria, bid
Nestor bring me spices, ink, and paper;
My casket, and my jewels; and bid Nicander
Bring me the sweet cofen: lay the babe
Upon the pillow: lie the child, whose love
A priestly farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

2 Sail. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatchets, caul'd and harnessed ready.

Per. 1 thank thee. Mariner, say, what coast
This is!

2 Sail. We are near Tharsus.

Per. Thruster, gentle mariner,
Alter thy course for Tyre. When canst thou reach it?

2 Sail. By break of day, if the wind cease.

Per. O make for Tharsus.

There will I visit Cleon, for the babe
Cannot hold out to Tyris; there I'll leave it
At care or good fortune, so the ways, good mariner;
I'll bring the body presently.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Ephesus. A Room in Cerenio's House.

Enter Cerenio, a Servant, and some Persons who have been Shipwrecked.

Cer. Philemon, ho!

Enter PHILEMON.

Phil. Doth my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meat for these poor men; It hath been a turbulent and stormy night.

Serv. I have been in many; but such a night as this,
Till I, I, I, never enter'd.

Cer. Your master will be dead c'ry you return;
There's nothing can be minister'd to nature,
That can recover him. Give this to the 'pochaery,
And tell me how it works.

[To PHILEMON,
Exeunt PHILEMON, Servant, and those who had been Shipwrecked.

Enter two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Good-morrow, sir.

2 Gent. Good-morrow to your lordship.

Cer. Why do you stir so early?

1 Gent. Sir, Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea
Shook, as the earth did quake;
The very principals did seem to rend,
And all to topple; pure surprise and fear
Made us quit the house.

2 Gent. This is the cause we trouble you so early;
'Tis not our husbandry.

Cer. O, you say well.

1 Gent. But I much marvel that your lordship,
Having
Rich 'treasure about you, should at these early hours
Shake all the golden slumber of repose.
It is most strange,
Nature should be so conversant with pain,
Being thereto not compell'd.

Cer. I held it ever,
Virtue and cunning were endowments greater
Than nobleness and riches: careless heirs
May the two latter darken and expend;
And immortality attends the former,
Making a man a god. 'Tis known, I ever
Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning over authorities, I have (Together with my practice) made familiar
To me and to my aid, the best infusions
That dwell in vegetives, in metals, stones;
And I can speak the disturbances
That nature works, and of her cures; which give me
A more content in course of true delight
Than to be thrice after tottering honor,
Or tie my treasure up in silken bags,
To please the fool and death.

2 Gent. Your honor has through Ephesus
Your charity, and hundreds call themselves
Your creatures, who by you have been restored;
And not your knowledge, personal pain, but even
Your purse, still open, hath kept and Cerin
Such strong renown as time shall never——

Enter two Servants with a Chest.

Serv. So: lift there.

Cer. Serv. So, sir, even now
Did the sea toss upon our shore this chest?
'Tis of some wreck.

Cer. Set 't down, let's look on it.

2 Gent. 'Tis like a coffin, sir.

Cer. What'cever it be,
'Tis wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight;
If any sea's stomach be overcharged with gold,
It is a good constraint of fortune, that
It becalme upon us.

1. The principalis are the strongest rafters in the roof
2. Economical prudence, early rising.
Scene IV. Pericles, Prince of Tyre.

2 Gent. 'Tis so, my lord.

Cer. How close 'tis caul'd and bitumed!—
Did the sea cast it up?

Serc. I never saw so huge a bilow, sir,
As toss'd it upon shore.

Cer. Come, wrench it open. Soft, soft!—it smells most sweetly in my sense.

2 Gent. A delicate odor.

Cer. As ever hit my nostril; so,—up with it,
O you most potent god! what's here! a cens!
I Gent. Most strange! Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state; balm'd and en-treasured
With bags of spices full! A passport too!
Apollo, perfect me! the characters!—
[Unfolds a scroll. [Reads.

Here I give to understand,
(If ever this caiian drive a-hand,
I King Pericles, have lost
This queen, worth all our mundane cost,
Who finds her, give her burning,
She was the daughter of a king;
Besides this treasure, for a fee,
The gods requite his charity!]

If thou liv'st, Pericles, thou hast a heart
That every archs for woe!—This chance to-night.

2 Gent. Most likely, sir.

Cer. Nay, certainly to-night,
For look, how fresh she looks!—They were too

That threw her in the sea. Make fire within;
Fetch hither all the boxes in my closet.
Death may usurp on nature many hours,
And yet the fire of life kindle again.
The overpressed spirits, I have heard
Of an Egyptian, had nine hours lien dead,
By good appliance was recovered.

Enter a Servant, with Boxes, Napkins, and Fire.

Well said, well said; the fire and the cloths.—
The rough and wanton music that we have,
Cause it to sound, beseech you.

The valet once more,—How thou stirrest, thou block—!

The music there.—I pray you, give her air:—

Gentlemen,
This queen will live; nature awakes; a warmth
Breathes out of her; she hath not been entranced
Above five hours. See how she 'gins to blow
Into life's dover again!

1 Gent. The heavens, sir,
Through you, increase our wonder, and set up
Your fame for ever.

Cer. She is alive; behold,
Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels
Which Pericles hath lost,
Begin to part their tresses of bright gold;
The diamonds of a most praised water
Appear to make the world twice rich. O live,
And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature,

Rare as you seem to be!—[She moves.

Thais. O dear Diana,
Where am I? Where's my lord? What world is

2 Gent. Is not this strange?

1 Gent. Most rare.

Cer. Hush, gentle neighbors; lend me your hands: to the next chamber bear her.
Get linen; now this matter must be look'd to,
For her relapse is mortal. Come, come, come;
And [Escalpula, guide us!—[Exit, carrying Thaisa away.

Scene III.—Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.

Enter Pericles, Cleon, Dionyz, Lychorida, and Marina.

Per. Most honor'd Cleon, I must needs be gone;
My twelve months are expir'd, and Tyros stands
In a fitigious peace. You, and your lady,
Take from my heart all thankfulness! The gods
Make up the rest upon you!
Cle. Your shafts of fortune, though they hurt
You mortally,
Yet glance full wand'ringly on us.
Dion. O your sweet queen!
That the strict fates had pleas'd you had brought her hither.
To have bless'd mine eyes!

Per. We cannot but obey
The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end
Must be as 'tis. My babe Marina (whom,
For she was born at sea, I have nam'd as) here
I charge your charity withal, and leave her
The infant of your care; beseeching you to give her princely training, that she may be Manus'd as she is born.

Cle. Fear not, my lord:
Your grace, that fed my country with your corn,
(For which the people, grate and pray still fall on you,) I
Must in your child be thought on. If neglectation
Should therein make me vile, the common body,
By you relev'd, would force me to my duty:
But to that my nature need a spur,
The gods revenue it upon me and mine,
To the end of generation!

Dion. I believe you.
Your honor and your goodness teach me credit,
Without your vows. Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honor all,
Un-cress'd shall this hair of mine remain.
Though I know will 'tis, I take my leave.
Good madam, make me blessed in your care
In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself,
Who shall not be more dear to my respect,
Than yours, my lord.

Per. Madam, my thanks and praysers.

Cle. We'll bring your grace even to the edge
Of the shore;
Then give you up to the mask'd Neptune,
And the gentles winds of heaven.

Per. I will embrace
Your offer. Come, dear'ist madam.—O, no tears.
Lychorida, no tears:
Look to your little mistress, on whose grace
You may depend hereafter.—Come, my lord.

Scene IV.—Ephesus. A Room in Cerimon's House.

Enter Cerimon and Thaisa.

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some certain jewels,
Lay with you in your charger: which are now
At your command. Know you the character?
Thais. That's it.
That I was shipp'd at sea, I well remember,
Even on my earning time; but whether there
Delivered or no, by the holy gods,
I cannot rightly say: But since kind Pericles,
My wedded lord, I never shall see again,
A vestal liveth will I take me to,
And never more have joy.

Cer. Madam, if this you purpose as you speak,
Diana's temple is not distant far,
Where you may 'bide until your date expire.
Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine
Shall there attend you.

Thais. My remembrance is thanks, that's all;
Yet my good will is great, though the gift small.
[Exit.

* The common people.

[Appar. wilful.
Enter Gower.

Gowr. Imagine Pericles at Tyre, Welcome to his own desire.
His queen and he are both at Ephesus, To Dion there a votaries.
Now to Marina bend your mind, Whom our last-growing scene must find At Tharsus, and by Cleon trim'd.
In music, letters; who hath gain'd
The offer'd love, all the grace,
Which weke both the heart and place
Of general wonder. But alack!
That monster envy, on the rack
Of earned praise, Marina's lie.

And in this kind both our Cleon
One daughter, and a wench full grown,
Even ripe for marriage fight; this maid
Helps Philemon: and it is said
For certain in our story, she Would ever with Marina be:
Be't when she wear'd the shiel'd silk
With fingers long, small, white as milk;
Or when she would with sharp needes wound
The cambic, which she made more sound
By burning it; or when to the fate
She sung; and when the side-born mode,
That still record'd with moon; or when
She would with rich and constant pen
Vail to her mistress Dion; still
This Philotus contends in skill
With absolute! Marina: so
With the dove of Paphos might the crow
Vie feathers white. Marina gets
All praises, which are paid as debts,
And not as given. This so darks
In Philotus all gracious marks,
That Cleon's wife, with envy rare,
A present murderer does prepare
For good Marina, that her daughter
Might stand peaceless by this slaughter.
The sooner her vile thoughts to steal,
Lychorida, our nurse, is dead;
And cursed Dionyza hath
The personal warrant of wrath
Press for this blow. The unbroen event
I do commend to your content:
Only I carry winced time
Post on the lame feet of my rhyme;
Which never could I so convey,
Unless your thoughts went on my way.—
Dionyza does appear.

With Leonine, a murderer.

[Exit Dionyza and Leonine.

SCENE I.—Tharsus. An open Place near the sea-shore.

Enter Dionyza and Leonine.

Dion. Thy oath, remember; thou hast sworn to do it:
'Tis but a blow, which never shall be known.
Thou canst not do a thing 'tis the world so soon
To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience,
Which is but cold, infame love in thy bosom,
Infame too nicely; nor let pity, which Even women have cast off, melt thee, but be
A soldier to thy purpose.

Leon. I'll do't; but yet she is a goodly creature.

Dion. The fitter then the gods should have her.

Here

Weeping she comes for her old nurse's death.
They art resolv'd?

I am resolv'd.

Enter Marina, with a Basket of Flowers.

Mar. Nay, no. I will rub Tellus from her weed,
To strey the green with flowers; the yellows, blues,
The purple violts, and marigolds,
Shall, as a chaplet, hang upon thy grave.
* Called.
  • Unvisited.
* Sends.
  • Accomplished, perfect.
* Ready.
  • The earth.
Your lady seeks my life: come you between, And save poor me, the weaker. I am sworn, Leon. And will despatch.

Enter Pirates, whilst Marina is struggling. 1 Pirate. Hold, villain! [Leonine runs away. 2 Pirate. A prize! a prize! 3 Pirate. Halife-part, mates, half-part. Come, let's have her aboard suddenly. [Excuse Pirates, with Marina.

SCENE II.—Thrace. Re-enter Leonine. Leon. These roving thieves serve the great pirate Valdes; and they have seized Marina. Let her go. This thing may well be dead. And thrown into the sea.—But I'll see further; Perhaps they will but please themselves upon her, Not carry her aboard. If she remain, Whom they have ravished, must by me be slain. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Mitylene. A Room in a brothel. Enter Pander, Bawd, and Boult.

Pand. Boult. Bawd, Sir. Pand. Search the market narrowly; Mitylene is full of gallants. We lost too much money this mart, by being too wanton. There are but so much out of creatures. We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and with continual action are ever as two asses rotter. Pand. Therefore let's have fresh ones, whate'er we pay for them. If there be no a conscience to be used in every trade, we shall never prosper. Boult. Then say'st true; 'tis not the bringing up of poor fastards, as I think I have brought up some eleven—

Boult. Ay, to eleven, and brought them down again. But shall I search the market? Pand. What else man! The stuff we have, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully sodden.

Boult. Thou say'st true; they are too unwholesome, of conscience. The poor Tresilian is dead, that lay with the little baggage.

Boult. Ay, she joyed poor devil; she made him most meat for worms; but I'll go search the market. [Exit Boult. Pand. Three or four thousand cheapskins were as pretty a proportion to live quietly, and so live over. Boult. Verily, all's true. Verily, pray you! it is a shame to get when we are old! Pand. O, our credit comes not in like the commodity; nor the commodity wages not with the damnable, as is lawful, if in our youth we could pick up some pretty estate; weren't amiss to keep our doores hatted. Besides, the rarest terms we stand upon with the gods, will be strong with us for giving over. Bawd. Come, other sorts offend as well as we. Pand. As well as we? ay, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade! it's no calling;—but here comes Boult.

Enter the Pirates, and Boult, draggling in Marina. Boult. Come your ways. [To Marina.]—My masters, you say she's a virgin! Pir. O, Sir, we did think it not.

Boult. Master, I have gone thorough for this piece, you see: if you like her, so: if not, I have lost my earnest. Pir. Boult, has she any qualities? Boult. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no further necessity of qualities can make her be refused. Pir. But, what's her price, Boult? Boult. I cannot be bated one dost of a thousand pieces.

Pand. Well, follow me, my masters; you shall have your money presently. We'll instruct her in such manner as she has to do, that she may not be raw in her entertainment. [Exit Pand and Pirates. Bawd. Boult, take you the marks of her; the color of her hair, complexion, height, age, with warrant of her virginity; and, in short, I'll give such shall have her first. Such a maidhead were no cheap thing, if men were as they have been. Go on with me as I command you. Boult. Performance shall come as follows; [Exit Boult. Mar. Alack, that Leonine was so slack, so slow! (He should have struck, not spoken;) or that these (Not enough barbarous) had not overboard Thrown me to seek my mother! Bawd. Why lament you, pretty one? Mar. That I am young. Bawd. Come, the gods have done their part in you. Mar. I accuse them not. Bawd. You are in my hands, where you are like to live. Mar. The more my fault. To scarce his hands, where I was like to die. Boult. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure. Mar. No. Bawd. Yes, indeed, shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions. You shall fare well; you shall have the entertainments of all complexions. What! do you stop your ears? Mar. Are you a woman? Bawd. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman. Mar. An honest woman, or not a woman. Bawd. Marry, whip thee, goddess; I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you are a young foolish sapling, and must be bawed as I would have you. Mar. The gods defend me! Bawd. Post, then, give the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you, men must stir you up,—Boult's return'd.

Enter Boult.

Now, sir, hast thou cried her through the market? Boult. I have cried her almost to the number of her hairs. Mar. Then dost thou desire her? Boult. And I pr'ythee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the young Bawd. Boult. Faith, they listened to me, as they would have heartened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so water'd, that he went to bed to keep very description.

Bawd. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruff on.

Boult. To-night, to night. But, mistress, do you know she shall have knight that cow's? the hens! Bawd. Who! me must give over Verole. Boult. Ay; he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he wouldn't do so much.

Bawd. Well, well; as for him, he brought his disease hither: here he does but repair it. I know, he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.

Boult. Well, if we had of every nation a traveler, we should lodge them with this sign.

Bawd. Pray you, come lady hither a while. You have fortune lying upon you. Mark me; you must seem to do that terribly, which you commit willingly, to despise profit, where you have most gain. To weep that you live as you do, makes pay in your low estate. And pray, be merciful. Bawd. Boult. You tell me, you have a good opinion, and that opinion a piece profit. Mar. I understand you not. Boult. O, take her home, mistress, take her home; these blushes of hers must be quenched with some present practice. Bawd. Thou sayest true, faith, so they must; for your side goes to that with shame, which is her way to go with wanton. Boult. 'Faith some do, and some do not. But, mistress, if I have bargained for the joint. Bawd. You mayst cut a moral of the spit. Boult. I may so.

Bawd. Who should deny it? Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments well.

Boult. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed yet.

Bawd. Boult, spend thou that in the town: report what a squawman we have you'll lose nothing by custom. When nature framed this piece, she

* Beads.
mean't thee a good turn; therefore say what a parcel she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

BOLD. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels, as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly inclined. I'll bring home some to-night.

PERICLES. Come your ways; follow me.

Mar. If tires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep,

United I still my virgin knot will keep.

Dion. Aid my purpose!

BOLD. What has we to do with Diana? Pray you, will you go with us? [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.

Enter Cleon and Dionyza.

DION. Why, are you foolish? Can it be undone!

CLE. O Dionyza, such a piece of slaughter

The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

DION. I think

You'll turn a child again.

CLE. Were I chief lord of all the spacious world,

I'll give it to undo the deed. O lady,

Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess

To crown the throne! I'll protest you,

I the justice of compare! O villain Leonine,

Whom thou hast poison'd too!

If thou hast drunk to him, it had been a kindness

Rather than a fault. What cares thou then,

When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

DION. That she is deed. Nurses are not the fates,

To keep her, nor ever to preserve.

She died by night; I'll say so. Who can cross it?

Unless you play the impious innocent,

And for an honest attribute cry out,

Shall be by foul play.

CLE. O go to. Well, well,

Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods

Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those that think

The petty wrens of Tharsus will try hence,

And open this to Pericles. I do shame

To think of what a noble strain you are,

And of how low'd a spirit.

CLE. To such proceeding

Who ever but his approbation added,

Though not his pre-consent, he did not flow

From honorable courses.

Dion. Be it so then:

Yet none does know, but you, how she came dead;

Nor can she know, Leonine being gone,

She did disdain my child, and stood between

Her and her fortunes: None would look on her,

But cast their gazes on Marina's face;

While she was blushed at, and her eyes悩み

Nor worth the time of day. It pierced me through;

And though you call my course unnatural,

You not your child well loving, yet I find

Great praise in me, as an enterprise of kindness,

Perform'd to your sole daughter.

CLE. Dion. And as for Pericles

What should he say? We went after her hearse,

And even yet we mourn: her monument

Is almost finish'd, and her epitaphs

In glittering golden characters express

A general praise to her, and care in us

At whose expense 'tis done.

DION. Thon art like the harpy,

Which, to betray, doth wear an angel's face,

Seize with an eagle's talons.

Dion. You are like one, that superstitiously

Both swear to the gods, that winter kills the flies;

But yet I know you'll do as I advise. [Exeunt.]

Enter Gower, before the Monument of Marina, at Tharsus.

Gower. Thus time we waste, and longest leagues make short;

Sail seas in cockles, have, and wish but 'tis;

Making (to take your imagination)

From bough to bough, region to region.

By you being courteous, we commit no crime

To use one language in each several clime

A piece with the rest of thy exploit.

An ignominy was formerly a common appellation for

An idiot.

A course which, not worth a good morrow.

Therefore our scenes seem to live.

I do beseech you To learn of me, who stand I the gap to teach you

The stages of our story. Pericles

Is now again thwarting the wayward seas

(Attended on by many a lord and knight)

To see his daughter, all his life's delight.

Old Escanes, whom Helenus late

Advanced in time to great and high estate,

Is left to govern. Here you it in mind,

Old Helenus goes along behind.

Well-sailing ships, and bounteous winds, have

This king to Tharsus, (this think I pot our thought;

So with his steagage shall your thoughts grow on.)

To fetch his daughter home, first is gone.

Like this, and heavens see they meet me a while;

Your ears unto your eyes I'll reconcile.

Dumb show. Enter at one Door, PERICLES, with his Train; CLEON and DIONYZA, at the other.

CLEON shows PERICLES the Tomb of MARINA, wherein PERICLES makes lamentation, puts on

Sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs.

Then CLEON and DIONYZA retire.

Gove. See how belief may suffer by foul show!

This borrow'd passion stands for true old woe;

And I in solitude cut all the world down,

With sighs shot through, and biggest tears over-sower'd,

Leaves Tharsus, and again embarks, he sweats

Never for his face, nor ever to develope;

He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears

A tempest, which his mortal vessel tears,

And yet he rides it out. Now please you wit

The epitaph is for Marina writ

By wicked Dionyza.

[Reads the Inscription on MARINA's Monument.] The fairest, sweetest, and best, lies here,

Who was born in her spring of year.

She was of Tyrus, the king's daughter,

On whom foul death hath made this death;

Marina she was call'd; and, at her birth,

Thee, being proud, swallow'd some part of the earth;

Therefore the earth, fearing to be o'erflow'd,

Hath Tharsus birth-child on the heavens bestowed.

Wherefore she does (and sweares she'll never stop!) Make raging battery upon shores of flint.

No visor does become black villany

So well as soft and tender flattery.

Let Pericles believe his daughter's dead,

And thus order his courses to be order'd

By lady and gentle, while our scenes are done.

We his daughter's woe and heavy well-a-day,

In her unholy service. Patience, then,

And think you now are all in Mitylen. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Mitylen. A Street before the Brothel.

Enter, from the Brothel, two Gentlemen.

GENT. 1. Did you ever hear the like?

GENT. 2. Nor, nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone away.

GENT. 1. But to have divinity preached there! did you ever dream of such a thing?

GENT. 2. No, no. Come, I am for no more bawdy-houses: shall we go hear the vestals' discourse?

GENT. 1. I'll do any thing now that is virtuous; but I am out of the road of rutting, forever. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same. A Room in the Brothel.

Enter Pander, Bawd, and Bawd.

PAND. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her, she had ne'er come here.

Bawd. Eye, eye upon her: she is able to freeze the gods, and much deceive a world's great wits with her imagination. We must either get her ravish'd, or be rid of her. — When she should do for clients her fitment, and do me the honour of your profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master-questions, her prayers, her knees; that she would make a puritain of the devil, if he would cheapen a kiss of her.

Pand. Faith, I must ravish her, or she'll despise us all our cavaliers, and make all our swearer's priests.

2. The sea.

Enter LYSIMACHUS.

Lyse. How now! How a dozen of virginites! Bawd. Now, the gods to bless your honor! Bawd. I am glad to see your honor in good health.

Lyse. You may say; 'tis the better for you that your resorted stand upon sound legs. Now how, wholesome iniquity! Have you that a man may deal withal, and defy the surgeon? Bawd. We have here one, sir, if she would—but there never came her like in Stilevene.

Lyse. If she'd do the deeds of darkness, thou wouldst say.

Bawd. Your honor knows what 'tis to say, well enough.

Lyse. Well; call forth, call forth.

Bawd. For flesh and blood, sir, white and red, you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but—

Lyse. What, pr'ythee?

Bawd. Sir, I can be modest.

Lyse. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.

Enter MARINA.

Bawd. Here comes that which grows to the stalk;—never plucked yet, I can assure you. Is she not a fair creature?

Lyse. Faith, she shall serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you,—leave us.

Bawd. I beseech your honor, give me leave; a word and I'll have done presently.

Lyse. I beseech you, do.

Bawd. First, I would have you note, this is an honorable man.

MARINA. To MARINA, whom she takes aside.

Lyse. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

Bawd. Next, he is the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Lyse. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honorable he is in that, I know not.

Bawd. Pray you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? He will line your apron with gold.

Lyse. What he will do graciously, I will thankfully receive.

Lyse. Have you done?

Bawd. My lord, she's not pased yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manager. Come, we will have him honor and her together. [Exit Bawd, Pander, and Bawd.]

Lyse. Go thy ways.—Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?

Lyse. What I cannot name but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with your trade. Please you to name it.

Lyse. How long have you been of this profession? Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lyse. Did you go to it so young? Were you a gamester at live, or at seven?

Mar. Rather too, sir, if now I be one.

Lyse. Why, the house you dwell in, proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into it! I hear say, you are of honorable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lyse. Why, hath your principal made known unto you, who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lyse. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity. O, you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious mowing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place. Come, come.

Lyse. How much? what price?

Mar. If ye were born to honor, show it now; if put upon you, make the judgment good.

Lyse. That thought you worthy of it.

Mar. How's this? how's this?—Some more—be sake.

Lyse. For me.

Mar. That am a maid, though most uneventful fortune Hath placed me here within this hazardous sty.

Lyse. Where, since I came, diseases have been sold Dearer than physic,—O that the good gods would set me free from this unfallow'd place.

Lyse. Though this old clime else move to the meaneast bird That flies the purer air.

Lyse. I did not think I had brought hither a corrupted mind.

Thy speech had alter'd it. Hold, here's gold for thee.

Lyse. Perisset still in that clear way thou goest, And the gods strengthen thee! Mar. The gods preserve you! Lyse. That I came with no ill intent; for to me The very doors and windows savor vilely. Farewell. Thou art a piece of virtue, and I doubt not but thy training hath been noble.—Hold; here's more gold for thee. A curse upon him, die he like a thief; That robs thee of thy good success!—If thou hearst from me, it shall be for thy good.

[As LYSIMACHUS is putting up his Purse, Bawd enters.

Bawd. I beseech your honor, one piece for me.

Lyse. Avast, thou damned door-keeper! Your house, But for this virgin, that doth prop it up, Would sink, and overwhelm you all. Away! [Exit LYSIMACHUS.

Bawd. How's this! We must take another course with you. If your peasant chastity, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the cope, and a mind so loose and sluttish, can be gilded like a spangled. Come your ways.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Bawd. I must have your maidenhead taken off, or the common hangman shall execute it. Come your ways. We'll have no more gentlemen driven away. Come your ways, I say.

[Re-enter Bawd.

Bawd. How now! what's the matter?

Bawd. Worse and worse, mistress; she has here spoken bawdy words to the lord Lysimachus.

Bawd. O abominable!

Bawd. She makes our profession, as it were, to stink afores the face of the gods.

Mar. Nay, hang her forever!

Bawd. The nobleman would have dealt with her like a nobleman, and she sent him away as cold as a snowball; saying his prayers too.

Bawd. Bawd, take her away; use her at thy pleasure; crack the glass of her virginitie, and make the rest malactics.

Bawd. If she were a thornier piece of ground than she is, she shall be plucked.

Mar. Hark, hark, you gods!

Bawd. She conjures: away with her. Would she had never come within my doors! Marry hang you! She shall not go to pardon us. Will you not go the way of woman-kind! Marry come up, my dish of chastity with rosemary and bays! [Exit Bawd.

Bawd. Come, mistresse; come your way with me.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Bawd. To take you from the jewel you hold so dear.

Mar. Pr'ythee, tell me one thing first.

Bawd. Come, come, your one thing, Mar. What canst thou wish time enemy to be?

Bawd. Why, I would wish him to be my master, or rather, my mistress.

Mar. Neither of these are yet so bad as thou art, Since they do better thee in their command. Thou holdest a place, for which the pained'st fiend Of hell would not in reputation change.

Thou art the devil's door-keeper to every coxcomb That lither comes inquiring for his tit;

*Cope or canopy of heaven. *Paley fellow.
To the cholerick stinging of each rogue thy ear
Is liable; thy very food is such
As hath beene beheld on by injected lungs.

Boult. What would you have me? go to the wars, would you? where a man may serve seven years for the loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the end to buy him a wooden one?

Mar. Do any thing of this kind doest. Empty
Old receptacles, common sewers of sights;
Serve by indenture to the common hangman;
Any of these ways are better yet than this:
Every man such a glass of a moon,
Could he but speak, would own a name too dear:
O that the gods would sparely from this place
Deliver me! Here, here, is gold for thee.
If thou wilt, thou shalt have what I can do for thee:
If I can place thee, I will.

Mar. But amongst honest women?

Boult. Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them.
But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent;
Therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them
readie enough. Come, I'll do for thee what I can;
come your ways.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Marina thus the brothel's leapers, and chances
Into an honest house, our story says,
She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As godless-like to her admired lays:
Deep clerks' she dumes; and with her need's composes
Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry;
That with her art sisters the nature by
Her inkle, silk, twin with the rubber cherry:
That pupils lack's she none of noble race,
Who pour their bounty on her; and her gain
She gives the cursed lux'd. Here we her place;
And to her father turn our thoughts again,
Where we left him, on the sea. We there him lost;
Whereas, driven before the winds, he is arrived
Here where his daughter dwells; and on this coast
Suppose him now at anchor. The city striev'd
God Neptune's annual feast to keep; from whence
Lysimachus our Tyrian ship expels
Her hangers able, trimm'd with rich expense;
And to him in his large with fervor hies,
In your supposing once more put your sight:
Of heavy Pericles think this the bark:
Where, what is done in action, more, if might,
Shall be discover'd; please you, sit, and hark.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE I.—On board Pericles' Ship, off Mitylene. A close Partition on Deck, with a Curtain before it; a Drinkers without it; reclining on a Couch. A Barge lying beside the Tyrian Vessel.

Enter two Sailors, one belonging to the Tyrian Vessel, the other to the Barge; to them HELICANIC.

Tyr. Sail. Where's the lord Helicanus? He can receive you. [To the Sailor of Mitylene.

O, here he is.—

Sir, there's a barge put off from Mitylene;
And in it is Lysimachus the governor,
Who craves to come aboard. What is your will?

Hel. That he have his. Call up some gentleman.

Tyr. Sail. Ho, gentlemen! my lord calls.

Enter two Gentlemen.

1 Gen. Both your lordship call.

Hel. Gentlemen.

There is some of worth would come aboard; I pray
You to greet them fairly. [The Gentlemen and the two Sailors descend, and go on board the Barge.

Enter from thence LYSIMACHUS and Lords; the four Tyrian Gentlemen and the two Sailors.

Tyr. Sail. Sir,

This is the man that can, in aught you would,
Resolve you.

Lys. Hau! reverend sir! The gods preserve you! Hel. And you, sir, to outlive the age I am, And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.

Being on shore, honoring of Neptune's triumphs,
" Learned men. * Needles.

And I will undertake all these to teach.
I doubt not this populous city will Yield many scholars.

Boult. But can you teach all this you speak of?

Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again, And prostitute me to the basest groom
That doth frequent your house.

Boult. But can you teach all this you can do for thee:
If I can place thee, I will.

Mar. But amongst honest women?

Boult. Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them.
But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent;
Therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them
readie enough. Come, I'll do for thee what I can;
come your ways.

[Exeunt.]

Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,
I made it, to know of whence you are.

Hel. First, sir, what is your place?

Lys. I, a governor of this place you lie before.

Hel. Sir,

Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king;
A man, who for this three months hath not spoken
To any one, nor taken sustenance;
But to prostrate his rieu.

Lys. Upon what ground is his distemperment?

Hel. Sir, it would be too tedious to repeat;
But the grief of all the springs from the loss
Of a beloved daughter and a wife.

Lys. May we not see him, then?

Hel. You may, indeed, sir; but but bootless is your sight; he will not speak
To any.

Lys. Yet, let me obtain my wish.

Hel. Behold him, sir; ['PERICLES discovered'] this was a goodly person,
Till the disaster, that, one mortal night,
Drove to this;

Lys. Sir, king, all hail! the gods preserve you!

Hel. Hail, royal sir!

Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.

1 Lord, Sir, we have a maid in Mitylene, I buried
War, would win some words of him.

Lys. *Pis well betouched.
She, questionless, with her sweet harmony
And other choice attractions, would allure,
And make a battery through his deed's part;
Which now are modestly stopped;
She, all as happy as of all the fairest,
Is, with her fellow-maidens, now within
The leafy shelter that clings against
The island's side.

[He-whispers one of the attendant Lords.—

Exeunt Lord, in the Barge of Lysimachus.

Hel. Sure, all's effectess; yet nothing we'll omit
That bears recovery's name. But, since your kindness
We have stretch'd thus far, let us beseech you further;
That for our gold we may provision have,
Wherein we are not destitute for want,
But weary for the stales.

Lys. 0, sir, a courtesy,

Which if we should deny, the most just God
For every gruel would send a caterpillar,
And so infect our province.—Yet once more
Let me conjure you to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.

Hel. Sir, sir, I will recount it;
But see, I am prevented.

Enter, from the Barge, Lord, MARINA, and a young Lady.

Lys. 0, here is

The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one!
Isn't not a goodly presence?

Hel. A gallant lady.

Lys. She's such, that were I well assured she came
To lengthen or prolong his grief.

* Seas
Scene I. PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

Of gentle kind, and noble stock, I'd wish
No better choice, and think me rarely wed.
Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounti
Expect even here, where is a kindly patient;
I speak the prosperous, artificial fest
Can draw him but to answer thee in aught
Thy sacred physi shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use
My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided none but I and my companion
Be suffer'd to come near him.

Ly. Come, let us leave her,
And the gods make her prosperous. [Mar. sings.]

Ly. Mark'd he your music! Mar. No, nor looked on us.
Ly. Least wise, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, lend ear—

Ly. Per! Ha! hu!
Mar. Our lord, that I am a maid,
My lord, that never before invited eyes,
But have been gazed on comet-like: she speaks,
My lord, that, may be, hath endur'd a great
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derivation was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:
But she hath rooted out my parentage
And to the world and awkward casualties
Bound me in servitude.—I will desist;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, Go not yet; I speak.

[Aside.] My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—
To equal mine;—was it not thus! what say you?

Mar. Said I, my lord, if you did know my parentage,
You would not do me violence.

Per. I do so think. I pray you turn your eyes again upon me,
You are like something that—What country woman!
Here of these shores!

Mar. Nay, nor of any shores:
Yet one briefly brought forth, and am
No other than I appear.

Per. I am great with woe, and shall deliver
My weeping.

Mar. My dearest wine was like this maid, and such a one
My daughter might have been: my queen's square brows,
Her stature to an inch; as wand-like straight;
As silver-voiced; her eyes as jewel-like,
And cased as richly: in pace another Juno;
Who starves the cars she feeds, and makes them hungry.
The more she gives them speech.—Where do you live?

Mar. Where I am but a stranger: from the deck
You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred?
And how achiev'd you these endowments, which
You make more rich to owe;

Mar. If you would I tell my history,
'Twould seem like lies disdain'd in the reporting.

Per. Pr'ythee speak; Falsehood cannot come from thee, for thou look'st
Most honest justice, and though of a palace.*

For the crown'd dwell to dwell in: I believe thee,
And make my senses credit thy relation,
To points that seem impossible; for thou look'st
Like one I should love: or that were the friends?
Didst thou not say, when I did push thee back,
(Which was when I perceiv'd thee,) that thou

Per. From good descending?

Mar. So indeed I did.

Per. Report thy parentage. I think thou said'st
That thou hast been toss'd from wave to injury,
And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal mine,
If both were open'd.

Mar. Some such thing indeed
I said, and said no more but what my thoughts
Did warrant me was likely.

Per. Tell thy story; If thou consider'dst prove the thousandth part
Of my endurance, thou art a man, and I
Have suffer'd like a girl; yet thou dost look
Like Patience,caring on king's graves, and smiling
Extremity out of act. What were thy friends?

How long thou them? Thy name, my most kind virgin!
Recount, I do beseech thee; come, sit by me.

Mar. My name, sir, is Marina.

Per. O, I am mock'd,
And thou by some incensed god sent hence
To make the world laugh at me.

Mar. Patience, good sir,
Or here I'll cease.

Per. Nay, I'll be patient:
Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me,
To call thyself Marina.

Mar. The name Marina,
Was given me by one that had some power;
My father, and a king.

Per. How! a king's daughter!

Mar. You said you would believe me;
But, not to be a troubler of your peace,
I will end here.

Per. But are you flesh and blood?
Have you a working pulse! and are no fairies?
No motion!—Well; speak on. Where were you born?
And whence do call'd Marina!

Mar. Call'd Marina,
For I was born at sea.

Per. At sea? Thy mother?

Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king;
Who died the very minute I was born,
As my good nurse Lychorida hath o't
Delivered weeping.

Per. O, stop there a little!
This is the rarest dream that e'er dull sleep
Did mock sad souls withal: this cannot be.
My daughter's buried. [Aside.] Well.—where were you bred?
I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story,
And never interrupt you.

Mar. You will therefore believe me; 'twere best I did give o'er.

Per. I will believe you by the syllable
Of what you shall deliver. Yet, give me leave:
How came I quite alone? who brought you hither?

Mar. The king, my father, did in Tharsus leave me:
Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife,
Did seek to murder me; and having wond
A villain to attempt it, who having drawn,
A crew of pirates came, and rescued me
Brought me to Mytilene. But now, good sir,
Whether will you have me? Why do you weep?

Hel. It may be,
You think me an impostor; no, good faith;
I am the daughter to king Pericles,
If good king Pericles be.

Per. Hoo, Helicanus! Hel. Calls my gracious lord!

Per. Thon art a grave and noble counsellor,
Most wise in general: Tell me, if thou canst,
What is this maid, or, what is it like to be,
That thus hath made me weep!

Hel. Here is the regent, sir, of Mytilene,
Speaks nobly of her.

Ly. She would never tell
Her parentage; being demanded that,
She would sit still and weep.

Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honor'd sir;
Give me a gash, put me to present pain;
Let this great sea of joys rushing upon me,
Overbear I share of my immortal being,
And drown me with their sweetness. O, come luther.
Thou that beggest him that did thee begget;
Thou that wast born at sea, buried at Tharsus,
And found at sea again! o Helicanus,
Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods, as loud
As thunder threatens us. This is Marina.—
What was thy mother's name? tell me but that,
For truth can never be confirmed enough,
Though doubts did ever sleep.

Mar. First, sir, I pray,
What is your title?

Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
(As in the rest thou hast been godlike perfect)
My drossy, or queen's name, thou art the heir of kingdoms,
And another lie to Pericles thy father.

* E. No puppet dressed up to deceive me.
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

ACT V.

Scene I.—The Temple of Diana at Ephesus: Thaisa and Marina, Sirs.

Enter PERICLES, with his Train; LYCIMACHUS, MARINA, and a Lady.

Per. Hail, Danae; to perform thy just command
I here confess myself the king of Tyre;
Whom, if I frightened from my country, did wed
The fair Thaisa, at Pentapolis.
At sea in child-bed died she; but brought forth
A maid-child call'd Marina; who, O goddess,
Wears yet thy silver ivery.
She at Tharsus
Was nurs'd with Cleon; whom a speen years
He sought to murder; but her better stars
Brought her to Mitylene; against whose shore
Ruling, her fortunes brought the maid abroad,
And, by her own most clear remembrance, she
Made known herself my daughter.

Thaisa.

Voice and favor!—
You—thou—ye are O royal Pericles!
[She faints.
Per. What means the woman! she dies! help, gentlemen!

Cer. Noble sir,
If you have told Diana's altar true,
This is your wife.
Per. Reverend appearer, no;
I threw her o'erboard with these very arms.
Per. Upon this coast, I warrant you.
Per.
Thaisa.

To the most certain,
Cer. Look to the lady; O, she's but o' erjoy'd.
Early, one blust'ring morn, this lady was Thrown on this shore. I oped the collum, and Found there rich jewels; recover'd her and placed

Here in Diana's temple.
Per.
May we see them?
Cer. Great sir, they shall be brought to you by my Whither I invite you. Look! Thaisa is Recover'd.
Per.
Thaisa. O, let me look!
If he be none of mine, my sanctity
Will by my senses and no licentious ear,
But curb it spite of seeing, O, my lord,
Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,
Like him you are: Did you not name a tempest,
A birth, and death!
Per.
The voice of dead Thaisa!
Thaisa. That Thaisa am I, supposed dead,
And awak'd.
Per. Immortal Diana!

Thaisa.

Now I know you better.—
When we with tears parted Pentapolis,
The king, my father, gave you such a ring.
Per. This, this: no more, you gods! your present kindness
Makes my new words expire: You shall do well,
That on the touching of her lips I may
Melt, and no more be seen. O come, be buried
A second time within these arms.

Marina.
My heart
Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.

Enter Gower, before the Temple of Diana at Ephesus.

Gower. Now our sands are almost run;
More a little, and then done.
This, as my last boon, give me
[For such kindness must relieve me]
That you aptly will suppose
What pageantry, what feats, what shows,
With music, and pretty din,
The recent made in Mitylene,
To greet the king. So he was thrived,
That he is promis'd to be wived

i. e. Regent of the silver moon.

Scene.
Can you remember what I call’d the man?
I have named him oft.
Thais.
"Twas Helicanus then.
Per. Still confirmation:
Embrace him, dear Thaisa: this is he.
Now do I long to hear how you were found;
How possibly preserved; and whom to thank,
Besides the gods, for this great miracle.
Thais. Lord Cerimon, my lord; this man
Through whom the gods have shown their power;
That can
From first to last resolve you.
Per. Reverend sir,
The gods can have no mortal officer
More like a god than you. Will you deliver
How this dead queen re-lives!
Cer. I will, my lord.
Beseech you, first go with me to my house,
Where shall be shown you all was found with her;
How she came placed here within the temple,
No needful thing omitted.
Per. Pure Dian!
I bless thee for thy vision, and will offer
My night oblations to thee. Thaisa,
This prince, the fair-betrothed of your daughter,
Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now,
This ornament? that makes me look so dismal,
Will I, my lov’d Marina, clip to form;
And what this fourteen years no razor touch’d,
To grace thy marriage day, I’ll beautify.

[i. e. His beard.

Thais. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit,
Sir, that my father’s dead.
Per. Heavens make a star of him! Yet there,
my queen,
We’ll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves
Will in that kingdom spend our following days;
Our son and daughter shall in Tyreus reign.
Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay
To hear the rest untold.—Sir, lead the way:

[Exeunt. Enter Gower.

Gower. In Antioch, and his daughter, you have heard
Of monstrous lust the due and just reward:
In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen
(Although assai’d with fortune fierce and keen)
Virtue preserv’d from fell destruction’s blast,
Led on by heaven, and crown’d with joy at last.
In Helicanus may you well desery
A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty:
In reverence Cerimon there well appears
The worth that learned charity aye wears.
For wicked Cleon and his wife, when fame
Had spread their cursed deed, and honor’d name
Of Pericles, to rage the city burn.
That him and his they in his palace burn.
The gods for murder seemed so content
To punish them; although not done, but meant.
So on your patience evermore attending.
New joy wait on you! Here our play’s ending.

[i. e. The king of Antioch.

Edmund, Bastard Son to Gloster.
Chester, a Courtier.
Old Man, Tenant to Gloster.
Physician.

FOOL.
OSWALD, Steward to Goneril.
An Officer, employed by Edmund.
Gentleman, Attendant on Cordelia.
A Herald.
Servants to Cornwall.

GONERIL.
REGAN.

Cordelia, Daughters to Lear.

Knights attending on the King, Officers, Messengers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

SCENE, Britain.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Room of State in King Lear's Palace.

Enter Kent, Gloster, and Edmund.

Kent. I thought the King had more affected the duke of Albany, than Cornwall.

Glo. It did always seem so to us; but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weight'd that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

Kent. Is this your son, my lord?

Glo. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge; I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could: whereupon she grew round-womb'd: and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being proper.

Glo. But I have, sir, a son, by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account: though this knave came somewhat privately into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair: there was good sport at his making, and the whomso'er must be acknowledged.—Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

Edm. No, my lord.

Glo. My lord of Kent: remember him hereafter as my honorable friend.

Edm. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glo. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again. The king is coming.
[Trumpets sound within.]

Enter Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Goneril, Regan, Cordelia, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloster.

[Most scrupulous needy.  Part or division.  Open plains.]
And prize me at her worth. In my true heart
I find, she names my very deed of love;
Nor price comes too short;—That I profess
Myself to all enemy other joys,
Which the most precious square of sense possessest;
And and, I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness's love.

Cor. Then poor Cordelia!

And yet not so; since, I am sure, my love's
More rarer than my tongue's;
Lear. To thee, and thine, heraldly ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom:
No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
Than thou canst confirm! on Cordelia, our joy,
Although the last, not least; to whose young love
The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy,
Strive to be interested: what can you say to draw
A third so equal than your sisters?—Speak.

Cor. Nothing, my lord.

Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love my majesty
More than my bow; no more nor less.
Lear. How, how, Cordelia! mend your speech a little,
Lest it may mar your fortunes.

Cor. Good my lord, you have begot me, bred me, lov'd me; I return those duties back as are right fit,
Obey you, love you, and most honor you.
What were my sister-Burdens, if they were
They love you all? Happily, when I shall wed,
That lord, whose hand must take my rightful, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care, and duty:
Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,
To love my father all.

Lear. But goes this with thy heart?

Cor. Ay, good my lord.

Cor. So young, and so untender.

Cor. So young, my lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so.—Thy truth then be thy dover:
For, by the sacred radiance of the sun;
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be;
Here I discharge all my paternal care,
Propinquity, and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee, from this! forever. The barbarous

Or he that makes his generation's messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbor'd, pitted, and relieved,
As thou, my sometime daughter.

KENT. Good my liege,

Lear. Peace, Kent! Come not between the dragon and his wrath:
I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery.—Hence, and avoid my sight!—

To Cordelia. So be my grave my peace, as here I give Her father's heart from her!—Call France!—Who stirs?

Call Burgundy. Cornwell, and Albany,
With my two daughters' dowers digest this third;
Lear. rice, which she calls plain may marry her,
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty.—Ourselves, by monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make us, you by due turns. Only we still retain
The name, and all the additions to a king;
The sway,
Revenue, execution of the rest
Becoming sons, be you; which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. (Giving the crown.

KENT. Royal Lear,
Whom I have ever honor'd as my king.
Lear. Right noble Burgundy
As my great patron thought on in my prayers,—

Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.

KENT. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart: be Kent unmanfully,
When Lear is mad! What wouldst thou do, old man?
Think'st thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When power to flatter bow's! To plainness house,
When majesty stoops to folly. Reverse thy doom;
And, in thy best consideration,
This hideous rashness: answer my life my judgment.

Youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty-hearted, whose low sound
Reveres no holiness;

Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.

KENT. My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thine enemies; nor fear to lose it,
Thy safely being the motive.

Out of my sight!—

KENT. See better, Lear; and let me still remain
The true blank of thine eye.

Lear. Now, by Apollo,—

KENT. Now, by Apollo, king,
Thou swearest thy gods in vain.

LEAR. O, vassal, miscreant! (Laying his hand on his sword.

KENT. Do;
Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
Upon the soul disease. Revoke thy will:
Or whilst I can vent nor from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil.

Lear. Hear me, recreant!

On thine allegiance hear me!—
Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow,
(Which we durst never yet,) and, with strain'd pride,
To come to our text our sentence and our power;
(Which nor our nature, nor our place can bear:)
Our potence make good, take thy reward.
Five days we do abate thee, for provision
To shield thee from diseases of the world:
And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back
Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following
Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,
The moment is thy death: Away! By Jupiter,
This shall not be revok'd.

KENT. Fare thee well, king: since thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.—
The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid.

[To Cordelia. That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said!—
And your large speeches may your deeds approve,
(To Regan and Goneril.)
That good effects may spring from words of love—
Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu;
He'll shape his old course in a country new. (Exit.

Re-enter Gloster; with France, Burgundy, and Attendants.

Glo. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

LEAR. My lord of Burgundy,
We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rival'd for our daughter; What, in the least,
Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?

Burgundy.

Majesty
I crave no more than hath your highness other'd,
Nor will you tender less.

LEAR. Right noble Burgundy
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fall'n: Sir, there she stands;
I sought within that little seeming substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure pleased.
And nothing more, may fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.

Burgundy.

I know no answer.

LEAR. Sir, Will you, with those infirmities she owes; Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Bower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our trait,
Take her, or leave her?

Burgundy.
Pardon me, royal sir; Election makes not up on such conditions.
Lear. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me,
I tell you all her wealth.—For you, great king.

[To France.]
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech you
To wilt your liking a more worthy one.

On what a wreath whom nature is ashamed
Almost to acknowledge hers.

France. To speak and purpose not; since what I will intend,
I'll do before I speak,) that you make known
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
Nor base action or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favor:
But even for want of that, for which I am richer;
A still-sobered view, and such a tolerant
That you have glad I have not, though not to have it,
Hath lost me in your liking.

Lear. Better thou
Hadst not been born, than not to have pleas'd me better.

France. Is it but this? a tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspoke,
That it intends to do—My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respects, that stand
About from the entire point. Will you have her?
She is herself a dowry.

Bur. Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Daughter of Burgundy.

Lear. Nothing: I have sworn; I am firm.
Bur. I am sorry then, you have so lost a father,
That you must lose a husband.

Cordelia. Peace be with Burgundy!
Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

France. Fairest Cordelia, thou art most rich,
Being poor;
Most choice, forsaken; and most lov'd, despis'd!
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon;
Be it thy lot, I take up what's cast away.
Gods, gods! 'tis strange, that from their cold'st neglect
My love should kindle to inflamed respect.—
The envious father, king, through my chance,
Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France:
Not all the dukes of war-like Burgundy
Shall buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.—
Bid them farewell, Cordelia; though unkind;
Thou bestow here, a better where to find.

Lear. Thou hast her, France: let her be thine;
for we
Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers again:—Therefore be gone,
Without our grace, our love, our benison. 6

Come, noble Burgundy.

[Exeunt, Lear, Burgundy, Cornwall, Albany, Gloucester, and Attendants.

France. Bid farewell to your sisters.

Cor. The jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you; I know you what you are;
And, like a sister, am most loath to call
Your faults, as they are named. Use well our father:
To your professed bosoms I commit him;
But, if you, alas! should issue within his view,
I would prefer him to a better place.
So farewell to you both.

Gen. Prescribe not us our duties.

Bur. Let your study
Be, to content your lord; who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms. You have obedience seem'd,
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.

Blessed.

Cor. Time shall unfold what plaiz'd cunninguels who cover faults, at last shame them derides.
Well may you prosper!

France. Come, my fair Cordelia.

[Exit France and Cordelia.

Gen. Sister, it is not a little I have to say, of what most nearly appertain's us both. I think,
our father will hence to-night.

Reg. That's most certain, and with you; next month
with us.

Gen. You see how full of changes his age is: the observation we have made of it hath not been little: he alter'd us'd our sister most; and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off appears to grossly.

Reg. The infirmity of his age: yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself.

Gen. The test and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look to receive from his authority, not alone the imperfections of long-en-crafted condition, but therewithal, the unruly waywardness that inflam'd and choleric years bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant starts are we like to have from him, as this of Kent's banishment.

Gen. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let us hit together; for his days are many with party glad

Gen. As honest madam's issue! Why brand they us
With base! with baseness! bastards! base! base!
Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
Many composition and fierce quality.

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Earl of Gloucester's Castle.

Enter Edmund, with a Letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound: Wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custom; and permit
The exorbitancy of nations to deprive
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moon-shines
Lag of a brother? Why bastard! wherefore base!
When my dimensions are as well compact
My mind is more generous, and my shames
As honest madam's issue! Why brand they us
With base! with baseness! bastards! base! base!
Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
Many composition and fierce quality.

Glo. Bid them farewell, Cordelia: Edmund the base
Shall top the legitimate. I grow; I prosper:
Now, gods, stand up for bastard

[Exit.

Glo. Kent banish'd! thus! And France in cholерь parted!
And the king gone to-night! subscribed! his power!
Confined to exhibition! All this done
Upon the gad—Edmund! How now? what news?

Edm. So please your lordship, none.

[Putting up the Letter.

Glo. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter

Edm. I know no news, my lord.

Glo. What paper were you reading it

Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glo. No, what needed then that terrible despatch of it into your pocket? the quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see: Come, it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Edm. No? What needed then that terrible despatch of it into your pocket? the quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see: Come, it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Scene III. — KING LEAR. 679

Edm. I hope, for my brother’s justification, he wrote this but as an essay3 or taste of my virtue.

Edm. [Reads.] This policy, and reverence of age, makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us; fills our abodes cannot reach them. I begin to find an idle and fruitless bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who sways, and as it hath power, as it is at pleasure. How in this case, I speak more. If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, Edgar.—[Exit.]

Glo. [Concealing Edgar] Edgar! till I waked him you should enjoy his revenue.—My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?—When came this to you? Who brought it?

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord, there’s the cunning of it; I found it thrown in at the easement of my closet.

Glo. You know the character to be your brother’s?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but, I hope, his heart is not in the contents.

Glo. Hath he never herebefore sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: But I have often heard him maintain it to be fit, that sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as wand to give his power, and the son manage his revenue.

Glo. O villain, villain!—his very opinion in the letter!—Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, brutal villain!—If it were worse than brutish—Go, strait seek him: I’ll apprehend him:—Abominable villain!—Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please my lord to suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course; where? if you violently proceed against him, mistake not your means, you would make a breach in your own honor, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to fell my affection to your honor, and no other pretence of danger.

Glo. Think you so?

Edm. If your honor judge it meet, I will place before you where you shall hear him confute of this, and by a course that you shall have your satisfaction; and I assure you that without any further delay than this very evening.

Glo. He is a man, but a mad one.

Edm. Nor is not, sure.

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him.—Heaven and earth!—Edmund, seek him out; send me him in, I pray you: I cannot blame the towards you from your own wisdom: I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution.

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently; convey the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.

Glo. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us: Though the wisdom of nature does order it thus and yet, nature finds herself scourged by the sequent evils: love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide; in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and this villain breaks his heart against his father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there’s son against father: the king falls from bias of nature; there’s father against child. We have seen the best of our time: Machinations, hollowness, treachery, and all ravenous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves!—I find out this villain, Edmund, it shall lose the nothing; do it carefully.—By the noble and trusting heart banished his offence, honour, strangelie!—Strange! strange! —Edm. This is the excellent topick of the world! that when we are seek in fortune, (of all things the surest of life) we meet withall our misfortunes, the asters, the sun, the moon, and the stars: as if we were villains by necessity; fools, by heavenly compulsion; knaves, this by the influence of the firmament: drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary

"Trial. Weak and foolish.

"Traitors.

Glo. enter Edgar. and pat he comes, like the catastrophe of the old comedy: My one is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o’Bedlam.—O, these eclipses do

Edg. How now, brother Edmund? What serious contemplation are you in?

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you, the effects he writes of, exceed urbanity; and are hard to be reached by the child and the parent; death, death, dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, menaces and maledictions against king and nobles; needless divisions, banishment of friends, dissolution of cohorts, nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sextary astronomical?

Edm. Come, come, when saw you my father last?

Edg. Why, the night gone by.

Edm. Spent it with him?

Edg. Two hours together.

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him, by word or countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Benthink yourself, wherein you may have offended him: and, at my entreaty, forbear his presence, till some little time hath qualified the heat of your displeasure; and at this instant so rude a jest in him, that with the mischfit of your person it would scarcely aly.

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That’s my fear. I pray you, have a contenent forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fally bring you to hear my lord speak: Pray you, go; there’s my key:—If you do stir abroad, so armed.

Edg. Armed, brother?

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best; go armed; heaven bless the man, if there be any good meaning towards you! I have told you what I have seen and heard, butiani; nothing like the image and horror of it: Pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon?

Edm. I do serve you in this business.—

Enter Goodrich and Swear.

Edm. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Edm. By day and night! he wrongs me; every hour.

He dashes into one gross crime or other. That sets us all at odds; I’ll not endure it:—Is this king not but just, and himself uprised on every tribe:—When he returns from hunting, I will not speak with him; say, I am sick—If you come back, I am in the service. You shall do well; the fault of it I’ll answer.

Stew. He’s coming, madam; I hear him.

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you will.

You and your fellows; I’d have it come to question: It like not, let him to my sister. Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one.

Stew. [Horns within.]

These sounds are unnatural and offensive in music.

For cohorts some editors read courts. Temperate.
Not to be overruled. Idle old man, That still would manage those authorities, That he hath given away!—Now, by my life, Old fools are babes again; and must be used With coups and fumitories,—when they are seen abused.

Remember what I have said. Nay, very well, madam. Go. And let his knights have colder looks among you: What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so: I will relieve from hence occasions, and I shall, That I may speak.—I'll write straight to my sister, To hold my very course.—Prepare for dinner. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Ball in the same.

Enter Kent, disguised.

Kent. If but as well: I other accounts borrow, That can my speech detect, my good intent May carry through itself to that full issue
For which I raz'd my likeness.—Now, banish'd Kent, If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn'd; (So may it come!) thy master, whom thou lov'st, Shall find thee full of labors.

Horns within. Enter Lear, Knights, and Attendants.

Lear. What dost thou profess? What wouldst thou with me? Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly, that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse with him that is wise, and to have little; to laugh much, to light, when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish. Lear. What art thou? Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject, as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou? Kent. Service.

Lear. Doest thou know me, fellow? Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance, which I would call master.

Lear. What's that? Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do? Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious face to tell me, and deliver a plain message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou? Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing; nor so old, to dote on her for any thing: I have years on my back forty-eight.

Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me: if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part thee yet.—Dinner, ho, dinner!—Where's my knife! my fool! Go you, and call my fool hither:

Enter Steward.

Stew. You, you, sirrah, where's my daughter? Stew. So please you.— Lear. Stew. Saw the fellow there? Call the cotsobble back.—Where's your fool, ho!—I think the world's asleep.—How now, where's that mountebank? Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me, when I call'd him? Knight. Sir, he answer'd me in the roundest manner; but he would not.

Lear. He would not! Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not enter-taining with that ceremony but affection as you were wont; there's a great abatement of kindness appears, as well in the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter.

Lear. Ho! say'st thou so? Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent, when I think your highness is wrong'd.

Lear. Thou but remember'st me of mine own conception; I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence, and purpose of unkindness: I will look further into't. —but where's my fool? I have not seen him this two days.

Knight. Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the fool hath much puned away.

Lear. Uncouth nonsense. I have noted it well.—Go, you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her.—Go you, call hither my fool.—

Re-enter Steward.

Lear. Why, my lady's father! my lord's knave: you whereon dog! you slave! you cur! Stew. I am none of this, my lord; I beseech you, pardon me.

Lear. Do you bandy looks with you, you rascal! Stew. I'll not be struck, my lord.

Lear. Nor tripped neither; you base foot-ball player! I Tripping up his Heels.

Lear. I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I love thee.

Kent. Now, sir, arise, away; I'll teach you differences; away, away; if you will measure your monarch's length again, tarry: but away; go to: Have you wisdom? no. [Pins the Steward out. Lear. What? a friendly kind, I thank thee; there's earnesty of thy service. [Giving Kent Money. Give Lear. Fool. Fool. Let me hire him too:—Here's my coxcomb. [Giving Kent his Cap. Lear. How now, my pretty knave! how dost thou? Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb. Lear. Why, fool! Fool. Why, it's taking one's part that is out of favor: Nor thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly: There, take my cokcomb; Why, this fellow lasc bath'd two of his daughers, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my cokcomb.—How now, nuncle! 'Would I had two cokcombs, and two daughters! Lear. Why, my boy! Fool. If I gave them all my living, I'd keep my cokcombs myself: There's mine: beg another of thy daughters. Lear. Take heed, sirrah; the whip. Fool. Truth's a dog that must to kennel; he must be whipp'd out, when Lady, the brach, may stand by the fire and stalk. Lear. Then I must call to me! Fool. Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech. Lear. Do. Fool. Mark it, nuncle:—Here more than thou dost show, Speak less than thou knowest, Lead less than thou art, Ride more than thou goest, Learn more than thou knowest, Set less than thou receivest, Leave thy drink and thy yolk's, And keep in-odour, And thou shalt have more Than two tens to a score. Lear. This is nothing, fool. Fool. Then 'tis like the breath of an unfe'd lawyer; you gave me nothing for't: Can you make me no use of nothing, nuncle? Lear. Why, no, nuncle; nothing can be made out of nothing.

Oho! go; other, shall tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to; he will not believe a fool.

[To Kent.

Lear. A better fool! Fool. Bost thou know the difference, my boy, between a better fool and a sweet fool? Lear. No, lad; teach me.

Fool. That lord, that counsel'd thee, To give away thy land,

—Funishious jealousy. • Beaten. • Pitch-bound. • Ownest, possessed. • Believeth.
Come place him here by me.— Or do thou them tenderly:—
The sweet and bitter fool Will presently appear: The one in madly here.

KING LEAR. Dost thou call me fool, boy! All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.

KENT. This is now no other fool, my lord. To that I am I. Exit, boy.

When thou closest thy crown 'round the middle and gavest away both parts, thou onst time ass on thy back over the dirt: Thou hadst little wit in thy body, when thou gavest thy golden one away. It I speak like myself in this, let him be whipp'd that first finds it so.

Fool. And be wiser, sir; Thine old, and I trow, you should be wise: Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires: Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold, That this our court, meeted with their manners, Shows like a motley inn; epicurism and lust Make it more like a tavern or a brothel, Than a grace'd palace. The shame itself doth speak For instant remedy. Be then desir'd By her, that else were I the thing she begs, A little to disquainty your train; And the remainder, that shall still depend, To be such men as may besot your age, And know themselves and you.

Lear. Darkness and devils!— Saddle my horses; call my train together.— I'll come last! I'll not trouble thee; Yet I have left a dame here.

Gon. You strike my people; and your disorder'd rabble May serve masters of their better.

Enter Albany.

Lear. Good, sir, be patient.

Gon. Done:—I have a mind of choice and rarest parts, That all particulars of duty know; And in the most exact regard Support The worship of their name.—O most small fault, How natural is that in Cordelia! Which, like an engine, wench'd my frame of nature From the bad place; drew from my heart all love, And added to the call. O Lear, Lear! Beat at this gate that let thy heart in.

Singing.

Lear. Striking his head! And thy dear judgment out!—Go, go, my people.

Gon. Thus.

Lear. May I be so, my lord. Hear, nature, hear! Dear goddess, hear! Suspand thy purpose, if Thou didst intend to make this creature fruitful Into her womb convey sterility! Dry up in her the organs of increase; And from her decrepit body never spring A babe to honor her! If she must be, Create her child of spleen; that it may live, And be a thwart dismattured torrent to her! Let it stamp wrinkles on her brow of youth; With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks; Turn all her mother's pains, and benefits, To laughter and contempt; that she may feel How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is To have my childless child!—Away, away!

Exit.

Alb. Now, gods, that we adore, whereon comest this!

Gon. Never afflict yourself to know the cause; But let the exposition have that scope That dotage gives it.

Re-enter Lear.

Lear. What, fifty of my followers, at a clap! Within a fortnight!

Storied.

Complexion. Continue in service

The rack. Degraded. Falling.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Court within the Castle of the Earl of Gloucester.

Enter Edmund and Cornwall, meeting.

Edm. Save thee, Cornwall.

Corr. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall, and Regan his duchess, will be here with him to-night.

Edm. How comes that?

Corr. Nay, I know not; you have heard of the news abroad; I mean the whispered tales; for they are yet but half-kissing arguments.

Edm. Not I; Pray you, what are they?

Edm. Have you heard of no likely wars toward, twixt the dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Corr. You may think, in time. Fare you well, sir.

Edm. The duke be here to-night! The better! He weaves itself perforce into my business! My father hath set guard to take my brother; and I have one thing of a queasy question, Which aught to be said:—Brickess, and fortune, work!—Brother, a word! descend:—Brother, I say;

Enter Edgar.

My father watches:—O sir, fly this place; V. Delicate.
Scene II.

Intelligence is given where you are hid;
You have now the good advantage of night;—
Have you not spoken against the duke of Cornwall?
He's coming farther; now 'tis the last,
And Regan with him; have you nothing said
Upon his party 'gainst the duke of Albany?
Advise yourself.

Ed.
I am sure on't, not a word.

Edin. I hear my father coming,—Pardon me—
In coming, I must draw my sword upon you;—
Draw: seem to defend yourself: now quit you well,
Yield: come before my father;—Light, ho
here!
Fly, brother,—Torches! Torches so farewell.
[Exit Edgar.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion.

Of my more fierce endeavor: I have seen drunkards
Do more than this in sport.—Father! father!
Stop! stop! No help!

Enter Gloster, and Servants with Torches.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?

Edin. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,
Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon
To do his anxious metaphysical work.

But where is he?

Glo. Look, sir, I bled.

Glo. Where is the villain, Edmund?

Edin. Fleed this way, sir. When by no means he could—

Glo. Pursue him, ho!—Go after.
[Exit Serv.

By no means,—what!

Edin. Persuade me to the murder of your lordship;
But that I told him, the revenging gods
Gainst partridges did all their thunders bend;
Spoke, with how mantled and strong a bond
The child was bound to the father—Sir, in fine,
Seeing how heartily opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion.
With his prepared and set-on purpose
My unprovoked body, hance mine arm:
But when he saw my best arm'd spirits,
Bold in the quarter's right, round to the encounter,
Oft broken by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled.

Glo.
Let him fly far:
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And bound—despair.—The noble duke my master,
My worthy arch'd and patron, comes to-night:
By his authority I will proclaim it,
That he, which finds him, shall deserve our thanks,
Recompensing the mourners even to the stake;
He, that conceals him, death.

Edin. Where? I discomposed from his intent,
And found him right to do it, with curse'ble speech
I thought it were the best to discover him;—
Thou unassuming bastard! dust thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal
Of any trust, virtue, or worth, in thee.

Make thy words thine? No: what I should deny,
(Ass this I would; ay, though thou dost produce
My very character,) I'd turn it all
To thy suggestion, post, and dammed practice;
And thou must make a duellist of the world;
If they not thought the profit of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spears
To make thee seek it.

Glo.
Strong and fast'd villain!
Would he deny his letter!—I never got him.

Hark, the duke's Trumpets! I know not why he comes:—

[Trumpets within.

All ports I bar: the villain shall not scape;
The duke must grant me that: besides, his picture
I hang near, the last that spoke to him.
May have due note of him; and of my land,
Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means
To make thee capable.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, and Attendants.

Corn. How now, my noble friend! since I came either,

(Which I can call but now.) I have heard strange news:

Consider, recollect yourself.

Frightened news.

Chief.

Pitied, exec'd.

Severely, harsh.

i.e. capable of succeeding to my land.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short,
Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord!

Glo. O, madam, my old heart is crack'd, is crack'd!

Rec. What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom you betray'd? your Edgar?

Glo. O lady, lady, shame would have it hid!

Rec. Was he not companion with the riotous knights
That tend upon my father?

Glo.
I know not, madam:

It is too bad, too bad.—

Rec. No marvel then, though he were ill affected;
'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have the waste and spoil of his revenues,
I have this present evening from my sister,
I have been warned of them; and with such cautions,
That, if they come to sorrise at my house,
I'll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.

Edin. I hear that you have shown your father
A child-like of,

Edin. 'Twas my duty, sir.

Rec. He did bewray his practice; and receiv'd
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursued?

Glo. Ay, my good lord, he is.

Rec. If he be taken, he shall letter more
Be fear'd of doing harm: make your own purpose,
How in my strength you please.—For you, Edmund.

Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend itself, you shall be ours;
Natures of such deep trust we shall much need;
We first seize on.

Edin. I shall serve you, sir,
Truly, however else.

Glo. For him, I thank your grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to visit you, —

Reg. We come out of season; threading darkly'nd night.

Occasions, noble Gloster, of some poise?

We must have use if of you in the scene of—
Our father the hath writ so, hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our house; the several messengers his envoy despatch. Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful council to our business,
Which craves the instant use,

Glo. I serve you, madam;

Your graces are right welcome.

[Exeunt.

Scene II. —Before Gloster's Castle.

Enter Kent and Steward, severally.

Stew. Good dawning to thee, friend: Art of the house?

Kent. Ay.

Stew. Where may we set our horses!

Kent. 'gainst the morn.

Stew. Perchance if thou love me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Stew. Why, then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury pantaloon, I would make thee care for me.

Stew. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow, I know thee.

Stew. What dost thou know me for!

Kent. A knave; a rascal, an enter of broken meals; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited,
Beggarly, three-suited, fiery, wroth, saucy fellow; a
Hly-liver'd, action-taking knave; a whoreson, glass-gazing, superserviceable, sinew rogue; one-trunk-Sinew, a one-trunked slave; one that would be a bawd, in way of good service, and art nothing but the composition of a knave, beggar, coward, pander, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch: one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deny'st the least thee.

Stew. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou,
thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee,

Kent. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, deny thou know'st me! Is it two days ago, since

I tripped up thy heels, and beat thee, before the king!

I, thy rogue; for, though it be night, the moon shines; I'll make a sop of the moonshine of

KING LEAR.

Act II.

Harbor more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silly ducking observers,
That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
Under the sun, and like Venus in the puppet's part,
against the royalty of her father: Draw you go, or I'll so carbonado your shanks:—draw,
you rascals; come your ways.

Serv. Help, ho! murder! help! Kent.

Kent. Strike, you slave; stand, rage, stand;
you next slave, strike. (Beating him.)

Serv. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter EDMUND, CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and SERVANTS.

Kent. With you, good man, by you, if you please;
I'll fetch you; come on, young master.

Glo. Weapons! arms! What's the matter here?

Kent. Keep peace upon your head.

He dies, that strikes again: What is the matter?

Reg. The messengers from our sister and the king.

Cordelia. What is your difference? speak.

Stew. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Kent. No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valor.
You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in the tail that made the tailor.

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make a man!

Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir; a stone-cutter, or a painter; for I have made him so ill, though they had been but two hours at the trade.

Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

Stew. This ancient rathen, sir, whose life I have spared.

At suit of his grey beard.—

Kent. Thou whore'st zed! thou unnecessary letter!—My lord, if you will give me leave, I will fetch you an unblinded, bit by bit, into mort, and daub the walls of a jakes with him.—Spare my grey beard, you waftick!

Peace, sirrah!

You begg'd him, know you no reverence?

Kent. Yes, sir; but anger has a privilege.

Corn. Why art thou angry?

Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a

Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,

Like rakes, off bite the holy cords at will.

Which are too intrinsick! unlose: smooth every passion

That in the natures of your lords rebels;
Bring in the fire, sorrow to their colder bodies;
Reneges, affirm, and turn their holy canvans beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters,

As knowing nought, like doves, but following —

And that by all the dignity upon your eyes,

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,
I'd drive you cackling home to Camelot.

Corn. What, art thou mad, old fellow?

Glo. How fell you out?

Say that.

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,

Than I and such a knife.

Corn. Why doth thou call him knife? What's his elocution.

Kent. His censure stands me not.

Corn. No more, perchance, does mine, or his, or hers.

Kent. Sir, 'is my occupation to be plain;
I have you better faces in my time,

Than stands on any shoulder that I see
Before me at this instant.

Cordelia. This is some fellow

Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect

A saucy roughness; and constrains the garb,
Quite from his nature: He cannot flatter, he!—

And his blustering and plain, —he never speak truth;—

And they will take it, so if not, he's plain.

These kind of knives I know, which in this plain-

ness

Unfriend'd, Perplex'd. The bird called the king-fish, which, when dead and hung up by a thread, is supposed to turn his bill to the pole from whence the wind blows.

Saying or proverb.
SCENE IV.—A Part of the Heath.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. | I heard myself proclaimed:
---|---
And, by the happy hollow of a tree, escaped the hunt. No port is free; no place,
That guard, and most unusual vigilance,
Does not attend my taking. While I may 'scape,
I would preserve myself: and am therewith
To save the basest and most poorest shape,
That ever penury, in contempt of man,
Brought near to beast: my face I'll grime with filth;
Blanket my lones; e'f all my hair in knots;
And with presented nakedness outface
The winds, and persecutions of the sky.

The country gives me proof and precedent
Of man, and bears, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their mub'd and morthel'd bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And all the horrible object, from low inms,
Poor pelting villages, sheep-cotes and mills,
Sometime with inmatite bars, sometime with prayers.

Enforce their charity.—Poor Turlygood! poor Tom! That's something yet;—Edgar I nothing am.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Before Gloster's Castle. Enter Lear, Fool, and Gentleman.

Lear. | 'Tis strange, that they should so depart
And not send back my messenger.

Gent. | As I learn'd,

The night before there was no purpose in them Of the remove.

Kent. | Hail to thee, noble master! Lear. | How! Kent. | Makest thou this shame this pastime! Kent. | No, my lord.

Fool. | Ha, ha; look! he wears crested garters! Horses are tied by the heads; dogs and bears, by the tail, to the monkeys by the loins; and men by the legs: when a man is over-asty at legs, then he wears wooden neither stocks? Lear. | What's he, that hath so much thy place mistook To set thee here? Kent. | It is both he and she,

Kent. | I say, yes.

Lear. | No; they would not.

Kent. | Yes, they have.

Lear. | By Jupiter, I swear, no.

Kent. | By Juno, I swear, yea.

Lear. | They do not, do not; They could not, would not do; 'tis worse than murder.

to do them so 'pect such violent outrage: Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way Thou mightst deserve, or they impose this usage, Coming from us.

Kent. | My lord, when at their home I did commend your highness' letters to them, Ere I was sent from the place that show'd My duty kneeling, came there a rocking post, Sway'd in his baste, half-bred Shake his shifting body, panting forth From Goneril his mistress, salutations; Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission, Which presently they read; on whose contents, They summoned'd up their mealy, straight took horse; Commanded me to follow, and attend

The leisure of their answer: gave me cold looks: And meeting here the other messenger, Whose welcome, I perceiv'd, had poison'd mine, (Being the very fellow that of late Display'd so saucily against your highness,) Having many man more wit than at me, drew: He raised the house with loud and coward cries: Your son and daughter found this trespass worth The shame which here it suffers.

Foot. | Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way.

Fathers, that wear rags, Do make their children blind; But fathers, that bear bags, Shall see their children kind.

Fortune, that arrant whore, Ne'er turns the key to the poor.—

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dollars for thy daughters, as thou canst tell in a year.

Lear. | Be this my mothers swells up toward my heart.

Hybernia passio! down, thou climbing sorrow, Thy element's below!—Where is this daughter? Kent. | With the ear, sir, here within.

Lear. | Follow me not: Stay here.

Gent. | Made you no more offence than what you speak of.

Kent. | None.

How chance the king comes with so small a train? Fool. | An thou hast been set i' the stocks for that question, thou hadst well deserved it.

Kent. | Why, fool! Fool. | We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no laboring in the winter. All that follow thee are led by their eyes, but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty, but can smell him that's sticking. Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck: now am I giving it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knaves follow it, since a use gives it.

That, sir, which serves and seeks for gain, And follows but for form. Will pock, when it begins to rain, And leave thee in the storm. But I will terny, the pool will stay, And let the wise man fly. The knave turns fool, that runs away; The fool no knave, perdy.

Kent. | Where learned you this, fool! Fool. | Not i' the stocks, fool.

Kent. | Re-enter LEAR, with GLOSTER.

Lear. | Deny to speak with me! They are sick! They have travel'd hard to-night! Mere fetches; The images of revolt and dying off! Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. | My dear lord, You know the fiery quality of the duke; How unremovable and fix'd he is In his own course.

Lear. | Vengeance! plague! death! confusion! Fiery! Ye gods! Why, Gloster, Gloster, Gloster, I'd speak with the duke of Cornwall, and his wife. Glo. | Well, my good lord, I have informed them so. Lear. | Inform'd them! Dost thou understand me, man! Glo. | Ay, my good lord. Lear. | The king would speak with Cornwall; the dear father Would with his daughter speak, commands her service: Are they inform'd of this?—My breath and blood!—

Fiery! the fiery duke!—Tell the hot duke that— No, but not yet,—may be he is not well: Intempery doth still neglect all office, Wherefore it is well the matter is bound; we are not ourselves. When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind To suffer with the body: I'll forbear; And am fallen out with my more headier will, To take the horses and sickly fit For the sound man,—Death on my state! wherefore

[Looking on Kent.]

Should he sit here? This act persuades me, That this remotion of the duke and her Is practicably. Give me my servant forth: Go, tell the duke and his wife, I'd speak with them, Now, presently: bid them come forth and hear me,

A quibble between dollars and dollars. The disease called the mother. Removing from their own house.
Enter Cornwall, Regan, Glosfer, and Servants.

Lear. Good-morrow to you both.

Corn. Hail to your grave! [Kneeling, and at liberty.

Reg. I am glad to see your highness.

Lear. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason
I have to think so: if you should not be glad,
I would divest me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepulchring an adulteress,—O, are you free!

Points to his Heart.

Some other time for that.—Beloved Regan,
Thy sister's naught: O, Regan, she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture, here.—

Reg. I cannot think, my sister, in the least
Would fail her obligation: if, sir, in peace,
She have restrained the riots of your followers,
Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,
As clears her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her!

Reg. O, sir, you are old;
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confines: you should be ruled, and led
By some discretion, that discerns your state
Better than you yourself: Therefore, I pray you,
That to our sister you do make return,
Say, you have wrong'd her, sir...

Lear. Ask her forgiveness?

Reg. Do you but mark how this becomes the house?

Lear daughter. I confess that I am old;—
Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg, [Kneeling.
That you'll vouchsafe me rainment, bed, and food.

Reg. Good sir, no more; these are unsightly
Return you to your sister.

Lear. Never, Regan: She hath abated me of half my train;
Look'd black upon me; spoke to me with her tongue,
Most serpent-like upon the very heart:—
All the storm'd vengences of heaven fall
On her ingratitude; Strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness!

Fye, fye, fye!

Lear. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding
Flames
Into her sorrowful eyes! Infect her beauty,
You fume-struck? Orgs, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall and blast her pride!

Reg. O the blest gods!
So will you wish on me, when the rash mood's on.

Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse,
Thy tender-heaved nature shall not give
Thee o'er to harshness; her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort, and not burn: 'Tis not in thee
To exercise my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To handi badly words, to scare me up!
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in: thou better know'st
The powers of nature, bond of childhood,
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude.
Thy half o' the kingdom thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good sir, to the purpose.

[Trumpets within.

Lear. Who put my man i' the stocks!

Reg. I know it, my sister's: this approves her letter,
That she would soon be here.—Is your lady come?

Lear. This is a slave, whose easy-borrow'd pride
Dwell'd in the sickly grace of her he follows:—
Out, varlet, from my sight!

Reg. What means your grace?

Lear. Who's this goodly servant? Regan, I have
Some good hope Thou didst not know of.—Who comes here? O heavens,

Enter Goneril.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause: send down, and take my part.
Art not ashamed to look upon this beauteous

Reg. O, Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand?

Lear. Why not by the hand, sir! How have I offended?

All's not offence, that indiscretion finds,
And dotage terms so.

Lear. Will you yet hold!—How came my man i' the stocks?

Reg. I set him there, sir: but his own disorders
Deserve much less advancement.

Lear. You! did you?—

Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so.
If, till the expiration of your month,
You take your return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me;
I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which must be helpful for your entertainment.

Lear. Return to her, and let thy men demiss'd!
No, rather I abjure all roosts, and choose
To wage against the enemy o' the air;
To be more hearted with the wolf and owl

Lear. Do not you think with her?

Goneril. [Looking on the Steward.

Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took
Our youngestborn, I could as well be broght
To kneel his throne, and, square-like, pension beg
To keep base life atop.—Return with her?

Reg. Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpter
To this detested groom.

Goneril. At your choice, sir.

Lear. I pr'ythee, daughter, do not make me mad.
I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell;
We'll not meet, no more see one another;—
But thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter:
Or, rather, a disease that's in my flesh.
Which I must needs call mine: thou art a boil,
A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide thee;
Let shame come when it will, I do not call it:
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot
Thy past and future, till this high-judging Jove;
Mend when thou canst; be better at thy leisure:
I can be patient; I can stay with Regan,
I, and my hundred knights.

Lear. Not altogether so, sir; I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome: Give ear, sir, to my sister;
For those that mingle reason with your passion,
Must be content to think you old, and so—
But she knows what she does.

Lear. Is this well spoken, now?—

Reg. I dare avouch it, sir: What, lofty followers!
Is it not well? What should you need more of?
Yea, or so many! stith' that both charge and danger
Speak against so great a number? How, in one

Lear. Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity? 'Tis hard; almost impossible.

Reg. Why might not you, my lord, receive at
This from those that she calls servants, or from mine?

Lear. Why not, my lord! If then they chose to slack you,—

We could control them: If you will come to me
(For now I spy a danger,) I entreat you
To bring but live and twenty; to no more
Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all—

Reg. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my guardians, my depositories;
But keep your services to be follow'd
With such a number: What, must I come to you
With live and twenty, Regan! said you so?

A horse that carries necessaries on a journey.

Lear. This is a slave, whose easy-borrow'd pride
Dwell'd in the sickly grace of her he follows:—
Out, varlet, from my sight!

Lear. What means your grace?

Lear. Who's this goodly servant? Regan, I have
Some good hope Thou didst not know of.—Who comes here? O heavens,

Lear. Enter Goneril.
ACT III. SCENE II.

KING LEAR.

eg. And speak it again, my lord; no more with Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look well-

favour'd,

When others are more wicked; not being the worst,

Stands in some rank of praise—"I'll go with thee:"

[To Goneril]

Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,

And thou art twice her love.

Gon. Hear me, my lord; What need you five and twenty, ten, or five,

To follow in a house, where twice so many

Have a command to tend you?

Reg.

What need one?

Lear. O, reason not the need: our basest beggars

Are in the poorest thing superfluous:

Allow not more nature than nature needs,

Man's life is cheap as beasts'; thou art a lady;

If only to go warm were gorgeous,

Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous warest,

Which scarcely keeps thee warm—But, for true need,

You heavens, give me that patience, patience I

Have you seen me here, you gods, a poor old man,

As full of grief as age; wretched in both!

If he be that you stir these daughters' hearts

Against their father, feed me not so much

To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger!

O, let not women's weapons, water-drops,

Stain my man's checks! No, you unnatural hags,

I will have such revenge on you both,

That all the world shall—I will do such things—

What are they, yet I know not; but they shall be

The terrors of the earth. You think, I'll weep;

No, I'll not weep:—

I have full course of weeping; but this heart

Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws,

Or ere I'll weep: O, fool, I shall go mad!

[Exit Lear, GLOSTER, KENT, and Fool.

Corn. Let us withdraw, 'twill be a storm.

[Storm heard at a distance.

Reg.

This house is little; the old man and his people

Be well bestow'd.

Gon.

'Tis his own blame; he hath put himself from rest, and must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him gladly,

But not one follower.

Gon.

So am I purposed.

Where is my lord of Gloster?

Re-enter Gloster.

Corn. Follow'd the old man forth;—he is re-

turn'd.

Glo. The king is in high rage.

Corn. Whither is he going?

Glo. He calls to horse; but will I know not whither.

Corn. 'Tis best to give him way; he leads himself.

Gon. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glo. Alack! the night comes on, and the bleak winds:

Do sorely ruffle; for many miles about

There's scarce a bush.

Reg. O, sir, to wilful men,

The injuries that they themselves procure,

Must be their schoolmasters: Shut up your doors,

He is attended with a desperate train,

To which may incense him to, being apt

To have his ear abused, wisdom bids fear.

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord; 'tis a wild

night.

My Regan counsels well: come out o' the storm.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Heath.

A Storm is heard, with Thunder and Lightning.

Enter KENT and a Gentleman meeting.

Kent. Who's here, beside foul weather?

Gent. One has minded like the weather, most un-quietly.

Kent. I know you; Where is the king?

Gent. Contending with the fiendish element:

But the wind blow the earth into the sea,

Or swell the cur'd waters have the main,

That things might change, or cease: tears his

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyesless rage,

Catch in their fury, and make nothing of:

Strives in his little world of man to out-scorn

The to-and-fro conflicting wind and rain.

This night, wherein the curt'd-drawn beard would conch.

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf

Keep their fur dry, unboasted he runs,

And bids what will take all.

Kent.

But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labors to out-jest his heart-struck injuries.

Kent.

Sir, I do know you;

And dare, upon the warrant of my heart,

Comment a deare thing to you. There is division,

Although as yet the face of it be cover'd

With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall;

Who have (as who have not, that their great stars

Thron'd and set high!) servants, who seem no less;

Who hear it from France the spites and speculations

Intelligent of our state; what hath been seen,

Either in snouts and packings of the dogs;

Or the hard run which both of the have borne

Against the old kind king; or something deeper,

Whereof, perchance, these are but furnishings—

But, true it is, from France there comes a power

Into this better'd kingdom, who already,

Wise in our negligence, have secret feet

In some of our best ports, and are at point

* Whose dogs are drawn by its young.

† Snouts are mislaid, and packings undesired contrib-utories.

‡ Examples.

To show their open banner.—Now to you;

I can my credit you dare build so far.

To make your speed to Dover, you shall find

Some that will thank you, making just report

Of how unnatural and beholding sorrow

The king hath cause to 'plain.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding;

And from some knowledge and assurance, offer

This office to you.

Kent. I will talk further with you.

Corn. No, do not.

For confirmation that I am much more

Well hair Than my out wall, open this parcel take

What it containeth: Here you shall see Cardelia,

(Afear not but you shall,) show her this ring;

And she will tell you who your fellow is

That yet you do not know. Fix on this storm!

I will go seek the king.

Gent. Give me your hand: Have you no more to say?

Kent. Few words, but to effect, more than all yet;

That, when we have found the king, (in which your pain

That way; I'll this;) he that first lights on him,

Holla the other.

[Exeunt severely.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Heath.

Storm continues.

Enter Lear and Fool.

Lear. Blow, wind, and crack your cheeks! rage!

in your teeth.

You cataracts, and hurricanes, spout

Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cock's!

You sulphur-beds and thought-elected fires,

Vain-curteys, to oak-leafing thunder-bolts,

Sing me your head! And thou, all-shaking thunder,

Strike at the thick rotundity of the world!

Crack nature's moulds, all sermons spilt at once,

That make ingratitude man!

Fool. O uncle, court holy-water in a dry house

* Instigate.

† Quick as thought.

‡ Avant-curteys, French.

§ A proverbial phrase for fair words.
is better than this rain—water out o' door. Good humble, in, and ask thy daughters' blessing; here's a might pities neither with men nor fools.

Lear. Rumble thy belly—full! Spit, fire, spat, rain!

Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters:
I have no children, you elements, I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children.
You owe me no subscriptions: why then, let fall
Your horrible pleasure; here I stand your slave,
And find your children, young, old, and decrepit
—But yet I call you service ministers.
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your bent—against a head—of a head
So old and withered: O! this foul!
Fool. He that has a house to put his head in,
has a good head-piece.

The cod-piece that will house,
Before the head falls an
The head and he shall house:—
So beggars marry many,
The man that makes his foe,
Shall of a corn cry woo,
And turn his sleep to wake.

—where there was never yet fair woman, but she made months in a glass.

Enter Kent.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience, I will say nothing.

Kent. Who's there?

Lear. Fool. Marry, here's grace, and a cod-piece; that's a worse treason, a fool.

Kent. Also, sir, are you here? things that love
night,
Love not such nights as these: the wrathful skies
Guard the very wanderers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Sir, I was man,
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of hurled thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard man's nature cannot carry
The affliction, nor the fear.

Lear. Let the great gods, that keep this dreadful path over our heads,
Find out all your enemies now. Tumble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee unkindled crimes,
Unwhipp'd of justice: Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou peevish, and thou singular man of virtue,
That art incessant: Caull'd, to pieces shake,
That under covert and convenient seeming
Hast practis'd on man's life:—Close pent-up guilt's,
Like your correling continental, and cry
These dreadfull sunnysides grace.
I am a man
More smir'd against than sinner.

Kent. Fool. Black, bare-headed!

Geronimo, my lord, hard by here is a howel;
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest;
Repose you there: while I to this hard house
[More hard than is the stone whereon 'tis rais'd;
Which either breaketh, or despatched after you,
Denied me to come in] return, and force
Their scanted courtesy.

Lear. My wing begin to turn, —
Come on, my boy: How do, my boy! Art cold?
I am cold myself. — Where is this straw, my fellow?
The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Come, your howel.
Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my heart
That's sorry yet for thee.

Fool. A knot that has a little wofl —
With height, ho, the wind and the rain —
Must make content with his fortunes' fall —
For the rain it raineth every day.

Lear. —My boy, my good boy. Come, bring us to this howel.

Kent. Lear. And Kent, Fool. This is a brave night to cool a constant.
—'I'll speak a prophecy ere I go:
When priests are more in word than matter;
When rulers more their mind with letter;
When nobles are their barrier's burthens;
No heroes burn'd, but weep, and weep;
If every case in time is right;
No square in deed, nor no good Knight;
When sleds do not live in tongues;
Nor carriages come not to thongs;

Observe, more or less
Good.
Favor.
Part of the clown's song in Twelfth Nigh.

When usurers tell their gold & the field;
And bawds and whores do churches build:—
Then shall the realm of Albion
Come to a close conclusion.
Then comes the time, who late saw
That going shall be used with feel.

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time.

SCENE III.—A Room in Gloster's Castle.

Enter GLOSTER and EDMUND.

Glo. Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing: When I desired their leave that I might pit them, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way assist him.

Edm. Most savage, and unnatural!

Glo. Go to; say you nothing: There is division between the dukes: and a worse matter than that: I have received no answer this night;—'tis dangerous to be spoken;—I have locked the letter in my closet: these injuries the king now bears will be revenged there; it is part of a power already foiled: we must meditate to the king. I will seek him, and privately relieve him: go you, and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perjured. If he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. If I desire it, as he less in the whole, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund; pray you, be instant.

Edm. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke
Instantly know; and of that letter too:—
This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me That which my father loses; no less than all
The younger rises, when the elder falls.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Part of the Head, with a Howel.

Enter LEAR, KENT, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord; good my lord, enter.

The tyranny of the open night's too rough
For more to endure. [Storm still]

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Wilt break my heart?

Kent. I'd rather break mine own: Good my lord, enter.

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contem'nations storm
Inva'des to the skin; 'tis to thee;
But where the greater malady is fit'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. Thou'st shun a bear:
Thou'st shun the thy fly'ght toward the raging sea,
Thou'st shun the bear; — the mouth. When
The mind's free,
The body's delicate: the tempest in my mind
Both doth my senses take all feeling else,
Save what but this there. Fill'd inordinately
Is it not as this mouth should bear this hand,
For lifting food to? — But I will punish home;—
No, I will weep no letter, — in such a night
To shut me out! — Pour on; I will not hear,
In such a night as this! O Regan, Goneril —
Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave all,—
O, that my madness lies; let me shun that:
No more of that —

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Pr'ythee, go in thyself; seek thine own

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
On things will hurt me more.—But I'll go in:
In boy; go first. — [To the Fool] Thou houseless poverty.

Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.

[Fool goes in.

Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That hide the pelting of this mutinous storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unkind sides,
Your loop'd, and window'd raggedness, defend you
From rains such as these! O, I have been Too little care of this! Take physic, parishers,
Expose thyself to see what wretches feel;
That you mayst shew the superfluous to them,
And shed the heavens more just.

Edg. [Within.] Fathom and half, fathom and half! Poor Tom!

[The Fool runs out from the Howel]
KING LEAR

Scene IV.

FOOT. Come not in here, mnce, here's a spirit.

HOUD. My lord, help me.

KENT. Give me thy hand:—Who's there?

FOOT. A spirit, a spirit; he says his name's poor Tom.

KENT. What art thou that dost grumble there? I'll the straw!

Come forth.

Enter Edgar, disguised as a Madman.

EDG. Away! the foul fiend follows me!—Through the sharp Hawthorn blows the cold wind.—

Humph! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

KENT. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters? And art thou come to this?

EDG. Who gives any thing to poor Tom? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flames, and not one soul to help him? Your names?—

EDG. Judicious Hill, and the Pawpaw. There

Hang fated o'er men's faults, light on thy daughters! Kent. He hath no daughters, sir.

LEAR. Death, traitor! nothing could have saved them! To such a lowness, but his uncompaid fathers. Should have thus little mercy on their flesh? Their tenderest punishment! this was this f oolish

These pelican daughters.

EDG. Pack, pack on pack, on pack, on pack!—

Hang fated over men's faults, light on thy daughters!—

EDG. The worst will turn us all to fools and madmen.

EDG. Take heed o' the foul fiend: obey thy parents, and be, as they are, wealthy; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse; a love that thy sweet heart on proud array: Tom's a-cold.

LEAR. What hast thou been?

EDG. A laughing-man, proud in heart and mind: that cur'd his hair; wore gloves in his cap; served the list of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her; swore as many oaths as I spake words; and bedded them in the sweet face of heaven one, that slept in the contriving of lust, and walked to do it: Wine loved I deeply; dice dearly; and in woman, out-paramour'd the Turk: False of heart, light of ear, bloody of mind: Hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in pity. Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women: Keep the foot out; our broth, thy hand out of pockets; thy pen from lending's book; and defy the soul fiend:—Still through the hathorn blows the cold wind: Says sum, man, ha no no nymph, dolphin my boy, my boy, sess; let him trot by.

Storm still continues.

LEAR. Why, thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies.—Is man no more than this? Consider him well; Thou owst the very silk no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat no pittance:—Is man more bastards?—Thou art the thing itself: unaccommodated man is no more such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art.—O, O, thou lendings!—Come, unbout, the burning of his Clothes.

Foot. Pr'ythee, mnce, be contented; this is a naughty night to swim in.—Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart: a small spark, all the rest of his body cold.—Look, here comes a dancing gale.

EDG. This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet: he begins at curlew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the barnyard-maws drink the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

Sacred Wisdom—wrote the world;—

He met the night-mare, and her non-fold;

Neither cloth;

And her frock pluckt.

And around thee, witch, in round thee!

Kent. How fares your grace?

Enter Gloster, with a Torch.

LEAR. What's he?

KENT. Who's there? What is't you seek?

GLO. What, have you arm'd your grace with no better company?

EDG. Poor Tom; that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt, and the water-frog in the fury of his heart, when the foul fiend urges, eats cold from the cold bed; he soups the old rat, and the ditch-dog; drinks the green mantle of the standing-pool; who is whipp'd from tything to tything, and stocked, punished, and imprisoned; who had three years to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapon to wear,—

But more, and rats, and such small deer.

Have been Tom's food for seven long year.

Beware my follower.—Peace, Smolkin; peace, thou friend!—

GLO. Why, he hath your grace no better company?

EDG. The prince of darkness is a gentleman;

MODE he's call'd, and Mulo. He

GLO. Our flesh and blood, my lord, is grown so wise,

That it doth hate what it gets.

EDG. Poor Tom's a-cold.

GLO. Go in with me; my duty cannot suffer To obey in all your daughter's hard commands Though their injunction be to bar, to box, to send, To set a bound in your butt, and limit your seat. And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you Yet have I ventured to come seek you out, And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

LEAR. May I accept it?

GLO. What is the cause of thunder?

KENT. Good my lord, take his offer;

Go into the house.

LEAR. I'll talk a word with this same learned Théban.—

What is your study?

EDG. Here to prevent the fiend, and to kill err

LEAR. Let me ask you one word in private.

KENT. Importune him once more to go, my lord; his wits begin to un falsehoods.

GLO. Canst thou blame him? His daughters seek his death.—Ah, that good Kent!

He said it would be thus:—Poor banish'd man! Thou say'st, the king grows mad; I'll tell thee, friend, I am almost mad myself; I had a son, Now out in my mind, out on my blood; he taught my life, But lately, very late; I lov'd him, friend,— No father his son dearer: true to tell thee.

Storm still continues.

The grief hath craz'd my wits; What a night's thus! I do beseech your grace.—

LEAR. Noble philosopher, your company.

EDG. Tom's a-cold.

GLO. In, fellow, there, to the howel: keep thee warm.

KENT. Come, let's in all.

LEAR. This way, my lord.

KENT. With him; I will keep still with my philosopher.

KENT. Good my lord, soothe him; let him take the fellow.

GLO. Take him you on.

KENT. Scurry, come out; go along with us.

LEAR. Good Arabian.

*Disseases of the eye.

1 A saint said to protect his devotees called the night-mare.

2 Wild dogs, so called in various parts of England.

3 i.e. The water-bolt.

4 A tything is a division of a county.

5 Name of a spirit.

6 The chief devil.
KING LEAR.

ACT III.

SCENE V.—A Room in Gloster's Castle.

Enter CORNWALL and EDMUND.

Cor. I will have my revenge, ere I depart his house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.

Cor. I am percipient, it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a work by a reprovable baseness in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not the detector!

Cor. Go with me to the duchess.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

Cor. I shall, if I hath made thee earl of Gloster. Seek out why that father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Edm. [Aside.] If I find him comforting the king, it will stiff his suspicion more fully, I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Cor. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in my love.

[Exit.

SCENE VI.—A Chamber in a Farm-House, adjoining the Castle.

Enter GLOSTER, LEAR, KENT, FOOL, and EDGAR.

Glo. Here is better than the open air; take it the will, and put out the present comfort with what addition I can; I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits has given way to his impatient.— The gods reward your kindness.

[Exit Gloster.

Edg. Frateretto calls me; and tells me, Nero is an angel in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent, and beware the foul fiend.

Fool. Pr'ythee, uncle, tell me, whether a madman be a gentleman, or a yeoman?

 Lear. A king, a king!

Fool. Not; he's a yeoman that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman that sees his son a gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spits Come hussing in upon them—

Edg. The foul fiend bites my back.

Fool. He's mad, that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's health, a boy's love, or a whore's cash.

Lear. It shall be done, I will arraign them straight—

Come, sit thou here, most learned justice.

Edgar. To the Fool:—Now, you she-gooses—

Edg. Look, where he stands and glares!—

Wanted thy eyes at trial, madman! Come over the bearn? Bessy, to me—

Fool. Her hot butt a leak, And she must not speak When the dore and come over ther.

Edg. The foul fiend hunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Halpittance crees in Tom's belly for two white herrings. Crook not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amaz'd?

Will you be hewn down and rest upon the cushions? Lear. I'll see their trial first—bring in the evidence.

Thou rabid man of justice, take thy place:

[To Edgar.

And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity, To the Fool.

Child is an old name for knight.

* Addressed to the Fool, who were anciently called In Scenius.

Brook, or skidlet.

Bench by his side:—You are of the commission, Sit you down, sir, and hear me! [To Kent.

Edg. Let us deal justly.

Sleazest, or walkest thou, Jolly shepherds? Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy minikin mouth, Thy sheep will take no harm.

Per' the Hapless Phare.

Lear. Araign her first; 'is Goneril, I here take my oath before this honorable assembly, she kicked the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress; is your name Goneril?

Lear. She cannot deny it.

Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a jointed

Lear. And here's another, whose wap'd looks proclaim

What store her heart is made of,—Stop her there! Arms, arms, sword, fire!—Corruption, in the place! False justice, why hast thou let her escape?

Edg. Blesse thy live wits!

Kent. O pity!—Sir, where is the patience now, That you so oft have heast to retain?

Edg. My tears begin to take his part so much, They'll mar my counterfecting.

Lear. Have little dog of all—

Tray, Blanch, and sweet-heart, see, they bark at me.

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them—

Avant, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white, Truth that pricks in' if it bite, Mostif, greyhound, mongrel grim, Hownd, or spainel, brace, or tym; Or boath fur, or brindle-fast; This will make them weep amain; For, with throwing thus my head, Dogs leap the hatches, and all are fient.

Do de, do de, Sessa, Come, march to wanks and fairs, and market towns:—Poor Tom, thy horn is dry.

Lear. Then let them anatopize Regan, see what breed's about her heart: Is there any cause in matter that makes these hard hearts?—You, sir, I entertain you for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments; you will say, they are Persian attire; but let them be changed.

Kent. Now, good my lord, he's here, and rest awhile.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains: So, so, so: We'll go to supper! the morning was dry.

To Edgar.

Kent. New, good my lord, he's here, and rest awhile.

Lear. Where is the litter ready? lay him in,

And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet

Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master,

If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life,

With thine, and all that offer to defend him,

Stand in armed boses. Take up, take up;

And follow me, that will with some provision

Give thee quick conduct.

Kent. Oppress'd nature sleepes:

This rest might ye'd have bold'd thy broken sense,

Which, if convenience will not allow,

Stand in hard cure.—Help, come, to help thy master; Thou must not stay behind.

[To the Fool.

Glo. Come, come, away.

[Execunt KENT, GLOSTER, and the Fool, bearing off the King.

Edg. When give our better see hearing our woes, We scarcely thank our miseries less.

Who alone suffers, suffer most it the mind;

Leaving free thins, and happy shows, behind;

But the vast and many much sufferance doth over pass

When grief hath mates, and bearing fellow sorrow.

How light and portable my pain seems now,

* A bloodhound.
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;
He chills, as I father'd!—Tom, away:
Mark the high noises; and thryself bewray.
When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles the
In thy just proof, repeals, and reconciles thee.
What will hap more to-morrow, safe 'scape the king!
Lurk, lurk. [Exit.]

SCENE VII.—A Room in Gloster's Castle.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Goneril, Edmund, and Servants.

Corn. Post speedily to my lord, your husband; show him this letter:—the army of France is landed. Seek out the villain Gloster.

[Execute some of the Servants.

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gon. Pluck out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure.—Edmund, keep you our sister company; the revenues we are bound to take upon your traitor father are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most estimable preparation: we are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift, and intelligenced, betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister;—farewell, my lord of Gloster.

[Execute Steward.

How now! Where's the king!
Stew. My lord of Gloster hath convey'd him hence; no news.

Some five or six and thirty of his knights.

Hot questrers! after him, met him at gate;
Who, with some other of the lord's dependants. Are gone with him towards Dover, where they beat To have well-armed friends.

Corn. Get horses for your mistress.

Gon. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

[Exit Goneril and Edmund.

Corn. Edmund, farewell.—Go, seek the traitor Gloster.

Finion him like a thief, bring him before us:

[Execute other Servants.

Though well we may not pass upon his life Without the form of justice; yet our power Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men May better be in the least control. Who's there? The traitor.

Re-enter Servants, with Gloster.

Reg. Ingrateful fox! 'Tis he.

Glo.Bind fast his corky arms.

Glo. What mean your graces!—Good my friends, counsel friends.

You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.

Hard—no!—a filthy traitor! Glo. Unmerciably lord as you are, I am none.

Corn. To this chair bind him:—Villain, thou shall find— [Regan plucks his Beard.

Glo. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done,
To pluck me by the beard. Reg. So white, and such a traitor!

Corn. Naughty lady, These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin, Will quicken! and accuse thee: I am your host;
With robber's hands, my hospitable favors? You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Cope, sir, what letters had you late from France!

Reg. Be simple-answer'd, for we know the truth.
Corn. And that confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom?

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the lunatic king!

Speak. Glo. I have a letter guessingly set down,
Which came from one that's of a neutral heart, And not from one oppos'd. Corn.

Cuming. And false. Reg.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the king?

Glo. To Dover.

Reg. To Dover? Wast thou not charg'd at thy peril— Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer that.

Glo. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Glo. Because I would not see thy cruel nails Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister In his appointed flesh stick burning brand The sea, with such a storm as his bare head In hell-black night endur'd, would have buoy'd up, And quench'd the stelli'd fires; yet, poor old heart, He holp the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate how'd that stern time

Thou shouldst have said, Good porter, turn the key; All curses else subscribed:—But I shall see. The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See it shall thou never—Fovels, hold the chain. Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot.

[Gloster is held down in his Chair, while Cornwall plucks out one of his Eyes, and strikes his Foot on it.

Glo. He, that wilt thank to live till he be old,
Give me some help:—O cruel! O ye gods!
Reg. One side will mock another; the other too, Corn. If you see vengeance,

Serr. Hold your hand, my lord: I have serv'd you ever since I was a child;
But better service have I never done you, Than now I do, Reg. How now, you dog?

Serr. If you did wear a beard upon your chin, I'd shake it on this quarrel! What do you mean? Corn. My villain! [Drags and rattens at him.

Serr. Nay, then come on, and take the chance of anger.

[Drags. They fight.

Corn. Where's the wound, Regan? Come, let it be seen. Serr. 0, I am slain!—My lords, you have one eye left To see some mischief on him:—0! [Dies. Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it:—Out, vile jelly! Where is thy lustre now? [Tear out Gloster's other Eye, and throws it on the Ground.

Glo. All dark and comfortless.—Where's my son Edmund? Edmund, unkindle all the sparks of nature, To quench this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treach'rous villain! Thou call'st on him that hates thee: it was he That made the o'erture of thy treasons to us; Who is too good to pity thee. Glo. O my follies! Then Edgar was abused— Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him! Reg. Go, thrust him out at gates, and let him smell His way to Dover.—How isn't, my lord? How look you?

Corn. I have received a hurt:—Follow me, lady,

Turn out that eyeless villain: throw this slave Upon the dunghill.—Regan, I bleed apace:— Untimely comes this hurt: Give me your arm. [Exit Cornwall, led by Regan.—Servants Assist Gloster, and lead him out.

1 Serr. I'll never care what wickedness I do, If this man comes to good.

2 Serr. If she live long, And, in the end, meet the old course of death, Women will all turn monsters.

1 Serr. Let's follow the old earl, and get the Bedlam? To lead him whither he would; his rogish madness Allows itself to any thing.

2 Serr. Go thou; I'll fetch some flax, and whites Corn. eggs, To apply to his bleeding face. Now, heaven help him! [Execute severally.

--- Starred.

Yielded, submitted to the necessity of the occasion.

Requisite. —Laid open.

Bedlamite, madman.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Death.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Yet better thus, and known to be contemned, Than still contemned and flattered. To be worst, The lowest and most dejected thing of fortune, Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear: The lamentable change is from the best; The worse returns to laughter. Welcome, then, Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace! The wretch, that thou hast blown unto the worst, Owes nothing to thy blasts.—But who comes here!

Enter Gloster, led by an Old Man.

My father, poorly led!—World, world, O world! But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee, Life would not yield to age.

Old Man. O my good lord, I have been your tenant and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Glo. Away, get thee away; good friend, begone: Thy comforts do me no good at all, Their they may hurt. Old Man. Alack, sir, you cannot see your way.

Glo. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes; I stumbled when I saw: Full oft 'tis seen, Our mean secrecies; and our mere defects, Broke on our companions.—Ah, dear son Edgar, The fool of thy abused father's wrath! Might I but live to see thee in my touch, I had recorded my eyes again.

Old Man. How now! Who's there?

Edg. [Aside] O gods! Who is't can say, I am at the worst.

I am worse than ever I was.

Tis poor mad Tom. Edg. [Aside] And worse I may be yet: The worst is not, So long as we can say, This is the worst.

Old Man. Fellow, where goest? Glo. Is it a beggar-man?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.

Glo. He has some reason, else he could not beg.

Edg. I have the last night's storm I such a fellow saw; Which made me think a man a worm: My son Came then into my mind; and yet my mind Was then scarce friends with him: I have heard more since: As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods; They kill us for their sport.

Edg. How should this be?

Bad is the trade must play the fool to sorrow, Ang'ring itself and others. [Aside.]—Bless thee, master!

Glo. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.

Glo. Then, pray thee, get thee gone: If, for my sake, Thou wilt overtake us, hence a mile or twain, I' the way to Dover, do it for ancient love; And bring some covering for this naked soul, Whom I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack sir, he's mad.

Glo. Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure; Above all, thou, be gone.

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'pale' that I have, Come on what will. [Exit.]

Glo. Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poor Tom, his a-cold: I cannot doubt it further.

Glo. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way and footway; Both Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits: Bless the good man from the foul head! Five fates have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, of Oldbrat, Hobbidobner, prince of dumness; Made, if he stumbles: More, of murder; and Fuller's-tigbbed, of mopping and mussing: who since possesseth chamber-maids and waiting-women. So bless thee, master!

1 In hea.

2 [Aside.]

Glo. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heavens' plagues Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched, Makes thee the happier:—Heavens, deal so still! Let the superfluous, and lust-deited man, That slays your ordinance, that will not see Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly; And so distribution should undo excess, And each man have enough.—Dost thou know Dover?

Edg. Ay, master.

Glo. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head Looks fearfully in the confined deep: Bring me but to the very brink of it, And I'll repair the misery thou dost hear, With something rich about me: from that place I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm; Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Before the Duke of Albany's Palace.

Enter General and Edmund; Steward meeting them.

Gon. Welcome, my lord: I marvel, my mild husband.

Not met us on the way:—Now, where's your man?

Stew. Madam, within; but never man so changed: I told him of the army that was landed; He smil'd at it: I told him you were coming: His answer was, The source; of Gloster's treachery, And of the loyal service of his son, When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot; And told me, I had turn'd the wrong side out:— What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him: What like, offensive.

Gon. Then shall you go no further.

[To Edmund.]

It is the cowish terror of his spirit, That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs, Which thelie to an answer: Our wishes, on the way, May prove effects. Back, Edmund, to my brother: Hasten his masters, and conduct his powers: I must change arms at home, and give the distaff Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant Shall pass between us ere long you are like to hear, If you dare venture in your own behalf, A mistress's command. Wear this: spare speech; [Giving a Facer.]

Decline your head: this kiss, if it throst speak, Would stretch thy spirits up into the air;— Conceive, and fare thee well.

Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.

Gon. My most dear Gloster! [Exit Edmund.]

0, the difference of man, and man! To thee A woman's services are due; my fool Usurps my bed.

Stew. Madam, here comes my lord. [Exit Steward.

Enter Albany.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle? Alb. O General

You are not worth the dust which the rude wind Blows in your face,—I fear your disposition: That nature, which contains its origin, Cannot be border'd in the business: She that herself will sive and disbranch From her material sap, perforce must wither And come to deadly use. Alb. The most is foolish.

0, the virule of the vile seem vile; Fitt's door but themselves. What have you done? Tigers, not daunted what have you perform'd! A father, and a gracious aged man: Whose reverence the head-leg'd bear would lick, Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you madd'd and roar'd, and made me other suffer: you to do it! A man, a prince, by him so benefitted! If that the heavens do not their visible spirits 1 1. Our wishes on the road may be completed. 2 Worth calling for. 3 Tear ed.
Scene IV. KING LEAR.

Send quickly down to tame these vile offences, Th' imperial house. Humanity must perforce prey on itself, Like monsters of the deep.

Gent. Milk-liver'd man! They starv'd a cheek for blood, and put a head for wrongs; Who hath not in thy brows an eye discerning Thine honor from thy suffering; that not know'st Fools do those villains pity, who are punish'd! See they have done their mischief. Where's thy drum?

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land; With plumed helm thy slander becometh threats, With them, a moral fool, 'tis still, and cry'st,

Alack! why does he so?

Alb. See thyself, devil! Proper deformity seems not in the field
So horrid, as in woman.

Gent. O vain fool!

Alb. Thou changed and self-cover'd thing, for Men, she.

Re-monster not thy feature. Were it my fitness To let these hands obey my blood, They are apt enough to disolute and tear Thy flesh and bones—How'er thou art a fiend, A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gent. Marry, thy manhood now!

Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news!

Mess. O, my good lord, the duke of Cornwall's dead!

Slain by his servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloster.

Alb. Gloster's eyes!

Mess. A servant that he bred, thril'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword To his great master; who, threat enrag'd, Flew on him, and amongst them kill'd him dead: But not without that harmful stroke, which since Hath pluck'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,
You justicers, that these our mother crimes So speedily can ven're!—But, O poor Gloster! Lost he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord.—

This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer; 'Tis from your sister.

Gent. [Aside.] One way I like this well; But as a widow, and my Gloster with her, May all the building in my fancy pluck Upon my hateful lie: Another way, The news is not so tart—I'll read, and answer.

[Exit.]

Alb. Where was his son, when they did take his eyes?

Mess. Come with my lady hither.

Alb. He is not here.

Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back again.

Alb. Knows he the wretchedness!

Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he inform'd against him; And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment Might have the freer course.

Alb. Gloster, I live To thank thee for the love thou show'st the king, And to revenge thine eyes.—Come hither, friend, Tell me what more thou knowest. [Exit.]

Scene III.—The French Camp near Dover. Enter Kent and a Gentleman.

Kent. Why the king of France is so suddenly come back, know you the reason?

Gent. Something he left imperfect in the state, Which since his coming forth is thought of; which Imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger, That his personal return was most required, And necessary.

Kent. Who hath he left behind him general?

Gent. The Marshal of France. Monsieur le Feu. Did you not perceive the queen to any demonstration of grief?

Gent. Ay, sir; she took them, read them in my presence;

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down Her delicate check: it seem'd, she was a queen Over her passion; who, most rebel-like, Sought to be king o'er her.

Kent. O, then it mov'd her.

Gent. Not to a race: patience and sorrow strowe Who should express her goodness. You have seen Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and tears Were like a better day:Those happy smiles, That play'd on her fair visage, seem'd to know What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence, Asparris from diamonds dropp'd;—in brief, sorrow Would be a rarity most belov'd, if all Could so become it.

Kent. Made she no verbal question!

Gent. Faith, once, or twice, she hear'd the name of Father. Faintingly forth, as if she press'd her heart; Cried, Sisters! sisters!—Shame of ladies! sisters! Kent! father? sisters? What? the storm? the night?

Let pity not be believ'd;—There she shook The holy water from her heavenly eyes, And clamor modestly then away she started To deal with grief alone.

Kent. It is the stars, The stars above us, govern our conditions Else one sole mate and mate could not beget Such different issues, You spok'd not with her since! Gent. No. Kent. Was this before the king return'd! Gent. No, since. Kent. Well, sir; the poor distress'd Lear is in the town: Who sometime, in his better tune, remembers What we are come about, and by no means Will yield to see his daughter.

Gent. Why, good sir! Kent. A sovereign shame so elongus him: his own unkindness That strip'd her from his beneficence, turn'd her To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights To his dog-hearted daughters,—these things stung His mind so ven'mously, that burning shame Detains him from Cordelia.

Gent. Alack, poor gentleman! Kent. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers you have not heard yet.

Gent. 'Tis so; they are about.

Kent. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master Lear, And leave you to attend him; some dear cause Will in equity wrap me up awhile; When I am known aright, you shall not grieve Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go Along with me. [Exeunt.]

Scene IV.—The same. A Tent. Enter CORDELLA, Physician, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now As mad as the vox'd sea: singing aloud; Crown'd with rank fustian, and furrowed streets, With harlots' hems, nettles, cumber-some flowers, Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow In our sustaining corn.—A century send forth; Search every acre in the high-born field, And bring him to our eye. [Exit an Officer.]

What can man's wisdom do, In the restoring his bequeasen sense! He, that helps him, take all my outward worth. Why, there is means, madam: Our foster-nurse of nature is repose, The which he lacks; that to provoke him, Are many single operable, whose power Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor. All bless'd secrets, All you un publish'd virtues of the earth, Spring in their tears, is thy aidant, and mediate, In the good man's distress!—Seek, seek for him; Lost his ungenerate rage dissolve the Life That means the want to lead us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Madam, news; The British powers are marching hitherward.

Cor. 'Tis known before; our preparation stands In expectation of them—O dear father, is thy last, your let us that I go about; Therefore great France My mourning, and important tears, hath pitied. No blow'n ambition doth our arms incite, • Discourse, conversation. • Dispositions. • Fumitory. • Charlocks. • Importunate. • Inflated, swelling. •
KING LEAR.

Act IV.

Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight: The murmuring
Surge,
That on the unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high:—I'll look no more;
Lest my brain turn, and the delicious sight
Topple downheadlong.

Glo. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Give me your hand: You are now within a foot
Of the extreme verge: for all beneath the moon
Would I not leap upright.

Glo. Let go my hand.

Here, friend, is another purse; in it a jewel
Well worth a poor man's taking: Fairies, and gods,
Prosper it with thee! Go thou further off; bid me here well, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare you well, good sir. [Seems to go.

Glo. With all my heart.

Edg. Why do I trifle thus with his despair,
Is done to cure it.

Glo. O you mighty gods!

This world I do renounce; and, in your sights,
Shake patiently my great affliction off!
If I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with my great opposeless wills,
My soul's lost loathing; part of nature, should Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O, bless him!—
Now fellow, fare thee well.

[He leaps, and falls along.

Edg. Gone, sir! farewell. —
And yet I know not how concert may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft: Had he been where he thought,
By this, had he thought been past,—Alive, or dead!
Ho, you sir! friend!—Hear you! sir!—speak.
Thus might he pass indeed?—Yet he revives:
What are you, sir?—

Glo. Away, and let me die.

Edg. Hadst thou been aught but gossamer,
Frathers, air,
So many fathom down precipitating,
Then hast'st shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost breathe;

Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st; art sound.
Ten masts of each make not the altitude,
Which thou hast perpendicularity fell;
Thy life's a miracle: Speak yet again.

Glo. But have I fallen, or no?

Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky bourn;
Look up a-height;—the shill-gorged lark so far
Cannot have seen or heart: do but look up.

Glo. Alack, I have no eyes—
Is wretchedness deprav'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arm:

Up;—So!—How isn't? Feel you your legs? You stand.

Glo. Too well, too well.

Edg. This is above all strangethness.
Upon the crown 'o' the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?

Glo. A poor unfortunate beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, methought, his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses,
Horns which he led and waved like the curdled sea;
It was some fiend: Therefore, thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them heard.

Of men's impossibilities, have preserve thee.

Glo. I do remember now: henceforth I'll bear
Affliction, till it do cry out itself.

Edg. Enough, enough, and ever, That thing you speak of,
I took it for a man: often would they say,
The fiend, the fiend: he led me to that place.

Edg. Bear free and patient thoughts,—But who comes here?

Enter LEAN, fantastically dressed up with Flowers.

The safer sense will never accommodate
His master thus.

1 Her cock-boat.
2 Thus might he die in reality.
3 Shill-throated.
4 Twisted, convoluted.
5 The purest.
Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coming; I am the king himself.

Edg. O thou side-piercing sight! Whate'er there's in that sight respect.—There's your press-money. That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper; draw me a clothier's yard,—Look, look, a mouse! Peace, peace,—this piece of toasted clotted cream was mine; but I'll myself put it on a giant.—Bring up the brown bills.—O, well flown. — bird!—t the clout, t the clout: hewh!—

Give the words?

Edg. Sweet marjoram.

Lear. Pass. I know that voice.

Lear. Ha! Gentleii,—with a white beard!—The fletch of my hair and told me, I had white hairs in my beard, ere the black ones were there. To say ay, and no, to every thing I said!—Ay and no too was no good divinity. When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found them, there they smell them out. Go to, they are not men o' their words: they told me I was every thing; 'tis a lie: I am not ague-posed.

Glo. The trick of that voice I do well remember: Is't not the king?

Lear. Ay, every inch a king: When I do scarce, see, how the subject quakes. I pardon that man's life; what was thy cause?—

Adultery.— Thou shalt not die: Die for adultery! No: The web goes to't, and the small gilded fly Does lecher in my sight.

Let copulation thrive, for Gloster's bastard son Was kinder to his father, than my daughters God's own disobedient. To't, luxury, bell-mell, for I lack soldiers.— Behold you simpering dame, Whose face between her forks presages snow; That minecruel virtue, and does shake the head To hear of pleasure's name; The fitchew, nor the soiled horse, goes to'—

Go, more righteous spirit. Down from the waist they are centaurs, Though women all above; But to the griddle do the gods inherit. Beneath is all the head's; there's hell, there's darkness.

There is the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding, stench, consumption:—Fie, fie, fie! pah! pah! Give me an ounce of eyew, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination: there's money for thee.

Glo. O, let me kiss that hand!

Lear. Let me wipe it first; it smells of mortality.

Glo. You couldn't piece of nature! This great world Shall so wear out to naught—Dost thou know me! Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough. Dost thou squint at me? No, doth thy blind, blinder Cupid; I'll not so love. and thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.

Glo. We were all the letters suns, I could not see one. Edg. I would not take this from report—is it, And my heart breaks at it.

Lear. Read.

Glo. What, with the case of eyes?

Lear. O, bo, are you there with me! No eyes in you to money in no your purse? Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light: Yet you see how this world goes.

Glo. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What art mad? A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Look with thine ears; see how your justice rails upon your simple thief. Hark, in thine ear: change places; and, hungrily, which is the justice, which is the thief?—Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar.

Glo. Ay, sir.

Lear. And the creation run from the cur! There thou might'st behold the great image of authority: a dog's overy'd in office.

Thou rascal bende, hold thy bloody hand;
Why dost thou lash that where! Strip thy own back; Thou holy lust'st to use her in that kind For which thou whipp'st her. The usurer hangs the cozen.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear; Robes, and for'd gowns, hide all. Plate sin with gold, And the hard glance of justice hurtles breakless. Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it. None does offend, none, I say, none; I'll dissemble: Take that of me, my friend, who have the power. Get thee glass eyes; And, like a scurvy politician, see To see the things thou dost not.—Now, now, now, now, Pull off my boots:—harder, harder; so.

Edg. O, matter and impiertinence wax'd! Reason in madness!

Lear. I'll then will steep my fortunes, take my eyes.

I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloster. Thou must be patient; we came crying bitter. Thou keepest the first time that we smell the air. We waw, and cry.—I will preach to thee; mark me.

Glo. Alack, alack the day!

Lear. When we are both, we cry, that we are come

To this great stage of fools: —This a good block? It was a delicate stratagem: to show A troop of horse with will, I'll put it in proof; And when I have stolen upon these sons-in-law, Thou kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a Gentleman, with Attendants.

Gent. O, here he is; lay hand upon him.—Sir, Your most dear daughter—

Lear. No rescue! What, a prisoner! I am even The manage of a foot; if I should come well; You shall have ransoms. Let me have a surgeon, I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have any thing.

Lear. No seconds! All myself! Why, this would make a man a man of salt, To use his eyes for garden water-pots, Ay, and for laying autumn's doct.

Gent. Good sir.—

Lear. I will die bravely, like a brudgeyon: What! I will be jovial; come, come; I am a king, My masters, know you that! Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey you. Lear. Then there's life in it. Nay, an you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, so.

[Exit, running; Attendants follow.]

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch; Past speaking of in a king!—Thou hast one daughter, Who retains not nature from the general curse Which twain have brought her to.

Edg. Hail, gentle sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you: What's your will? Edg. Do you hear, sair, of a lately toward Gent. Most sure, and vulgar; every one hears that,

Which can distinguish round.

Edg. But by your favor, How near's the other army?

Gent. Near, and on speedy foot; the main desery Stands on the hourly thought.

Edg. I thank you, sir; that's all.

Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is here. Her army is mov'd on.

Edg. I thank you, sir. [Exit Gent.]

Glo. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from me; Let not my worser spirit tempt me again To die before you please.

Edg. Well pray you, father. Glo. Now, good sir, what are you! Edg. A most poor man, made tame by fortune's loves; Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrors, Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand, I'll lead you to some biding.

Glo. Heartly thanks: The bounty and the benizons of heaven To boot, and boot!
Enter Steward.

Stew. A proclaim'd prize! Most happy! That eyeless head of thine was first framed flesh To raise the fortunes—Thou old unkind traitor, Briefly thou remember:—The sword is out That must destroy thee.

Cor. New let thy friendly hand Put strength enough to it. [Exit Steward.

Stew. Wherefore, bold peasant, Dar'st thou support a publish'd traitor? Hence! Let him, the vast infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Let him go his arm. Edg. Ch'ill not let go, sir, without further cusion. Stew. Let go, slay, or thou diest. Edg. Good greatness, go: I go, and let poor folk pass. And ch'ill has been swagger'd out of my life, 'twould not ha' been so long as 'tis by a vortight. Nay, come not near the old man; keep out, shall not be thy worthy costard, or my bat be harder; Ch'ill be plain with you.

Stew. Out, duns hil! Edg. Ch'ill pick your teeth, sir; Come; no matter var thy bolts.

[They fight; and Edgar knocks him down. Stew. Slay, thou hast lain down:—Villain, take a purgative.

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body; And give the letters, which thou find'st about me, To Edmund earl of Gloster: seek him out Upon the British party:—O, unthinkingly! [Dies. Edg. I know thee well: a serviceable villain; As dutiful to the vices of your mistress, As goodness would desire. What, is he dead? Edg. Sit you down, father: reet you.—— Let's see his pockets: these letters, that he speaks of, May be my friends. He's dead: I am only sorry He had no other death's man.——Let us see: Leave, genteel wax; and, manners, blame us not: To know your enemies' minds, we'd rip up their hearts; Their papers, is more lawful. [Reads.] Let our reciprocal rates be remembered. You have many opportunities to eat him up: if you'll well eat not, time and place will be fredifully effect. There is nothing there, if he retrench: That's more the prisoner, and his bed may stand; from the burnt warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labor. Your ease, (so I would say,) and your affectionate service,

O undistinguish'd space of woman's will! A plot upon her virtuous husband's life; And the exchange, my brother!—Here, in the sands, Th' shall take care; the post unsanctified Of murderous leechers; and, in the mature time, With this ungracious paper strike the sight Of the death-practis'd duke: For him 'tis well, That of the time is such. There is nothing there, if he retrench: That's more the prisoner, and his bed may stand; from the burnt warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labor. Your ease, (so I would say,) and your affectionate service,

General.

Reciter Edgar.

Edg. Give me your hand; Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum. Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—A Tent in the French Camp.

Lear on a Bed, astir; Physician, Gentleman, and others attending. Enter Cordelia and Kent. Cor. O thou good Kent, how shall I live, and what shall I do?

To match thy goodness? My life will be too short, And every measure fail me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd, madam, is o'erpaid. All my reports go with the modrest truth; Nor more, nor cliptly, but so.

Cor. Be better suited: I'll cover thee (the dead steward) in the sands.

These weeds are memories of those worder hours; I pr'ythee, put them off.

Kent. Pardon me, dear madam; Yet to be known, shorten my immortal: My boon I make it, that you know me not, Till time and I think meet.

Cor. This is not, so, my good lord.——How does Your Majesty to the king? [To the Physician.

Phys. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O you kind gods, Care this great breach, his abused nature! Th't unturned and jarring senses, O, wind up, Of this child-changed father! Phys. So please your majesty, That we may make the season! He hath slept long. Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed I' the sway of your own will. Is he array'd? Kent. Ay, madam: in the heaviness of his sleep, We put fresh garments on him.

Phys. Be by, good madam, when we do awake him; I doubt not of his temperance. Cor. Very well.

Phys. Please you, draw near.—Louden the music there.

Cor. O my dear father! Restoration, hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters Have in thy reverence made! Kent. Kind and dear princess! Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flukes Had challenge'd pity of them. Was this a face To be engage against the new warning? To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder? In the most terrible and mumble stroke Of quick, cross lightning? to watch [poor perd!] With this the hand? Mine enemy's dog, Though he had bit me, should have stood that night Against my fire; And wast thou soon, father, To bore him with swine, and rages forborn, Short, heavy mutton cawl! Ah, think, sheaves! Tis wonder, that thy life and ways at once Had not concluded all.—He wakes; speak to him. Phys. Health, man, do you; 'tis fittest.

Cor. How does my royal lord! How fares your majesty! Lear. You do me wrong, to take me out o' the grave:— Thon art a soul in bliss; but I am bound Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears Do cool like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me? Lear. You are a spirit, I know: When did you die?

Cor. Still, still, far wide! Phys. He scarce awake; let him alone awhile. Lear. Where have I been!—Where am I!—Fair day-light!— I am mightily abused,—I should even die with pity, To see a father thus, and know not what to say,— I will not swear, these are my hands;—let's see; I feel this pin prick. 'Would I were assured Of my condition. Cor. O, look upon me, sir, And hold your hands in benediction o'er me.— No, sir, you must not kneel. Lear. Pray, do not mock me: I am a very foolish fond old man, Four-score, and upwards; and, to deal plainly, I fear, I am not in my perfect mind. Methinks 'should she look on you, and how this man; Yet I am doubtful: for I am mainly ignorant What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not Where I did lodge last night: Do not laugh at me. For, as I am a man, I think this lady To be my child Cordelia.

Lear. Be your tears wet! Yes, faith. I pray, weep not: If you have poison for me, I will drink it. You do not love me; for your sisters Have, as I do remember: I done me wrong. You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. No cause, no cause. Lear. Am I in France?

[The alkaus is to the forlorn hope in an army, called in French, enfans perdus. This covering of hair
ACT V. SCENE III. KING LEAR. 697

Kent. In your own kingdom, sir, Lear. Do not abuse me! Phys. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage,
You see, is cured in him; and yet it is danger
To make him rue the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in; trouble him no more,
Till further settling.
Cor. Will not please your highness walk! Lear.
[Exeunt Lear, Cordelia, Physician, and Attendants.
Kent. Who is conductor of his people? Kent.
As 'tis said
The bastard son of Gloucester.
Kent. They say, Edgar, his banish'd son, is with the earl of Kent In Germany.
Kent. Report is changeable.
'Tis time to look about; the powers o' the kingdom Approach apace.
Kent. The arbitration is like to be a bloody.
Fare you well, sir, [Exit. Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly writ.
Or well, or ill, as this day's battle's fought. [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Camp of the British Forces, near Dover.

Enter, with Drums and Colors, Edmund, Regan, Officers, Soldiers, and others. Edm. Know of the duke, if his last purpose hold, Or, whether since he is advis'd by augury To move the course of Fortune, or of war, And self-apposing: — Bring his constant pleasure.5
[To an Officer, who goes out. Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried. Edm. "Tis to be doubted, madam.
Reg. Now, sweet lord, you know the goodness I intend upon you: Tell me, — but truly, — but then speak the truth, Do you not love my sister?
Edm. In honor'd love.
Reg. But have you never found my brother's way To the forlorned place?
Edm. That thought abuses you.
Reg. I am doubtful that you have been conjunct And bosom'd with her, as far as we call her. Edm. No, by mine honor, madam.
Reg. I never shall endure her; Dear my lord, Be not familiar with her.
Edm. Fear me not: —
She, and the duke her husband, —
Enter Albany, Goneril, and Soldiers.
Con. I had rather lose the battle, than that sister Should loosen him and me. [Aside. Alb. Our very loving sister, well be met,— Sir, this I hear,—The king is come to his daughter, With others, whom the rigor of our state Forced to cry out. Where I could not be honest, I never yet was valiant: for this business, It toucheth us as France invades our land. Not hinder the king: with others, whom, I fear, Most just and heavy causes make oppose.6
Edm. Sir, you speak nobly.
Reg. Why is this reason'd? —
Con. Combine together 'gainst the enemy: For these domestic and particular broils Are not to question here.
Alb. Let us then determine With the ancient of war on our proceedings. Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent. Reg. Sister, you'll go with us! Con. No, Reg. 'Tis most convenient; pray you, go with us.
Con. O, ho, I know the riddle: [Aside.] I will go. As they are going out, enter Edgar, disguised. Edg. If e'er your grace had speech with man so poor, Hear me one word. Alb. I'll overtake you.—Speak. [Exeunt Edmund, Regan, General Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants. Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter. If you have victory, let the trumpet sound For him that brought it: wretched though I seem, 4 To record it to his apprehension.
* His settled resolution. 5 Forbidden.
* Imposition on you. 6 E. G. Emboldens him.

KING LEAR.

Act V.

Leat. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense. Have I not thrown thee?
He that parts us, shall bring a brand from heaven,
And fire to his, like flocks. Wipe their eyes;
The goutiers shall devour them, flesh and all;
Ere they shall make us weep: we'll see them
spear first.

Edm. About it: and write happy, when thou hast done.
Mark,—I say, instantly; and carry it so,
As live set it down.

Edm. I'll not draw a cart, nor eat dried oaths;
If it be man's work, I will do it. [Exit Officer.

Flourish. Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, OFFICERS,
And Attendants.

Alb. Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant strife,
And fortune led you well: You have the captives,
Who were the opposites of this day's strife;
We do require of you; so to use them,
As shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit
To send the old and miserable king
To some place of rest, to be answered to;
Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,
And turn our impressed fancies in our eyes
Which do command them. With him I sent the queen;
My reason all the same; and they are ready
To-morrow, or at further space, to appear
Where you shall hold your session. At this time,
We sweat, and bleed: the friend hath lost his friend,
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curs'd
By those that feel their sharpness—

The question of Cordelia, and her father,
Requires a fitter place.

Alb. By your patience, I hold you but a subject of this war,
Not as a brother.

Edm. That's as we list to grace him,
Met with our pleasure might have been demanded,
Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers;
Hire the commission of my place and person;
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And cut off your bonds.

Gon. Not so hot;
In his own grace he doth exalt himself,
More than in your advancement.

Reg. In my rights,
By me invested, he compeers the best.
Gon. That were the most, if he should husband you.

Gon. I'll Hollos, Hollos! That eye, that told you so, look'd but a squint.

Reg. Lady, I am not well; else I should answer
From a full-flowing stomach.—General,
Take thou thy soldiers, prisoners, patronage;
Dispose of them, of me; the walls are thine:
Witness the world, that I create thee here
My lord and master.

Edm. Mean you to enjoy him?
Alb. The let-alone lies not in your good will.
Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Reg. Let the drum strike, and prove my title thine.

Alb. Stay yet; hear reason—Edmund, I arrest
On capital treason; and, in thy arrest,
This gilded serpent: [Pointing to GON.]—for your claim, fair sir.

Edm. Sir, to-day, in a wild'd prison, packets and sects of great ones,
This o'er, and flaw by the moon.

Take them away.

Gon. An interlude!

Alb. Thou art arm'd, Gloster:—Let the trumpet sound:
If none appear to prove upon thy person,
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge: [Throwing down a Globe.]

Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less
Than I have here proclaim'd thee.

Reg. Sick, O, sick!
Gon. If not, I'll me'er trust poison.

Edm. There's my exchange: [Throwing down a Globe.] what in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies:
Call by thy trumpet; he that dares approach,
On him, on you, (who not?) I will maintain
My truth and honor firmly.

Alb. A herald, ho!

Edm. A herald, ho, a herald!

Alb. Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers,
All levied in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge.

Reg. This sickness grows upon me.

Enter a Herald.

Alb. She is not well; convey her to my tent.

Come hither, herald,—Let the trumpet sound,—
And read out this.

Giff. Sound trumpet. [A Trumpet sounds.

Herald reads.

If any man of quality, or degree, within the lists of the army, will maintain upon Edmund, supposed Earl of Gloucester, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear at the third sound of the trumpet: He is held in his defence.

Edm. Sound.

[Trumpet.

Herm. Again.

[2 Trumpet.

Herm. Again.

[3 Trumpet.

[Trumpet answers within.

Enter Edgar, armed, preceded by a Trumpet.

Alb. Ask him his purpose, why he appears
Upon this call of the trumpet.

Herm. What are you?
Alb. Your name, your quality; and why you answer
This present summons?

Edg. Know, my name is lost
By treason's tooth bare-grawn, and canker-bit:
Yet am I noble, as the adversary
I came to cope with.

Alb. Which is that adversary?
Edg. What's he, that speaks for Edmund earl of Gloucester!

Edm. Himself:—What say'st thou to him?

Edg. Draw thy sword! That, if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice: here is mine.
Behold it is the privilege of mine honors,
My oath, and my profession: I protest,—
Maugref thy strength, youth, place, and eminence,

* Alluding to the proverbs: "Love being jealous makes good eye look a-squint."

* i.e. A Valor.

Notwithstanding.
Scene III.
KING LEAR.

Despite thy victor sword, and fire-new fortune,
Thy valor, and thy heart,—thou art a traitor:
Father thy gods, thy buried; and thy father:
Conspiring 'gainst this high illustrious prince;
And, from the extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust beneath thy feet,
A more than head-secret traitor.
This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent
To prove upon thy heart, whereof I speak,
Thou liest.

Edg.
In wisdom, I should ask thy name;
But, since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
And that my tongue some say's of breathing breathes,
What safe and nicely I might well delay
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn:
Back dash these tears to the head;
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart;
Which (for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,)
This sword of mine shall give them instant way,
Where they shall rest forever,—Trumpets, speak.
[Alarums. They fight. EDGUM falls.

Ab.
O save him, save him!

Gent.
This is more practice.

Clar.
By the law of arms, thou wast not bound to answer
An unknown opposite; thou art not vanquish'd,
But cozen'd and beguil'd.

Edm.
Shut your mouth, dame,
Or with this paper shall I stop it:—Hold, sir;
Thou wiser than any name, read thine own evil:—
No tearing, lady: I perceive you know it.

[Reads the Letter to Edmond.

Gent.
Say, if I do: the laws are none, nor thine:
Who shall arrange thee for?

Ab.
Most monstrous!

Know'st thou this paper?

Gent.
Ask me not what I know.

[Exeunt Gentleman.

Edm.
Go after her: she's desperate; govern her.

Edm.
What have you charged me with, that I have done?
And more, much more: the time will bring it out;
'Tis past, and so are I: But what art thou,
That hast this fortune on me? If thou art noble,
I do forgive thee.

Edg.
Let's exchange charity.
I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmond;
If more, the more howest wrong't me.
My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.
The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to scarce us.
The dark and vicious place where thee get,
Cost him his eyes.

Edm.
Thou hast spoken right, 'tis true;
The villain has come full circle; I am here.
Ab.
Methought, thy very gait did prophesy
A royal nobleness,—I must embrace thee;
Let sorrow split my heart, if ever
Did hate thee, or thy father!

Edm.
I know it well.

Ab.
Where have you hid yourself?
How have you known the miseries of your father?

Edg.
By nursing them, my lord.—List a brief tale:—

And, when 'tis told, O, that my heart would burst!—
The bloody proclamation to escape,
That follow'd me so near. (O, our lives' sweetness!
That with the pain of death we'd hourly die,
Rush never an hour since I taught you to shift
Into a mad-man's rags; to assume a semblance
That very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
Their precious stones new lost: hence his guide,
Led him, bezir'd for him, sav'd him from despair;
Never (O fault!) reveal'd myself unto him,
Until some half hour past, when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last
Told him my pilgrimage: but his law'd heart,
(Alack, too weak the conflict to support!)
Twixt two extremities of passion, joy and grief,
 Burst surpassingly.

Edm.
This says of yours hath mov'd me,
And shall, perchance, do good: but speak you on;
You look as if you had something more to say.

Edg.
If there be more, more woeful, hold it in,
For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.

Edg.
This would have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow; but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.
Whilst I was big in clamor, came there a man,
Who having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn'd my abhorred secret: but then, finding
Who 'twas that so endured, with his strong arms
He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out
As he'd burst heaven; threw him on my father;
Told the most plausible tale of Lear and him,
That ever ear receiv'd: which in recounting,
His grief grew pious, and the strings of life
Began to crack: Twice then the trumpet sounded,
And there I left him transe'd.
But who was this?

Edg.
Kent, sir, the banish'd Kent; who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy, and did him service
Improper for a slave.

Enter a Gentleman hastily, with a bloody Knife.

Gent.
Help! help! O help!

Edg.
What kind of help?

Edg.
What means that bloody knife?

Gent.
'Tis hot, it smokes;

It came even from the heart of

Ab.
Who, man? speak.

Gent.  Your lady, sir, your lady: and her sister
By her is poison'd; she confesses it.

Edm.
I was contracted to them both; all three
Now marry in an instant.

Produc'their bodies, he Ye alive or dead!—
This judgment of the heavens, that makes us
Tremble. Touches us not with pity.

[Exit Gentleman.

Enter Kent.

Edg.
Here comes Kent, sir,—

Ab.  O! it is he.

The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urges.

Kent.
I am come
To bid my master and master Aye® good-night;
Is he not here?

Edm.
Great thing of us forgot!—

Speak, Edmund, where's the king! and where's Cordelia!—

Seest thou this man, Kent?

[The Body of Goneril and Regan are brought in.

Kent.
Alack, why thus!

Edm.
Yet Edmund was belov'd:

The one the other poison'd for my sake,
And after slew herself.

Edm.
Even so—Cover their faces,

Edm.
I pant for life:—some good I mean to do,
Despite of none own nature. Quickly send,—
Be brief in it,—to the castle; for my writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:—
Nay, send in time.

Edm.
Run, run, O, run!

Edg.
To whom, my lord!—Who has the office?

Send
Thy token of reprieve.

Edm.
Well thought on; take my sword,
Give it the captain.

Ab.
Haste thee, for thy life.

[Exit Edgar.

Edm.
He hath commission from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair,
That she for'd herself.

Edm.
Thou dost defend her! Bear him hence awhile.

[EDMUND IS Borne off.

Enter Lear, with Cordelia dead in his Arms;
Edgar, Officer, and others.

Lear.
How! how! how! how!—O, ye are men of stones:
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so
That heaven's vault should crack:—O, she is gone
For ever!—

I know when one is dead, and when one lives;
She's dead as earth:—Lend me a looking-glass;

[For ever.

Dmy destroyed herself.
Off. Edmund is dead, my lord.

KENT. That's but a trifle here.

EDG. You lords and noble friends, know our intent;

What comfort to this great decay may come,

Shall be applied: For us, we will resign,

During the life of this old majesty,

To him our absolute power:—You to your rights;

KENT. With boot, and such addition as your honors

Have more than merited.—All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cup of their deserving.—O, see, see!

LEAR. Cordelia, that my poor fool is hang'd! No, no, no life:

Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,

And thou no breath at all? O, thou wilt come no more,

Never, never, never, never, never!—

Pray you, undo this button: Thank you, sir,—

Do you see this? Look on her,—look,—her lips,—

Look there, look there!—

[He dies.

LEAR. He faints!—My lord, my lord.—

KENT. Break, heart; I pr'ythee, break!

[To EDGAR and KENT.

LEAR. Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! he hates him,

That would upon the rack of this tough world

Stretch him out longer.

KENT. That wonder is, he hath endured so long;

He but usurp'd his life.

ALB. Bear them hence.—Our present business

Is general woe. Friends of my soul, you twain

Rule in this realm, and the good state sustain.

KENT. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go;

My master calls, and I must not say, no.

ALB. The weight of this sad time we must obey;

Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say,

The oldest hath borne most: we, that are young,

Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

[Exit, with a dead marge.]

SCENE, during the greater Part of the Play, in Verona; once, in the fifth Act, at Mantua.

PROLOGUE.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-crossed lovers take their life;
Whose misadventur'd pITEOUS overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents' strife.

The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the continuance of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, naught could remove:
Is now the two-hours' traffic of our stage;
The which, if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Public Place.

Enter Sampson and Gregory, armed with Swords and Bucklers.

SAM. Gregory, o't my word, we'll not carry coals;
SAM. No, for then we should be colliers.
SAM. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw.
SAM. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out of the collar.
SAM. I strike quickly, being moved.
SAM. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.
SAM. A dog of the house of Montague moves me.
SAM. To move, is—to stir; and to be valiant, is—to stand to it: therefore, if thou art moved thou run'st away.
SAM. A dog of that house shall move me to stand: I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.
SAM. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.
SAM. True; and therefore, women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall:—therefore
I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maid to the wall.
SAM. The quarrel is between our masters, and us their men.
SAM. 'Tis all one, I will show myself a tyrant:
when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids; I will cut off their heads.
A phrase formerly in use, to signify the bearing injuries.

GRE. The heads of the maids!
SAM. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maiden-heads; take it in what sense thou wilt.
GRE. They must take it in sense, that feel it.
SAM. Me they shall feel, while I am able to stand: and, 'tis known, I am a pretty piece of flesh.
GRE. 'Tis well, thou art not fish; if thou hast thou hast been poor John. 2 Draw thy tool; here comes two of the house of the Montagues.

Enter Abram and Balthazar.

SAM. My naked weapon is out; quarrel, I will back thee.
GRE. How! turn thy back, and run?
SAM. Fear me not.
GRE. No, marry: I fear thee!
SAM. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.
GRE. I will frown as I pass by; and let them take it as they list.
SAM. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear
it.
ABRAM. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
SAM. I do bite my thumb, sir.
ABRAM. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
SAM. Is the law on our side, if I say—ay?
GRE. No.
SAM. No, sir: I do not bite my thumb at you,
sir: but I bite my thumb, sir.
EOMEO

Ah no, [I keylight.

Enter BENVOLIO, at a distance.

That streets, Cast and On not good If CamkoiM

As By came While He to Have thee, La. Abr. Abr. Sam. Sam. Cit. Sam. manage Clubs I clubs.

Enter TYBALT.

That, what art thou drawn among these heart-less hands.

Turn thee, Benvolio, look upon that death.

Ben. I do but keep the peace: put up thy sword, Or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What, drawn, and talk of peace? I hate the word.

As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee;

Have at thee, coward.

They fight.

Enter several Partizans of both Houses, who Join and Fight them for Citizens with Clubs.

Cid. Clubs, bills, and partizans! strike! beat them down!

Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues!

Enter CAPULET in his Gown, and LADY CAPULET.

Cap. What noise is this? — Give me my long sword, ho.

La. Cap. A crutch, a crutch! — Why call you for a sword?

Cap. My sword. I say! — Old Montague is come, and flours his blade in spite of me.

Enter MONTAGUE and LADY MONTAGUE.

Mon. Thou villain, Capulet! — Hold me not, let me go!

La. Mon. Thou shall not stir one foot to seek a foe.

Enter Prince, with Attendants.

Prin. Reliquions subjects, enemies to peace, Proflhers of this neighbor-stained seat,— Will they not hear! — what, ho! you men, you beasts,

That quake with the fire of your pernicious rage
With purple fountains issuing from your veins, On pain of torture, from those bloody hands
Throw your mischievous weapons to the ground,
And give the sentence of your moved prince.

Three civil brawls, bred of an arvy word, By thee, old Capulet and Montague,
Have three disturbed the quiet of our streets; And the venomous wit of your ancient city Cast by their grave becommg ornaments, To yield old partizans; in hands as old, Canker'd with peace, to part your canker'd hate.

If ever you disturb our streets again, Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace.

For this time, all the rest depart away:
You, Capulet, shall go along with me;
And, Montague, come you this afternoon, To know our further pleasure in this ease, To old Free-town, our common judgment-place.

Once more, on pain of death, all men depart. — Exeunt Prince and Attendants; CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, TYBALT, Citizens, and Servants.

Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroad? — Speak, nephew, were you by, when it began? Ben. Here were the servants of your adversary, And yours, else fighting ere I did approach; I drew them apart there: thy good man's image The they Tybalt, with his sword prepared; Which, as he breathed defiance to my ears, He swung about his head, and cut the winds. Whom, with his darts and darts, himself he smote: While we were interchanging thrust and blowes, Came more and more, and fought on part and part, Till the prince came, who parted either part.

Cap. Was the usual exclamation in the ayres, as we now call Watch. —

A kind of pike.

La. Mon. O, where is Romeo? — saw you him to-day?

Right glad I am, he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an hour before the worship'd sun Peer'd forth with the golden window of the west.

A troubled mind drive me to walk abroad;

Where,—underneath the grove of sycamore, That westward roosteth from the city's side,— So early walking did I see your son

Towards him I made; but he was 'ware of me, And stole into the covert of the wood:

1, measuring his affections by my own,—

That roses were best suited when they were most alone.

Pursued my humor, not pursuing his, And gladly shunn'd who gladly fled from me.

Mon. Many a morning hath he there been seen, With Montague decrying the fresh morning's dew, Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs; But all so soon as the all-cheering sun Should in the forthest east begin to swell The shady curtains from Aurora's bed, Away from light steals home his heavy son, And private in his chamber pens himself; Shuts up his window, locks his daylight out, And makes himself an artificial night:

Black and portentous must this humor prove, Unless good counsel may the cause remove. Ben. This noble murther, do you know the cause? Mon. I neither know it, nor can learn of him. Ben. Have you importuned him by any means? Mon. Both by myself and many other friends: But is his own adored counsel, Is to himself. — I will not say, how true— But to himself so secret and so close, So far from sounding and discovery, As is the bad bit with an envious worm, Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air, Or dedicate his beauty to the sun. Could we but learn from whence his sorrow grows, We would as willingly give cure, as know.

Enter ROMEO, at a distance.

Ben. See, where he comes: So please you, step aside;

I'll know his grievance, or be much denied.

Mon. Now, noble nobleman, do you hold so happy a stay, To hear true shrillr. — Come, madam, let's away. — Exeunt MONTAGUE and Lady.

Ben. Good-morrow, cousin.

Rom. What is the day so young? Ben. But new struck nine.

Rom. Ah me! sad hours seem long.

Was that my father that went hence so fast? Ben. It was — What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours! Rom. Not having that, which having, makes a man forget. Ben. In love! Rom. Out! Ben. Of love! Rom. Over-taint of her favor, where I am in love. Ben. Alas, that love, so gentle in his view. Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof! Rom. Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still, Should, without eyes, see pathways to his will! Where shall we dine! — O me! — What fray was here?

Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all. Here's much to do with hate, but more with love: Why then, O brawling love! O loving hate! O any thing, of nothing first create! O heavy lightness! serious vanity! Of all the arts and arts of pleasing forms! Feather of lead, bright-smoke, cold fire, sick health! Still waking sleep, that is not what it is! — This love's i, I feel no love in this. Dost thou not sigh? Ben. No, coz, I rather weep.

Rom. Good heart, at what! Ben. At this, I feel no love in this.

Rom. Why, such is love's transgression.

Grief of mine own lie heavy in my breast; Whom thou wilt propagate, to have it prest With willing mind: this love, that thou hast shown, Doth add more grief to too much of mine own. Love is a smoke made with the fume of sighs; Being purged, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes: Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears.
SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Capulet, Paris, and Servant.

Cap. And Montague is bound as well as I, in penalty alike; and 'tis not hard, I think, for men so old as we to keep the peace.

Par. Of honorable reckoning? are you both?

Cap. By these masks, that kiss fair Lucrece, being black, put us in mind they hide the fair; he, that is stricken blind, cannot forget The precious treasure of his eyesight lost; Show me a mistress that is passing fair, What doth her beauty serve, but as a note Where I may read, who pass'd that passing fair! Farewell, thou eunuch ne'er to thee forget! Ben. I'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.

[Exeunt.]

Scene II. Romeo and Juliet, Act 3, Scene 3

Inherit'st at my house; hear all, all see, And like her most, whose merit most shall be.

Cap. Ere I die, I'll hold as I did hold. What is it else! a madness most discreet, A choking gall, and a preserving sweet. For, when my coz,

[Go out.]
SCENE III.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

Nurse. Where's my daughter? call her to me.

Laura. Would you have my headmaiden at twelve year old,
I bade her come.—What, lamb? what, lady-bird!
God forbid I—where's this girl!—what, Juliet!

[Enter Juliet.]

Jul. How now, what calls?

Nurse. Your mother.

Jul. Madam, I am here.

What is your will?

Laura. This is the matter—Nurse, give leave awhile,
We must talk in secret.—Nurse, come back again;
I have remember'd me: thou shall hear our counsel.
Then kneel, and ray daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour.
Laura. Nurse, she is not fourteen.

Jul. I'll lay fourteen of my teeth,—
And yet, to my teeth, she spoken, I have but four;
She is not fourteen: How long is it now
To Lammas-tide?

Laura. A fortnight and odd days.

Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come Lammas-eve at night, shall she be fourteen; Susan and she,—God rest all Christian souls!—
Well, Susan is a God; She was too good for me: But as I said.
On Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen;
That shall she, marry; I remember it well.
This since the earthquake now eleven years;
And she was wean'd,—I shall never forget it,—
Of all the days in the year, upon that day:
For I had then laid wormwood to my dog,
Sitting up under the dove-house wall,
My lord and you were then at Mantua:—
Nay, I do bear a brain:—But, as I said,
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple
Of my poor dog, and felt it bitter, pretty well.
To see it teetily, and fall out with the dog.
Shake, quoth the dove-house: 'twas no need, I trow,
To thee no trouble.

And since that time it is eleven years:
For then she could stand alone; nay, by the road,
She could have run and waddled all about,
For even the day before, she broke her bow.
And then my husband—God be with his soul!—
'A was a merry man;—took up the child;
Yet, quoth he, did thou fall upon thy face?
They are well skilled barber's, when they do more wilt
Will thou not, Jule? and by my holy dam
The pretty wretch left crying, and said—Ay:
To see how, why a jest shall come about:
I never said, I should love a thousand eyes,
I never should forget it; Will thou not, Jule?
quoth he:
And, pretty fool, it stinted, and said—Ay.
Laura. Enough of this; I pray thee, hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes, madam; Yet I cannot choose but laugh.

To think it should leave crying, and say—Ay:
And yet I warrant, it had upon its brow
A bump as big as a young cockrel's stone;
A parous knock; and it cried bitterly.
Yet, quoth my husband, fall upon thy face?
They will fall backward, when thou com'st to age;
Will thou not, Jule? it stinted, and said—Ay.
Juliet. So, I will turn thee, I pray thee, Nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace, I have done. God mark thee to his grace!

Thou wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nurs'd:
An I might live to see thee married once,
I, Lady Capulet.

Laura. Marry, that marry is the very theme
I must to talk of.—Tell me, daughter Juliet,
How standeth your disposition to be married?
Juliet. It is an honor that I dream not of.

Nurse. An honor! were not I thine only nurse,
I, thou hadst not get such wisdom from thy tatt.

Laura. Well, think of marriage now: younger than you,

* To my sorrow.
* i.e. I have a perfect remembrance or recollection.
* The cross.
* Holy dame, i.e. the blessed Virgin.
* It stopped crying.

Here, in Verona, ladies of ease,
Are made already mothers: by my count,
I was your mother much upon these years
That you are now a maid. Thus then, in brief:—
The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.

Laura. A man, young lady! I know a man,
As all the world—Why, he's a man of wax.

Laura. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay, he's a flower, in faith, a very flower.

Laura. What say you? can you love the gentleman?

This night you shall behold him at your feast:
Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face.
And find delight writ there with beauty's pen.
Examine every married lineament,
And now one and another lends content:
And what obscured in this fair volume lies,
Find written in the margin of his eyes.
This precious book of love, this unbound lover,
To beautify him only lacks a cover:
The fish lives in the sea; and 'tis much pride,
For fair without the fair within to hide;
That book in many's eyes doth share the glory,
That in gold claps locks in the golden story;
So shall you share all that he doth possess,
By having him, making yourself no less.

Laura. No less! nay, bigger; women grow by love.

Laura. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love?

Juliet. I look to like, if looking like move:
But no more deep will I endart many eyes
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up, you called, my young lady asked for, the nurse cursed in the pantry, and every thing in extremity.
I must hence to wait; I beseech you, follow straight.

Laura. We follow thee.—Juliet, the county stays.

Nurse. A girl, seek happy nights to happy days.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benvolio, with five or six—
Maskers, Torchbearers, and others.

Rom. What, shall this speech be spoke for our excuse?
Or shall we on without apology?

Benv. The date is out of such proximity;
We'll have no Cupid hoodwink'd with a scarf,
Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of youth,
Searing the ladies like a crop-keeper;
Nor no without-book prologue, faintly spoke
After a prompter, for our entrance:
But, let them measure us by what they will,
We'll measure them a measure, and be gone.

Rome. Give me a torch,—I am not for this night.

Benv. Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

Merc. Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Rome. Nay, I believe you; you have dancing shoes
With nimble soles: I have a soul of lead,
So makes me to the ground, I cannot move.

Merc. You are a lover: borrow Cupid's wings,
And soar with them above a common roof.

Rom. I am too sore impierced with his shaft
To soar with his light feathers; and so bound
I cannot fly a pitch above dull woe.

Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Merc. And, to sink in it, should you burden love;
Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rome. How to bear this, or to bear any thing, it is too rough,
Too rude, too boisterous; and it pricks my heart.

Merc. If love be rough with you, be rough with love;

* Well made, as if he had been modelled in wax.
* The comments on ancient books were always printed in the margin, i.e. not yet caught, whose skin was wanted to bind him.
* A scarecrow, a figure made up to frighten crows.
* A dance.
* A torch-bearer was a constant appendage to every troop of maskers.
Scene V.  R O M E O A N D J U L I E T.  705

Prick love for prick, and you beat love down.—
Give me a case to put my views in the

Put on a Mask.
A visor for a visor:—what care I,
What curious eye doth quote deformities?
Here are the beetle brows, that suit for me.
Ben. Come, knock, and enter; and no sooner in,
But every man betake to his legs.

Rom. A torch for me: let us wantons, light of Tickle the senseless RESSELS with their heels;
For I am prov'd, with a grand'sire phrase,—
I am, a candle-holder, and look on.

The game was never so fair, and I am done.

Mer. Tut! dim's the mouse, the constable's own word.

If thou art a man, we'll draw thee from the mine
Of this [save reverence] love, where thou stich sti'll
Up to the car.—Come, we burn daylight, ho.

Rom. Nay, that's not so.

Mer. I mean, sir, in delay.
We waste our lights in vain like lamps by day.
Take our good meaning: for our judgment sits
Five times in that, ere once in our five wits.

Rom. And mean well, in going to this mask;
But 'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why, may one ask?

Mer. Rom, I dream a dream to-night.

Rom. Well, what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie.

Rom. In bed, asleep, while they do dream things true.

Mer. O, I see; I see, queen Mab hath been with you.
She is the fairies' midwife; and she comes
In shape no bigger than an agate-stone
On the fore-finger of an alderman,
Drawn with a team of little omies!
Attrack men's noses as they lay asleep:
Her waggon-pokes made of long spinners' legs;
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;
The traces, of the smallest spider's web;
The whip, of the moonshine's watery beams;
Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film;
Her waggoner, a small grey-crocketed gnat,
Not half so big as a royal little worm

Puck'd from the lazy finger of a maid;
Her chariot is an empty hazel-bum.
Made by the joker squirrel, or old grub,
Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers.
And in his state she gallops night by night
Through lovers' brims, and then they dream of love;
On courtiers' knees, that dream on court's eyes.

O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees;
O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream;
Which o'er the angry Mab with blisters plaques,
Because their breath with sweetest-ghosts burned are.
Sometimes she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit;
A Romans' nose,

Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then dreams he of cutting off a hat;
A Roman's neck:
Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's nose,
And then dreams he of another benefice;

Sometimes she driveth o'er a captain's neck,
And then dreams he of being made a knight;
A captain's neck:

Rom. Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace; Thou talkst of nothing.

Mer. Right, but what I talk of dreams;
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air.

1. Obstetric.
2. It was anciently the custom to strow rooms with rushes.
3. Aims.
4. i.e. Fairy-like, burns of hair clotted and tangled in the night.

And more inconsistent than the wind, who wouls

Ben. You now of the fount of both these well.
And, being angered, pulls away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south.

Ben. This wind you talk of, blows us from our,

Supper is done, and we shall come too late.

Rom. I fear, too early: for my mind misgives,
Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars,
Shall bladder him by his fear to-day.

With this night's revels; and expire the term
Of a despised life, clos'd in my breast.
By some vice fortit of untimely death:
But it is, that this appearance of course,
Direct my sail!—on, lusty gentlemen.

Ben. Strike, drum.

SCENE V.—A Hall in Capulet's House.

Musicians wedding.  Enter Servants.

1 Serv. Where is Potpan, that he help not to take Away a trencher? he scarce a trencher! 2 Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unwash'd too, 'tis a loath thing.

1 Serv. Away with the joint stools, remove the court-cupboard, look to the plate:—good thou, save me a piece of march-paane; and, as thou lov'd me, let the porter let in Susan Grundstone, and Nell.—Anthony and Potpan?

2 Serv. Ay, boy; ready.

1 Serv. You are looked for, and called for, asked for,
and sought for, in the great chamber.

2 Serv. We cannot be here and there too—Clercely, boys; be brisk a while, and the longer liver take all.

[They retire behind.

Enter Capulet, &c., with the Guests and Maskers.

Cap. Gentlemen, welcome! ladies, that have their toes
Cuplogued with corns, will have a bout with you:
Alas, my mistresses! which of you all
Will now deny to dance? she that makes dainty, she,
I'll swear, hath corns; Am I come near you now?
You are welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the day,
That I have worn a visor; and could tell
A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear.
Such as would please:—'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone,
You are welcome, gentlemen!—Come, musicians, play;
A hall! a hall! give room, and foot it, girls.

[Music plays, and they dance.

More light, ye knaves; and turn the tables up.
And quench our fires, the room is grown too hot.
Ah, sith, this unlook'd-for sport comes well,
Nay, sit, sit, sit, good cousin Capulet;
For you and I are past our dancing days:
How long is now, since last yourself and I
Were in a mask?

2 Cap. By lady, thirty years.

1 Cap. What, man! 'tis not so much, 'tis not so much;
'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio,
Come Pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five-and-twenty years; and then we mask'd.

2 Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more: his son is elder, sir;
His son is thirty.

1 Cap. Will you tell me that?

His son was but a ward two years ago.

Rom. Well, what lady's that which doth enrich the hand
Of yonder knight?

Serv. I know not, sir.

Rom. O, she doth deck the torches to burn bright!
Her beauty hangs upon the cheek of night.
Like a rich jewel in an Ethiope's ear;
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear?

Thy. This, his by voice, should be a Montague:
Fetch me my rapier, boy.—What! dare the slave
Come hither, cover'd with an antic face,
To leer and scorn at our solemnity?

1 A sidetable on which the plate was placed.
2 Almond cake.
3 i.e. Make room.
4 The dance.
Now, by the stock and honor of my kin,
To raise my hand when my heart is here!
1 Cap. Why, how now, kinsman! wherefore
Storm you so?
Tyb. Uncle, this, is a Montague, our foe:
A villain, that is lighter come in spite
To scorn at our solemnity this night.
1 Cap. Young Romeo's?
Tyb. Yes, he, that villain Romeo.
1 Cap. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone;
He bears him like a partly genial an.
And, to say truth, Verona brings of him,
To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all this town,
Here in my house, do him disparagement:
Therefore, be patient, take no note of him,
It will all of the more thou respect.
Show a fair presence, and put off all these frows,
An ill-becoming semblance for a feast.
Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest;
I'll not endure him.
1 Cap. He shall be endured;
What, goodman boy!—say, he shall;—Go to;—
Am I the master here, or you? go to.
You'll not endure him!—God shall mend my soul—
You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock-a-hoop! you'll be the man!
Tyb. Why, uncle, 'ts a shame.
1 Cap. Go to, go to, you are a saucy boy;—'Is't so indeed?
This trick may chance to seath you;—I know what,
You'll make a mystery of me, marry, torture,
Well said, my heart;—You are a prince of go:
Be quiet, or—More light, more light! —For shame!—
I'll make a mystery of you! What!—Cheerly, my hearts.
Tyb. Patience perforce with witty fellow meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
I will withdraw; but this intrusion shall,
Now seeing sweet, convert to bitter call. [Exit.]
Rom. If I profane with my unworthy hand
This holy shrine, the gentle fine is this,—
My lips, two blushing Pilgrims, ready stand
To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss.
Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly devotion shows in this;
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch,
And palm to palm is holy pilgrims' kiss.
Rom. Ay, pilgrim lips, and holy pilgrims too?
Jul. Ay, pilgrim lips, that they must use in prayer.
Rom. 0 then, dear saint, let lips do what hands dare,
Thy gaudy cloth so counterfeited take,
Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for prays' sake.
Rom. Saints do move not, while my prayer's effect
I take.
Thus from my lips, by yours, my sin is purged.
[ Kissing her.]

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took.
Rom. O, kiss me but this once, and I beseech you, O trespass sweetly urged!
Give me my sin again.
Rom. Madam, your mother craves a word with you.
Jul. What is her mother?—
Rom. Nurse, marry, bachelor,
Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise, and virtuous:
I nurs'd her daughter, that you talk'd withal;
I tell you—hee, that can lay hold of her,
Shall have the chinks.
Jul. Is she a Capulet?
Rom. O dear account! my life is the font's debt.
Ben. Away; become; the sport is at the best.
Rom. Sir, so fear I the more is my unrest.
1 Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;
We have a trilling foolish banquet towards.—
Is it even so? Why, then I thank you all;
I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night;—
More torches here!—Come on, then, let's to bed.
Ah, sirrah, [To 2 Cap.] by my faith, it waxes late;
I'll to my rest. [Exeunt all but JULIET and Nurse.]
Rom. Come hither, nurse: What is you gentle-mans?—
Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.
Rom. What's he, that now is going out of door?—
Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petruchio.
Rom. What's he, that follows there, that would not dance?
Nurse. I know not.
Rom. Go, ask his name:—if he be married,
My grave is like to be my wedding-bed.
Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague;
The only son of your great enemy.
Rom. My only love sprung from my only hate,
Too early seen unknown, and known too late!
Prodigious birth of love it is to me,
Th' which I must love a loathed enemy.
Nurse. What's this?—what's this!
Rom. A rhyme I learn'd even now,
Of one I danced withal. [One calls within. JULIET. Nurse. Come, come, away:— the strangrs all are gone. [Exeunt.]

Enter CHORUS.

SCENE II.—An open place adjoining Capulet's Garden.

Rom. Can I go forward when my heart is here?
Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.
[Enter BENVENUTO and MERCURO.]
Rom. My cousin Romeo!—
Mec. Ah me!—
Rom. How is it with you? be you wise?—
Mec. You are my life, hath stolen him home to bed.
Rom. He ran this way, and leap'd this orchard wall:
Call, good Mercutio.
Mec. So say I, my friend. Nay, I'll conjure too—
Roméo! humors! madman! passion! lover! A
Apparition in the likeness of a sigh,
Speak but one rhyme, and I am satisfied;
Cry but—Ah me!—couplet—love and love—
Speak to my gossip Venice one fair word,
Do you an injury.

One nick-name for her purblind son and heir, Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so trim,
When king Cophetua lov'd the beggar-maid—
He heareth not, stirreth not, he moveth not;—
The ape is dead, and I must conjure him.—
Conjure thee by Rosaline's bright eyes,
By her high cheek bone, and her scarlet lip,
By her true foot, straight leg, and quivering thigh,
And the denominator that there adjacen,
Then by like likeness thou appear'st me.
Mec. An if he hear thee, thou wilt anger him.
Rom. This cannot anger him;—wouldst thou anger him
To raise a spirit in his mistress' circle,
Of some strange nature, letting, if they stand
Till she had laid it, and conjured it down;
That were some spice: my invocation
A faith.

* Alluding to the old ballad of the king and the beggar.

When Romeo's departure's time was used as an expression of tenderness.
SCENE II.  ROMEO AND JULIET.

Is fair and honest, and, in his mistress' name, I conjure only but to raise him.
Ben. Come, he hath hid himself among those trees, to be consorted with the humorous' night.
Blind is his love, and best behits the dark.
If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.
Now will I have some light, and have that fairest view.
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit, as maids call medlars, when they laugh alone.—
Romeo, good night—'Till to my delicate bed;
This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep:
Come, shall we go?
Ben. Go, thou; for 'tis in vain To seek him here, that means not to be found.

SCENE II.—Capulet's Garden.

Enter Romeo.

Romeo. He jests at scars, that never felt a wound.—[JULIET appears above, at a Window.]
But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks?
Is it the east and Juliet is the sun?
Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious frowns, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou hast made fairer far than she: She is not half so fair as her untimely issue;
Her violent livery is but sick and sere, And none but fools do wear it; cast it off—
It is my lady; O, it is my love:
O, she speaks yet she says nothing: What of that? Her eye doth discourse, I will answer it—
I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks:
Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The bright and glorious cheek would shame those stars,
As daylight doth a lamp; her eye in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright, That birds would sing; and think it were not night. Said he, 'tis but a leave to her; O! That I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek!
Juliet. 'Tis now the very hour, sweet Juliet, Most seasonable for love's smooth progress.
Romeo. And, sweet Giuliet, now is my heart most free, And with the winged chariot of the sun Have I besought the marriage of my soul.
Juliet. Yes, Romeo, Romeo, whose love art thou? Romeo? Deny thy father, and refuse thy name:
Or, if thou wilt but be my husband, I'll no longer be Capulet.
Romeo. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this?
Juliet. That thou art mad, though not so mad as love; Thou maddest of all men, though not mad at love.
Thou art my soul's good night, though not a Montague.
What's Montague! It is not hard, nor foot, Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part Belonging to a man. O, be some other name! What's in a name? That which we call a rose By any other name would smell as sweet; So Romeo would, were he not Romeo called, Retain that dear perfection which he owes; With this word I'll Henry call the king; And, but that name, which is no name to thee, Take all myself.
Romeo. In thy sweet will I take thee at thy word: Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd; Henceforth I never will be Romeo.
Juliet. What man art thou, that, thus bescreen'd in night,
So stubbest on my counsel?
Romeo. By a name I know not how to tell thee who I am: My true name, dear saint, is hateful to myself, Because it is an enemy to thee; And I am such a pox and plague in thine ear, Had it not been for that I loved thee not, It would not be for love; no, for the world, I and my hate were here not Montagues.
Romeo. Neither, fair saint, if either thee dislike.
Juliet. How canst thou luther, tell me! and wherefore?

The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb; And the place death, considering who thou art, If any of them famish'd, I had thee there.
Romeo. With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls; For sleny limits cannot hold love out:
And what love cannot overcome, that fair attempt, Therefore thy kinmen are no less to me.
Juliet. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.
Romeo. Alack! there lies more peril in thine eye, Than twenty of their swords; for, no, for them but sweet, And I am proof against their enmity.
Juliet. I would not for the world they saw thee here.
Romeo. I would my night's cloak to hide me from their sight; And, but that thou love me, let them find me here:
My life were better ended by their hate.
Then death prolonged, waiting for thy love.
Juliet. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?
Romeo. By love, who first did prompt me to inquire; He lent me counsel, and his aid I saw;
I am no pilot; yet went thou as far As that vast shore wash'd with the farthest sea; I would adventure for such a merchant.
Juliet. Then wouldst thou speak false, if I knew not, That with this wouldst thou have smother'd me, Else would a maiden blush pervert my cheek.
For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night, Fain would I dwell on form, fair, fond, deny All that I knew; but for to-morrow's coming,
Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say—Ay; And I will take thy word; yet if thou swear'st,
Thou may'st prove false; at lovers' perjuries, They say, that love's as lying as the sea; If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully: Or, if thou think'st I am too quickly won, I'll frown, and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt lose me, not for the world. In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond; And therefore thou may'st think my 'havior light; But, trust me, my love, I'll prove more true Than those that have more course and course of strange. I should have been more strenuous, I must confess, But that thou overheardst, ere I was ware.
Romeo. My true love's passion; therewithal receiv'd me; And not impute this yielding to light love, Which the dark night hath so discovered.
Juliet. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear, That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops,— Juliet. O, swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
But that thy love is constant as the sun.
Romeo. What shall I swear by?
Juliet. Do not swear at all;
Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I'll believe thee.
Romeo. If my heart's dear love—
Juliet. Well, do not swear: although I joy in thee,
There is no joy of this contract tonight;
It is too rash, too madam'd, too sudden; Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, It is done.
Romeo. Sweet, good-night! This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath, May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.
Good-night, good-night! as sweet repose and rest
Come to my heart, as that within my breast.
Romeo. O, wilt thou leave me so soon?
Juliet. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night?
Romeo. The exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine.
Juliet. I gave thee mine before thou didst request it; And yet I would it were to give again.
Romeo. Wouldst thou withdraw at all? for what purpose, love?
Juliet. But to be frank, and give it thee again. And yet I wish but for the thing I have: My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give thee, the more I have, for both are infinite.

Romeo. O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid.

Juliet. I fear some noise within: Dear love, adieu! Anon, good nurse!—Sweet Montague, be true,
But a little, I will come again.
"Ext. Romeo. O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid."

Hindrance. • Unless. • shy.
Being in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering sweet to be substantial.

_Renate Juliet, above._

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good-night, indeed,
If that thy bent of love be honorable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,
Lest I should forget to come in time to meet thee.
Where, and what time thou wilt perform the rite;
And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay,
And follow thee, my lord, throughout the world—
[Exit Romero.]

Madam. Jul. I come, anon—but if thou meanst not well,
I do beseech thee,—

_Nurse. [Within.]_ Madam.

Jul. By and by, I come—
To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief:
To-morrow will I send.

_Romeo._

So thrive my soul, my lord,

_Jul. A thousand times good-night!_ [Exit.]

_Romeo._

A thousand times the worse, to want thy light!

Rom. Love goes toward love, as school-boys from their books.
But love from love, toward school with heavy looks.

_Romeo._

Jul. My sweet!

_Sweet._ At what o'clock to-morrow shall I send to thee?

_Romeo._

At the hour of nine.

_Sweet._ I will not fail; this twenty years till then.
I have forgot why I did call thee back.

_Romeo._

Let me stand here till thou remember it.
Jul. I shall forget, to have thee still there standing,
Remembering how I love thy company.

_Romeo._

And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.
Jul. 'Tis almost morning; I would have thee gone:
And yet no further than a morning's ride;
Who lets it hop a little from her hand,
Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gipsy?
And with a silk thread plucks it back again,
So lovingly of his liberty.

_Romeo._

And would I were thy bird.
Jul. Sweet, so would I:
Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.
Good-night, good-night! parting is such sweet sorrow,
That shall I say—good-night, till it be morrow.

_Exit Romeo._

_Romeo._

Sleep dwell upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast!
Would I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest! Hence will I to my ghostly father's cell;
His help to crave, and my dear heart to tell.

_SIGN III._—Frier Laurence's Cell.

_Frier Laurence, with a basket._

Fri. The grey-ey'd morrow smiles on the frowning night,
Cheerishing the eastern clouds with streaks of light;
And the sun's first dart of dark beams through the shutters,
From forth day's pathway, made by Titan's wheels:
Now crees the sun advance his burning eye,
The day to cheer, and night's dank dew to dry,
I must till up this ere case of gold.
With baleful weeds, and precious-juiced flowers,
The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb;
What is her burying grace, that is her womb:
And from her womb children of divers kind.
We sticking on her natural bosom find;

1 inclination.
2 the brest is the mate bawke, the fleson the female.
3 Pettes.
4 Choses, fortune.
5 Spotted, stroked.
6 THE SUN.

Many for many virtues excellent,
None but what some, and yet all different.
O, mielle is the powerful grace, that lies
In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities.
For naught so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to thy taste some special good or office;
Nor ought so good, but, strait from that fair use,
Revolves from true birth, stumbling on abuse.

_Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied;
And vice sometime by action dignified._

Within the infant mind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power:
For this, being smelt, with that past cheers each part.
Being tasted, slays all senscs with the heart.
Two such opposed does encamp them still,
In man as well as herbs, grace, and rude will.
And where the worser is predominant,
'Tis soon the canker death eats up that plant.

_Romeo._

_Rom. Good-morrow, father!_

_Brief._ Benevolence!

What early tongue so sweet saluteth thee?
Young son, it argues a distemper'd head,
So soon to bid good-morrow to thy bed:
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And we, care lodgers, sleep will not obey but
Where unbruised youth with unshrift'd brain
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign:
Therefore this early morn doth me assure,
_Theun_ is rose-rosed, and some distant nature;
Or if not so, then here I hit it right—
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.

_Romeo._

_Rom. Frier._

To-morrow is fair, the wedding-day was mine.

_Fri._

_God pardon sin!_ waft thou with Rosaline!

_Rom._

_Rosaline, my ghostly father! no;
I have forgot that name, and that name's woeful.

_Fri._

That's my good son: But where last thou

_Rom._

Till I tell thee, cre thou ask it me again.
I have been feasting with mine enemy;
Where, when a sudden, one hath words with me,
That's by me wounded; both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies:
I bear no hatred, blessed man: for, lo,
My intercession likewise steaks my feet.

_Fri._

Be plain, good son, and honestly in thy drift,
Better confession finds but footing shilth.

_Rom._

_Rom. Then plainly know, my heart's dear love is _Frier._

On the fair daughter of rich Capulet:
As mine on her, so hers is set on mine:
And so she neighs, saying what things shall combine
By holy marriage, when, and where, and how;
We meet, we woo'd, and made exchange of vows,
I'll tell thee as we pass; but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us this day.

_Fri._

_Holy saint Francis!_ what a change is here!

_Rom._

_Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,
So soon forsaken! young men's love then lies
Not true in their hearts but in their eyes.

_Jesu Maria!_ what a deal of brine
Hair'd thou didst sallow cheeks for Rosaline!

_How much salt water thrown away in waste,
To season love, that of it doth not taste!

The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,
Thy old groans ring yet in my ancient ears;
Lo, here twain thy cheek the stain doth sit!
And all I fear that is not wash'd off yet;
If e'er thou wast thyselvish, and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline;
And a thou'st changed! pronounce this sentence then—

_Women may fall, when there's no strength in men._

_Rom._ Thou chidest me oft for loving Rosaline.

_Fri._

_Rom._

And bad'st me bury love.

_Fri._

_Not in a grave

To lay one in, another out to have.

_Rom._

Thou chidest not thee, chide not she, whom I love now,

_Doth grace for grace, and love for love allow;
The other did not so._

_Fri._

_O, she knew well,
Thy love did read by rote, and could not spell.
But come, young waverer, come go with me,
In one respect I'll try thee to the point.
For this aliance may so happy prove,
To turn your households' rancor to pure love.
Romeo and Juliet.

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter BENVOLIO AND MERCUTIO.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo be?

Ben. Nay to his father's; I spoke with his man.

Mer. A, that same pale hearted wench, in Rosaline,

Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman of old Capulet,

Hath sent for to his father's house.

Mer. A challenge, on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answer it.

Mer. Any man, that can write, may answer a letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answer the letter's master, how he dares, being dared.

Mer. And, mark you, Romeo, he is already dead! stabbed with a white wench's black eye! shot through the heart with a love-song; the very pin of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy's but-shirt! And, mark how sensibly Tybalt!

Ben. Why, what is Tybalt?

Mer. More than prince of cats, I can tell you.

O, he is the courageous captain of compliments; He fights as your eye-sick song; keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his minstrel rest one, two, and the third in your bosom; the very butcher of a silk button, a dulcist, a duellist; a gentleman of the very first house,—of the first and second cause: Ah, the immortal passo! the panto verso! the hay!

Ben. The what?

Mer. The pan of such antic, lisping, affecting fantasticoes; these new turners of accents!—By Jove, a very good blade!—a very tall man!—a real good man!—Why, is not this a lamentable thing, Grandier, that we should thus afflicted with these strange flies, these fashion-mongers, these pardoner-songs, who stand so much on the new form, that they cannot shut what is case on the old bench! O, thou, thou, their souls!

Enter Romeo.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his roe, like a dried herring;—O fish, flesh, how art thou disfigured!—Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch loved in Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench;—marry, she had a better love to be rhyme her: Doe, do, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a spy; Helen and Hero, bawdishes and harpies; and all the songs that they sang! If I am the youngest of that name, I am sure the laziest of the young Romeo! I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, than he was when you were a little in the song. And, in the name of the Duke! I am the youngest of that name, for laziest of the worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Mer. Yea, is the worse well! very well took,

Faith; was not a worse.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence with you!

Ben. She will invite him to some supper.

Mer. A hand, a hand! a hand!

Romeo. What hast thou found?

Mer. No hand, sir; unless a hand, in a Kenten cut, that is something stale and hour ere it be spent.

An old bare hour's

And an old bare hour,

Is very good meat in Lent;

But a bare that is hour,

A bare that is hour for too much for a score.

What an hour's bare is he spent.

Romeo. Will you come to your father's! we'll to dinner thither.

Romeo. I will follow you.

Mer. For, by my young lady; farewell, lady, lady, lady.

[Exeunt MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO.

Nurse. Marry, farewell!—I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his money?

Romeo. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk; and will speak more in a minute, than he will stand to in a month.

Nurse. A man: speaks any thing against me, I'll take him down an 'a were hester than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those Act II. Scene VI.

Juliet. The clock struck nine, when I did send for the nurse; in half an hour she promised to return. Perchance she cannot meet me: that's not so—she is a pretty woman; she should spend her time in thinking, which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams; Driving back shadows over lowering hills: Therefore she doth pine—doth pine with love—And therefore with the wings of Cupid, swift and heavy; now is the sun upon the highest hill.

Of this day's journey; and from nine till twelve is three long hours,—yet she is not come. Had she perished, or, perchance, was she warm'd with venomous breath, she'd be as swift in motion as a ball; my words would bandy her to my sweet love; and his, too, were such as would concur and meet by playing it to me with so sweet a face.

Nurse. I am weary, give me leave a while:—FYE, how my bones ache! What a jaunt have I had. I would, thou hadst my bones, and I thy news:

Nurse. Nay, come, I pray thee, speak;—good, good nurse, speak.

Nurse. Jesus! What haste! can you not stay a while?

Juliet. Do you not see that I am out of breath! Juliet, I doth thou out of breath, when thou hast breath

To say to me—that thou art out of breath! The excuse that thou dost make in this delay, is longer than the tale thou dost make of it. Is thy news good or bad? answer to that; Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance: Let me be satisfied, is't good or bad?

Nurse. You have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, not he; though his face be better than any man's, yet his tongue exceeds all men's; and for a hand and a foot, and a body, though they be not to be compared on, yet they are past compare: He is not the lower of courtesy,—but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb,—his heart!—and his right hand; serve God,—What, have you done at home? Nurse. No, no: But all this did I know before;

What says he of our marriage! what of that! Nurse. I know the head aches! what a head have I!

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces. My back o' the other side, O, my back, my back!—Beshrew your heart, for sending me about, To catch my death with jaunting up and down! Juliet. I'faith, I am sorry that thou art not well: Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love to you?

Nurse. Your love says, like an honest gentleman, And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome, And, I warrant, a virtuous:—Where is your mother? Juliet. Where is my mother?—why, she is within; Where should she be! How oddly thou reply'st; Your letters are like an honest gentleman,— Where is your mother? Nurse. O, God's lady dear! Are you so hot? Hurry, come up, I trow, Is this the patience for my aching bones! Henceforward do your messages yourself. Juliet. Here's such a coil!—come, what says Romeó? Nurse. Do you get leave to go to shrift to-day? Juliet. I have.

Nurse. Then hire you hence to friar Laurence? cell There stays a husband to make you a wife: Now comes the warrant blood in your cheeks; They'll be in scarlet straight at any news. Hire you to church? I must another way, To fetch a ladder, by which the love your love Must climb a bird's nest soon, when it is dark: I am the drudge, and toil in your delight; But you shall bear the burden soon at night. Nurse. I'faith, I'll hire you to the cell.

Juliet. Hire to high fortune!—honest nurse, fare-well.

SCENE VI.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Romeó.

Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act, That after-hours with sorrow chide us not. 2 Drive her, as a ball struck with a wand, &c. a bat or battledore.

Bustle.
ACT III.

Scene I.—A Public Place.

Enter Mercutio, Benvolio, Page, and Servants.

Ben. I go, my lord; good M.P., let's retire; The day is hot, the Capulets abroad.

And, if we meet, we shall not 'scape a brawl; For now, these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.

The art like one of those fellows, that, when he enters the confines of a tavern, claps up his sword upon the table, and says, "God send me no need of thee!" and, by the operation of the second cup, draws it on the drawer, when, indeed, there's no need.

Ben. And what to do?

Mer. Nay, an there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other. Thou! why thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes; What eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarrel! "Thy head is as full of quarrels as an egg is full of meat; and yet thy head hath been the cause of many quarrelling! Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath been asleep in the sun. But thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter! with another, for thynging his new shoes with old rubad; and yet thou wilt tenter me from quarrelling!

Ben. An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee-simple! O simple!

Enter Tybalt and others.

Ben. By my head, here come the Capulets.

Mer. By my beard, I care not.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them,— Gentlemen, good-den; a word with one of you. Mer. And with the word come with one of us! Couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. Thou wilt find me apt enough to that, sir, if you will give me occasion.

Mer. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Merc. Mercutio, thou consortest with Romeo.—

Merc. Consort! what, dost thou make us minstrels, thou makest minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddlestick; here's that shall make you dance. 'Zounds, consort!

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men: Else would I draw into some private place, or reason coldly of your grievances, or else depart; here all eyes gaze on us.

The long white filament which flies in the air.

Jul. Good-even to my ghostly confessors.

Fri. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us both.

Jul. As much to him, else are his thanks too little.

Rom. Ah, Juliet, if the measure of thy joy Be heaped'd like mine, and that thy skill be more Than blazon'd in, it, then sweeten with thy breath This neighbor hour, and let rich music's tongue Unfold the imag'd happiness that both Receive in either by this dear encounter.

Jul. Conceit, more rich in matter than in words, Braces of his substance, not of ornament: They are but baggers that can count their worth; But my true love is grown to such excess, I cannot sum up half my sum of wealth.

Fri. Come, come with me, and we will make short work; For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone, Till holy church incorporate two in one. [Exeunt.]
a braggar, a rogue, a villain, that fights for the book of arithmetic!—Why, the devil, came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Romeo. I thought all for the best.

[Exit Benvolio, and they return to their places.

[Enter Tybalt.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio’s dead;
That callant spirit hath aspire’d the clouds;
That very untimely here did seem the earth.

Tybalt. This black late on more days doth depend:

This but begins the woe, others must end.

Re-enter Benvolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio’s dead;
That callant spirit hath aspire’d the clouds;
That very untimely here did seem the earth.

Romeo. If I delay, the fiend doth wink at me.

Tybalt. Go, take the villain back again,
That late thou gav’st me; for Mercutio’s soul
Is bound a little way above our heads Tybalt.

[Exit Tybalt.

Enter Citizens, &c.

Cord. Which way can he be, that kill’d Mercutio?

Romeo. He is gone, and Tybalt is dead.

But now, alas! such words as these are words
That I should not utter, for they show the depth
Of that which I do fear.

Enter Prince, attended; MONTAGUE, CAPulet, their Wives, and others.

Prince. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?

Benv. O noble prince, I can discover all
The unlucky manage of this fatal brawl:
There lies the man slain by young Romeo,
That sweet and tender lover of his cousin.

La. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin!—O my brother’s child!

Unhappy night! ah me, the blood is spil’d
Of my dear kinsman.—Prince, as thou art true,
For blood of ours, shed blood of Montague.—
O cousin, cousin!

Romeo. Why slay you, Benvolio, who began this bloody fray?

Benv. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo’s hand
Did slay:
Romeo that spoke him fair, bade him bethink
Since the quarrel was, and would withal
Your high displeasure—All this—unto
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent
The cords.

Could not this brave to the unry spleen
Of Tybalt, dead, to peace, but that he lifts
Which pouring stream at bolt Mercutio’s breast;
Who, all red hot, turns deadly point to point.
And, with a martial scorn, with one hand beats
Cold death asile, and with the other sends
It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity
Betore it: Romeo he cries aloud and aloud.
Hold, friends! friends, part!—and, swifter than his tongue,
His agile arm beats down the fatal points.
And but these radius; underneath whose arm
An envious thrust from Tybalt hit the life

[Controversy.

[Conductor.

[Accompany.

[Slight, unimportant.

Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt died:
But by and by comes back to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertain’d his revenue,
And to they go like lightning; for, even
Could do no justice, which thou, prince, must give;
Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.

Prince. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio;
Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe!

Cap. O, not Romeo, prince, he was Mercutio’s friend;
His fault concludes but what the law should end,
The life of Tybalt.

Prince. And, for that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence;
I have an interest in your fates’ proceeding,
My blood for your rude brows doth lie a bleeding;
But I’ll amerce you with so strong a fine
That you shall all repent the loss of mine.
I will be deal to pleading and excuses;
Nor tears, nor prayers, shall purchase out abuses;
Therefore use none: let Romeo hence in haste,
Else, when he’s found, that hour is his last.
Dear hence his body, and attend our will:
Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Capulet’s House.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,
Towards Phoebus’ mansion; such a waggoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the west,
And bring in clouds and showers, that the sight
Of their bright course, spread thy close curtain, love-performing night!
That run-away’s eyes may wink; and Romeo
Leap to these arms, untalk’d of, and unseen:
Lovers can see to do their amourous rites
By their own beauties: or, if love be blind,
It best agrees with night.—Come, civil night,
Thou sober-suited matron, all in black;
And learn me how to lose a winning match,
Play’d for a pair of stainless maidenhoods:
Hood my unmann’d hot bathing in my cheeks,
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,
Think true love acted, simple modesty.

Come, night!—Come, Romeo! come, thou day in night.
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow on a raven’s back—
Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow’d night.

Give me my Romeo: and when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun.—
O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possessed it; and, though, I am sold,
Not yet enjoyed: so tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festival.
To an inamorato child, that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. O, here’s my nurse.

Enter Nurse, with Corin.

And she brings news: and every tongue that speaks
But Romeo’s name, speaks heavenly eloquence.—
Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there,
That Romeo bade thee fetch?

Nurse. Ay, ay, the cords; [throws them down.]
Jul. Ah me! what news? why dost thou wink thy hands?

Nurse. Ah well-a-day!—he’s dead, he’s dead, he’s dead.

Jul. Can heaven be so ensorcell’d?

Nurse. Romeo can, though heaven cannot.—O Romeo! Romeo!
Who ever thought he would think it!—Romeo!—

[Prick by fine.

[Grave, solemn.

[These are terms of felicity.

[Gay, showy.
Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me thus? This torture should be read in dismal hell, Where Tybalt's sorrow steals, and Romeo stain'd! And that bare vowel I shall poison more Than the death-dar'ning eye of cockatrice: I am not I, if there he such an I. Or does e'en I, save thee answer, I? If he be slain, say—1; or if not, no; Brief sounds determine of my weal or woe. Nurse. I saw the wound. I saw it with mine eyes,— God save the mark! —here, on his main breast: A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse; Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaub'd in blood, All in gore blood; I swooned at the sight. Jul. O break my heart!—poor bankrupt, break at once! To prison, eyes! 'tis now on liberty! Thee, earth respites; say my motion here; And thou, and Romeo, press one heavy tear! Nurse. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best friend I had! O courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman! That ever I should live to see thee dead! Jul. What storm is this, that blows so contrary! Is Romeo slumber'd; and is Tybalt dead? My dear-loved cousin, and my dear lord!— The birthday trumpet, sound the woe-ful doom! For who is living, if these two are gone! Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banish'd; Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banish'd. Jul. O God!—sir, Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's blood! Nurse. It did, it did; alas the day! it did. Jul. O serpent heart, hid with a flowering face! Did ever course keep so fair a cave? Beautiful tycoon! fond anguish! Dove-feather'd raven! wofish raving lamb! Desped subervance of divinest show! Just topic to what thou pretend'st, A dammed saint, an honorable villain!— O, nature! what hadst thou to do in hell, When man did bow the gait of thy gend In mortal paradise of such sweet flower? Was ever book, containing such vile matter, So fairly bound! O, that deceit should dwell In such a gorgeous palace! Nurse. There's no trust, No faith, no honesty in men; all perjur'd, All forsworn, all mauncht, all dissembler— Ah, where's my man! give me some good tidings!— These griefs, these woes, these sorrows, make me old. Shame come to Rome! Jul. Nurse. Rister'd be thy tongue, For such a wish! he was not born to shame: Upon his brow shame is asham'd to sit; For 'is a throne where honor may be crown'd Sole company: His death, his end! O, what a beast was I to chide at him! Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd my lord? Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that kill'd my lord? When I muse, hour's, hour's, hour's, wife, have mangled it— When, wherefore, villain, didn't thou kill my cousin? That villain cousin would have kill'd my lord; Back, foolish tears, back to your native spring; Your pillows are dry; your eyes are dry, Which you, mistaking, o'er up to joy. My husband lives, that Tybalt shall have slain; And Tybalt's death, that would have slain my husband. All this is comfort; Wherefore weep I then? Some word there was, worse than Tybalt's death That murder'd me; I would forget it soon; But, O! it presses to my memory. Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds: Tybalt is dead, and Romeo—banish'd, That—banish'd, that one word—banish'd, Haunted doth each thousand Tybalt's, Tybalt's death Was wee enough, if it had ended there; Or,—if sour woes delights in fellowship, And sorrow and sorrow be rank'd with other griefs,— Why follow'd not, when sire's, sire's, sire's, Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both, Which modern lamentation might have mov'd? But, with a rear-ward following Tybalt's death, Romeo is banish'd, —to speak that word, Is well, in other. Romeo is banish'd! All slam, all dead,—Romeo is banish'd. There is no end, no limit, measure, bound, In that word's death; no words can that woe sound. —There is no father, mother, and my Tybalt's death Nurse. Weeping and wailing over Tybalt's core; Will you go to them? I will bring you thither. Jul. Place thy hand with tears upon mine heart; When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment. Take up those cords;—Poor repes, you are beguile, Both you and I; for Romeo is exil'd: He made you a words-man to move to freed; But I, a mad, die midden-widow'd. Come, cords; come, nurse; I'll to my wed-bed; And death, not Romeo, take my maidenhead! Nurse. He to you and charms for you, and Romeo To comfort you;—I well know where he is. Bark ye, your Romeo will be here at night; I'll to him; he is hid at Laurence' cell.

Jul. O God! find him! give this ring to my true knight, And bid him come to take his last farewell. —Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence's Cell. Friar. Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fear-ful man; Affliction is enamor'd of thy parts, And thou hast wedded to calamity. And now what news what news! what is the prince's doom! What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand, That I yet know not! Friar. Too familiar Is my dear son with such sour company: I bring thee tidings of the prince's doom. Romeo. What less than dooms-day is the prince's doom! Friar. A gentler judgment vanish'd from his lips, Not body's death, but body's banishment. Nurse. His banishment he may increase it by—death: For exile hath more terror in his look, Much more than death; do not say—banishment. Friar. Hence from Verona art thou banish'd; Be patient, for the world is broad and wide. Nurse. There is no world without Verona walls, But purgatory, torture, hell itself. Hencébanish'd is banish'd from the world, And world's exile is death—thee's banishment, Is death mis-ter-m: calling death—banishment, Thou cut'st my head off with a golden axe, And smit'st upon the stroke that murders me. Friar. O devil sit! O devil sit! owe no kindness! Thy foul who calls death; but the kind prince, Taking thy part, hath rush'd aside the law, And turned him black to death to banishment: This is dear mercy, and the death's own death. Nurse. Romeo. His torture, and no mercy: heaven is here, Where Juliet lives; and every cat, and dog; And little live here, and may look on her, But Romeo may not.—More validity. More honorable state, more courtship, lives in carriages, bones crouch: the hearse On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand, And steal immortal blessing from her lips; Who, even in pure and vestal modesty, Still blush, and think death their own kin's sin; But Romeo may not: he is banish'd; Fies may do this, when from this must fly: They are free men, but I am banishéd. And say'st thou yet, that exile is not death? Hadst thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-grind knife, No sudden mean of death, though he'er so mean, But,—banish'd—to kill me; banish'd! O friar, the spliceing of the word is well; Howlings attend it: How hast thou the heart, Being a divine, a ghostly confessor, A woodswilower, and more, and more, To muzzle me with that word—banishment! Friar. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak a word. Nurse. O, thou wilt speak again of banishment. —Exeunt.
Fri. I'll give thee an armor to keep off that word:
Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy,
To crown thee, thou art banished.
Rom. Yet banished!—Hang up philosophy!

Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It must be told thee, thou art banished.

Fri. 0, then I see that madmen have no ears.
Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

Fri. I give thee a name with thee of thy estate.
Rom. Thou canst not speak of what thou dost not feel:
Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love,
An honest and married Tybalt murdered,
Doting like me, and like me banished,
Then mightst thou speak, then mightst thou tear
And fall upon the ground as I now do,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Fri. Arise; one knock's; good Romeo, hide thyself;—Rom. Not 1; unless the breath of heart-sick growns,
Mist-like, undo me from the search of eyes.

Fri. Hark, how they knock!—Who's there?—
Rom. Arise.

You will be taken.—Stay a while;—stand up;—
[Knocking.
Run to my study.—By and by;—God's will!
What wilfulness is this?—I come, I come;
[Knocking.
Who knocks so hard! Whence come you! what's your will?

Nurse. [Within, Let me come in, and you shall know my errand.

I come from Lady Juliet.

Fri. Welcome then.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. O holy friar, O, tell me, holy friar,
Where is my lady's lord, where's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground, with his own tears washed his face.

Nurse. O, he is even in my mistress' case,
Just in her case!—

Fri. O woesful sympathy!

Fituous predicament.

Nurse. Even so lies she,
Blubbering and weeping, weeping and blubber-
ning,—

Stand up, stand up; stand, an you be a man:
For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand;
Why should you fall into so deep an O?

Rom. Nurse! Nurse! Ah sir!—ah sir!—Well, death's the end of all,
Rom. Spak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her?
Does not the name of an old murderer,
Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood remov'd but little from her own?
Where is she? and how doth she? and what says
My conceit'd lady to our cancel'd love?

Nurse. O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and weeps;
And now falls on her bed; and then starts up,
And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries,
And then down falls again.

Rom. As if that name;
Stain'd from the deadly level of a prince true
Did murder her; as that name's cursed hand
Murther'd her kinman.—O tell me, friar, tell me,
In what vile part of this anatomy
Both my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack
The hateful mansion. [Drawing his Sword.

Fri. Hold thy desperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy form cries out, thou art;
Thy tears, the womanish, thy acts denote
The unreasonable fury of a beast.

Unceunly woman, in a seeming man!
Or ill-becommg beast, in seeming man!—
The thoughts of an amaz'd man: by my oaths,
I thought thy disposition better temper'd.
Hast thou slain Tybalt! wilt thou slay thyself?
Art thou so thy lady too? that lives in thee,
By doing damn'd hate upon thyself?

Why rais'st thou on thy birth, the heaven, and earth?
Since birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do meet
In thee at once; which thou at once wouldst lose.

Fye, fye! thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
Which, like an usurer, abound in it,
And hast none in them, thou true love banish'd.
Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Dissolving from the valor of a man:
Thy love, sweetest, but hell's own purity,
Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish:

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Mis-shapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skillless soldier's hand,
Is set on fire by thine own ignorance,
And thou dismember'd with thine own defence
What, rose thou, man? thy Juliet is alive.

For where thy self was sate but bread abred,
There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou siew'st Tybalt; there art thou happy too:
The love that Tybalt each to death, begett'st thou
Kind, and it turns to exile; there art thou happy:
A pack of blessings lights upon thy back;
Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a Juno-beard andullen wench,
Thou pou'st upon thy fortune and thy love:
Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable.

Go, get thee to thy love, as was decreed,
Ascend and make thy pleasure, and comfort her;
But, look, thou stay not till the watch be set,
For then thou canst not pass to Mantua;
Where thou shalt live till we can find a time
To bide with thy marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back.
With twenty hundred thousand times more joy
Than thou went'st forth with in lamentation.
Go before, nurse: commend me to thy lady;
And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto Romeo young.

Nurse. O Lord, I could have staid here all the night,
To hear good counsel: O, what learning is!—
My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come,

Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.

Nurse. Here, sir, a ring she bid me give you, sir;
Hee, you make haste, for it grows very late. [Exeunt.
Nurse. O, tell me the news,——shine dimly:
Thou hast—
Fri. Go hence: good-night: and here stands all your state:—
Either be gone before the watch be set,
Or by the break of day disguised from hence:
Sop'rum in Mantua; I'll find out your man,
And he shall signify from time to time
Every thing that happens to you, that chance there:
Give me thy hand; 'ts late; farewell; good-night.

Rom. But that a joy past joy calls out on me,
We were a grief, so brief to part with thee:

Fri. Farewell. [Exeunt.

SENE IV.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and Paris.

Cap. Things have fallen out, sir, so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our daughter.
Look you, she lov'd her kinsman Tybalt dearly,
And so did I.—Well, we were born to die,—
'Tis very late, she'll not come down tonight;
I promise you, but for your company,
I would have been a-bed an hour ago.

Paris. These times of woe afford no time to woo.
Madam, shall I commend me to your daughter?
La. Cap. I will, and know her mind early tomorrow.

To-night she's mov'd up to her heaviness.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender
Of my child's love: I think, she will be rul'd
In all respects by me; may nay, more, I doubt it not.
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed;
Acquaint her here of my son Paris's love;
And bid her, mark you me, on Wednesday next—
But soft: what day is this?

Cap. Monday? ha! ha! Well, Wednesday is too soon.
O' Thursday let it be.—Thursday, tell her,
She shall be married to this noble earl!—
Will you be ready? do you like this haste?
We'll keep no great ado—a friend, or two;
For, mark you, Tybalt being slain so late,
*A Whole of thy fortune depends on this.

What up. Bold.
Scene V.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much:
Therefore we'll have some half a dozen friends,
And prattle with them. But later on Thursday:
Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were to Cap. Well, get you gone.—O' Thursday be it then!—Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her, wife, against this wedding-day.—
 Farewell, my lord.—Light to my chamber, ho! Atone may it be so very late, that we May call it early by and by.—[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Juliet's Chamber.

Enter Romeo and Juliet.

Jul. Will thou be gone? it is not yet near day:
It was the nightingale, and not the lark.
That pierced the fearful heart of thine ear;
Nighly she sings on yon pomegranate tree:
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.
Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, what envious streaks
Do face the severing clouds in yonder east:
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands laughing in the east already:
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.
Jul. You light is not day-light, I know it, I:
It is some joicer that the sun exahles,
To be to thine this night a torch-bearer.
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone.
Rom. Let me be taken, let me be put to death;
I am content, so thou wilt have it:
I'll say, you grey is not the morn's eye,
Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow!
Nor is that not the lark, whose note doth beat
The clapper'd heaven so high above our heads;
I have more care to stay, than will to go:—
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.—
Hark, 'tis the watchman. Let's go to bed. [Exeunt.

Jul. It is, it is, his he'me, be gone, away;
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords, and unpleasing sharps.
Some say, the lark and toad change eyes:
O, now I would they had changed voices too;
Since arm from arm that voice doth us sfady,
Hunting thee hence with hunts-up¹ to the day.
O, now be gone; more light and light it grows.
Rom. More light and light!—more dark and dark our woes.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Madam! Nurse. Your lady mother's coming to your chamber.
The day is broke; be wary, look about. [Exit. Nurse. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.
Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll descend, [Roméo descends.
Jut. Art thou gone so! my love! my lord! my friend:
I must heare from thee every day t' the hour,
For in a moneth there are many days:
O! if this count I shall be much in years,
Ere I again behold my kinsman.
Rom. Farewell! I will omit no opportunity
That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.
Jul. That day's not past, we shall ever meet again!
Rom. I doubt it not; and all these woes shall Serve
For sweet discourses in our time to come.
Jul. O God! I have an ill-divining soul:
Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below.
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb:
Either my eyesight fails, or thou'lt look'st pale.
Rom. And trust me, love, I see no worse in thee:
Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Adeus! adeus! [Exeunt Romeo.

Jul. O fortune! fortune! all men call thee hice:
If thou art hice, what dost thou to me?
² Inclination.
³ Division was the technical phrase for musical composition.
⁴ A tune played to wake hunters; also a morning song to a man the day after marriage.

That is renown'd for faith? Be fickle, fortune:
For then, I hope, thou wilt not keep him long,
But send him back.

[La. Cap. (aside) Ho, daughter! are you up?
Jul. Who is that calls? is it my lady mother?
Is she not down so late, or up so early?
What unaccustomed cause procures her hither?

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. Why, how now, Juliet?
Jul. Madam, I am not well.
La. Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin's death?
What, wilt thou wash him from his grave with tears?
An if thou couldst, thou couldst not make him live;
Therefore, have done: Some grief shows much of love,
But much of grief shows still some want of wit.
Jul. Yet let me weep for such a feeling loss.
La. Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the friend,
Which you weep for.
Jul. Feeling so the loss, I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.
La. Cap. Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much
Mourn'st; nor dost thou find the end:
As that the villain lives which slaughter'd him.
Jul. What villain, madam?
La. Cap. Do you know the same villain, Romeo?
Jul. Villain and he are many miles asunder.
God pardon him! I do, with all my heart;
And yet no man, like he, doth grieve my heart.
La. Cap. That is, because the traitor murder'd love:
Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my hands.
Would, none but I might 'venge my cousin's death,
La. Cap. We will have vengeance for it, near thou not:
Then weep no more. I'll send to one in Man-
Where that same banish'd runagiate doth live,—
That shall bestow on him so sore a draught,
That he shall soon keep Tybalt company:
And then, I hope, thou wilt be satisfied.
Jul. Indeed, I never shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—
Is my poor heart so far a kinsman's woe?—
Madam, if you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it:
That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,
Soon sleep in quiet.—O, how my heart aches
To hear him say'd, and cannot come to him,
To wreak the love I bore my cousin Tybalt
Upon his body that hath slaughter'd him!
La. Cap. Find thou the means, and I'll find such a man.
But now, I'll tell thee joyful tidings, g'd.
Jul. And joy comes well in such a needful time.

What are they? I beseech your ladyship?
La. Cap. Well, well, thou hast a careful father,
Child; one, who, but thee from thy hearethness,
Hath sorted out a sudden day of joy,
That thou expect'st not, nor I look'd not for.
Jul. Madam, in happy time, what day is that?
Romeo.

That gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county Paris, at Saint Peter's church,
Shall happily make thee there a joyful bride.
Jul. Now, by Saint Peter's church, and Peter too.

He shall not make me there a joyful bride.
I wonder at this haste: that I must wed
Ere he, that should be husband, comes to woo.
I pray you, tell my lord and father, madam,
I will not marry yet; and when I do, I swear,
I shall be such a wife, who you know I hate.
Rather than Paris,—These are news indeed!
La. Cap. Here comes your father; tell him so
yourself,
And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew;
But for the sunset of my brother's sun,
Brings.
It rains downright,—
How now! a conduit, girl! what, still in tears?
Ever more showering: in one little body
Thou counterfeist a bark, a sea, a wind:
For still thy eyes, which I may call the sea,
Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,
Sailing on restless seas; the winds thy sighs;
Who, raging with thy tears, and with them with
Without a sudden calm, will overcast
Thy tempest-tossed body.—How now, wife?
Have you believed to her our decree?
Lab. Cap. Ay, sir; but she will none, she gives you thanks.
I would, the fool were married to her grave!
Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you, wife.
How! will she none! doth she not give us thanks?
Is she not proud? doth she not count her blessing,
Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought?
So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom!
Jul. Not proud, you have; but thankful, that you have Proud can I never be of what I hate;
But thankful even for hate, that is meant love.
Cap. How now! how now, chop-logie! What is this!
Proud,—and, I thank you,—and, I thank you not,—
And yet not proud;—Misstress minion, you,
Thank me no thankings, nor proude me no prounds,
But settle your fine joints against Thursday next,
To go with Paris to St. Peter's church,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.
But in a green-sickness carry out, you baggage!
You tallow-face!
Lab. Cap. Fye, fye, what, are you mad?
Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,
Hear me with patience but to speak a word.
Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch!
I tell thee what,—get thee to church o' Thursday, or Never after look me in the face.
Speak not, reply not, do not answer me:
My fingers itch—Wife, we scarce thought us blessed.
That God send us but this one child: But now I see this one is too much,
And that we have a curse in having her:
Out on her, hiding!
Nurse. God in heaven bless her!—You are to blame, my lord, to rate her so.
Cap. And why, my lady wisdom? hold your tongue.
Good prudence; smarter with your gossips, go.
Nurse. I speak no treason.
Cap. Nurse. May not one speak?
Cap. Peace, you humming fool! Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,
For here we need not it.
Lab. Cap. You are too hot.
Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad: Day, night, late, early.
At home, abroad, alone, in company,
Waking, or sleeping, still my care hath been
To have her matched: and having now provided
A gentleman of princely parentage,
Of fair, demesne, youthful, and nobly train'd,
Still'd (as they say) with honorable pars,
Proportion'd as one's heart could wish a man,—
And then to have a wretched puling fool,
A whining mammet, in her fortune's tender,
To answer,—I'll call you none,
I am too young.—I pray you, pardon me;—
But, an you will not wed, I'll pardon you:
For, if you will, you shall not house with me:
Look to't, think on't, I do not use to jest.
Thursday is near; lay hand on heart, advise,
An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;
For, if you be not, hang, beg, starve, die! the streets,
For, by my soul, I'll never acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good:
Trust to't, betheink you, I'll not be forsworn.
[Exit Jul.
Cap. Is there no patching in the clouds,
That sees into the bottom of my grief,
O, sweet my mother, cast me not away!
Delay this marriage, for a month, a week;
Or, if it be not, make the bridal bed
In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.
Lab. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word.
Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee.
[Exit Jul.
Jul. O God!—O nurse! how shall this be prevented?
My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;
How shall that faith return again to earth.
Unless that husband send it me from heaven
By leaving earth!—Comfort me, counsel me.—
Alas! what should heaven possess—stratagems
Upon so soft a subject as myself—
What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort, nurse.
Nurse. Faith, here 'tis; Romeo is banish'd; and all the world to nothing.
That he dares never come back to challenge you
Or, if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then, since he who came so stands as now it doth,
I think it best you married with the county.
O, he's a lovely gentleman!
Romeo's a dissembler to him; an eagle, madam,
Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye,
As Paris hath. Bless me! thou hast so much
I think you are happy in this second match,
For it excels your first; or it if did not,
Your first is dead; or 'twere as good be were,
As living here and you no use of him.
Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?
Nurse. From my soul too,
Or else beseech them both.
Jul. Amen! What to what?
Nurse. Marry, I will; and this is wisely done.
[Exit Jul.
Jul. Ancient damnation! O most wicked fiend!
Is it more sin—to wish me thus for sorrow?
Or to deprive my lord with that same tongue
Which she hath praised him with above compare
So many thousand times? Go, counsellor;
Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain—
I'll to the friar, to know his remedy;
If all else fail, myself have power to die.
[Exit

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Friar. On Thursday, sir? the time is very short.
Par. My father Capulet will have it so;
And thou, nothing slow, to shackle his haste.
Friar. You say you do not know the lady's mind;
Uneven is the course; I like it not.
Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death,
And there have I little talk'd of late.
For Venus smiles not in a house of tears.
Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous,
That she doth give her sorrow so much sway;
And, in his wisdom, bastards our marriage.

Enter Nurse.

[Aside.

Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter Juliet.

Por. Happily met, my lady, and my wife!
Jul. That may be, sir, when I may say, my wife.
Por. That may be, must be, love, on Thursday next.
Jul. What must be shall be.
Fri. That's a certain text.
SCENE III.

ROME AND JULIET.

Par. Come you to make confession to this father?
Jul. To answer that, were to confess to you.
Par. Do not deny to him, that you love me.
Jul. I will confess to you, that I love him.
Par. Do so will you, I am sure, that you love me.
Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price,
Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.
Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abused to those tears, that you have got some story by that;
For it was bad enough before their spite.
Par. Thou wrong'st it, more than tears, with
That report.
Jul. Thou know'st slander, sir, that is a truth;
And what I spake, I spake to my face.
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd it.
Jul. It may be for some, but not for mine own.
Are you in leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?
Fri. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter,
My lord, we must entreat the time alone.
Par. God shield, I should disturb devotion!
Juliet, on Thursday early will I converse you:
Tell then, adieu! and keep this holy kiss.
[Exit Paris.]
I pray thee, leave me to myself to-night; for I have need of many orisons,
To move the heavens to smile upon my state.
Which, well thou knowest, is cross, and full of sin.

Enter LADY CAPULET.
Lu. Cap. What, are you busy! do you need help?
JUL. No, madam; we have 'full such necessaries
As are behoveful for our state to-morrow:
So please you, let me now be left alone,
And let the nurse this night sit up with you; For, I am sure, you have your hands full all,
In this so sudden business.

Lu. Cap. Good-night!
Get thee to bed, and rest; for thou hast need,

[Exit LADY CAPULET and Nurse.
JUL. Farewell!—God knows when we shall meet again.
I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life:
I'll call them back again to comfort me;—
Nurse. What?—Should she be here so long?
My dismal scene I needs must act alone,—
Come, phial,—
What is this mixture do not work at all?
Must all my force be hurried to the grave?—
No, no,—This shall forbid it—lie there there.—
[laying down a Dagger.
What if it be a poison, which the friar
Subly hath minister'd to have me dead?
Lest in this marriage he should be dishonest,
Because he married me before to Romeo!
I can it hear, and yet, methinks, it should not;
For he hath still been tried a holy man:
I will not entertain so bad a thought,—
How, if, when I am laid into the tomb,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeem me! there's a fearful point!
Shall I not then be staid in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there distraught ere my Romeo comes?
Or, if I live, is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Turns with the terror of the place,—
As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where, for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd;—
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies feasting in his shroud; where, as they say,
At some hours in the night, spirits resort;—
Alack, alack! is it not like, that, I say?
So early waking,—what with breathsome smells,
And shrieks like mandrakes torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad?—
O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,
Environd with all these hideous fears?

Or madly play with my forefathers' joints!—
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud
And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,
And with a club, dash out my desperate brains!—
O, look methinks, I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body
Upon a rapier's point.—Stay, Tybalt, stay!—
Romeo, I come! this do I drink to thee;—

[She throws herself on the Bed.

SCENE IV.—Capulet's Hall.

Enter LADY CAPULET and Nurse.
Lu. Cap. Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices
Nurse. They call for dates, and quinces in the pantry.

Enter Capulet.
Lu. Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd,
The curfew-bell hath rung, six o'clock;—
Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica:—
Spare not for cost.
Nurse. Go, go, you cot-quean, go,
Get you to bed; faith, you'll be sick to-morrow
For this night's watching.

[Exeunt.}

Proverbs.
1. The tabulate accounts of the plant called mandrake give it a degree of animal life, and say that, when it is torn from the ground, it groans, which is fatal to him that pulls it up.
2. Distracted.
3. The room where please were made,
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Mantua. A Street.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering eye of sleep,
My dreary path will be paved with flowers at hand;—
My bosom's lord sits lightly in his throne;
And this day, an uncustom'd spirit
Lifts me above the ground with cheerful thoughts.
I know, my lady-custard and found me near (Strange dream! that gives a dead man leave to think.)

And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,
That my heart's blood and an emperor's grace
Ah me! how sweet is love itself possess'd;
When love's shadows are so rich in joy!

Enter BALTHAZAR.

News from Verona!—How now, Balthazar?
Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar?

1 Mus. Faith, we may put up our pipes, and be gone.
Nurse. Honest good fellows, ah, put up; put up;
For, well you know, this is a pitiful case.

Enter Nurse.

Pet. Musicians, O, musicians. Heart's ease, heart's case; O, an you'll have me live, play—heart's ease.

1 Mus. Why heart's case?
Pet. 0, musicians, because my heart itself plays—My heart is full of woes: O, play me some merry dump, to comfort me.

2 Mus. Not a dump we; its no time to play.

Pet. You will not then, then?
Mus. No.
Pet. I will then give you it soundly.
1 Mus. What will you give us?
Pet. No money, on my faith; but the gleeck: I will give you the minstrel.

1 Mus. Then will I give you the serving-creature.

Pet. Then will I play the serving-creature's dagger on your pate. I will carry no crotchets: I'll re you, I'll fa you; Do you note me! An you re us, and fa us, you note us.

1 Mus. Pray you, put up your dagger, and put out your wit.

Pet. The slave at you with my wit; I will dry-beat you with an iron wit, and put up my iron dagger:—Answer me like men:

When griping grief the heart doth wound,
And daisy dumps the mind oppres;
Then music, with her silver sound.

Why, silver sound? why, music with her silver sound?

What say you, Simon Catling?

1 Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.
Pet. Pretty! What say you, Hugh Rebeck?

2 Mus. I say—silver sound, because musicians sound for silver.
Pet. Pretty too!—What say you, James Sound-hog?

3 Mus. Faith, I know not what to say.
Pet. O, I cry you mercy! you are the singer; I will say for you. It is—music with her silver sound, because such fellows as you have seldom gold for sounding:

Then music with her silver sound,
With speedy help doth lend repress.

[Exit, singing.

1 Mus. What a pestilent knife is this same!

2 Mus. Hang him, Jack! Come, we'll in here: tarry for the mourners, and stay dinner.

[Exeunt.]
Romeo. Tush, thou art deceived!
Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee;
Ha! then no letters to me from the friar!
Balth. No, my good lord.
Romeo. No matter; get thee gone,
And hire those horses; I'll be with thee straight.
[Exit Balthasar.
Well, Juliet. I will lie with thee to-night.
Let's see for means.—O, mischief, thou art swift To enter in the thoughts of desperate men!
I do remember an apothecary,
And herewithal he dwells—whom late I noted
In tatter'd weeds, with overw helming brows,
Cutting of simples; meanly he beggar'd.
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones;
And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of woful breadth; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
Remnants of pickle-bowls, and old cakes of roses,
Were thinly scattered, to make up a show.
Noting this penury, to myself I said—
As if a man did need a poison now,
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a cativt wretch would sell it him.
O, this same thought did but fore-run my need;
And this same needy man must sell it me.
As I remember, this should be the house:
Becoming holiday, the tezzer's shop is shut.
What, ho! apothecary!
Enter Apothecary.
Apo. Who calls so loud?
Rom. Come hither, man.—I see, that thou art poor:
Hold, there are forty drachms: let me have
A dram of poison: such soon-spreading geese
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the life-weigher may take full dead;
And that the trunk may be disbur'd of breath
As violently, as hasty powder fired.
Both hurry from the fatal cannon's wound.
Apo. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death, to any he that utters them.
Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness,
And hast to die? I am no less in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression starveth in thine eyes,
Upon thy back hangs ragged misery,
The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then be not poor, but break it, and take this.
Apo. My poverty, but not my will, consents.
Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will.
And in this any hurtful thing you will,
And drink it off; and, if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would despatch you straight.
Rom. There is thy gold; worse poison to men's souls,
Doing more murders in this loathed world,
Than these poor compounds that thou may'st not reject.
I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none,
Farewell: buy food, and get thy soli in flesh.—
Come, cordial, and not poison; go with me
To Juliet's grave, for there must I use thee.
[Exeunt.
SCENE II.—Friar Laurence's Cell.
Enter Friar John.
John. Holy Francesco! friar! brother, ho!
Enter Friar Laurence.
Law. This same should be the voice of Friar John.
Welcome from Mantua: What says Romeo?
Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.
John. The devil hang the longest brother out,
One of our order to associate me,
Here in this city visiting the sick,
And in his name, the searchers of the town,
Suspecting that we both were in the house
Where the infectious pestilence did reign,
Seal'd up the doors, and would not let us forth;
So that my speed to Mantua there was stay'd.
Law. Who bare my letter then to Romeo?
[Stud.
John. I could not send it,—here it is again,—
Not a messenger nor yet brought it home;
So fearful were they of infection.
Law. Unhappy fortune! by my brotherhood,
The letter was not nice, but full of charge,
Of dearth and port, and the neglecting fate.
May do much danger: Friar John, go hence;
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell.
John. Brother, I'll go and bring it thee.
[Exit.
Law. Now must I to the monument alone;
Within the course of two hours will fair Juliet wake;
She will bestrew her grave with such thing as Hath no notice of these accidents;
But I will write again to Mantua,
And do my best to have all things come;
Poor living corse, close'd in a dead man's tomb!
[Exit.
SCENE III.—A Churchyard; in it, a Monument belonging to the Capulets.
Enter Paris and his page, bearing Flowers and a Torch.
Par. Give me thy torch, boy: Hence, and stand about;
Yet put it out, for I would not be seen.
Under your new trees lay they all along,
Holding thiine ear close to the hollow ground;
So shall no foot upon the churchyard tread,
(Beneath a uniform, with digging up of graves,)
But thon shall hear it: whistles them thry.
As signal that thou hear'st some thing approach.
Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.
Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the churchyard; yet I will adventure.
[Exeunt.
Par. Sweet flower, with flowers I strew thy tender bed;
Sweet tomb, that in thy circuit dost contain
The perfect model of eternity;
Fair Juliet, that with angels dost remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hands;
That living honor thee, and, being dead,
With funeral praises do adorn thy tomb!
[The Boy whistles.
The boy gives warning, something doth approach.
What cursed foot wanders this way to night,
To cross my obsequies, and true love's rites?
What, with a torch!—muffle me, night, a while.
[Exeunt.
Enter Romeo and Balthazar, with a Torch, Maltock, &c.
Rom. Give me that mattock, and the wenching iron.
Hold, take this letter; early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.
Give me the light: Upon thy life, I charge thee,
What'er thou hearst or seest, stand all aloof,
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is, partly, to behold my lady's face.
But, chiefly, to take thence from her dead finger
A precious ring; a ring that I must use
In dear employment; therefore hence, begone:
But if thou, jealous, dost return to pry
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heaven, I will tear thence joint by joint,
And strew this hungry churchyard with thy limbs:
The time and my intents are savage wild;
More force, and more inexcusable bat,
Than empty tigers, or the roaring sea.
But, I will be gone, sir, and not trouble you.
Rom. So shall thou show me friendship.—Take the letter.
Live, and be prosperous; and farewell, good fellow.
Bel. For all this same I'll hide me hereabout;
His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt.
[Exeunt.
Rom. This day, I'll tear this maw, the womb of death,
Gorged with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open.
[Breaking open the Door of the Monument.
And, in the meantime, I'll cram thee with more food.
Par. This is that banish'd haughty Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin,—with which grief,
It is supposed, the fair creature died,—
[&c. On a trivial or the subject.
1 1 6. A matter of importance.
To grubs and eyeless skulps! as I discern, It burneth on the Capel's monument.

Bat. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my master, One that you love.

Fri. Who is it?

Bat. Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he been there?

Bat. Full half an hour.

Fri. Go with me to the vault.

Bat. I dare not, sir; My master knows not, but I am gone hence; And fearfully did menace me with death; I'll do it shall look on his intents.

Fri. Stay then, I'll go alone.—Farewell come upon me:

O, much I fear some ill-fitting thing.

Bat. Alack, alack, what blood is this, which stains The stony entrance of this sepulchre!— What mean these masterless and gory swords To be discolor'd by this place of peace?

[Enters the Monument.]

Romeo! O, pale!—Who else? what, Paris, too! And steeple in blood!—Ah, what an unknown hour Is guilty of this lamentable chance!— The lady in the chamber who flies here!

Jul. O, comfortable friar! where is my lord? I do remember well where I should be. And there I am:—Where is my Romeo?

[Exit within.]

Fri. I hear some noise.—Lady, come from that nest Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep; A greater power than we can contradict Hath thwarted our intents; come, come away; Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead, And Paris too: come, I'll dispose of thee Among a sisterhood of holy nuns: Stay not to question, for the watch is coming; Come, go, good Juliet,—[Noise again.] I dare stay not longer.

Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not away.— What's here? a cup, clasp'd in my true love's hand? Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end;— O charl! drink all; and leave no friendly drop, To help me after!—I will kiss thy lips; Haply, some poison yet doth hang on them. To make me die with a restorative. [Kisses her.] Thy lips are warm! 1 Watch. [Within.] Lead, boy!—Which way? 2 Watch. Yea, more!—Then I'll be brief!—O happy dagger!— [Snicethong Romeo's Dagger.] This is my father's, and his honour's: [Stabs herself.] there rude, and let me die.

[Dies.]

Enter Watch, with the Page of Paris.

Page. This is the place; there, where the torch doth burn.

1 Watch. The ground is bloody; Search about the churchyead:

Go, some of you, wher'e you find, attache.

[Exeunt some.]

Petiful sight! here lies the country slain;— And Juliet bleading; warm, and newly dead, Who here hath lain these two days dead,— Go, tell the prince,—unto the Capulet's, Raise up the Montague,—some others search;— [Exeunt other Watchmen. We see the ground where the late pilot, now at his ease lie; But the true ground of all these pitiose woes We cannot without circumstance descre.

Enter some of the Watch, with BALLIARD.

2 Watch. Here's Romeo's man, we found him in the churchyard.

1 Watch. Hold him in safety, till the prince come hither.

Enter another Watchman, with FRARR LAURENCE.

3 Watch. Here is a friar, that tremhles, sighs, and weeps: We took the watchcock and this spade from him, As he was coming from this churchyard side.

1 Watch. A great suspicion! Stay the friar too.

[Enter the Prince and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up, That calls our person from our morning's test?
Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and others.

Cap. What should it be, that they so shriek abroad!

1. A. Cap. The people in the street—Romeo, some—Juliet, and some—Paris; and all run, With open outcry, toward our monument.

Prince. What fear is this, which startles in our ears?

1 Watch. Sovereign, here lies the county Paris slain; And Romeo dead; and Juliet, dead before, Warm and new kill'd.

Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes.

1 Watch. Here is a riar, and slaughter'd Romeo's man; With instruments upon them, fit to open These deadly men's tombs.

Cap. O, heavens!—O wife! look how our daughter bleeds! This dagger hath mischanc'd—for lo! his house Is empty on the back of Montague.—

And is mis-shafted in my daughter's bosom.

1. A. Cap. O me! this sight of death is as a bell, That warns my old age to a sepulture.

Enter MONTAGUE and others.

Prince. Seal up the mouth of outrage for a while, Till we can clear these ambiguities,
And knew their spring, their lead, their true descent.
And then I shall be general of your woes,
And lead you even to death: Meanime forbear,
And let me chance be slave to patience.—
Bring forth the parties of suspicion.
Then shall I be the greatest; able to do least,
Yet most suspected, as the true and place
Both made against me, of this direful murder;
And here I stand, both to impeach and purge
Myself condemned and myself excus'd.

Prince. Then say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. I will be brief for my short date of breath
Is not so long as is a tedious tale.
Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet;
And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife: I married them; and their stolen marriage-day
Was Tybalt's dooms-day, whose untimely death Banished the new-made bridegroom from this city;
For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pined.
You—to remove that siege of grief from her,—
Betroth'd, and would have married her perforce,
To county Paris;—Then comes she to me;
And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means
To rid her from this second marriage.
Or, in my cell there would she kill herself.
Then gave I her, so tutor'd by my art,
A sleeping potion; which so took effect
As I intended, for it work'd on her
The form of death; meantime I writ to Romeo,
That he should hither come at this dire night,

3. A. i.e. the steeple.

To help to take her from her borrow'd grave,
Being the time the poison's force should cease.
But he which bore my letter, friar John,
Was stand by accident; and yesternight
Return'd my letter back: Then all alone,
At the prefixed hour of her walking
Came I to take her from her kindred's vault;
Meaning to keep her closely at my cell,
Till I conveniently could send to Romeo;
But, when I came, (some minute ere the time
Of her awakening,) here unlately lay
The noble Paris, and true Romeo, dead.
She wakes; and I entreated her come forth,
And bear this work of heaven with patience:—
But then a noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too tender, would not go with me,
But (as it seems,) did violence on herself.
All this I know; and to the marriage,
Her nurse is privy: And, if taught in this
Misarief'd by my fault, let my old life
Be secure before his time, unto the rigor of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man,
Where's Romeo's man? what can he say in this?
But, I brought my master news of Juliet's death;
And then in post he came from Mantua,
To this same place, to this same monument.
This letter he early bid me give his father;
And threaten'd me with death, going in the vault,
If I departed not, and left him there.
Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague!
See what a scuffle is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love;
And, I, for working at your discord so,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen:—All are punish'd.

Cap. O brother Montague, give me thy hand: This is my daughter's jointure, for no more can I demand.

Mon. But I can give thee more:
For I will raise her statue in pure gold;
That, while Verona by that name is known,
There shall no figure at such rate be set,
As that of true and faithful Juliet.

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie;
Poor sacrifices of our enmity:

Prince. A glooming peace this morning with it brings:
The sun for sorrow will not show his head: Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things;
Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished;
For never was a story of more woe,
Than this of Juliet and her Romeo. [Exeunt.

SCENE, Elsinore.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Elsinore. A Platform before the Castle.

FRANCISCO on his Post. Enter to him BERNARDO.

BER. Who's there?

FRAN. Nay, answer me: stand, and unfold yourself.

BER. Long live the king!

FRAN. Bernardo!

BER. He.

FRAN. You come most carefully upon your hour.

BER. 'Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco.

FRAN. For this relief, much thanks; 'tis bitter cold.

And I am sick at heart.

BER. Have you had quiet guard?

FRAN. Not a mouse stirring.

BER. Well, good-night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,

The rivals of my watch, bid them make haste.

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

FRAN. I think, I hear them.—Stand, ho! Who is there?

HOR. Friends to this ground.

MAR. And liegenmen to the Dane.

FRAN. Give you good-night.

MAR. O, farewell, honest soldier:

Who hath relieved you?

FRAN. Bernardo hath my place. [Exit Francisco.

BER. Give you good-night.

FRAN. [Exit Horatio.

BER. What is Horatio there?

HOR. A piece of him.

BER. Welcome, Horatio; Welcome, good Marcellus.

HOR. What, has this thing appear'd again tonight?

BER. I have seen nothing.

* Partners.

Mar. Horatio says, 'tis but our fantasy,

And will not let belief take hold of him,

Touching this dreadful sight, twice seen of us;

Therefore I have entreated him, along

With us to watch the minutes of this night;

That, if again this apparition come,

He may approve our eyes, and speak to it.

Hor. Tush! tush! 'twill not appear.

BER. Sit down awhile;

And let us once again assail your ears,

That are so fortified against our story,

What we two nights have seen.

HOR. Well, sit we down,

And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

BER. Last night of all,

When you same star, that's westward from the pole,

Had made his course to illumine that part of heaven

Where now it burns, Marcellus, and myself;

The bell then beating one,—

Mar. Peace, break thee off; look, where it comes again!

Enter Ghost.

BER. In the same figure, like the king that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar, speak to it, Horatio.

BER. Looks it not like the king? mark it, Horatio.

HOR. Most like;—it harrows me with fear, and wonder.

BER. It would be spoke to.

MAR. Speak to it, Horatio.

HOR. What art thou, that usurpest this time of night?

Together with that fair and warlike form

In which the majesty of buried Denmark

Did sometimes march! By heaven, I charge thee, speak.

Mar. It is offended.

BER. See! it walks away.

HOR. Stay, speak; speak, I charge thee, speak.

[Exit Ghost.

* Make good, or establish.
HAMLET.

Re-enter Ghost.

But, soft: behold! lo, where it comes again!
I'll cross it, though it负债 what me—so, Illusion! If thou hast any sound, or use of voice, Speak to me: if thou art good any thing to be done, That may to thee do ease, and grace to me, Speak to me: if thou art privy to thy country's fate, Which, happily, foreknowing may avoid, O speak! Or, if thou hast upborne in thy life Exerted treasure in the womb of earth, For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death, and lock crost. Speak of it:—stay, and speak. Stop it. Marcellus Mar. Shall I strike at it with my partisan? Hor. Du, if it will stand. Ber. *Tis here! *Tis here! [Exit Ghost.

We do it wrong, being so majestic, To offer it the show of violence; For, this, is the air, invulnerable, And our vain blows meltuous mockery. Ber. Let's speak, who's what a cock crew. Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing Upon a tearful summons. I have heard, The cock that crow's is the trumpet of the morn. Doth with his lily and shrill-sounding breath Awake the god of day; and, at his warning Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air, The extravagant and imperious spites To his continue: and of the truth herein This present object made probation. Mar. It faded on the crowning of the cock. Some say, that ever against that season springs Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated. This bird of dawning singeth all night long: And then they say no spirit dares stir abroad; The nightingale and lark, then not one planet, No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm, So hallow'd and so gracious is the time. Hor. So have I heard, and do in part believe it. But, look, the morn; in russet mantle clad, Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill, Break we our watch up; and, by my advice, Let us impart what we have seen to-night Unto young Hamlet: for, upon my life, This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him: Do you consent we shall acquaint him with, As soon as may be, this amusing duty? Mar. Let's do't, I pray; and I this meaning know Where we shall find him most convenient. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room of State in the same.

Enter the KING, QUEEN, HAMLET, POLONIUS LAERTES, VOLTIMAND, CONELIUS, Lords, and ATTENDANTS.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death The memory be green; and that it us befitted To bear our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom To be contracted in one hour of woe; Yet so far faith discretion fought with nature, That we did wisest sort to row them to their deaths, Together with remembrance of ourselves. Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen, The imperial joint-stock of this Western state, Have we, as twere, with a defeated joy, With one suspective, and one drooping eye; With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage, In equal state and equal delight and dejection: Taken to wife: nor have we herein bard Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone With this affair along:—For all, our thanks. Now when that fate of your departures, the universals, Holding a weak supposal of our worth; Or thinking, by our late dear brother's death, Our state to be disjoint and out of frame, Collecting with this dream of his accomplishment, He hath not fail'd to pester us with message, Importing the surrender of those lands Lost by his father, with all lands of law, To our most valiant brother.—So much for him.
Now for myself, and for this time of meeting. Thus much the business is: We have here writ
To Norway, under some suspicion. For that:
Who, importun and bed-rid, sorely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose,—to suppress
His further gait! therein; in that the levies,
The seamen, and the forces, are both out
Of his subject:—and we here despatch
You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltimand,
For bearers of this greeting to old Norway;
Get you to no further place than Wittowsea.
To business with the king, more than the scope
Of these dilated articles allow.
Farewell; and let your haste commend your duty.
Cor. Poul, and all things, will we show our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing: heartily farewell.
[Exeunt Voltimand and Cornelius.
And now, Laertes, what's the news with you?
You told us of some suit: What is't, Laertes?
You cannot speak of reason to the Dane,
And lose your voice: What wouldst thou beg,
Laertes,
That shall not be my offer, not thy asking?
The head is not more native to the heart,
The hand more instrumental to the mouth,
Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.
What wouldst thou have, Laertes?

Laert. Fear not, my lord, your leave and favor to return to France:
From whence, though willingly, I came to Denmark,
To show my duty in your coronation:
Yet, Horatio, I must, therefore, unfold,
My thoughts and wishes bend again toward France,
And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.

King. Have you your father's leave! What says
Pтол. Pol. He hath, my lord, wrung from me my slow leave,
By laborious petition; and, at last,
Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent:
By these means, you give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be thine,
And thy best graces; spend it at thy will,—
But, Laertes, in my kingdom;

Ham. A little more than kin, and less than kind.

[Aside.

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you?—
Ham. Not so, my lord, I am too much i'the sun.
Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy meditated color off,
And let thy true nine color come like a friend to Denmark.
Do not, for ever, with thy varied lods
Seek for thy noble father in the dust:
Thou know'st, 'tis common; all, that live, must die,
Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.
Queen. If it be,
Why seems it so particular with thee?

Ham. Seems, madam! I say, it; I know not seems.
'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
Nor wavy suspiration of forced breath,
No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,
Nor the defected 'havior of the visage,
Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief,
That one may think there's more in heaven
Than is dreamt of in your philosophy;
For you are actions that a man might play:
But I have that within, which passeth show;
These, but the trappings and the suits of woe.

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,
To give these mourning duties to your father:
But, you must know, your father lost a father:
That father lost, lost this; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term
To do obsequious sorrow: But to perceive
In this melancoly, in this deplorable, in this Impious stubborness: 'Tis unmanly grief;
It shows a will most incorrect to heaven,
A heart unfortified, or mind impatient.
And without regarding simple and unskill'd:
For what we know, must be, and is as common
As any the most vulgar thing to sense,
Why should we, in our several opposition,
Take it to heart? Fie! 'tis a fault to heaven,
A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
A way, path.

* Lowering eyes.
HAMLET,

Act I.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it follow'd hard upon.

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral-ged meats
Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

Hor. My lord, I saw him once, he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again in heaven
Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio.

My father,—Methinks, I see my father.

Hor. My lord?

Ham. In my mind's eye, Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once, he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again in heaven
Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio.

Hor. Saw, who?

Ham. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. The king my father!

Hor. Season your admiration for a while
With an attent ear; till I may deliver,
I, from the wax to the wax, the image
That marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love, let me hear.

Hor. Two nights together had these gentlemen, Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,
In the dead waist and middle of the night,
Been thus encountered. A figure like your father,
Armed at point, exactly cap-a-pi.
Appears before them, and with solemn march,
Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk'd,
By their oppress'd and fear-surprised eyes,
Within his truncate length; whilst they, distill'd
And almost to jelly with the act of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me
In dreadful secrecy impart they did;
And I with them, the third night kept the watch:
Whereat they had deliver'd, both in time,
Form of the thing, each word made true and good,
The apparition comes: I knew your father:
True hands are not more like him.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My lord, upon the platform where we watch'd.

Ham. Did you not speak to it?

Hor. My lord, I did;
But answer made it none: yet once, methought,
It lifted up its head, and did address
Its motion, like as it would speak;
But, even then, the morning cock crow loud;
And at the sound it shriek'd in haste away,
And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. Tis very strange.

Hor. As do I live, my honor'd lord, 'tis true;
And we did think it writ down in our duty,
To report it to your lordship.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sirs, but this troubles me.
Hold you the watch to-night?

All. We do, my lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you?

All. Arm'd, my lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

All. My lord, from head to foot.

Ham. Then saw you not

His face?

Hor. O, yes, my lord! he wore his beard up.

Ham. What, look'd he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more
In sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Ham. Nay, very pale.

Hor. And fix'd his eyes upon you?

Ham. Most constantly.

Ham. It would, I have been there.

Ham. It would have much amazed you.

Ham. Very like.

Very like: Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell
A hundred.

Ham. Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw it.

Ham. His beard was grizzled? no?

Hor. He was, as I have seen it in his life, a
Sable silver'd.

Ham. I will watch to-night;

Pceanence, 'twill walk again.

Hor. I warrant it, will.

Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should range,

Christo. — That part of the helmet which protects the lower part of the face and may be lifted up.

Attire. — The mask which covers the eyes.

And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,
Let it be tellable in your silence still:
And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,
Gave it an undertow setting, but not current,
I will requite your loves: So, fare you well:
Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,
I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honor.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you: Farewell.

[Exit Hon., Mar., and Bern.

My father's spirit in arms; all is not well:
I doubt some foul play: would the night were come!
Till then sit still my soul: Foul deeds will rise,
Though all the earth enwreathen them, to men's eyes.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in Polonius's House.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My necessaries are embark'd; farewell:
And, sister, as the winds give benefit,
And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favor,
Hold it a dead treason, and a stay in blood,
A violet in the youth of pruny nature,
Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and supplience of a minute;

No more.

Oph. No more but so?

Laer. Think it no more:
For nature, crescent, do not grow alone
With them that have a thought, and both, as tis born waxes,
The honest service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Theret, he loves you now;
And now no soul, nor canst thou but presum
The virtue of his will: but you must fear,
His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;
For he himself is subject to his birth;
He may not, as unadorn'd persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and the health of the whole state;
And therefore must his choice be circumstance'd
Into the voice and yielding of that body
Whereof he is the head: Then if he says he loves you,
It fits your wisdom so far to believe it,
As he in his particular act and place
May give his saying deed; which is no further
Than the main force of Denmark goes withal.
Then weigh what loss your honor may sustain,
If with such an errand you have sent him.
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity.

Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister;
And keep you in the rear of your affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire.
The chaste maid is prodigious enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon:
Virtue itself scapes not calumnious strokes;
The canker galls the infants of the spring,
Too oft before their bottoms be disclos'd;
And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
Contagions blastments are most imminent.
Be wary then: best safety lies in fear;
Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

Oph. Be not rash in the effect of this good lesson keep:
As watchman to my heart: But, good my brother,
Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven;
Whilst, as the puff'd and reckless libertine,
Himself the primate path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own end.

Laer. O fear me not.

I stay too long—But here my father comes.

Enter Polonius.

A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! abroad, abroad, for shame;
The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail,
And your boat stands for Tener—Tener—my blessing with you; [Laying his hand on Laertes's Head.
And these few precepts in thy memory

*Increasing.

*Sinews.

*Subtlely, deceit.

*Discord.

*Believing.

*Listen.

*Ludicrous.

*Pego's not his own lessons.
Look thou character? Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportion'd thoughts to voice
Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar,
The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried, Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel:
But be not dull in those new-dun, unledg'd comrade. Beware Of entrance to a quarrel: but, being in, Bear it, that the opposer may beware of thee. Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice:
Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment.
Costly thy habit, as thy purse can buy, But not expressed in fancy; rich, not gaudy For the apparel oft proclaims the man; And they in France of the best rank and station, Are most select and generous; chief in that. Neither a borrower, nor a lender be: For loan oft loses itself, and friend is engraven. Bear not the wrath of man against the man;
Nordurst thou then, when thou art in the right, Bear the. At this rate, 'tis more than wisdom Do what this mean, my lord? Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his reose, Keeps watch, and the swaggarer up-spring?reets; And, as he drains his draughts of Ebenish down, The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out The triumph of his pledge. Hor. Is it a custom? Ham. Ay, marry, 'is't: But to my mind, though I native here, And to the manner born,—it is a custom More honor'd in the breach, than the observance. This heavy-headed revel, cast and west, Makes us traducers, and tax'd of other nations: They elegantly pil'd, and with the winter's face, Soothingly sound asleep, our nation's pride, (as some, theproach'd for some, that for some vicious mouth of nature in them, As, in their birth, (wherein they are not guilty, since nature cannot choose his origin,) By the o'erweight of other people's complexions; Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason; Or, by some habit, that too much o'er-leaves The form of pleasant manners;—these men,— Carrying, I say, the weight of one another, Being nature's livery, or fortune's star,— Their virtues else (be they as pure as grace, As infinite as man may undergo,) Shall in the general course not take corruption From that particular fault: The dam of base Both the noble substance oft'n doup, To his own scandal.

Enter Ghost.

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes! Ham. Angels and minister of grace defend us— Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin dam'd, Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from hell, Be thy intents wicked, or charitable, Thou com'st in such a questionable shape, That I will speak to thee: I'll call thee, Hamlet, King, father, royal O., answer me:
Let me not burst in ignorance! but tell, Why thy canoniz'd bones, hears'd in death, Have burst their cerements? why the sculp'ture, Wherein we saw thee quiet in-urn'd, Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws, To cast thee up again? What may this mean, That thou, dead corse, came again in unsteel Revisit'st the glimpse of the moon, Making night hideous; and we feel of nature, So horribly to shake our disposition. With thoughts beyond the reachings of our souls? Say, why is this? what is't? What should we do! Hor. It beckons you to go away with it, As if it some impartial did desire To you alone. Mar. Look, with what courteous action It waves you to a more removed ground; But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no means. Ham. It will not speak; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Mar. Why, what should be the fear? I do not set my life at a pin's fee. And, for my soul, what can it do to that, Being a thing immortal as itself? It waves me forth again;—I'll follow it.

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the flood, my lord? Or to the dreadful summits of the cliff?

SCENE IV.—The Platform.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, and Marcellus.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold. Hor. It is a nipping air, and a cages' air. Ham. What hour now? Hor. I think it lacks of twelve. Mar. No, it is strack. Hor. Indeed? I heard it not; it then draws near the season, Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk. [A flourish of Trumpets, and Ordinance shot off, within.

SCENE IV.—Prince of Denmark.
That beetles o'er his bust into the sea!
And there some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason,
And draw you into madness! think of it:
The very place puts toys of desperation
Without more motive, into every brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath.

Hamlet. It wakes me still:—
Go on; I'll follow thee.

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Nemean lion's—
Nowhere of cursed hekans.

Still am I call'd—unhand me, gentlemen:

Hamlet. By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets

Me go.—

I say, away;—Go on; I'll follow thee.

[Exeunt Ghost and Hamlet.

Ham. Whither wilt thou lead me! Speak, I'll go no further.

Ghost. Mark me, my lord.

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come,
When to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Myst'ring rendered up itself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing
To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak, I an bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

Ham. What?

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit;
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night;
And, for the day, to comb to fast in fires,
Till the foul Crimes, done in my days of nature,
Are hallow'd by divine purg'd away,
But I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison-house.
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood;
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres;
Thy knotted and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end
Like bars up the frond pinnacled; but this eternal blazon
Must not be
To ears of flesh and blood:—Lay, list, O list!—
If thou dost ever thy dear father love,—

Ham. O, heavenly!

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder.

Ham. Murder! Murder most foul, as in the best it is;
But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Made he to know it; that I, with wings as swift
As meditation, or the thoughts of love,
May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. And daster shouldst thou be than the fat weed
That rots itself in case on Lethie wharf,
Woukst thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet, hear;—
Tis given out, that, sleeping in mine orchard,
A serpent stung me; so that the whole ear of Denmark
Is by a forged process of my death
Riankly abus'd; but know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father's hio
Now wears his crown.

Ham. O, my prophetic soul! my uncle.

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast
With witchcraft of his wit, with courteous gifts,
(O wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce!) won to his shameslustful

Ham. The will of my most seeming-virtuous queen;
O, Hamlet, what a fatal engross was that,

From me, whose love was of that dignity,
That it went hand-in-hand even with the vow
I made to her in marriage; and to decline
Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine!

Ham. But virtue, as it never will be mov'd,
Though with weakness condens'd in it in a volume of heaven;
So lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.

Ham. So think'st thou, methinks! I went the morning air;
Brief let me be—Sleeping within mine orchard,
My custom always of the afternoon,
Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
Or rather pluck'd him from his solemn line in a vault,
And in the porches of mine cars did pour
The leperous distinement: whose effect
Holds such an enmity with blood of man,
That, like a poison'd fellow, it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body;
And, with a sudden vigor, it doth possess
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine;
And a most instant letter bark'd about,
Most lazar-like, with vile and loutish crust,
All my smooth body.

Ham. Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of like, of crown, of queen, at once despatch'd?
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Hush'd, unhouse'd, disappoint'd, unannelid
No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head;
O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!
If thou hast nature it in thee, bear it not;
Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest.
But, hopoever thou pursuest this act,
Taint not thy perfection, nor let thy soul contive
Against thy mother aught; leave her to heaven,
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
To prosper, and sting her. Fare thee well at once!
The glow-worm shows the maim'd to be near,
And 'gins to pale his intellectual fire.

Adieu, adieu, adieu! remember me.

[Exit.]

Ham. O all you host of heaven! O earth! What else?

And shall I couple hell!—O eye,—Hold, hold, my heart;

And, you, my sinews, grow not instant old,
But bear me stilly np.—Remember thee!
Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat
In this distracted globe! Remember thee!

From this cold comforter, from the table of my memory,
I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation o'erposed there;
And let the commingled sand of all alone and live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmix'd with baser matter; yes, by heaven,
O most pernicious woman!

O villain, saucy, damned villain! My tables—meet it is, I set it down,
That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain;
At least, I am sure, it may be so in Denmark:

Hiding.

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word;

It is, Adieu, adieu! remember me.

I have a word.

Hor. [Within.] My lord, my lord,—

Mar. [Within, Lord Hamlet.]

Hor. [Within.] Heaven secure him.

Ham. So be it.

Mar. [Within.] Hie, ho, ho, ho, my lord!

Ham. Hie, hie, ho, ho, boy come, hard, come.

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

Hor. How is't, my noble lord?

Ham. O wonderful! Good, my lord, tell it.

Ham. You shall reveal it.

Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Ham. Hor. Henbane.

Mar. Without having received the sacrament.

Hor. Unleavened, unprepared.

Mar. With water and unleavened.

Hor. Sayings, sentences.

ACT II. SCENE I.

PRINCE OF DENMARK.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing, swearing, quarrelling, Drabbling?—You may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonor him.

Pol. Faith, no; as you may season it in the chaleur.

You must not put another scandal on him,
That he is open to incontinency;
That's not my meaning: but breathe his faults so quarterly,
That they may be seen the taints of liberty;
The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind;
A savagery in unreclaimed blood,
Of general assault.

Rey. But, my good lord,—

Pol. Wherefore should you do this?

Rey. Ay, my lord, I would know that.

Pol. Marry, sir, here’s my drift:
And, I believe, it is a fetch of warrant:
You laying these slight slurs on my son,
As twere ding a little soil’d i’ the working,
Mark you.
Your party in converse, him you would sound,
Having ever seen in the prominent crimes,
The youth you brought, guilty he be assured,
He closes with you in this consequence;
Good sir, or so; or friend, or gentleman,—
According to the phrase, or the addition,
Of man, and country.

Rey. Very good, my lord.

Pol. And then, sir, does he do this,—He does—
What was I about to say?—by the mass, I was about to say something,—Where did I leave?
Rey. At, closes in the consequence.

Scene 1.—A Room in Polonius’s House.

Enter POLONIUS AND REYNALDO.

Pol. Give him this money, and these notes, Reynaldo.

Rey. Will, my lord.

Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good Reynaldo,
Before you visit him, to make inquiry
Of his behavior.

Rey. My lord, I did intend it.

Pol. Marry, well said: very well said. Look you, sir,
Inquire me first what Danskers are in Paris;
And bow, and who, what means, and where they keep,
What company, at what expense; and finding,
By this a consequence and drift of question,
That they do know his son, come you more nearer
Than your particular demands will touch it:
Take you, as ’twere, some distant knowledge of
The subject, and some neighbour.

As thus,—I know his father, and his friends,
And, in part, him:—Do you mark this, Reynaldo?

Rey. Ay, very well, my lord.

Pol. If, in part, him:—but, you may say, not well;
But, if’t be he I mean, he’s very well;
Add it so, and so, and so;—and there put him on
What forgets you please; marry, none so rank
As may dishonor him; take heed of that:
But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips,
As are companions noted and most known
To youth and liberty.

Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Propose the oath, my lord.

Rey. Never to speak of this that you have seen,
Swear by thy sword.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Hie et ubique? then we’ll shift our ground.

Come hitter, gentlemen.

And lay your hands again upon my sword;
Swear by my sword,

Never to speak of this that you have heard,
Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear by my sword.

Ham. Well said! old mule! canst work it the earth so fast!
A worthy fancy!—Once more remove, good friends.

Pol. 0 day and night, and this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome.
There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

Pol. Here, as before, never, so help you mercy!

Ham. How strange or odd soe'er I hear myself,
As I, prudence, hereafter shall think meet
To put an antie disposition on.—
That you, at such times seeing me, never shall,
With arms encumber’d thus, or this head-shake,
Or biting pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,
As, Well, well, you know;—or, We could, an if we would;—or, If we list to speak;—or, There be, an if they might;—
Or such ambiguous giving out, to note
That you know aught of me,—Thus do you swear,
So grace and mercy at your most need help you!

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit! So, gentlemen.

Pol. With all my love I do commend me to you:
And what so poor a man as Hamlet is
May do, to express his love and friendship to you,
God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together;
And still your fingers on your lips, I pray,
The time is out of joint:—O cursed spite!
That ever I was born to set it right!

Nay, come, let’s go together. [Exeunt.]
HAMLET, Act II.

Pol. At, closes in the consequence.—Ay, marry; he does with you thus,—I know the gentleman; I saw him yesterday, Occurred to me, or then, or then; with such, or such, and, as you say, There was he gaming; there o’ertook in his race; That turning out at leaping, or, perchance, I saw him enter such a house as toys and japes; \( \text{(Violette, a brother,) or so forth.} \)

See you now; Your half of Jutland takes this carp of truth; And thus do we of wisdom and of reach, With windmills, and with assays of time, By indirections and directions out; So, by my former lecture and advice Shall you my son: You have me, have you not? Rej. My lord, I have.

Pol. God be wi’ you; fare you well.

Rej. Good, my lord.

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself.

Rej. I shall, my lord.

And let him ply his music.

Rej. Well, my lord. [Exit.

Enter Ophelia.

Pol. Farewell!—How now, Ophelia? what’s the matter!

Oph. O, my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted!

Pol. What, in the name of heaven? Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet, Lord Hamlet,—with his doublet all unbraced, No hat upon his head; his stockings fault, Lascivious, and disorderly he wandered; Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other; And, with a look so piteous in purport, As if he had been boxed out of hell, To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?

Oph. Truly, I do fear it.

Pol. What said he?

Oph. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard; Then goeth he to the length of all his arm; And with his other hand thus over his brow, He falls to such perusal of my face, As he would draw it. Long stay’d he so; At last,—a little shaking of mine arm, And thrice his head thus waving up and down,— He rais’d a sight so piteous and profound, As it did seem to scatter all his bulk, And out his being; That done, he lets me go; And with his head over his shoulder turn’d, He seem’d to find his way without his eyes; For out of doors he went without their helps, And, to the last, bended their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me; I will go seek the king. This is the very ecstasy of love; Whose violent property foredooms itself, And leads the will to desperate undertakings, As if it was the passion of the body, That does afflict our nature. I am sorry,— What, have you given him any hard words of late?

Oph. No, my good lord: but, as you did command,

I did repel his letters, and denied His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.

I am sorry, that with better heed and judgment, I had not quited him: I fear’d, he did but trifle, And meant to wreck thee; but, beshrew my jealous! It seems, it is as proper to our age, To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions, As it is common for the younger sort To lack direction. Come, go with the king; This must be known; which, being kept close, might move More grief to hide, than hate to utter love. Comin. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern!

Moreover that we much did long to see you, the need, we have to use you, did provoke Our hasty sending. Something have you heard Of Hamlet’s transformation; so I call it, Since not the exterior nor the inward man Occurces that it was. What should it be, More than his father’s death, that thus hath put him So much from the understanding of himself, I cannot persuade; I entreat you both, That,—being of so young days brought up with him; And, since, so neighbor’d to his youth and times,— You vouchsafe your rest here in our court Some little time: so by your companies To draw him on to pleasures; and to gather, So much from your occasion you may please, Whether aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus, That, open’d, lies within our remedy. Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk’d of you: And, sure, I am, two men there are not living, To whom he more adheres. It will please you To show your country, and, in manner will, As to expend your time with us awhile, For the supply and profit of our hope, Your visitation shall receive such thanks As fits a king’s remembrance. Both your majesties Might, by the sovereign power you have of us, Put your dread pleasures more into command Than to entreat. But we both obey; And here give up ourselves, in the full bent To lay ourselves freely at your feet, To be commanded.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz, and gentle Guildenstern.

Queen. Thanks, Guildenstern, and gentle Rosencrantz: And I beseech you, instantly to visit My too much changed son,—so, some of you, And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guis. Heavens make our presence, and our practices, Pleasant and helpful to him! Queen. [Exit Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and some Attendants.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good lord,

Are joyfully return’d.

King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? assure you, my good lord,

I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,

Both to my God, and to my gracious king:

And I do think, (or else this brain of mine Hunted with too much of policy so surfeit, As it hath used to do,) that I have found The very cause of Hamlet’s lunacy.

Que. O, speak of that: that do I long to hear.

Pol. Give me first admittance to the ambassadors;

My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them in.

[Exit Polonius.

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found The head and source of all your son’s discontent. Queen. I doubt it is no other but the man, His father’s death, and our over-hasty marriage.

Re-enter Polonius, with Voltimand and Conradians.

King. Well, we shall suit him.—Welcome, my good friends! Say, Voltimand, what from your brother Norway? Volt. Our last hearty return of greetings, and desires. Upon our first, he sent out to suppress His nephew’s levies; which to him appeared To be a preparation ‘gainst the Polich. But, letter’d he, and, truly he is told, It was against your highness: Whereat griev’d, That so his sickness, age, and impotence, Was falsely borne in hand,—sends out arrests On Fortresses; which he, in brief, obey’d, Receives rebuke from Norway; and, in fine, Makes vow before his uncle, never more To give the assay of arms against your majesty.

† Unostant exertion. † Scout. † Poland. † Imposed on.
Scene II. PRINCE OF DENMARK.

Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee;
And his commission to employ those soldiers,
So brave as before, against the back;
With an entreaty, herein further shown,
That it might please you to give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise;
On such regards of safety, and allowance,
As therein are set down.

Pol. It likenes us well:
And, at our more consider'd time, we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business.

Queen. Mean time, we thank you for your well-took labor:
Go to your rest; at night we'll last together;
Most welcome home!

[Exeunt Voltimand and Cornelius.

Pol. This business is well ended.
My liege, and madam, to your most pious ears,
What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night, night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste night, day, and time,
Therefore,—since brevity is the soul of wit,
And tedious limbs the outward forkishes,
I will be brief: Your noble son is mad:
Mad call I it: for, to define true madness,
What else but to be nothing but mad else?
But let that go.

Queen. More matter with less art.

Pol. Madam, I swear I use no art at all.
That it is mad, his true: The truth is pity;
And pity 's his true: a foolish figure;
But farewell it, for I will use no art.

Mad let me grant him this: Now gather and surmise:
That we find out the cause of this effect;
Or, rather say, the cause of this defect;
For this effect, defective, comes by cause:
Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.
Perpendicular.
I have a daughter; have, while she is mine;
Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,
As any he hath drawn to her:
Thus, in her excellent white bosom, these,

\[Reads.\] Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithfull.

\[Aside.\] Doubt thou, the stars are fire; [Reads.]
Doubt that the sun doth move;
Doubt truth to be a liar; [Reads.]

O dear Ophelia, I am all of these numbers; I have not art to reckon my graces; but that I love thee best, I love thee not.

Thine once more, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, Hamlet.
This in obedience, hath my daughter shown me:
And more above, hath his somethings,
As they fell out by time, by means, and place,
All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she Roused his love?

Pol. What do you think of me?

King. As of a man faithful and honorable.

Pol. I would gain some so.

When I had seen this hot love on the wing,
As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that,
Before my daughter told me: what might you,
Or your most iugenry my dear queen here,
Think, if I had play'd the desk, or table-book;
Or given my hear' a working, mute and dumb;
Or look'd upon this love with idle sight;
What might you think; no, I never enter'd work,
And my young mistress thus did I bespeak:

\[Aside.\] Lord Hamlet is a prince out of thy sphere;
This she say'd; and when I receiv'd her,
That she should seek herself from his resort,
Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.
Which done, she took the fruits of my advice;
And he repus'd, (a short talk to make;)-
Fell into a sadness; then into a fast;
Thence to a watch; thence into weakness;
Thence to a lightness: and, by this decension,
Into the madness wherein now he raves,
And all we mourn for.

\[Discourse.\]

Pol. Do you think, 'tis this?

Queen. It may be, very likely.

Pol. Hath there been such a time, (I'd fain know that)
That I have positively said, 'Tis so,
When it proved otherwise?

King. That's not that I know.

Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise:
[Pointing to his Head and Shoulder.
If circumstances lead me, I will find
Where true is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the centre.

King. How may we try it further?

Pol. You know sometimes he walks for hours together
Here in the lobby.

Queen. So he does, indeed.

Pol. At such a time I'll loose my daughter to him.

Be you and I behind an arras then;
Mark the encounter: if he love her not,
And be not from his reason fallen thereon,
Let me be no assistant for a state,
But keep a farm, and carters.

King. We will try it.

Enter Hamlet, reading.

Queen. But look, where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.

Pol. Away, I do beseech you both away;
I'll board him presently;—I'll give me leave.—

[Exeunt King, Queen, and Attendants.

How does my good lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, madam, tell me:

Pol. Do you know me, my lord?

Ham. Excellent well; you are a fishmonger.

Pol. Not I, my lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my lord!

Ham. Ay, sir; to be honest, as this world goes
Is to be one man picked out of ten thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my lord.

Ham. For as the sun breeds maggots in a dead dog,
Being a god, kissing carrion,—Have you a daughter?

Pol. I have, my lord.

Ham. Let her not walk in the sun: conception
Is a blessing; but not as your daughter may conceive,
—friend, look to't.

Pol. How say you by that? [Aside.] Still harping
On my daughter:—yet he knew me not at first;
He said, I was a fishmonger: He is far gone;
Far gone: and, truly in my youth I suffered much:
Extemely for my love. This is a lovely way to dupack to him again.—What do you read, my lord?

Ham. Words, words, words!

Pol. What is the better, my lord?

Ham. Between who?

Pol. I mean the matter that you read, my lord.

Ham. Shalander, sir; for the satirical rogue says here, that old men have grey beards; but their beards are wrinkled; their eyes purging thick amber, and plum-tree gum; and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hands: All of which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down; for yourself, sir, shall be as old as I am, if, like a crab, you could go backward.

Pol. Then this is madness, yet there's method in it. [Aside.] Will you walk out of the air, my lord?

Ham. Into my grave!

Pol. Indeed, that is out of the air.—How pregnant sometimes my replies are! A rambling that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter. My honorable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you.

Ham. You cannot, sir, take from me any thing that I will more willingly part withal; except my life, except my life, except my life.

Pol. Fare you well, my lord.

Ham. These tedious old fools!

Enter Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern.

Pol. You go to seek the lord Hamlet; there he is.

Ros. God save you, sir! [Exit Polonius.

Understanding.  ① Be pregnant.  ② Ready, opt.
Ham. Happy, in that we are not over happy; On fortune's cap we are not the very button.
Ros. Nor the soles of her shoe?
Ham. Neither, my lord.
Ham. Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her ovaries.
Gul. Faith, her privacies we.
Ham. In the secret parts of fortune! O, most true; she is a strumpet. What news?
Ros. None, my lord: but that the world is grown honest.
Ham. Then is doomsday near? But your news is not true. Let me question more in particular: What, how, where, when? Where! Where! Who has sold the hands of fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?
Gul. Prison, my lord!
Ham. What? Your servant in a prison.
Ros. Then is the world one.
Ham. A goodly one; in which there are many confusions, wars, and dangerous. Denmark being one of the worst.
Ros. We think not so, my lord.
Ham. Why, then, 'tis none to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: a piece of work is⊇, and I will do it.
Ros. Why, then your ambition makes it one; 'tis too narrow for your mind.
Gul. What a dream! I would be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space; were it not that I have bad dreams.
Ham. Which dreams, indeed, are ambition; for the very substance of the ambitions is merely the shadow of a dream.
Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.
Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that the wind blows it out, and so it is but a shadow.
Ham. Then are our beggars, bodies; and our monarchs, and outstretched heroes, the beggars' shadows; shall we to the court! for, by my lay, I cannot reason.
Ros. Gull. We'll wait upon you.
Ham. No matter such: I will not sort you with the rest of my retainers; for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended. But, in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore?
Ros. A visit, my lord; no other occasion.
Ham. Bezarar that I am, I am even poor in thanks; but I thank you: and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear, a halfpenny. Were you not, to me, a friend, or for my felicity, a true visitation? Come, come; deal justly with me; come, come; nay, speak.
Gul. What should we say, my lord?
Ham. That you are welcome to the court, and you are welcome to the purpose. You were sent for, and there is a kind of confession in your looks, which your modesties have not e'en enough to color: I know the good king and queen is sent for you,
Ros. To what end, my lord?
Ham. That you must teach me. But let me consider. 'Tis not the rights of our fellowship, by the conscience of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and disputable, whether you were sent for, or no.
Ros. What say you? [To GUILDENSTERN]
Ham. Nay, then I have an eye of you; [Aside.]
If you love me, hold not off.
Gul. My lord, we have sent you for.
Ham. I will tell you why: so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen mount no feather. I have of late sewn a little in the know, (I know not,) lest all my mirth, forgone all custom of exercises: and, indeed, it goes so heavily with my disposition, that this good Heav'n, if the earth, and the wise proromonty; this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o'ershading firmament, this majestic roof vaulted with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me, than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapors. What a piece of work is man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this doctrine worth? seen in the face of man means not me,—nor woman neither; though by your smiling you seem to say so.
Ros. My lord, there is no such stuff in my thought.
Ham. Why did you laugh then, when I said, Man delights not me?
Ros. To think, my lord, if you did not lie not in man, what have the entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coted them on the way; and liter are they coming, to offer you service.
Ham. Nay, let the play be by the king, shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me; the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target: the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall read his wit in jest: the clown shall make the laugh whose lungs are tickled of the sere; and the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for,—What players are they?
Ros. Even those you were word to take such delight in, the tragedians of the city.
Ham. How chances it they travel? their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.
Ros. I think their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.
Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? Are they so followed?
Ros. No, indeed, they are not.
Ham. Do they grow rusty?
Ros. Nay, their endeavor keeps in the wonted pace: But there is, sir, an airy of children, little cyases,® that cry out on the top of question, and are most tyrannically clapp'd for: these are now the fashion; and so beradle the common stages, (so they call them,) that many, wearing rapiers, are afraid of goose-quills, and dare scarce come into the theatre.
Ham. What, are they children? who maintains them? how are they sec'd?® Will they pursue the quality? no longer than they can sin! will they not say at rewards, if they should grow themselves to common players, (as it is most like, if their means are not better,) their writers do them wrong, to make them declaim against their own succession?
Ros. 'Fair, there has been much to do on both sides: and the nation holds it no sin, to tarce them on both sides; they, I say, was, for a while, no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuds in the question.
Ham. Is it possible!®
Gul. There has been much throwing about of brains.
Ham. Do the boys carry it away?
Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his kinsmen.
Ham. It is not very strange: for my uncle is king of Denmark, and those, that would make mouths at him while my father lived, gave twenty, forty, fifty, an hundred ducats a-piece, for his picture in little. 'Sblood, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.
Ham. Bring me Trumpet, within.
Gul. There are the players.
Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands. Come then: the apparition of the ghost shall be your welcome; and all ceremony, to set me company with you in thisgarb; lest my extent to the players, which, I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours. You were welcome: but my uncle-father, and auntmother, are deceived.
Gul. In what, my dear lord.
Ham. I am but mad north-northwest: when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a handsaw.

Enter POLONIUS.
Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen!
Ham. Hark you, Guildenstern,—and you too:®
® Shakespeare.
* Overtook.
* Young nobilities.
* Vowels.
* Polack.
* D'Albe.
* The globe, the sign of Shakespeare's theatre.
* Complaint.
Scene II. PRINCE OF DENMARK.

—at each ear a heater: that great baby, you see there, is not yet out of his swaddling-cloths.

Ros. Happily, he's the second time come to them; for this lie to old Regan

Ham. I will prophesy, he comes to tell me of the players; mark it,—You say right, sir: 'twas then, indeed.

Pol. My lord, this morning to me you:—

Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you: When Roscino was an actor in Rome,—

Pol. The actors are here hither, my lord,

Ham. Buz, buz!—

Pol. Upon my honor,—

Ham. Then came each actor on his leg. Pol. The best of them for tragedy either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, [tragedy-historical, tragic-comical-historical-pastoral] scene indivisible, or partial in five acts. It was not too long, nor Flautus too light. For the law of wit and liberty, these are the only men.

Ham. O Jephthah, judge of Israel,—what a treason that last was!

Pol. What a treachery had he, my lord?

Ham. Why—One fair daughter, and no more,

Pol. Which he loved passing well.

Pol. Still on my honor,—

Ham. Nay, that follow not.

Pol. What follows then, my lord?

Ham. Why, As by lot, God wot, and then you know, As by lot, the name was,—The first row of the pious chanson was to show you more: for look, my abridgment comes.

Enter few or few Players.

You are welcome, masters; welcome all:—I am glad to see thee well—welcome, good friends:—O, O, O, O, Why, this face is valanced since saw thee last; Com'nit hean to thee minded in Denmark!—What? my young lady and mistress! By'r lady, your ladyship is nearer to heaven than we were from the last, by the arresting word. Pray God, your voice, like a piece of uncertain gold, be not cracked within the ring.—Masters, you are all welcome. We'll even to it like French falconers, to shew the thing we see: We'll have a speech straight: Come, give us a taste of your quality; come, a passionate speech.

Pol. What speech, my lord?

Ham. I heard he speak the speech once,—but it was never acted;—or, if it was, not above once; for the play. I remember, pleased not not the man. I was conveyed to the general 3 but it was (as I received it and others, with good judgments, in such matters, cried to the top of mine) an excellent play; well digested in the scenes, set down with expedition, and modestly as cunning as possible; and I remember, one said, there were no salads in the lines to make the matter savory; nor matter in the phrase, that might induce the author of affection 4 but called it an honest method, as wholesome and by very much more handsome than fine; One speech in it I chided loved: 'twas O'ne's 5 tale to Dido, and thereabouts of it especially, where he speaks of a daughter:—

Pol. I say, then, Ham. I and Thyrius, like the Heculcin beast, being not so: it begins with Pyrrhus.

T Burrhus. Tell me, then, Pyrrhus,—he, whose arms

Black is his purpose, did the night resemble

When he lay howled in the ominous horse,

But now this burning bale-bale complexion smirth

With his head, as a fire, in the air, that now he joined gaites: horrid rack 5

With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons;

Barked and caged with the parching streets,

That tend a thomasine and a tamed light

To their lord's murder: Roastet in wrath, and fire,

And thus o'er-sized with convolute gory,

Hither (in barbarous, the hitherto Pyrrhus

Great grandsons Priam seeks:—

Pol. Fore God, my lord, well spoken; with good accent, and good discretion.

1. Writing. 2. Christmas-carols. 3. Fringed. 4. An Italian dish made of the rest of fishes. 5. Multitude. 6. Above. 7. Alliteration. 8. Red, a term in heraldry. 9. Blazoned. 10. A Play. 11. Striking too short at Greeks; his antique sword, Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls, To the hilt to old Regan; and: Unequal matched, Pyrrhus of Priam drives; in rage, strikes wide; But with the whip and wind of his fell sword The unmother'd father falls. Then senseless, Iam, And, like a neutral to his will and matter, Did nothing. But, as we often see, against some storm, A silence in the heavens, the rock' 3 stand still, The cold winds speechless, and the orb below In awe and death: upon the dreadful thunder Both rend the region: so, after Pyrrhus' pause, A roused vengeance sets him new a-work; And never did the Cyclops' humors fail: On Mars' armor, forged for proof of clime: With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword Now falls on Priam.—

Out, out, thou strangrel, Fortune! All you gods, In general, hate away her power. Break all the spires and fellies from her wheel, And howl the round vane down the hill of heaven, As low as to the friends!—

Pol. This is the case.

Ham. It shall to the barber's with your beard.

—Pr'ythee, say on:—He's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps. Say on: come to Elsinore.

I Play. But, ah! wise! I have seen the mobled queen—

Ham. The mobled queen!—

Pol. That's good; mobled queen is good.

I Play. I am a foot up and down, thrusting the fumes

With bison's rheum; a casket upon that head Where late the diadem stood; and, for a robe About her trunk and all, I've bettered line, A blanket, in the arm of fear caught up; Who this had seen, with tongue in venous sleep'd, 'Gainst fourfold's state who would treason have pronounced?

But if the gods themselves did see her then,

When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport In mimicking with his sword her husband's limbs, The instant burst of clamour that she made. (Unless things mortal worse them not of all.) Would have made night's burning eye heaven, And passion's light shot with the sun's beam.

Pol. Look whether he has not turn'd his color, and has tears in his eyes.—Pr'ythee, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well: I'll have thee speak out the rest of this; for God's sake, old lord, let the players bestow'd! Do you hear, let them be well used: for they are the abstract, and brief chronicles, of the time: After your death you were better have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

Ham. Odd's bodkin, man, much better: Use every man after his desert, and who shall escape whipping? Use them after your own honor and dignity: The less they deserve, the more merit it is your honor. Take them in.

Pol. Come, sirs.

[Exit POLONIUS, with some of the Players.]

Ham. You Englishmen, friends:—we'll hearken a play to morrow.——Dost thou hear me, old friend; can you play the murder of Gonzago?

1. Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. We'll have it to morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down, and insert in't: could you not?

1. Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Very well.——Follow that lord; and look you mock him not. [Exit Player.] My good friends, 'To Ross, and Gelt.' I'll leave you till night: you are welcome to Elsinore.——

Ros. Good my lord! [Exit ROSECRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. Ay, so, God be wi' you!—Now I am about.

[Exit.]—

783
To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,
I should have fated all the region kites
With this slave's o'ffall: bloody, bawdy villain!
Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless, vill lain?
Why, what an ass am I? This is most brave;
That I, the son of a dear father murdered,
Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a cursing, like a very draught,
A sculling and a scolding, I'll pluck out thy Eye upon th' job! About my brains! Humph! I have heard,
That guilty creatures, sitting at a play,
Have by the very cunning of the scene
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaimed their malefactions;
For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak
With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players
Play something like the murder of my father,
Before mine uncle: I'll observe his looks;
I'll tent him to the quick; if he do blench,
I know my course. The spirit, that I have seen,
May be a devil: and the devil hath power
To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and, perhaps,
Out of my weakness, and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with such successions,
Abuses me to damn me: I'll have grounds
More relative than this: the play's the thing
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king.
[Exit."

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosen-grant, and Guildenstern.

King. And can you, by no drift of conference,
Guil. Here, why he puts on this confusion;
Grat'ting so hastily all his days of quiet.
With turbulent and dangerous fancy?
Ros. Lord, he do confess, he feels himself distracted;
But from what cause he will by no means speak.
Guil. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;
But with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?
Ros. Most like a gentleman.
Guil. But with much foreting of his disposition.
Ros. Negligent of his guard; but, of our demands,
Most free in his reply.

Queen. Did you assray him
To some pastime?
Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players
We offer'd on the way: of these we told him;
And there did seem in him a kind of joy.

Queen. And, as I think, they have already order
This night to play before him.

Ros. The most true;
And he besech'd me to entreat your majesties
To hear and see the matter.

King. With all my heart; and it doth much concern me
To hear him so insin'd.

Guil. Good gentlemen, gave him a further edge,
And drive his purpose on to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord.

[Exeunt ROSENCRantz and Guildenstern.

King. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too:
For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither;
That, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia:
Her father, and myself, (lawful espials,)
Will so bestow ourselves, that seeing, unseen,
We may of their encounter mark the edge;
And gather by him, as he is behaved,
If he be the affliction of his love or no,
That thus he suffers for:—

Queen. I shall obey you:
And for your part, Ophelia, I do wish,
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness: so shall I hope, your virtues

[Exeunt."

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the question:—
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune;
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them?—To die, to sleep,—
No more;—and, by a sleep, to say we end
The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to: 'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wish'd. To die,—to sleep:—
To sleep! perchance to dream:—ay, there's the rub:
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause: 'There's the respect,'—
That makes calamity of so long life:
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin? Who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life?
But that the dread of something after death,—
"Unnatural.
Search his wounds.
Shrink or start.
Too frequent.
Stir, bustle.
Consideration.
Rudeness.
Quiet.
The ancient term for a small dagger.
"Back, burden."
The undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns,—puzzles the will;
And makes us rather bear those lies we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of.
Than conscience does make cowards of us all;
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought;
And enterprises of great pith and moment,
With this regard, their currents turn awry,
And lose the name of action. Soft you now!
The fair Ophelia—Nymph, in thy orisons.
Be all my sins remember'd. Oph.
Good my lord,
How does your honor for this day? I Ham. I humbly thank you; well.
Oph. My lord, I have remembrances of yours,
That I have longed long to re-deliver;
I pray you, now receive them.
Ham. No, no! Oph.
I never gave you any.
Oph. My honored lord, you know right well you,
And, with them, words of so sweet breath compos'd
As made the things more rich: their perfume lost,
Take these again; for to the noble mind,
Rich gold is poor, when givers prove unkind.
There, my lord.
Ham. Ha, ha! are you honest?
Oph. My lord?
Ham. Are you fair?
Oph. What means your lordship?
Ham. That if you be honest and fair, you should Admit no low coarse to your beauty.
Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commerce
Than with honesty?
Ham. Ay, truly; for the power of beauty well
Can raise the heaven-born to a baseborn; honesty from the lowly
Can raise a man to heaven. Let me remember
What it is to be a lamb, than the force of honesty can translate beauty into
His likeness; this was some time a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.
Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.
Ham. You should not have believed me; for evil cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall reek of it: I lov'd you not.
Oph. I was the fairest of my father's love,
Ham. Get thee to a nunnery: Why wouldst thou
But medical losses? I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things,
That it were better my mother had not borne me: I am very proud, revengeful ambitious; with more Offences at my feet, than I have thought to put the Shame to their action, to give them shape, or time to act in them:
What should such fellows as I do
Dwelling betwixt earth and heaven? We are not armed Knobs; believe none of us: Go thy ways to a nunnery. Where's your father?
Ham. At home, my lord.
Ham. Let the doors be shut upon him; that he May play the boy but nowhere—nor in his own house.
Exit. Oph. O, help him, you sweet heavens!
Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry: Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou
Shall not escape calumny. Get thee to a nunnery; farewell! Or, if thou wilt needs marry,
Marry a fool; for wise men know well enough,
What monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go; and bid all fair well.
Oph. Heavenly powers, restore him! Ham. I have heard of your paintings too well enough: God hath given you one face, and you
You must conjure it to no other use but to amble, and you
And, nick-nam'd God's creatures, and make your wantonness your ignorance; Go to; I'll no more of it; it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more marriages; those that are married already, all but one, shall live; the rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery, go. KENT. [Exit HAMLET.] Oph. O, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown! The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's, eye, tongue, sword;
The eye's divinity and rose of the fair state,
The glass of fashion, and the mould of form,
The observed of all observers! quite, quite down! And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That so'd the honey of his love! Cleanse now
See that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh;
* Boundary, limits.
* Prayers.

That unmatch'd form and feature of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstasy! O, woes is me!
To have as much as I can see, but not to see what I shall!

Re-enter King and Polonius.
King. Well! his alacrity doth not the way tend,
Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. There's something in his soul, O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hutch, and the disclose,
Will be some danger: Which for to prevent,
I have, in quick determination.
Thus set it, Hamlet, with speed to England,
For the demand of our neglected tribute;
Haply, the seas, and countries different,
With variable objects, shall expel
This sonorous-settled matter in his heart;
Whereon his brains, still beating, puts him thus
From fashion of himself. What think you on't?
Pol. It shall do well: but yet I do believe,
The original of it was a court of Aristocracy.
King. Ye sprang from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia?
You need not tell us what lord Hamlet said;
We heard it all.—My lord, do as you please;
But, if you hold it fit, after the play,
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To show his grief; let her be round with him;
And I'll be sure, if you, in the ear of
All of their conference: If she find him not,
To England send him: or confine him, where
Your wisdom best shall think.
King. Well. It shall be so;
Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go.

SCENE II.—A Hall in the same.

Enter Hamlet and certain Players.
Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines. Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus; but let a more indited ghost appear, whose very noise should be more heard than that, and (as I may say) whirwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance, that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious periwinkle bear a passion to tatters, to very race, to split the ears of the groundlings; who, for the most part, are capable of nothing but inexpressible dumb shows and noises: O, it should have been a trial of your powers, to have avoided such contempt and derogations on the Terence; or, if you choose the heroine of Terence; it out-heroids 'Eterdo: Pray you, avoid it.

1. Play, I warrant your honor.
Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor; suit the action to the word, the word to the action; with this special observance, that you o'er-step not the modesty of nature: for anything so over-straining on the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first, and now, was, and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure. Now this, overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cause those that hear you to aspeck, and to make you of a glib tongue; but, if it be not too much with you, and if it be mere pique, see you speak clearly, that neither having the accent of Christians, nor the gait of Christian, play, nor man, have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of my nature's journey, you have made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably.

1. Play, I hope, we have reformed that differently with us.
Ham. O, reform it altogether. And let those, that play your clowns, speak no more than is set down for them: for there be of them, that will themselves put in plays, to such some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too; though, in the mean time,
* Alienation of mind.
* Reprize him with freedom.
* The manner people then seem to have sat in the pit.

Herod's character was always violent.
* Impression, resemblance.
* Approximation.
some necessary question of the play be then to be considered: that's villainous; and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.

[Exeunt Players.]

Enter Polonius, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

How now, my lord! will the king hear this piece of work?

Ham. Bid the players make haste.—

[Exit Polonius.]

Will you two help to hasten them?

Both. Ay, my lord.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Ham. What, ho; Horatio!

Enter Horatio.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art even as just a man As ever my conversation e'er withal. Hor. O, my dear lord,—

Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter:
For what advancement may I hope from thee, That no revenue hast, but thy own spirits, To feed and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?
No, let the candid tongue lack absurd pump; And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee, Where thrift may follow fasting. Dost thou hear? Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice, And could not of men distinguish her election, She hath seal'd thee for herself: for thou hast been As one, in sufficing all, that suffers nothing; A man, that fortune's buffets and rewards Has taken with equal thanks: and bless'd are those Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled, That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger To sound what stop she please: Give me that man That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart, As I do thee.—Something too much of this—There is a play to-night before the king; Once see'd of it comes near the circumstance, Which I have told thee of my father's death. I pray thee, when thou seest that act abate, Even when the very comment of thy soul Observe my uncle: if he seem fault'd, guilt Doth not itself unkennel in one speech, It is a damned ghost that we have seen; And my imaginations are as full. As Vulture's stithy. Give him heedful note: For mine eyes will rivet to his face: And, after, we will both our judgments join In sureness of his seeming. Well, my lord: If he steal aught, which whilst this play is playing, And 'scape detecting, I will pay the theft.

Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be idle:

Get you a place.

Danish March. A Flourish. Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Pol. He's very well, my liege, I know his mind.

King. So be it. What's the news with Ophelia?

Ham. Not a jot, my lord; a thing to move the heaven.

Oph. My lord, I mean, my head upon your lap.

Ham. O, my lord.

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between maids' legs.

Oph. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Oph. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Of your own accord. What should a man do, but be merry? for look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within these two hours.

Oph. Nay, it's twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay, then let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sabers. O heavens! die two months ago, and not forgotten yet! Then there's hope, a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year: But, by'lord, he must build churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the lady-chrome; whose epithal is, For O, for O, the hobby-horse is forgot.

Trumpets sound. The dumb Show follows.

Enter a King and a Queen, very lovingly; the Queen comes in, and he with her, and makes show of protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck; lays him down upon a bank of flowers; she, with her gentle leave, leaves him. Upon comes in a yellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the King's ears, and exits. The Queen returns; finds the King dead, and makes passion of it, and takes her chair. The Poisons, with some two or three Suitors, comes in again, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried out; and the Poisoner wields the Queen with gifts; she seems loath and unwilling meekly, but, in the end, accepts his love.

Exeunt.

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is mewing mallecho; it means mischief.

Oph. O my deke, this show imports the argument of the play.

Enter Prologue.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow: the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Oph. Will he tell us what this show meant!

Ham. Ay, marry, I know that you'll show him; But be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

Oph. You are naught, you are naught; I'll mark the play.

[Exit.]

Pros. For us, and for our tragedy.

Here stooping to your elocution,
We beg your hearing patiently.

Ham. Is this a prodige, or the posy of a ring?

Oph. 'Tis brief, my lord.

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter a King and a Queen.

P. King. Full thirty times hath Phæbus' cart gone round Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus' orb ground; And thirty dozen moons, with borrowed sheen, Have doubled over the world, when, yet, though I distrust, Discomfit you, my lord, it nothing must: For women fear too much, even as they love; And would as well, that in the world's broad quantity, In neither aught, or in extremity.

Now, what my love is, proof hath made you know:

Ham. And as my love is six'd,5 my fear is so.

Oph. The richest dress.

Ham. Secret wickedness.

Oph. The earth.

Ham. Shining, indire.

5 In proportion to the extent of my love.
Scene II.

PRINCE OF DENMARK.

Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear; Where little fears grow great, great love grows there. P. King. Faith, I must leave thee, love, and hourly too: My oper'ant pow'r their functions leave to do; And thou shalt live in this fair world behind, Honor'd, below'd; and, haply, one as kind For husband shift thou— O, confound the rest! Such love must needs be treason in my breast: It second husband let me be accurst! None wed the second, but who kill'd the first. Ham. That's wormwood.

P. Queen. The instances, that second marriage loves. Are base respects of thrift, but none of love; A second time I kill my husband dead, When second husband Kisses me in bed. P. King. Do I believe, you think what now you speak; But, what we do determine, oft we break, Purpose is but the slave to memory; Of violent birth, but poor validity: Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree; But fall, unshaken, when they mellow be. Most necessary 'twas that we forget To play ourselves with ourselves of debt: What to ourselves in passion we propose, The passion ending, doth the purpose lose. The violence of either grief or joy Their own enmities; with themselves destroy: Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament; Grief joys, joy grievances, on slender accident. This would not be for eye; nor 'is not strange, That even their loves should with our fortunes change; For 'tis a question left us yet to prove, Whether love lead fortune, or fortune love, The great man down, you mark, his favorite dies; The poor advanced makes friends of enemies. And hither doth love on fortune tend: For who need not, shall never lack a friend; And who in want a hollow friend doth try, Directly seasons him his enemy. But, orderly to end where I began,— Our wills, and fate, do so contrary run, That our devices still are overthrown; Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own: So think thou wilt no second husband wed; But die thy thoughts, when thy first lord is dead. P. Queen. Nor earth to give me food, nor heaven light! Sport and loose lock from me, day and night! To desperation turn my trust and hope! An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope! Each opposite, that blank the face of joy. My Queen, I think I should have well, and it destroy! Both here, and hence, pursue me, lastest strife, If, once a widow, ever I be wife! Ham. If she should break it now; [To Ophelia. P. King. 'Tis deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here awhile; My spirits grow dull, and pain I would beguile. The tedious day with sleep. Sleep rock thy brain; And never come miscensure between us twain! Ham. Madam, how like you this play! [Exit. Queen. The lady doth protest too much, methinks. Ham. No, but she'll keep her word. King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in thy liberty? Ham. No, what do they but jest, poison in jest; no offence in't the world. King. What, Ham. No, who do, you call the play! Ham. The Mouse-infest’d! Marry, how! Tropically, this play is the image of a murder done in Vienna: Gonzalo is the duke's name; his wife, Beatrice, by whom you shall see more; 'tis a knavish piece of work; but what of that! your majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade whine, our withers are unruin'd.

Enter Lucianus. This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king. Oph. You are as good a chorus, my lord. *Active. Motives. Determinations. Anchors. In which he'll catch the conscience of the king. *Slashed. *Pass, company. *For them.

Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, it could see the puppets dailying. Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen. I mean. It would cost you a groaning, to take off my edge. Oph. Still better, and worse. Ham. So you must make your husbands—Begin, murderer—leave thy damnable faces, and begin. Come:— The croaking raven Doth bellow in revenge. Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and time agreeing; Confederate season, else no creature seeing: Thou mix'd with dark, of midnight weeds collected, With Hebe's banish'd three-bladed, three-infected, Thy natural magic, and dire property, On wholesome life his pure immediately. [Exit. Ham. He poisons him if the garden for his estate, His name's Gonzalo: the story is extant, and written in very choice Italian: You shall seannow, how the murderer gets the love of Gonzalo's wife. Oph. The king rises. Ham. What! frightened with false fire! Queen. How fares my lord! Pol. Give over the play. King. Give me some light:—away! Pol. Lights, lights, lights, lights! [Exit all but HAMLET AND HORATIO. Ham. Why, let the scene go weep, The last ungailed play: For some must watch, while some must sleep; Thus runs the world away. Would not a90, sir, and a forest of feathers, if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me, with two Provencal roses on my razed shoes, get me a following, in a crew of players, sir! Hor. Half a share. Ham. A whole one, I. For thou dost know, O Demon dear, This realm dismantiJed was Of Jove himself; and now reigns here A very, very—peacock. Hor. You might have rhymed. Ham. O good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive? Hor. Very well, my lord. Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning,— Hor. I did very well note him. Ham. Ah, ah!—Come, some music; come, the reciters.— For the king like the not the comedy. Why then, belle—he likes it not, jenny.— Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. Courte some music. Guild. Good my lord, vouchee me a word with you. Ham. Sir, a whole history. Guild. The king, sir,— Ham. Ay, sir, what of him? Guild. Is, in his retirement, marvellous distem- pered, Guild. With drink, sir! Guild. No, my lord, with choler. Ham. Your wisdom should show itself more richer, to signify this to the doctor; for, for me to put him to the assurance, would, perhaps, plunge him into more choler. Guild. Good my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair. Ham. I am ready. Guild. The queen, your mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you. Ham. You are welcome. Guild. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, I will do your mother's commandment; if not, your pardon, and my return, shall be the end of my business. Ham. Sir, I cannot. Guild. What, what, what? Guild. Make you a wholesome answer; my wit's diseased: But, sir, such an answer as I can make, you shall command; or, rather, as you say, my mother; therefore no more, but to the matter: My mother, you say,—

Ham. When, what, what, what?
Ham. Then thus she says: Your behavior hath struck her into amazement and admiration.

Pol. My lord, I wonder'd that you can so astonish a mother!—But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration? import.

Ham. She desires to speak with you in her closet, ere you go to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any further trade with us?

Ros. My lord, you once did love me.

Ham. You do still by these pickers and stealers. Ros. Good my lord, what is your cause of tempter? you do, surely, but hark the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.

Ham. Sir, I lack advancement.

Ros. How can that be, when you have the voice of the people for your succession in Denmark?

Ham. Ay, sir, but, While the grass grows,—the proverb is something musty.

Enter the Players, with Recorders.

O, the recorder:—let me see one.—To withdraw with you:—Why do you go about to recover the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toil?

Guit. O, my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmanly.

Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?

Ham. My lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Ham. Believe me, I cannot.

Ham. I do beseech you.

Ham. I know no touch of it, my lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easy as lying: govern these ventures with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most excellent music. Look you, these are the stops.

Guit. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony; I have not the skill.

Ham. Why, look you, now, how unworthy a thing you make of me! You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stop; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from the lowest note to the top of my compass; and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak. 'Sleep, do you think I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.

Enter Polonius.

God bless you, sir!—For. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Ham. Do you see yonder cloud, that's almost in shape of a camel?

Pol. The hea, and 'tis like a camel indeed.

Ham. Methinks it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or, like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.

Ham. Then will I come to my mother by and by,—They fool me to the top of my bent;—I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so. [Exit Polonius.]

Ham. By and by is easily said. —Leave me, friends. [Exit Ros., Guit., Hor., &c.]

'End the very witching time of night;
When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out
Contagion to this world: Now could I drink hot blood,
And do such business as the biter day
Would quake to look on. Soft: now to my mother—
O, heart, lose not thy nature; let not ever
The soul of Nero cloud the firm bosom:
Let me be cruel, but unnatural:
I will speak daggers to her, but use none;
My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites;
Here shall each word of my words sear her heart;
To give them seals never, my soul, consent! [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in the same.

Enter King, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. I like him not; nor stands it safe with us,
To let his madness range. Therefore, prepare you;
If your commission will forthwith despatch,

Authority to put them in execution.

And he to England shall along with you:
The terms of our estate may not endure
Hazardous voyages, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunes?—Guit.

Guit. We will ourselves provide;
Most holy and religious fear it is,
To keep these many bodies safe,
That live, and feed, upon your majesty.

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound,
With all the strength and armor of the mind,
To keep itself from vanity; but much more
That spirit, upon whose weal depend and rest
The lives of many. The cease of majesty
Does not alone; but, like a guilt, doth draw
What it exporteth with it: it is a manner thing
Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount,
To whose huge spikes ten thousand lesser things
Are nothing but itself and joint; which, when it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boisterous ruin. Never alone
Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

Knut. I will go with you, to this deadly voyage;
For we will letters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too fœtus-footed.

Ros. Guit. We will haste us.

{Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.}

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet:
Behind the array I'll convey myself,
To hear the process; I'll warrant, she'll tax him home:
And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meet that some more audience, than a mother,
Since nature makes them partial, should o'erhear
The speech, of vantage. Fare you well, my liege;
I'll call upon you, when you go to bed,
And tell you what I know. Thanks, dear my lord.

{Exit Polonius.}

Guit. O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven;
It hath the primal eldest curse upon't,
A brother's murder!—Tray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will;
My stronger guilt doth satiate my strong intent;
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood?
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens,
To wash it white as snow? Wherefore serves mercy,
But to do_SEA the visage of offenses? And what's in prayer, but this two foiled force,—
To be forestalled, cre we come to call,
Or pardon'd, being down? Then I'll look up;
My father's time is past. O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn?—Forgive me my foul murder!—
That cannot be; since I am still possesse'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My stronger guilt doth satiate my strong intent.
May cune be pardon'd, and retain the offence!
In the corrupted currents of this world,
O'ercist his gilded hand may show by justice
And o' the喷er, he was priz'd enough.
Bays out the law: but 'tis not so above:
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In his true nature; and we ourselves compell'd,
Even to the teeth and shoulder of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then! what restas?
Try what repentance can: What can it not do?
A well done, in it, when one cannot credit
O wretched state! O bosom, black as death!
O limned soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged? Help, angels, make assay!
Bow, middle knees! and, heart, with strings of steel.
Be soft as snows of the new-born babe.

All may be well. {Retires and kneels.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now might I do it, I put, now he is praying;
And now he prays, yea; but he is so good natured,
And so am I revenged! That would be enough.
A villain kills my father; and, for that, 1.
his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven. Why, this is hire and salary, not revenge.
He took my father grossly, full of bread;

Caught as with bird-line. *Should be considered.
SCENE IV.—Another Room in the same.

Enter QUEEN and POLONIUS.

Pol. He will come straight. Look you, lay home to him my last commission.

Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with;
And that your grace hath seen and stood between Many a time, and I am sure, 'twill silence me even here.

Pray you, be with him. I'll warrant you;

Queen. Fear me not:— withdraw, I hear him coming.

[POLONIUS hides himself.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now, mother; what's the matter?

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much offended.

Queen. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.

Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet?

Ham. What's the matter now?

Queen. Have you forgot me?

Ham. No, by the rood, no so.

Are you the queen, your husband's brother's wife;
And—would it were not so!—you are my mother.

Queen. Nay, then I set those to you that can speak.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down; you shall not judge;

You go not, till I set you up a glass

Where you may see the nimnest part of you.

Queen. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murder me!

Help, help, ho!

Pol. [behind] What, ho! help!

Ham.

[Draws.

Dead, for a ducat, dead.

Ham.

[Dies.

[Exit QUEEN.

Enter GHOST.

Ham. Is it the king?

GHOST. [Lifts up the Arras, and draws forth POLONIUS.]

Ham. [to QUEEN.] What, hast thou done?

Queen. Nay, I know not.

Ham. Is it the king?

[Exit GHOST.

Pol. [behind] O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!

Ham. A bloody deed!—almost as good, good mother,

As kill a king, and marry with his brother.

Queen. As kill a king.

Ham. Ay, lady, 'twas my word—

Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!

[To POLONIUS.

Pol. [behind] O!

Ham. [to QUEEN.] What hast thou done?—

Thou dost make but chide me, or with my wings.

Thee heavenly guards!—What wouldst thou gracios figure?

Queen. Alas! he's mad.

Ham. Did you not see your tardy son to clade,

That, laps'd in time and passion, let's go by

The honourable acting of your dread command?

O, say!

GHOST. Do not forget; this visitation

Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.

Ham. Such an act,

That blurs the grace and blush of modesty:

Calls virtue, hypocrite; takes off the rose

From the fair forehead of an innocent love,

And sets a blinder there; makes marriage vows

As false as cozen's oath: O, such a deed

As from the body of contruction plucks

The very soul; and sweet religion makes

A rhapsody of words; Heaven's fair dew glows

Yea, this solidity and compound mass,

With trystful visage, as against the doom,

Is thought-sick at the act.

Queens. Ah me, what act,

That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?

Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on this;

The counterfeit presentment of two brothers:

Who that's wise may tell me? Is this a man?

Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;

An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;

A station like the herald Mercury,

New-lighted on a heavenly-Kissing hill;

A combination, and a form, indeed,

Where every god did seem to set his seal,

To give the world assurance of a man:

This was your husband.—Look you now, what follows:

Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,

Blowing his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?

Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,

And batter on this moor! Ha! have you eyes?

You cannot call it: love; for, at your age,

The hey-day in the blood is now a-wrangling;

And waits upon the judgment; And what judgment

Would step from this to this! Sense, sense, you have it.

Else, ecque, you have not motion: But, sure, that sense

Is aoppel'd: for madness would not err;

Nor sense to ecastasy was young so throng'd,

But it receiv'd some quantity of change;

To serve in such a difference. What devil was't,

That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman-blind?

Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight;

And hands that were not moved without eyes, eyes moving

So slow, as pity's owl was of that name;

And waits upon the judgment; And what judgment

Would step from this to this!—

Queens. O Hamlet, speak no more;—

Thou turnest mine eyes into my very soul;

And there I see such black and grained spots

As will not leave their trace.

Ham. Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an unpolish'd earth,

Stew'd in corruption; honeying and making love

Over the nasty sty;

Queens. O, speak to me no more;—

These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears;

No more, sweet Hamlet.

Ham. A murderer, and a villain:

A slave, that is not twentieth part the tyde

Of your preceding lord,—a vice of kings;

A cutpurse of the empire and the rule;

That from a shelf the precious daudal stole,

And put in his pocket!—

No more.

Queens. Enter Ghost.

Ham. A King

Of shreds and patches—

Save me, and give me life with your wings.

You heavenly guards!—What would the gracious figure?

Queen. Alas! he's mad.

Ham. Did you not see your tardy son to clade,

That, laps'd in time and passion, let's go by

The honourable acting of your dread command?

O, say!

GHOST. Do not forget; this visitation

Hamlet, yet but heavy will Alack, have and these how
Look, Where do you look?
Ham. On him!—Look you, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Do not look upon me.
Lost with this pitious action you convert
My stern effects? then what I have to do
Will wait true color; tears, perelance, for blood.
Queen. To whom do you speak this?
Ham. Do you see nothing there? Nothing at all; yet all, that is, I see.
Ham. Nor did you nothing hear!
Queen. No, nothing, but ourselves. Why, look you there! look, how it steals away!
My father, in his habit as he liv'd!
Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal! [Exit Ghost.
Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This holldeless creation ceaseth!
Is very coming in.
Ham. Easteav!
My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
And makes as healthful music: It is not madness,
That you have uttered: being me to the test,
And I the matter will re-word; which madness
Would glibbom from. Mother, for love of grace,
Lay not that blustering unction to your soul,
Thrust not your trepass but my madness speaks:
It will but skin and film the nocceous place;
Whiles rank corruption, mining all within,
Insects unseen. Come, yourself to heaven;
Repeat what's past; avoid what is to come;
And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue;
For in the lateness of these parsey times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon be.
You, curb and woo, for leave to do him good.
Queen. O Hamlet! thou hast eft my heart in
Ham. O, throw away the worser part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.
Good-night; but go not to my uncle's bed;
Assume a most horrid form.
That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habit's devil, is angel yet in this;
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock, or livery,
That aptly put on: Refrain to-night;
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstentious; the next act easy:
For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And either curb the devil, or throw him out
With wondrous potency. Once more good-night!
And we will hold our peace to morrow. I'll blessing beg of you. For this same lord,
[Pointing to Polonius.]
I do repent: But heaven hath pleas'd it so,—
To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their sorcerer and minister.
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gave him. So again good-night!—
O, that my mother had been by! Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.
But one word more, good lady.
Queen. What shall I do! Not this, by no means, that I did you say;
Let the loyal king tempt you again to bed;
Pinch wanton on your cheek; call you, his mouse;
And let him, for a pair of reechy kisses,
Or paddling in your neck with his dammed fingers,
Make you to ravell all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madness,
But mad in eft. 'Twere good, you let him know:
For where's that's hit a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gipsy?
Such dear concerings hide! who would do so?
No, in despise of sense, and secrecy,
Upon the basket on the horse's top,
Let the birds fly: and, like the famous ape,
To try conclusions in the basket creep,
And seek your own decoy.
Queen. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,
And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.
Ham. I must to England; you know that?
Queen. Alack, I had forgot; 'tis so concluded on.
Ham. There were letters seal'd: and my two school-follows—
Whom I will trust, as I will adders' fang—,
They bear the mandate; they must sweep my way,
And marshal me to knavery: Let it work;
For 'tis the sport to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petar; and it shall go hard,
But I will delive one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the horse's top: Oh, how sweet,
When in one line two crafts directly meet—
This man shall set me packing,
I'll hag the guts into the neighbor room—
Mother, good-night:—Indeed, this counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
Who was in life a foolish prating knave.
Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you:
Good-night, mother.
[Exit severally; Hamlet dragging in Polonius.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaviness;
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them:
Where is your son?
Queen. Bethink you this place on us a little while.—
[To Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, who go out.
Ah, my good lord, what have I seen to-night!
King. What Gertrude! How does Hamlet? Queen. Mad as the sea, and wind, when both contend
Which is the mightier: In his lawless fit,
* Imagination.
The hair of animals is excrementitious, that is, without life or sensation.
* Intelligent.
Actions.
$ Training.
$ Hand.

Behind the arras hearing something stir,
Whips out his rapier, cries, A rat! A rat!
And, in this brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man.

King. O heavy deed!
It had been so with us, had we been there;
His liberty is full of threats to all;
To you yourself, to us, to every one.
Alas! how shall this bloody deed be answer'd?
It will be laid to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of harm?
This most /owning man: but, so much was our love,
We would not understand what was most fit;
But, like the owner of a foul disease,
To keep it from divine; let it run on:
Even on the path of life. Where is he gone?
Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd;
Scene IV. Prince of Denmark.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

Ham. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?

Ham. At supper.

Ham. At supper! Where?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten: a certain conviction of politic worms are e'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet: we eat all creatures else, to fat us: and we fat ourselves for maggots. Your fat king, and your lean beggar, is but variable service; two dishes, but to one table: that's the end.

King. Alas, alas!

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king; and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.

King. What dost thou mean by this?

Ham. Nothing, but to show you how a king may so a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. He sent me to find him, and bethink thee: if your messenger find him not there, seek him in the other place yourself. But, indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall noise him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

Ham. Go seek him there. [To some Attendants.

Ham. He will stay till you come.

Scene II.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Hamlet.

Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Ros. What have you done, my lord, with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereunto 'tis kin.

Ros. Tell us where 'tis: that we may take it hence, and bear it to the chapel.

Ham. Do not believe it.

Ros. Believe what?

Ham. That I can keep your counsel, and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of a sponge—what replication should be made by the son of a king?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord?

Ham. Ay, sir; that soaks up the king's countryperson's affairs. But such officers do the king best service in the end: He keeps them, like an ape, in the corner of his jaw; first mouthed, to be last swallowed: When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again.

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it: a knavish speech sleeps in such ears.

Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the king.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body. The king is a thing—

Guild. A thing, my lord?

Ham. Of nothing: bring me to him. Hide, fox, and all after.

Scene III.—Another Room in the same.

Enter King. attended.

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body.

How durst you is, that this man goes loose! Yet must not we put the strong law on him: He's lov'd of the distracted multitude, Who like not in their judgment, but their eyes; And yet the rewards his authority, But such officers do the king best service in the end: He keeps them, like an ape, in the corner of his jaw; first mouthed, to be last swallowed: When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again.

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it: a knavish speech sleeps in such ears.

Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the king.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body. The king is a thing—

Guild. A thing, my lord?

Ham. Of nothing: bring me to him. Hide, fox, and all after.

Scene IV.—A Plain in Denmark.

Enter Fortinbras, and Forces, marching.

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish king; Tell him, that, by his licence, Fortinbras Craves a conference of a promised march Over his kindred. You know the rendezvous. If that his majesty would set with us, We shall express our duty in his eye; And let him know so.

Cep. I will do't, my lord.

For. Go softly on.

Enter Hamlet, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, &c.

Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these? Cep. They are of Norway, sir.

Ham. How purpos'd, sir? I pray you?

Cep. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who Commands them, sir?

Cep. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.

* Mark. 2 A sport among children.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

Ham. Say you, sir, that this Hamlet is the son of the dead king of Denmark?

Ros. So he is, my lord.

Ham. Did your mother weep for him?

Ros. She wailed like one in travail for a child. My lord, where is he?

Ham. Without, my lord; guarded, to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before us, Ros. Ho, Guildenstern! bring in my lord.

1 Mine. 2 Mark. 3 A sport among children.

And, England, if my love thou hold'st at all sheet clause.
"As my great power thereof may give thee sense;" since yet thy civetcrit looks raw and set. After the Danish sword, and thy free soul, Pays his obeisance to us, thou mayst not coldly set our sovereign process; which imports at full, By letters conjuring to that effect, The present death of Hamlet, in it, England; For like in the hectic in my blood he rages, And thou must cure me! Till I know 'tis done, Howe'er my haps, my joys will never begin. [Exit.
HAMLET.

Act IV.

HAMLET, her

To speak, and sir, and with no addition,
We've go to gain a little patch of ground,
That hath in it no profit but the name.
To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it;
Nor will it yield to Norway, or the Pole,
A ranker rate; it should it be sold to see.

HAMLET. Why, then the Polack never will defend it.

Cymb. Yes, 'tis already garrisson'd.

HAMLET. Two thousand souls, and twenty thousands ducats,

Will not debate the question of this straw:

This is the imposhment of much wealth and peace;

That inward breaks, and shows no cause without
Why they will die.—I humbly thank you, sir.

Cymb. God be wi' you, sir. [Exit Captain.

HAMLET. Will you please you go, my lord?

HAMLET. I will be with you straight. Go a little before.

How all occasions do inform against me,

And spur my dull revenge! What is a man,

If his chief good, and market of his time,

He but to sleep, and keep! a heart, no more.

Sure, he, that made us with such large discourse,

Looking before, and after, gave us not

That capability and godlike reason

To trust in us unseen. Now, whether it be

Restful oblivion, or some craven scruple

Of thinking too preciously on the event,—

A thought, which quarter'd, hath but one part

Wisdom,

And, ever, three parts coward.—I do not know

Why yet I live to say, This thing's to do;

Still I have leas, and will, and strength, and means.

To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me:

Witness, line army of such mass, and charge,

Led by a delicate and tender prince;

Whose spirit, with divine ambition put'd,

Makes mouths at the invisible event;

Exposing what is mortal, and unsee.

To all that fortune, death, and danger, dare,

Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great,

Is not to stir without great argument;

But greatly to find quarrel in a straw,

When honor's at the stake. How stand I then,

That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,

Examinat of my reason, and my blood,

And let all sleep! while, to my shame, I see

The imminent death of twenty thousand men,

That, for a fantasy, and trick of fame,

Go to their graves like beds; right for a plot

Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,

Which is not tomb enough, and continent

To hide the slain—O, from this time forth

My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth! [Exit.

SCENE V.—Elsinore. A Room in the Castle.

Enter QUEEN and HORATIO.

QUEEN. I will not speak with her.

HOR. She is importunate; indeed, distrust;

Her mood will needs be pined.

What would she have?

QUEEN. She speaks much of her father; says, she hears

There's tricks i' the world; and hens, and beats

her heart;

Spurns curiously at straws; speaks things in doubt

That can but half sense: her speech is nothing,

Yet the unshaped use of it doth move

The hearers to collection; they aim at it,

And both the words up lift to their own thoughts,

Which, as her words, and nodrs, and gestures yield

them

Indeed would make one think, there might be thought,

Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.

QUEEN. Twere good she were spoken with; for she may shrew

Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds:

Let her come in. [Exit HORATIO.

To my such soul, as sin's true nature is,

Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss;

So full of idle jealousy is grief;

It spoils itself in fearing to be spilt.

Power of comprehension.

Grow mouldy.

Courage.

Since.

Oph. There is the beauteous majesty of Denmark!

QUEEN. How now, Ophelia?

Oph. How should I your true love know?

From another one?

By his true shape, and dress, and word,

And his authority. [Singing.

QUEEN. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?

He is dead and gone, lady,

He is dead and gone:

At his head a grass-green turf,

At his heels a stone.

O, ho! [Sings.

QUEEN. Nay, but Ophelia.—Pray you, mark.

Oph. While his shroud as the mountain snows.

Enter KING.

QUEEN. Alas, look here, my lord.

Oph. Larded all with sweet flowers;

Which beare to the grave lot go,

With true-love showers.

KING. How do you, pretty lady?

Oph. Well, God 'held' you! They say the owl was a baker's daughter. Lord, we know what we are, but the world not what we may be. God be at your table!

KING. Conceit upon her father.

Oph. Pray, let us have no words of this; but when thou askest me what it means, say you this:

Good morrow, His Saint Valentine's day,

All in the morning betime,

And I trust of your window,

To be your Valentine,

Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes,

Exposing to the chamber door;

Let in the maid, that out a maid

Never departed more.

KING. Pretty Ophelia! Oph. Indeed, without an oath, I'll make an end

By Git, and by Saint Charity, a

Ateck, and he for shame! Young men will not, if they come to it;

By cock, they are to blame.

Quoth she, Before you tumbl'd me,

You promised me to wed:

He answer'd,

So would I ha' done, by yonder sun,
An thou hadst not come to my bed.

KING. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope, all will be well. We must be patient: but if cannot choose but weep, to think, they should lay him i' the cold ground; My brother shall know of it, and so thank you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good-morning, ladies; good-morning, sweet ladies; good-morning, good-morning.

KING. Follow her close; give her good watch,

And pray you. [Exit HORATIO.

O, this is the poison of deep grief; it spares

All from her father's death: And now Ihold,

O Gertrude, Gertrude,

When sorrow comes, they come not single spies,

But in battalions! First, her father's slain;

Next, your son gone; and he most violent author

Of his own just remove: The people muddied,

Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and Whispers.

For good Polonius' death; and we have done but greenly,

In haggard-naggers to infer him: Poor Ophelia

Divided from herself, and her fair judgment;

Without the which we are pictures, or mere beasts

Last, and as much containing as all these;

Her mother is in secret come from France;

Feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds,

And wants not buzzers to mislead his ear

With pestilent speeches of his father's death;

Whence, necessity of matter beggar'd,

Shes.

Reward.

Do up.

Scene VI. Prince of Denmark. 743

Will nothing stick our person to arm
In car and car—O my dear Gertrude, this,
Like to a murder'd piece, in many places
Gives me superfluous death! [A Noise within.
Queen. [Sings.]

Enter a Gentleman.

King. Attend.
Where are my Switzers? Let them guard the door:
What is the matter?

King. Save yourself, my lord;—
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impomous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a notuous head,
O'erbeareth your officers! The rabbble call him lord;
And, as the world was now but to begin,
Antiquity forgot, the fathers and propound every word,
They cry, Choose we; Laertes shall be king!
Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds,
Laertes shall be king, laerteaing!
Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!
O, this is counter, you false Danish dogs.

King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.

Enter Laertes, armed; Dames following.

Laer. Where is this king!—Sirrs, stand you all about.

Dan. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Dan. We will, we will. [They retire without the door.

Laer. I thank you;—keep the door. O thou vile king,
Give me my father.

Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood, that's calm, proclaims me bastard;
Cries, cuckold, to my father; brands the harlot
Even here, between the chaste unsallowed brow
Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes,
That thy rebellion looks so giant-like?

Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our power;
There's such divinity doth hedge a king.
That treason can but heep to what it would,
Acts hope of his will,—Tell me, Laertes,
Why thou art thus incess'd—let him go, Ger-

trad;

Speak, man.

Laer. Where is my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead! I'll not be juggling
With, to hell, allegiance! vows, to the blackest devil!
Conscience, and justice, to the profoundest pit!
I dare to damnation: To this point I stand,—
That both the worlds I give to negligence,
Let come what comes; only I'll be revenged
Most thoroughly for my father's sake.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will; not all the world's;
And, for my means, I'll husband them so well,
They shall go far with little.

Good Laertes,
If you desire to know the certainty
Of your dear father's death, isn't writ in your relate,

That, sweet-stake, you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser?

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them then?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my arms;
And, like the kind lie-rend'ring pelican,
Breast them with my blood.

King. Why, now you speak

Like a good child and a true gentleman.
That I am guiltless of your father's death, and
I am most sensibly in grief for it,
It shall as level to your judgment pear,
As day does to your eye.

Queen. Let her come in.

Laer. How now! what noise is that!

Enter Ophelia, fantastically dressed with Straws and Flowers.

O, heat, dry up my brains! tears seven times salt,
Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!—
By heaven, thy madness shall be paid with weight,
Till our scale turn the beam. O rose of May!
Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!
O heavens! it's possible, a young maid's wits
Should be as mortal an old man's life!
Nature is fine in love: and, where 's fine,
It sends some precious instance of itself
After the thing it loves.

Oph. They bore him barefaced on the bier;
They no money, money hey money;
And in his grave raw'd, an a little fear;—
Fare you well, my daisy?

Laer. Hadst thou thy wits, and didst persuade Revenge.
It could not move me thus.

Oph. You, my life, and Down-a-down, an you call him a-down-a. O, how the wheel! becomes it! It is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter.

Laer. This nothing's more than matter.

Oph. There's rosemarty, that's for remembrance;
pray you, love, remember: and there is passions,
that's for thoughts.

Laer. A document in madness; thoughts and remembrance.

Oph. There's lanneul for you, and cumbines,— there's rue for you; and here's some for me:—
we may call it, herb of grace, o' Sundays; you shall may wear it with a difference!—There, here's a daisy—I would you give some violets; but they withered all, when my father died:—They say, he made a good end,—

For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy.—
[Sings.

Laer. Thought and affliction, passion, hest, itself, shes to favor, and to prettiness.

Oph. And will he not come again?—
[Sings.

And will he not come again?
No, no, he is dead,
To thy death-bed,
He never will come again.

His head was as white as snow,
All fairest violets fell.
He is gone, he is gone,
And we cast away mean;
God a mercy on his soul!

And all of Christian souls! I pray God. God be with you!—
[Exeunt Ophelia.

Laer. Do you see this, O God!

King. Laertes, I must comfort with your griev
O or you deny me right. Go but apart
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall hear and judge twixt you and me;
If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,
Our crowns, our crowns, all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction; but, if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to us,
And we shall jointly labor with your soul
To give it due content.

Laer. Let this be so;
His means of death, his obscure funeral,—
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment, on his bones,
No noose, nor form of ostentation,
Cry to be heard, as 'were from heaven to earth
That I must call't in question.

King. So you shall,
And where the offence is, let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me.—

[Exeunt.

Scene vi.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Horatio and a Servant.

Hor. What are they, that would speak with me?

Serv. Gallants, sa;—

They say, they have letters for you.

Hor. Let them come in:—

[Exeunt Servant. I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from lord Hamlet.

* Artful.

t i.e. By its Sunday name, "herb of grace;" value is merely rue, i.e. sorrow.

* The barden.
Enter Sailors.

Sail. God bless you, sir.

Hor. Let him bless thee too.

Sail. He shall, sir, a' pint please him. There's a letter for you, sir; it comes from the ambassador that's bound for England; if your name be Horatio, as I am to learn it is.

Hor. [Reads.] Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellow-some means to the king; they have letters for him. Ere we were two days' sail from London, a desperate pirate of very much reputation gave us chase; finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valor; and in the grapple, I lost them; on the instant, they got clear of our ship; and so Thomas Thane became these three Thanes. They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy; but they know what they did; I am to do a good turn for them. But the king have the letters; and, repair thou to me as much haste as thou couldst fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bare of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England; of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.

Enter Hamlet. Come, I will give you way for these your letters; and do't the speedier, that you may direct me To him from whom you brought them. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII. — Another Room in the same. Enter King and Laertes.

King. Now must your conscience my acquaintance be,
And you must put in your heart my friend;
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath your noble father slain,
Plucked up my life. It well appears—but tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So criminal and so capital in nature,
And by your safety, greatness, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stirr'd up.

Laer. O, for two special reasons:
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much unmenc'd, but yet to me they are strong. The queen his mother
Lives almost by his books; and for myself,
(My virtue, or my plague, be it either which,) She is so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
I could not but by her. The other motive,
Was to a public count I might not go,
Is, the great love the general good enbrac'd him; Who, dipping all his faults in their affections,
Work'd like the spring that turneth wood to stone,
Conver'ted his grace to graces; so my arrows,
Too slightly usher'd for so loud a voice,
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

Hor. And so have I to my noble father lost;
A sister driven into desperate terms;
Whose worth, it praises may go back again,
Mood challenge on mount of all the age,
For her jecketions—but my revenge will come.

King. Break not your slumber for that: you must not think,
That we are made of stuff so flat and dull,
That we can let our beard he shank with danger,
And think it pastime. You shortly shall hearmore;
I lov'd your father, and we love ourselves;
And that, I hope, will reach you to imagine—
How now, what news have you of him?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet:
This to your majesty; this to the queen.
King. From Hamlet! who brought them?

Mess. They brought them; they say, they brought them not;
They were given me by Chandio, he receiv'd them Of him that brought them.

King. Laertes, you shall hear them.

Laert. [Exit Messenger.] [Reads.] High and mighty, you shall know; I am set maked in your kingdom. To morrow shall I beg leave to see you kingly eyes; when I shall, first, their opinion the greater, renew the occasion of my sudden and more strange return. Hamlet,

Common people.

Chains.

What should this mean! Are all the rest come back?
Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

Lae. Know you the land?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. [Exit.]

Lae. And that posterity, here, he says, abode;
Can you advise me?

King. I am lost in it, my lord. But let him come;
It warms the very sickness in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
Thus doubly thou.

Lae. If it be so, Laertes,—
As how should it be so! how otherwise!—
Will you be ruin'd by me?

Lae. Ay, my lord; so

King. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,—
As checking at his voyage, and that he means
No more to undertake it,—I will work him
To an exploit, now ripe in my device,
Under the which he shall not choose but fall:
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe;
But even her mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident.

Lae. My lord, I will be ruin'd;
The rather, if you could devise it so,
That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right.

Lae. You have been talk'd of since your travel much,
And that the king's hanter, caring for a sallity,
Wherein, they say, you shine: your sum of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one; and that, in my regard,
Of the unwarranted sickness.

King.

Lae. What part is that, my lord?

King. A very riband in the cap o' youth,
Yet needful too; for youth no less become
The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than settled age his sables and his weeds,
Importing health and graveness;—Two months
Here was a gentleman of Normandy,—
I have seen myself, and serv'd against the French,
And they can well on horseback: but this gallant
Had wit, and more; he learnt his parts so well;
And to such wonderous doing brought his horse,
As he had been incorpor'd and demi-natur'd
With the brave heart: so far he top'd my thought,
That I, in fancy of shapes and tricks,
Come short of what he did.

Lae. A Norman, King. A Norman.

King. I put my life, Lamord. The very same.

Lae. I know him well: he is the brooch! indeed,
And gem of all the nation.

King. He made confession of him;
And gave you such a masterly report,
For art and exercise in your defence,
And for your rapier most especial,
That he cried out, 'twould be a sight indeed,
If one could match you: the scriptures of their nation,
Were sworn, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them: Sir, this report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy,
That he could nothing do, but wish and beg
Your sudden coming o'er, to play with you.

Now, out of this,—

Lae. What out of this, my lord?

King. Laertes, was your father dear to you?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

Lae. Why ask you this?

King. Not that I think, you did not love your father;
But that I know, love is begun by time;
And that I see, in passages of proof;
Time qualifies it; and fire and sword,
There lives within the very flame of love
A kind of wick, or snuff; that will abate it;
And nothing is at a like goodness still;
For good, I say, grows dull with a pleasure,
Dies in his own too-much: That we would do,
We should do when we would; for this would changes,

ACT V. SCENE I. PRINCE OF DENMARK.

And hath abatements and delays as many,
As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents;
And then this should is like a spendthrift sigh,
That hurts by casings. But, to the quick's o' the ulcer;
Hamlet comes back; What would you undertake,
To show yourself indeed your father's son
More than in words?
Laer. To cut his throat at the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanctuarize;
Revenge should have no bounds. But, good Sirs,
Will you do this: keep close within your chamber!
Hamlet, return'd, shall know you are come home:
We'll put on those that shall praise your excellence,
And make a more variable show on the same.
The Frenchman gave you; bring you, in fine, togeth-
And wager over your heads: he, being remiss,
May fall to the rascals, and free from all contriving.
Will not peruse the foils; so that, with ease,
Or with a little shuffling, you may choose
A sword unbated; and, in a pass of practice,
Require him for your father. I will do't.

Laer. And, for the purpose, I'll anoint my sword,
Bought to the portion of a mountebank,
So much the more, that I may make what I will.
Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare,
Collected from all simples that have virtue
Under the moon, can save the dead from death.
That is but scratch'd withal: I'll touch my point
With this companion; that, if I gull him slightly,
It may be death.

King. Let's further think of this;
Weigh, what convenience, both of time and means,
May fit us to our shape: if this should fail,
And that our drift look through our bad performance?

2 There were better essay'd: therefore this project Should have a back, or second, that might hold.
If this should blast in proof. Soft; — let me see;
We'll make a solemn wager on your cumings;
I ha'n't:
When on your motion you are hot and dry,

(As make your bouts more violent to that end.)
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prefer'd him
A chalice for the nonce? wherein but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stroke?
Our purpose may hold there. But stay, what noise?

Enter Queen.

How now, sweet queen?
Queen. One we doth tread upon another's heel,
So last they follow— Your sister's drown'd, Laertes.

Laer. Drown'd! O, where?
Queen. There is a willow grows ascendant the brook
That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream;
Therewith fantastic garlands did she make
And set them damask'd on her Purpure and lilies,
That liberal shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call them.

There, down the pendent boughs her coronet weeds
Crambling to hang, an evens silver broke;
Then down her weary trophies, and herself,
Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide,
And, mermaid-like, a while they bore her up:
Which time she chant'd snatches of old tunes;
As one incapable of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and indeed,
Unto that element; but long it could not be,
Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pulled the poor wretch from her melodious hay
To muddy death.

Laer. Alas! then, she is drown'd?
Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my tears: But yet
It is our trick: nature her custom holds,
Let shame say what it will: when these are gone
The woman will be out.—
Queen. Hark, hark, hark!
I have a speech of fire, that soon will blaze,
But that this folly drowns it.

King. Let's follow, Gertrude: How much I had to do to calm his rage!
Now fear I, this will give it start again;
Therefore, let's follow. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Churchyard.

Enter two Clowns, with Spades, &c.

1 Clo. I say she was to be buried in Christian burial,
That willily seeks her own salvation.

2 Clo. I felt the she is; therefore make her grave straight:
She doth set her hand on, and finds it Christian burial.

1 Clo. How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defence?

2 Clo. Why, 'tis found so.

1 Clo. It must be so, accordingly; it cannot be else.
For here lies the point: if I drown myself willingly, it argues an act: and an act hath three branches; it is, to act, to do, and to perform: Argal, she drowned herself willingly.

2 Clo. Nay, but hear you, Goodman dealer.

1 Clo. Give me leave. Here lies the water; good:
here stands the man; good: If the man go to this water, and drown himself, it is, will he, he goes; mark you that: but if the water go to that man, and drown him, he does not himself: Argal, he, that is not guilty of his own death, shortens not his own life.

2 Clo. But is this law?

1 Clo. Ay, marry, 's't; 's crowner's quest law.

2 Clo. Will you ha' the truth on't? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out of Christian burial.

1 Clo. Why, there thou say'st: And the more pity, that great folks shall have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more than their even Christian. Come, my spade. There is no ancient gentlemen but gardeners, ditchers, and grave-makers; they hold up Adam's profession.

1 Not blight as foils are
2 As firearms sometimes burn'd in proving their strength.
3 Shall,
4 Immutably,
5 Fellow.

2 Clo. Was he a gentleman?
1 Clo. He was the first that ever bore arms.

2 Clo. Why, he had none.

1 Clo. What, art a lechion? How dost thou understand the word? The Scripture says, Adam digged: Could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee: if thou answerest me not to the purpose, content thyself.

2 Clo. Go to.

1 Clo. What is he, that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

2 Clo. The gallows-maker; for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

1 Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith; the gallows does well; but how does it well? It does well to those that do ill: now thou dost ill, to say, the gallows is built stronger than the church; argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To't again, come.

2 Clo. Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright, or a carpenter?

1 Clo. Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.

2 Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

1 Clo. Tell it.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio, at a distance.

1 Clo. O cudgel thy brains no more about it; for thy dull ass will not mend his pace with beating: and, when you are asked this question next, say, a grave-maker in the house that he makes, last till doomsday. Go, get thee to Vaughan, and fetch me a stoup of liquor.

HAMLET,

Act V.

I Clowc digs, and sings.

In youth, where was I did here, did love?

Thought, it was very sweet.

To contract, O, the time, for, ah, my behave

O, methought, there was nothing meet.

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business?

He is at grave-making.

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of casiness.

Ham. This' en so: the hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.

Clo. But age, with his stealing steps,

Hath claw'd me in his clutch,

And hath ship'd me into the land,

As if I had never been seen.

[Throws up a Skull, Ham. That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: How the knave jowls it to the ground, as my poor Cam's jaw-bone. But the first word retai-der! This might be the pate of a politician, which this ass now o'er-reaches; one that would circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, even so, and now my lady Worm's; chappell, and lankock'd about the mazzard with a sexton's spade: Here's fine revolution, and we had the trick to see. Did these bones cost no more than the play atlogg's with them! mine ache to think on't.

1 Clo. A pickaxe, and a spade, a spade, [Sings.

For—and a shrouding sheet:

O, a pit of clay for to be made

For such a guest is meet.

[Throws up a Skull.

Ham. There's another: Why may not he be the skull of a lawyer! Where be his quiddits now, his legal actions, his tenures, and his tricks! why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the scence with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery! Humph! This fellow might be his time a great lawyer of land, with his statutes, his recognisances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries: Is this the fine of his fines, and the recoveries of his recoveries, to have his fine pale full of mine dirt! will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of medulyles?
The very favours of his lands will hardly lie in this boxy; must the inheritor himself have no more! ha!

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. What are not made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calves-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep, and calves, which seek out assurance in that. I will speak to this fellow:-
Whose grave's this, sirrah?

1 Clo. Mine, sir.—

O, a pit of clay for to be made [Sings.

For such a guest is meet.

Ham. I think it be thine indeed; for thou liest in't.

1 Clo. You lie out sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part, I do not lie yet, it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in, to be in't, and say it is thine: 'Tis for the dead, not for the quick; therefore thou liest.

1 Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 'twill away again from in't to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?

1 Clo. For no man, sir.

Ham. What woman, then?

1 Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is he to be buried in't?

1 Clo. One, that was a woman, sir; but, rest her soul, she's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knave is! we must speak by the card,5 or equivocation will undo us. By the lord, Horatio, these three years I have taken more of it; the age is grown so pick'd; that the top of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kib.—How long hast thou been a grave-maker?

1 Clo. Of all the days in the year, I came to't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long's that since?

1 Clo. The day thou did tell that! every fool can tell that: It was that very day that young Hamlet was born: he that is mad, and sent into England.

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

1 Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, 'tis no great matter there.

Ham. How long since?

1 Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; there
the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How then?

1 Clo. Why, here in Denmark; I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years.

Ham. How long will a man lie i' the earth ere he rot?

1 Clo. A thousand years, sir; the earth is so heavy.

1 Clo. 'Faith, if he be not rotten before he die,
(as we have many pocky corses now-a-days, that will scarce hold the laying in,) he will last you some eight and nine year; a Tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he be more than another?

1 Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade, he will not keep out water a great while;
and your water is a some decayer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a skull now hath him you' d the earth three-and-twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?

1 Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was; Whose do you think it was?

Ham. I know not.

1 Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue!

he poured a dragon of Rhenish on my head once.
This same skull, sir, was Yorick's skull, the king's jesters.

Ham. This?

1 Clo. 'E'en that.

Ham. Alas! poor Yorick!—I knew him, Horatio;
a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy: he hath borne me on his back a thousand times; and now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorje tses at it. Here hung those lips, that I have kissed in council. They were as sweet as summer's flowers! Here she would say no more, when any safed her to speak: I loved the face, that was so capable of r赹age, that it geburth'd the image of my love; even so, now is my lady chamberer, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favor's she must come: make her laugh at that—
Pratche, Horatio, tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that, my lord?

Ham. Dost thou think, Alexander looked o't this fashion i' the earth!

Hor. Dost, my lord. How she smiles so? [pnh

Throes down the Skul.

Ham. To what base uses we may return.
Horatio! Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole?

Hor. 'Twere to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, faith, not a jot: but to follow him though the thickest smoke, and likelihood to lend it:
As thus; Alexander died, Alexander was buried,
Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of dearth we make learn; and why of that dust, where-to he was converted, might they not stop a beer-barrel?

Imperious Caesar, dead, and turn'd to clay,

Might stop a hole to keep the wind away: O, the thinnest dust, which kept the world in awe
Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw!^ But soft! but soft! aside,—Here comes the king.

Enter Priest, &c., in Procession; the Corpse of Ophelia. Laertes, and Mourners, following:

Exit Queen, Ghost, &c., Procession.

The queen, the courtiers: Who is this they follow?
And with such maniac rites! This doth betoken
The corpse they follow did with desperate hand
Forst its own life. 'Twas of some estate:
Couch we a while, and mark.

[Retiring with Horatio.

Laert. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes.

Laert. What ceremony else?

I Priest. Her obsequies have been as far enlarged
As we have warrant: Her death was doubtful;
And that great command, over the order,
She should in ground un-sanctified have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayers,
Shards, fins, and pebbles, should be thrown on her;
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin crans,
Her maiden strewnews, and the bringing home
Of hell and burial.

Laert. Must there no more be done?

I Priest. No more be done!

We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing a requiem, and such rest to her
As to peace-parted souls.

Laert. Lay her! the earth—
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
Make to the spirit—'tis printed so in thee, churchly priest,
A ministering angel shall my sister be,
When thouliest bowing.

Ham. What! the fair Ophelia?

Laert. Sweets to the sweet: Farewell!

[Scattering Flowers.

I hoped, thou'stallest had my Hamlet's wife;
I thought, thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid,
And not have strewd th' grave.

Laert. O, treble woe!

Fall ten times ten on that cursed head,
Whose wicked deed thy most ingenuous sense
Doth most impair:—swear 't is off!—Hold off the earthy smile,
Till I have caught her once more in mine arms:

[Leaps into the grave.

Now pile your dust upon the quicks and dead;
Toll of this flat a mountain you have made,
Too'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus.

Ham. [Aside.] Admiring! What is he whose grief
Bears such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the waving stars, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? this is I.

Hamlet the Dane.

[Leaps into the grave.

Laert. The devil take thy soul!

Ham. [Grappling with him.] Grappling with him.

Laert. [Struggling.] Thou pray'st not well.

I pr'ythee, take thy fingers from my throat;
For, though I am not spleenetic and rash,
Yet have I in me something dangerous,
Which, let thy wisdom fear: hold off thy hand.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Queen. Hamlet! Hamlet!

Hor. [To Gentlemen.] Good my lord, be quiet.

[The Attendants part them, and they come out of the Grave.

Ham. Why? I will fight with him upon this theme,
Until my eyelids no longer see the sight.

Queen. O my son, what theme!

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia: forty thousand brothers
Could not with all their quantity of love,
Make up my sum.—What will thou do for her?

King. O, he is mad, Laertes.

Queen. For love of God, forbear him.

Ham. You frown'd, show me what you told me:
Wouldn't weep? wouldn't fight? wouldn't eat? wouldn't weep thysel? Wouldn't drink up Esol? eat a crocodile? I'll Dubi! Dubi! thou come here to whine? To Outface me with leaping in her passion?
Be buried quick with her, and so will I:
And, if thou partest of mountains, let them
Thou dost so: I'll tear their rocks; till our ground,
* Endo. destroy. * Broken pots or tis. * Garlands. * A mass for the dead. * Living. * Esol is vinegar; but Mr. Stevens conjectures the word should be Hazel, a river which falls into the Baltic Ocean.

Singing his pate against the burning zone,
Make Ossia like a wart! Nay, an thou'th mouth,
I'll rant as well as thou.

Queen. This is mere madness;
And thus a while the fi'it will work on him;
Anon, as patient as the female dove,
When that her golden triplets are disclos'd, 8
His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Hear you, sir; What is the reason that you use me thus? I Love you very well: But, sir, you must not Let Hercules himself do what he may.
The cat will mew, and doz will have his day. [Exit.
King. I pray thee, good Horatio, wait upon him.

[To Laertes.

Will put the matter to the present push—
Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.—
This grave shall have a living monument;
An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;
Till then, in patience our proceeding be. 'Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Castle.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO.

Ham. So much for this, sir: now, shall you see the other;
Do you remember all the circumstance?

Hor. Remember it, my lord.

Ham. Sir, in my heart I was in a kind of fighting,
That would not let me sleep: methought, I lay
Worse than the mutines in the bilboes. Rashly,
And prang'd be rashness for it—Let us know,
Our indiscretion serves us well,
When our deep plots do pali; and that should Teach us,
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Hor. That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabin,
My sea-gown scarr'd about me, in the dark
Cropp'd I to find out them: had my desire;
Finger'd their packet; and, in mine, withdrew
To mine own room again: making so bold,
My fears for treading manners, to un-seal
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,
A royal knavery; an exact command—
Larded with many several sorts of reasons,
Importing Denmark's health, and England's too.
With, he! such base and goblins in my life,—
That on the supervise, no leisure hated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. 'tis possible?

Ham. Here's the commission; read it at more leisure.

But wilt thou hear now how I did proceed?

Hor. Ay, beseech you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with villains,
Or I could make a prolocute to my brains.
They had begun the play,—I sat me down—
Devis'd a new commission; wrote it fair:
I once did hold it, as our statutes do,
A baseness to write fair, and labor'd much
How to forget that learning; but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service: Wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, my good lord.

Ham. An earnest conjunction from the king—
As England was his faithful tributary:
As love between them like the palm moist flourish;
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear,
And stand a compromise 'twixt their subjects;
And many such like as' or great charge,—
That, on the view and knowing of these contents,
Without declamation, either more or less.
He should the bearers of sudden death,
Not starving: time allowed.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that as heaven's ordinance:
I had my father's signet in my possession,
Which was the model of that Danish seal:
Fii'ded the writ up in the form of the other;
As described it gave't the impression; placed it safely.

The changing never known: Now the next day

Was our sea-fight; and what to this was sequent, Thou know'st already.

Ham. Why man, they did make love to this employment;
They are not near my conscience; their defeat
Does by their own insinuation grow:
'Tis dangerous, when the baser nature comes
Between the pass and fall incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king is this!

Ham. Does it not think thee, stand me now upon
That this great hill I'll call my king, and when's my mother,
And Pipp'd in between the motion and my hopes;
Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
And with such cozenage; 'tis not perfect conscience.
To quit him with this arm! and is't not to be damn'd,
To let this canker of our nature come
In powder every way?

Hor. It must be shortly known to him from England.

Ham. What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short; the intern is mine;
And a man's life no more than to say, one:
But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself:
For by the image of my cause, I see
The portraiture of his: I'll count his favors
But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a lowering passion.

Hor. Peace; who comes here?

Enter Osen.

Osr. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir.—Dost know this head waterly?

Hor. No, my good lord.

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious; for his a vice to know him: He hath much land and fertile;
He will be lord of bristoll, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess: 'Tis a chough 2 but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.

Osr. Sir, if your lordship were at leisure, I should impart a thing to you from my master.

Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit: Your bonnet to his right use; 'tis for the head.

Osr. I thank your lordship, 'tis very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, 'tis very cold; the wind is northerly.

Osr. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet, methinks, it is very sultry and hot; or my complexion—

Osr. Exceedingly: my lord, it is very sultry—as it was told me; and you, my lord, your fascie bade me signify to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter—

Ham. I bewitch you, remember—

[Ham. does kink up on his hat] Osr. Nay, good my lord; for my ease, in good faith, Sir, here is newly come to court: Laertes: believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences; 2 of very soft society, and great showing: Indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in the continent of what part a gentleman would see.

Ham. Sir, his delineation suffers no perdition in you:—though I know, to divide him inventorially, would be the arithmetic of memory: and yet but raw neither, in respect of his quick sail. But, in the verity of extollment, I take him to be a soul of great article; and his infusion of such depth and rariness, Carthick to make the dissonance of him, his semblable is his mirror: and, who else would trace him, his umbrella, nothing more.

Osr. I am so far from this, sir? Why do we warp the gentleman in our more raver breath?

Osr. Sir, it's not possible to understand in another tongue
You will don't, sir, really.

Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?

Osr. Of Laertes?

Ham. His purse is empty already; all his golden words are spent.

Osr. Of him, sir.

Ham. I know you are not ignorant—

Ham. I would, you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me.—Well sir.

Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is

Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but, to know a man well, I must know him out of my Lord.

Osr. I mean, sir, for his weapon; but in the impatiation laid on him by him, in his need he's unfollowed.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons; but, well.

Osr. The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses; this is the breath he has impawn'd; 2 as I take it, six French rapiers and pantards, with their assigns, as girdle, hangers, and so on; Three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to you, very responsive to the hills, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal conceit.

Ham. What call you the carriages?

Osr. Why, you must be edified by the margin, ere you had done.

Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more germani- to the matter if we could carry a cannon by our side.

Osr. I would, it might be hangers till then. But, one; Six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal-contrived carriages; that's the much bet against the Danish: Why is this impawn'd, as you call it?

Osr. The king, sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you in thirty; he hath laid, on twelve for nine; and it would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. What? if I answer, no?

Osr. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall: If it please you, I will contrive that I am a day with you: let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him, if I can; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame, and the odium his.

Osr. Shall I deliver you so?

Ham. To this effect, sir; after what flourish your nature will.

Osr. I command my duty to your lordship.

Exit.

Ham. Yours, yours.—He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for't, too.

Ham. This is a wapping? runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did comply with his duck, before he sacked it. Thus has he (and many more of the same try) that, I know, the drossy age dotes on) only got the turn of the time, and outward habit of encounter; a kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fonds 3 and winched opinions; and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commanded him to you by young Osric, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: He sends to know, if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes, they follow the king's pleasure; if his fitness speaks, mine is ready to add; or, whenever, provided I be so able as now.

Lord. The king, and queen, and all, are coming down.

Scene II. PRINCE OF DENMARK.

Ham. In happy time.

Lord. The queen desires you to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes, before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me.

Lord. If you will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so; since he went into France, I have been in continual practice; I shall be victor of the odds. But I must not think, how ill all's here about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord.—

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of game, as would, perhaps, trouble a woman.

Hor. I know him. If your mind dis-like any thing, obey it; I will forestall their repair hither, and say, you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit; we dye angry, there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet will it come: the readiness is all: since no man, ofught he leaves, knows, what's to leave betimes! Let be.

Enter King, Queen, Laertes, Lords, Osric, and Attendants, with Foils, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me. [The King puts the Hand of Laertes in that of Hamlet.

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir; I have done you wrong;

But pardon it, as you are a gentleman.

This presence knows, and you must needs have heard,

How I am punish'd with a sore distraction.

What I have done, that might your nature, honor, and exception,

Brought away, I here proclaim was madness.

Was't Hamlet wronged Laertes? Never Hamlet;

If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away,

And now he's not himself, doth he wrong Laertes,

Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it.

Who does it, then? His madness: if 'tis so,

Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd;

His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.

Sir, in this audience,

Let my disclaiming from a purp'd evil

Free me so far in your most generous thoughts,

That I have shot my arrow o'er the house,

And hurt my brother.

Lear. I am satisfied in nature,

Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most

To my revenge: but I in term of honor

I stand aloof: and will no reconciliation,

Till by some elder masters of known honor,

I have a voice and precedent of peace,

To keep my name unwrond. But till that time,

I do receive your offer'd love like love,

And will not wrong it.

Ham. I embrace it freely;

And will this brother's wager frankly play.

Give us the foils; come on.

Lear. Come, come, for me.

Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes; in mine ignorance

Your skill shall, like a star in the darkest night,

Stick fiery o'errind.

Lear. Thou mock me, sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

King. Give them the foils, young Osric—Cousin Hamlet,

You know the wager?

Ham? Very well, my lord;

Your grace hath laid the odds o' the weaker side.

King. I do not fear it—I have seen you both:

But since he's better'd, we have there fore odds.

Lear. This is too heavy, let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well: these foils have all a length. [*They prepare to play.—*]

Osric. My good lord.

King. Set me the stoups of wine upon that table.—

If Hamlet give the first or second hit,

Or quench an answer of the third exchange,

Let all the battlements their ordnance fire,

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath; 6

And in the cup an union shall he throw,

Disguise

The king and queen's presence, 1

Unwound

Large jugs

A precious pearl.

Richer than that which four successive kings

In Denmark's crown have worn; Give me the cups;

And let the battle to the trumpet speak,

The trumpet to the cannon without,

The cannons to the heavens, the heavens to earth,

Now the King drinks to Hamlet.—Come, begin;—

But if you, the judges, bear a wary eye.

Ham. Come on, sir.

Lear. Come, my lord. [They play.—

Ham. One. 7

Lear. No. 8

King. Stay, give me drink: Hamlet, this pearl is thine;

Here's to thy health.—Give him the cup. [Trumpets sound; and Cannon shot off within.—

Ham. I'll play this bout first, set it by a while.

Come. Another hit; What say you! [*They play. Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confess."

King. Our son shall win.

Queen. He's fat, and scant of breath. —

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin, rub thy brows:

The queen carouse to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good madam,—

King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord:—I pray you, pardon me.

King. His the poison'd cup; it is too late. [*Aside. Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam: by-and-by. Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Lear. My lord, I'll hit him now.

Ham. I do not think it.

Lear. And yet it is almost against my conscience. [*Aside. Ham. Come, to the third, Laertes: You do but daily;

I pray you, pass with your best violence;

I am afraid, you make a wanton of me. [*Laer. Say you so I come on. [*They play. Osr. Nothing neither way. Lear. Have at you now. [*Laertes wounds Hamlet; then, in scuffling, they change Rapiers, and Hamlet wounds Laertes. King. Part them; they are incensed. Ham. Nay, come again. [*The Queen falls. Osr. Look to the queen there, ho! Hor. They bleed on both sides:—How is it, my lord? Osr. How is it, Laertes? Lear. Why, as a woodcock to my own springe, Osric. I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery.

Ham. How does the queen?

King. She swoons to see their bleed.

Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink,—O my dear and hated Hamlet!

The drink, the drink;—I am poison'd! [*Dies. Ham. O villain!—Ho! let the door be lock'd! Treachery! seek it out. [*Laertes falls. Lear. It is here, Hamlet: Hamlet, thou art slain:—

No medicine in the world can do thee good, In thee there is not half an hour's life:—

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand, Unbated, and envom'd: the foul practice

Hath turn'd itself on me; lo, here I lie,

Never to rise again: Thy mother's poison'd

I can no more, the king, the king's to blame.

Ham. The point

Envom'd too!—then, venom, to thy work.

Osr. & Lear. Treason! treason!—

King. O, yet defend me friends, I am but hurt.

Ham. Here, thou incestuous, murderous, damned Dane,

Drink off this potion:—is thy union here? Follow my mother. [*King dies. Lear. He is justly serv'd;—

It is a poison temper'd by himself.—

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet:

Mine and my father's death come not upon thee, Nor turne on me! [*Dies. Ham. Heaven make thee free of it! I follow thee.

* Dog.

Not blunted; without a button.

* Mixed.
I am dead, Horatio—Wretched queen, adieu!—
You that look pale and tremble at this chance,
That are but mutes or audience to this act,
Did I but live, (as this fell sergeant's death,
Is strict in his arrest;) O, I could tell you,—
But let it be—Horatio, I am dead;
Thou liv'st; report me and my cause aright
To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it;
I am more an antique Roman than a Dane,
Here's yet some liquor left.

Ham. As thou'lt a man,—
Give me the cup; let go; by heaven I'll have it.—
O God!—Horatio, what a wounded name,
Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind me!
If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from idiocy a while,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my story.—

[March o'er off, and Shot within.

What warlike noise is this?

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland,
To the ambassadors of England gives
This warlike volley.

Ham. O, I die, Horatio;
The potent poison quite o'er-crows my spirit;
I cannot live to hear the news from England:
But I do prophesy the election lights
On Fortinbras; he has my dying voice;
So tell him, with the occurrences, more or less,
Which have solicited—the rest is silence. [Dies.

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart;—Good-night, sweet prince;
And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!
Why does the drum come hither! [March within.

Enter Fortinbras, the English Ambassadors, and others.

Fort. Where is this sight?

Hor. What is it you would see!
If agony of woe or wonder, cease your search.

Fort. This quarry? cries on havoc!—O proud death!

1 A sergeant is a sheriff's officer. 2 Occurrences.
3 Iterated. 4 Heap of dead game.
5 A word of censure when more game was destroyed than was reasonable.

What feast is toward in thine eternal cell,
That thou so many princes, at a shot,
So bloody hast struck!

Amb. The sight is dismal;
And our affairs from England come too late:
The ears are senseless, that should give us hearing;
To tell him, his commandment is fulfilled,
That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead:
Where should we have our thanks?

Hor. Not from his mouth,
Had it the ability of life to thank you;
He never gave commandment for their death.
But since, so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polish wars, and you from England,
Are here arrived; give order, that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view,
And let me speak, to the yet unknowing world,
How these things come about: So shall you hear
Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts;
Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;
Of deaths put on by cunning, and forced cause;
And, in this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall'n on the inventors' heads; all this can I Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it,
And call the noblest to the audience.
For me, with sorrow I embrace my fortune;
I have some rights of memory in this kingdom,
Which now to claim my vantage doth invite me.
Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to speak,
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on more:
But let this same be presently perform'd,
Even while men's minds are wild; lest more mischance,
On plots and errors, happen.

Fort. Let four captains
Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage;
For he was likely, had he been put on,
To have prov'd most royally: and, for his passage,
The soldier's music, and the rites of war,
Speak loudly for him.—

Take up the bodies:—Such a sight as this Becomes the field, but here shows much amiss.

Go, bid the soldiers shoot. [4 Dead March.

[Exeunt, bearing off the dead Bodies; after which, a Peal of Ordinance is shot off.

* So exactly at the time.

Polish.
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave,
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's days,
For naught but provender; and, when he's old,
cashier'd;
Whip me such honest knaves: Others there are
Who, trimm'd in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves;
And, throwing but show of service on their lords,
Do well thrive by them, and when they have bied their feet.
Do themselves homage: these fellows have some soul;
And such a one do I profess myself.
For, sir,
It is as sure as you are Roderigo,
Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago:
In following him, I follow but myself;
Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar end:
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at: I am not what I am.
Rod. What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe,
If he can carry't thus!
Iago. Call up her father,
Rouse him: make after him, poison his delight,
Proclaim him in the streets; incense his kinmen,
And, though he be in a temperate climate dwell,
Plague him with flies; though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw such changes of vexation on,
As it may lose some color.
Rod. Here is her father's house: I'll call aloud.
Iago. Do; with like timorous accent, and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.
Rod. What has he! Brabantio! signior Brabantio, ho!
Iago. Awake! what ho! Brabantio! thieves! thieves!
thieves! thieves!
Look to your house, your daughter, and your bags!
Thieves! thieves!
Brabantio, above, at a Window.
Bro. What is the reason of this terrible summons?
What is the matter there?
Rod. Signior, is all your family within?
Iago. Are your doors lock'd?
Bro. Why! wherefore ask you this?
Iago. Zounds, sir, you are robb'd; for shame, put on your gown;
Your heart is burst, you have lost half your soul;

4 Own, possess.
Enter below, Brabantio, and Servants with Torches.

But. It is too true an evil; gone she is;
And what's to come of my despised time?
Is sought but bitterness. Now, Rodrigo,
Where didst thou see her?—O, unhappy girl!
With the Moors, sayst thou?—Who would be a father?
How didst thou know 'twas she?—O, thou deceiv'st
Past thought!—What said she to you?—Get more lappers:
Raise all my kindred.—Are they married, think you?
Rodr. I think, I think, they are.
But. O heaven! how saw she out?—O 'reason of the blood!—
Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds
But you the same act.—Are there not charms,
By which the property of youth and manhood
May be abused? Have you not read, Rodrigo,
Of some such thing?

Rodr. Yes, sir; I have indeed,
But. Call up my brother,—O, that you had had
Some one way, some another.—Do you know
Where they have apprended her and sent the Moor?
Rodr. I think, I can discover him: if you please
To get good guard, and go along with me.
But. Pray you, lead on. At every house I'll call;
And many continued at last—let me see the Moor,
And raise some special officers of night.—
on good Rodrigo,—I'll deserve your pains.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Street.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Attendants.
Jago. Though in the trade of war I have slain
men,
Yet do I hold it very stuff of the conscience,
To do no contriv'd murder; I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do mere service: Nine or ten times
I had thought to have yeard him here under the ribs,
Jago. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay, but he prated,
And spoke such scurril and provoking terms
Against your honor,
That with the little godliness I have,
I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray, sir,
Are you fast married? for, be sure of this,—
That the magnifico is much behold'd;
And hath, in his opinion, a voice potential
As double as the duke's; he will hear you;
Or put upon you what restraint and grievance
The law (with all his might, to enforce it)
Will give him cable.

Oth. Let him do his spite:
My services, which I have done the signiory,
Shall out-tongue his complaints. Tis yet to know,
Which is the worthier, to be in honor,
Or aided by him. That beauteous to the Moor,
I shall promulgate.) I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege? and my demerits?
May speak, unbonfettet, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have receiv'd; For know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused free condition
Put into circumscription and confine
For such a worth. But, look! what lights come yonder?

Enter Cassio, at a distance, and certain Officers with Torches.
Jago. These are the raised father, and his friends:
You were best go in.

Oth. Not I: I must be found;
My parts, my title, and my perfect soul,
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?

Iago. The servants of the duke, and my lieutenant.
The goodness of the night upon you, friends!

Oth. What is the matter, think you?
Jago. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine;
It is a business of some heat: the galleys old age; Brabantio. Magnifico is his title as senator.
Next or thence; Demerits has the same meaning in shakespearean works.
Scene III. The Moor of Venice.

Duke. And mine, a hundred and forty.
2 Sen. And mine, two hundred:
But though they jump not on a just account,
I am in these cases, where the sunk reparts.
[This is with difference:] yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bear up to Cyprus.
Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment;
I do not so secure myself the certainty.
But the main article I do approve
In fearful sense.
Duke. Enter an officer, with a Sailor.
Off. A messenger from the galley.
Duke. Now! the business?
Sailor. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes:
So was I bid report here to the state,
By signior Angelo.
Duke. How say you by this change?
1 Sen. This cannot be,
By no assay of reason; 'tis a pageant,
To keep us in false gage: When we consider
The importance of Cyprus to the Turk;
And let ourselves again but understand,
That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question it hear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace;
But altogether lulls the silly
That Rhodes is decid'd in:—if we make thought
Of this.
We must not think, the Turk is so unskillful,
To leave the latest which concerns him first;
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain.
To wake and wade a damsel profitless.
Duke. Nay, in all conscience, he is not for Rhodes.
Off. Here is more news.
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. The Ottomites, reverend and gracious,
Steering with due course toward the isle of Rhodes.
There have impounded them with an alter fleet.
1 Sen. Ay, so I thought:—How many, as you guess?
Mess. Of thirty sail: and now do they re-stem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appear-ice.
Their purposes toward Cyprus.—Signior Montano,
Your trusty and most valiant servitor,
With his three duty recommends you thus,
And prays you to believe him true.
Duke. Tis certain then for Cyprus.—
Marcus Lucchesi, is he not in town?
1 Sen. He's new in Florence.
Duke. Write from us: wish him post-post-haste, respite.
1 Sen. Here comes Brabantio and the valiant Duke. Enter Brabantio, Othello, Iago, Rodrigo, and Officers.
Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ
You against the general enemy Ottoman.
I did not see you; welcome, gentle signior;—
[To Brabantio.
We lack'd your counsel and your help to-night.
Duke. So did I, yours: good your grace, pardon
me.
Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general care
Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Is of so flood-gate and overbearing nature,
That it engulfs and swalloweth other sorrows,
And lets itself.
Duke. Why, what's the matter?
1 Sen. My daughter! O, my daughter!
Duke. Ay, to me; she's abus'd, stol'n from me, and corrupted
By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks:
For nature so pro-portion'd to err,
Being not deficient, blind, or mute of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not—
Duke. Whose? he be that, in this foul proceeding.
Hath thus beguil'd your daughter of herself,
And you of her, the bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the letter
[Conjurer. Easy dispute.
State of defence.
Doubt.
Without.]
Duke. We are very sorry for it. [To Othello.]

Brut. Nothing but this is so.

Oth. Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors; my very note and approb'd good masters.—That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter, It is most true; true, I have married her; There is my head and front of my的安全; Hath this extent, no more. Rude am I in my speech, And little lights with the set phrase of peace; For since these arms of mine had seven years' path, Till now some nine moons wasted, they have used Their dearest act one in the tented field; And here they are, to the world of the living, More than perains to feats of broil and battle; And therefore little shall I grace my cause, In speaking for myself: Yet, by your gracious patience,

I will a round unvarr'd tale deliver Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms, What conjuration, and what mighty magic. (For such proceeding I am charged withall.)

I own this daughter.

Brut. A madmen never hold; Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blush'd at herself; and she,—in spite of nature, Of tears, of country, credit, every thing,— To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on! It is an argu'd mind and'st, and in no perfect, That will confess—perfection so err
Against all rules of nature, and must be driven To find out hands of cunning hell,

Why this should be. I therefore vouch again, That with some mixtures powerful o'err the blood, Or with some dram conjur'd to this effect,

She thought upon her.

Duke. To vouch this is no proof;

Without more certain and more overt test,

Than these thin habits, and poor likelihoods

Of modern seeing, 2 do prefer against him.

I Sen. But Othello, speak—

Did you by indirect and forced courses Subdue and poison this young man's affections? or could you by request, or such fair question As soul to soul address?

Oth. I do beseech you,

Seeing the lady to the Sagittaire

And let her speak of me before her father;

If you do find me foul in her report,

The trust, the office, I do hold of you.

Not only take away, but let your sentence Even fall upon my life.

Oth. Ancient, conduct them; you best know the

In the hall law and Attendants.

And, till she come, as truly as to heaven

Do confess the vices of my blood.

So justly to your grave years I'll present

How I did thrive in this fair lady's love,

And she is mine.

Duke. Say it, Othello.

Oth. Her father lov'd me, of invited me; She would have me the story of my life. From year to year; the battles, sieges, tortures, That I have pass'd,

I ran it through, even from my boyish days,

To the very moment that he bade me tell it. Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,

Of moving accidents, by flood and field;

Of hair-breadth escapes 1 the imminent deadly breach;

Of being taken by the insolent foe,

And sold to slavery; of my redemption thence, And their salliance, in a word, in all.

Wherein of others vast, and desert idle,

Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven,
The Moor of Venice.

Scene III.

When words are words; I never did yet hear, That the bruit'd heart was pierced through the ear. Thus I was forry'd, and persuade us of state,

Duke. The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus—Othello, the fortitude of the place, and the badness of my cause to you: And though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safer voice on you: you must therefore be prepared for the dangers of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition.

Oth. The tyrant custom, most grave senators, Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war My bed of ease. Let well the bed be made, I do againe,

A natural and prompt alacritie, I find in hardiness, and do undertake These present wars against the Ottomites. Most certainly therefore, benighted to your state, I crave it disposition for my wife; Due reference of place, and exhibition? With such accommodation, and consort, As levels with her breeding.

Duke. If you please, Bet at her father's. Oth. I'll not have it so. Des. Nor 1; I would not them reside, To put my father in impatient thoughts, By being in his eye and to the grave, To my unfolding lend a gracious ear; And let me find a charter in your voice, To assist my simplemes.

Des. That is done, Desdemona! Des. That I did love the Moor to live with him, My downright violence and storm of fortunes May trump to the world; my heart's subdued Even to the very quality of my lord: I saw Othello's visage in his mind; And to his honors, and his valiant parts, Did my soul and sentiments consecrate, So that, dear lords, if I be left behind, A meth of peace, and he go to the war, The rites, for which I love him, are bereft me, And I a heavy interum shall support by my absence. Let me return with him.

Oth. Your voices, lords, beseech you, let her Have a free ways. Ver. With my all, heaven; I therefore beg it not, To please the palate of my appetite; Nor to comply with heat, the young affects? In my distinct and proper satisfaction; But be free line and love of thy mind; And heaven defend your good souls, that you think Will your serious and great business scant, For your command, I am in hospitall'd yours Of feather'd Cupid seat; with wanton dulness My speculative and active instruments, That my disorders corrupt and bane my business, Let them as present else of quality and respect, As doth import you.

Oth. Please your grace, my ancient; A man he is of honesty and trust; To his commandance design my will; With what else needful your good grace shall think To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so, Good-night to every one. And, noble seignior. [To Brabantio.]

If virtue no delighted beauty lack, Your son-in-law is far more fair than black. I Sen. Akin, brave Moor I use Desdemona well.

Bra. Look to her, Moor; have a quick eye to see; She has decay'd her father, and may thee. Des. This speaks our noble, procuring officers, &c.

Oth. My life upon her faith.—Honest Iago, My Desdemona must I leave to thee; By thy doings let me know how thou wilt end. And bring them alter in the best advantage.— Come, Desdemona; I have but an hour Of love, of worthy matters and direction, To spend with thee. [Exeunt Othello and DESDEMONA."

Rod. Iago, Iago. What say'st thou, noble heart! Rod. Why, I do, Iago. Iago. Why, why to bed, and sleep. Rod. I will incontinently drown myself. Iago. Well, till thou dost, I shall never love thee after it. Rod. It is sliickness to live, when live is a torment; and then have we a prescription to die, when death doth pray to us. Iago. O villainous! I have looked upon the world for four times seven years! and since I could distinguish between a benefit and an injury, I never found a man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say, I would drown myself for the love of a Guineachen, I would change my humanity with a baboon.

Rod. What should I do! I confess it is my shame to be so fond; but it is not in virtue to amend it.

Iago. Virtue! a fig! 'tis in ourselves, that we are thus, and thus, and thus; our bodies are as good gardens, to the which, our wits are gardeners: so that if we plant nettles, or sow lettuce; set hyssop, and weed up thyme; supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many; either to have it streel with idleness, or manured with industry; why, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our wits. If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason in another, of sense in reason, the blood and baseness of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions: But we have reason to cool our passions, our calm stings, our unbridled lust; when we take this, that you call love, to be a sect or scion.

Rod. It cannot be. Iago. How? by the sun, if it be a lust of the blood, and a permission of the will. Come, be a man; Drown thyself! drown cats and blind juppiers. I have professional me thy friend, and I confess me knyt to thy preserving the lives of poor old gardeners, which could never better stead thee than now. Put money in thy purse; follow these wars; debate thy favor with an usurped beard? I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be, that Desdemona should long continue her love to the Moor,—put money in thy purse;—nor he to his: it was a violent commencement, and thou shall see an answerable sequestration. What hast thou in the garden, I say?—these Moors are changeable in their wills;—fill thy purse with money: the food that to him now is as luscious as leeks, shall be to him shortly as bitar as coloquintida. She must change for youth: when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice;—she must have change, she must: thercfore put money in thy purse.—If the will needs damn thyself, do it a more delicate way than drowning. Make all the money thou canst: if sanctimonious, and a tray vow betwixt an erring barbaryman and the white men here; make man for thy wits, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her; therefore make money. A box of drowning thyself: it is clean out of the way: seek thou rather to be hanged in compassing thy joy, than to be drowned and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

Iago. Thou art sure of me:—Go, make money;—I have told thee often, and I re-tell thee again and again, I hate the Moor: My cause is hearted; thine hath no less reason: Let us be conjunctive in our revenge, and hast not: If thou dost mock him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time, which will be delivered. Traverse? go; provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet i' the morning?

Iago. At my lodging.

Rod. I'll be there, and bring these times.

Iago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Rodrigo? Rod. What say you?

Iago. No more of drowning, do you hear?

Rod. Indeed, I will all my hand.

Iago. Go to; farewell; put money enough in your purse. [Exit Rodrigo.

Tantamount never make my fool my master:
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I would tune expend with such a surfe,
But for my sight and profit. I hate the Moor;
And it is thought abroad, that 'twas my sheets
He has done my office: I know not if't be true;
But I, for mere suspicion in that kind,
Will do, as if for surety. He holds me well.
The better shall my purpose work on him.
Cassio's a proper man: Let me see now;
To get his heart, and to plume up my will;
A double knavery,—How! how! Let me see—
After some time, to abuse Othello's ear,
That he is too familiar with his wife.—
He hath the countenance, and a smooth discourse,
To be suspected; framed to make women false.
The Moor is of a free and open nature,
That thinks men honest that but seem to be so.
And will as tenderly be led by the nose,
As asses are.

I have't;—it is engender'd;—Hail and night
Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Sea-port Town in Cyprus. A Platform.

Enter Montano and two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?

1 Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought flood;
1 I cannot; 'tis next the heaven and the main.

Mon. Methinks, the wind hath spoke aloud at land;
A fiercer blast ne'er shook our battlements:
If it hath nulldon so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortar! what shall we hear of this?

2 Gent. A degeneration of the Turkish fleet;
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding hallow seems to pelt the clouds;
The wind-lashed surge, with high and monstrous main,
Seems to cast water on the burning hear.

Mon. What is this?—and quench the guards of the ever-fixed pole;
I never did like molestation view
On the enchanted seas.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet
Be not in shelter'd and embark'd, they are drown'd:
It is impossible they bear it out.

Enter a third Gentleman.

3 Gent. News, lords! our wars are done: The desperate tempest hast so long'd the Turks,
That their desegnment hails: A noble ship of Venice
Hath seen a grievous wreck and sufferance
Of most part of their fleet.

Mon. How! is this true?

3 Gent. The ship is here put in,
A Venetian; Michael Cassio,
Lieutenant to the warlike Moor, Othello,
Is come on shore: The Moon himself's at sea,
And in full commission here for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't; 'tis a worthy governor.

3 Gent. But this same Cassio,—though he speak of comfort,
Touching the Turkish loss,—yet he looks sadly,
And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted
With bold and violent tempest.

Mon. Pray heaven he be;
For I have serv'd him, and the man commands Like a full solier. Let's to the sea-side, ho!
As we will see the vessel that's come in.
As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello;
Even till we make the main, and the aerial blue,
An indifferent regard.

3 Gent. Come, let's do so;
For every minute is expectation
Of more arr ivance.

Enter Cassio.

Cas. Thanks to the valiant of this warlike isle,
That have removed the Moor; O, let the heavens
Give him defence against the elements,
For I have lost him on a dangerous sea!

Mon. Is he well shipped?

Cas. His bark as staidly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approved allowance;—

Therefore my hopes, not surfeit'd to death,
Stand in bold cure.

Cassio. A sail, a sail, a sail!

Enter a Gentleman.

Cas. What noise?

4 Gent. The town is empty; on the brow o' the sea
Stand ranks of people, and they cry—a sail.
Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor.

2 Gent. They do discharge their shot of cour-

Cas. Our friends, at least.

Cas. I pray you, sir, go forth,
And give us truth who 'tis that is arrived.

2 Gent. I shall. [Exit.

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wiv'd
Cas. Most fortunately: he hath achieve'd a maid
That paragon description, and wild fame;
One that excels the quips of blazoning pens,
And in the essential vesture of creation,
Does bear all excellency.—How now! who has put in?

Enter second Gentleman.

2 Gent. 'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.
Cas. He has had most favorable and happy speed;
Tempers themselves, high seas, and howling winds
The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,—

Cas. He has had most favorable and happy speed;
Tempers themselves, high seas, and howling winds
The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,—

3 Gent. The tarewell;—the meeting of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship; But, hark! a sail!

Cas. [Cry within. A sail, a sail! Then Guns heard.

2 Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel.

Cas. This likewise is a friend.

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, Iago, Rodrigo, and Attendants.

The riches of the ship is come on shore!

Cas. Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees:—

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio.

Cas. What tidings can you tell me of my lord?

Des. He is not yet arrived: nor know I aught
But that he will, and will be shortly here.

Des. O, but I hear,—How lost you company?

Cas. We have great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship: But, hark! a sail!

Emilia. [To Desdemona.

Des. O, but I hear,—How lost you company?

Cas. We have great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship: But, hark! a sail!

Tait. [To Emilia.

Des. O, but I hear,—How lost you company?

Cas. We have great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship: But, hark! a sail!

Tait. [To Emilia.

Des. O, but I hear,—How lost you company?

Cas. We have great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship: But, hark! a sail!

Tait. [To Emilia.

Des. O, but I hear,—How lost you company?
Let it not gallop your patience, good Iago.
That I extend my manners; 'tis my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesy.

Kissing her.

Iago. Sir, would she give you so much of her lips,
As of her tongue she oft bestows on me,
You'd have enough.

Des. Alas, she has no speech.

Iago. In faith, too much,
I find it still, when I have she's to sleep:
Making and keeping her a bed, I mean.
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on; you are pictures out of doors,
Bells in your parlors, wild cats in your kitchens,
Saints in your injuries, devils being offended,
Players in your housewifery, and housewives in your beds.

Des. O, free on thee, slanderer!

Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk;
You must choose to play, or else to work.

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Des. What wouldst thou write of me, if thou
Shouldst praise me?

Iago. O, gentle lady, do not put me to't;
For I am nothing, if not critical.

Des. Come on an essay.—There's one gone to the harbor!

Iago. Ay, madam.

Des. I am not merry; but I do begin
The thing I am, by working. —Come,
How wouldst thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it; but, indeed, my invention
Comes from my past, as birdlines do from Jesse;
It plucks out brains and all; but my muses labor,
And thus she is delivered.

If she be fair and wise, —fairness, and wit,
The one's for use, the other use.

Des. The praise! —How it she be black and witty!

Iago. If she be black, and thereto have a wit,
She'll find a white that shall her blackness fit.

Des. Worse and worse.

Emil. How, if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair;
For even her folly help'd her to an heir.

Des. These are old fond paradoxes, to make fo's laugh it the alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her's fault and foolishness?

Iago. There're none of such in the world, but the pranks which fair and wise ones do,
But she, that is thereto entered.

Des. O heavy ignorance! —thou praisest the worst best, —but what praise could thou best give thou, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of so much malice itself?

Iago. She that was ever fair, and never proud;
Hath for her fault a far saluting
Never lack'd gold, and yet went never say;
Fled from her wish, and yet said, —now I may; —
She, that being anger'd, her revenge being sigh'd,
But not, worse play, and her displeasure fly;
She, that in wisdom never was so frail,
To change the ead's head for the salmon's tail;
That she could think, and no'ter discharge her mind,
Seem'd very foolish and not look behind her;
She was a vight; —if ever such vight were, —

Des. To do what?

Iago. To suckle fools, and chronicle small beer.
Being a woman on a most mortal occasion —

Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband, —How say you, Cassio! is he not now a most prostrate and liberal counsellor?

Cassio. He speaks home, madam: you may relish him more in the soldier, than in the scholar.

Iago. [Aside.] He takes her by the palm: Ay, well said, whisper: with as little a web as this I will catch the gull: —Come, Cassio, —Ay, smile upon her, do: I wil give thee in thine own courteous,
You say true; —his so, indeed: if such tricks as these are in our lieutenant, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so off, which now again you are most apt to play the sir in! —Very good; well kissed! an excellent courtesy! 'tis so, indeed. Yet again, your fingers to your lips? would they were clyster-pipes, for your sake. —[Trumpet.] The Moor, I know his trumpet.

Cas. Tis truly so.

Des. Let's meet him, and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes!

Enter Othello and Attendants.

Oth. My fair warrior!

Des. My dear Othello!

Oth. It gives me wonder great delight, To see you here before me. O my soul's joy! If ever tempest come such calm's,
May the winds blow till they have wak'd death! —
And let the laboring old Couch-bed seas,
Olympus-hugh; and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die,
'Twere now to be most happy; for I, fear,
My soul hath caught such joy this instant,
That not another comfort like this,
Succeeds in unknown fate.

Des. The heavens forbid,
But that our loves and comforts should increase,
Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers! —I cannot speak enough of this content; —It stops me here; it is too much of a work for me.

And this, and this, the greatest discords be,
Kissing her.

That 'er our hearts shall make!

Iago. O, you are well tuned now!
But I'll set down the pegs that make this music,
As honest as I am.

[Aside.

Come, let's to the castle.

New; friends, our wars are done, the Turks are drown'd.
How do our old acquaintance of this isle —
Now, as ladies, you shall be well dea'd in Cyprus; I have found great love amongst them. O my sweet, I prattle out of fashion, and I dete
In mine own comforts; —I pray you, good Iago,
Go to the Moor and do not work my curators:
Bring the master to the citadel;
He is a good one, and his worthiness
Does challenge much respect.—Come, Desdemona, Once more, well met at Cyprus.

[Exit Othello, Desdemona, and Attendants.

Des. Do thou meet me presently at the harbor. Come in, if thou be'st valiant as (they say) base men, being in love, have then a mobility in their natures more than is native to them, —list me. —The lieutenant to-might watch on the court of guard! —First, I must tell thee this —Desdenoma is directly in love with him.

Rod. With him? why, 'tis not possible.

Des. Like as the woman, thus, an angel by soul be instructed. Mark me with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for hazzing, and telling her fantastical lies; And will she love him still for nothing? —Why dost thou thus heart her? Her eye must be fed; and what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dull with the set of sport, there should be again to inflame it. —To give safety a fresh appealing-loveliness in favor; sympathy in years, manners, and beauties; all which the Moor is defective in: Now, for want of these required conveniences, her delicate eyes shall find themselves less valued, began to have the gage, desecrarch and abhor the Moor; very nature will instruct her in it, and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this granted, (as it is in every woman, and a woman of that breed, who stands so eminently in the degree of this fortune, as Cassio does! a knife very valuable; no further con-nomable, than in putting on the bare form of civil and human seeming, for the better empanning of his salt and more hidden loose affection! why, none; why, none; A slippery and subtle knife; a finder out of occasions; that has an eye to every turn and current, and an eye to every trust. Advantage never present itself! A devilish knife! besides, the knife is handsome, young, and hath a man in it; all those three things, that lively and green minds look after: A pestilent complete knife; and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot believe that in her; she is full of most blessed condition.

[Music.]

2 Much sollicited by invitation. 1 Listen to me. 3 Qualifies, disposition of the mind.
Iago. Blessed fig's eed! the wine she drinks is made of grapes: it must had been sweet, she would never have loved the Moor: Blessed pudding! Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? I did not mark that.

Oth. The, that I did; but that was but courtesy.

Iago. Lecher, by this hand; an index and obverse prologue to the history of lust and foul thought, whose footprints ever I met so near with their lips, that their breathsmellpt together. Valintamedthoughts, Rodrigo! when these mutabilities so marshail the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exccrption incorruptible ord:—Biar, be you ruled by me: I have brought you from Venice. Watch you to-night; for the command, I'll lay upon you: Cassio knows you not.—I'll not do you far from you: do you not understand? occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting his discipline; or from what other course you please, which the time shall more favorably minister.

Oth. Well.

Iago. Sir, he is rash, and very sudden in choler; and, haply, with his truncace may strike at you: Pray take, what he may: even out of that I will cause these of Cyprus to mutiny; whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by the disparaging of Cassio. So shall I have a shorter journey to your desires, by the means I shall then have to prevet them; and the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were much occasion of our perplexity.

Oth. I will do this, if I can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the laid out; I must fetch his necessary ashes. Farewell.

Oth. Adieu. [Exit.

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe it; That she loves him, 'tis apt, and of great credit: The Moor—howbeit that I endure him not— Is of a constant, loving, noble nature; And, I dare think, he'll prove to Desdemona A better husband than this hand. Not out of absolute lust, (though peradventure, I stand accountant for as great a sin,) But partly led to diet her review. For that I do suspect the lusty Moor Hath leap'd into my seat: the thought whereof Both, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards; And that he can or will confine his soul, Till I am even with him, wife for wife: Or, falling so, yet that I put the Moor At least into a jealousy so strong That judgment cannot cure. Which thing to do,— If this poor trash! of Venice, whom I trash! For his quick hunting, stand the putting on, I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip; Also refer to the Moor in the rank earth,— For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too; Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me, For making him egregiously an ass, And practising upon his peace and quiet Even to madness. 'Tis here, but yet confus'd! Knavey's plain face is never seen, till used. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter a Herald, with a Proclamation, People following.

Her. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arrived, importing the meré perturbation of the Turkish fleet, every man put him well upon their triumph; some to dance, some to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revels his addiction leads him; for, besides these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his marriage. So much was his pleasure that he declared he would be proclaimed. All offices are open; and there is full liberty of feasting, from this present hour of five, the bell hath told eleven. Heaven bless the island of Cyprus: and our noble general, Othello. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Hall in the Castle.

Enter Othello, Desdemona, Cassio, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard to-night:—

Wine, gentleman.

The turn for a clog put on a bound, to hinder his running.

Entree.

Let's teach ourselves that honorable stop, Not to depart discreetly. That will I look to.

Oth. Iago is most honest.

Cas. Welcome, Iago: We must to the watch. Iago. Let me have speech with you. Come, my dear love, The purchase made, the fruits to ensue:

That profit's yet to come 'twixt me and you.—

Good-night. [Exit Cassio, Desden, and Attendants. Enter Iago.

Cas. Welcome, Iago: We must to the watch. Iago. Go, you are our friends; but one cup; I'll drink for you.

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was early, madam; too early, and, behold, what innovation it makes here: I am unfortunite in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Iago. What, man! 'tis a night of revels; the gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Here at the door; I pray you, call them in.

Cas. I'll do it; but it dishkes me. [Exit Cassio.

Iago. I can fasten but one cup upon him, With which he hath drank to-night already. I'll be of good cheer and otherwise.

Cas. If you'll have no supper, and will sit up with me, I will. As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool, Rodrigo, Whom love has turn'd almost the wrong side out of.

To Desdemona hath to-night caroused Potations pottle deep; and he's to watch: Three fads of Cyprus,—noble swelling spirits, That hath their honours in a warm disorder; The very elements of this warlike isle.— Have I to-night muster'd with flowing cups, And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards.

Am I to put our Cassio in some action — That may offend the isle.—But here they come: If consequence do but approve my dream.

My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

Re-enter Cassio, with him Montano, and Gentlemen.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, they have given me a roused already.

Mont. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.

Iago. Some wine, ho! [\[Sings.\] And let me the caskkin elkh, elkh;\[Sings.\] And let me the caskkin elkh: A soldier's a man; A life's but a span: Why ho, let a soldier drink! Some wine, boys! Iago. [\[Sings.\] Wine brought in.\[Sings.\] Cas. 'Fore heaven, an excellent song.

Iago. I learned it in England, where (indeed) they are most potent in potting; your Daine, your portain, and your womanbeer; she was called Holland. —Drink, ho!—are nothing to your English.

Dismissed. [\[Sings.\] Styly mixed with water.

A little more than enough.
Cas. Is your Englishman so expert in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinks with you, with facility, your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Almain; he gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next bottle can be filled.

Cas. To the health of our general.

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I'll do you justice. [Aside to Rodrigo.]

Iago. O sweet England! [Aside to Rodrigo.]

King Stephen was a worthy peer: His breeches cost him but a crown; He held them sixpence all too dear, With that he called the fellow knave. He was a tright of high renown, And thou art but of low degree: 'Tis pride that pulls the country down, Then take thine own and chide about thee.

Some wine, ho! [Aside to Rodrigo.]

Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear it again?

Cas. Not for I hold him to be unworthy of his place, that does those things.—Well,—Heaven's above all; and there be souls that must be saved, and there be souls must not be saved.

Iago. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, or any man of quality,—I hope to be saved.

Cas. And so do I, lieutenant. Cas. Your good lieutenant.

Iago. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, or any man of quality,—I hope to be saved.

Cas. Why, very well, then: you must not think then that I am drunk.

Iago. This is more than the prologue to his sleep: He'll watch the herolge a double set, If drink not rock his cradle.

Iago. The general were put in mind of it.

Cas. Perhaps he sees it; or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his evils: Is not this true?

Enter Rodrigo.

Iago. How now, Rodrigo?

Cas. I pray you, after the lieutenant; go, [Aside to Rodrigo.]

Iago. Mon. And this great pity, that the noble Moor Should hazard such a place, as his own second, With one of an inconstant mind; It were an honest action, to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:

Cas. I have Cassio well; and we would do much
To cure him of this evil. But hark! what noise! [Cry within. Help! help!]

Re-enter Cassio, driving in Rodrigo.

Mon. You rogue! you rascal!

Iago. What's the matter, lieutenant? Cas. A knave!—teach me my duty! I'll beat the knave into a twagg'n bottle! Rod. Beat me! Cas. Dost thou prize, rogue? [Striking Rodrigo.]

Iago. Nay, good lieutenant; [Staying him.

Mon. I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Come, come, you're drunk.

Iago. Drink as much as you do. [A worthy fellow. "Crown,

Cas. While the clock strikes two, or four, and twenty hours, A Look'd settled, and a Wicked bottle.

Iago. Drunk! [They fight.]

Mon. Away, I say! go out, and cry—a matinyst. [Aside to Rodrigo, who goes out.]

Cas. Drunk! Who's that that rings the bell!—Diablo, ho!

Iago. Help!—lieutenant, sir,—Montano,—sir,—Help, masters!—Here's a goodly weapon indeed! [Bell rings.]

Mon. What is the matter here? Mon. I bleed still, I am hurt to the death;—he dies.

Iago. Hold, for your lives.

Iago. Hold, hold, lieutenant, sir, Montano,—gentlemen,

Cas. Have you forgot all sense of place and duty! Hold, how the general speaks to you; hold, for shame!

Iago. Why, how now, ho! from whence ariseth this?

Mon. Are we turn'd Turks; and to ourselves do that, Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites? For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl: He that stirs next to carve for his own mea, Brings down the good lieutenant. Cassio, in his soul light, he dies upon his motion. Silence that dreadful bell, it frights the isle From her propriety.—What is the matter, masters? Honest Iago, that look'st dead with grieving, Speak, we beseech thee, what thy master charg's thee.

Iago. I do not know:—friends all but now, even now,

Iago. In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom Divesting them, bawling: and then, but now, (As if some planet had unwitted men,) Swords out, and liting one at other's breast, In opposition bloody. I cannot speak Any longer to this present odds;— And would in action glorious I had lost These legs, that brought me to a part of it!

Iago. How know I this?—you are thus forgot! Cas. I pray you pardon me, I cannot speak.

Iago. Worthy Montano, you were wont be civil.
The gravity and stillness of your youth The worseth man and bring your parts great In mouths of wised censure;—What's the matter, That unlace you reputation thus, And spend your rich opinion, for the name Of a night brawler?—give me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger; Your officer, Iago, can inform you—While I spare speech, which something now offends

Mon. Of all that I do know:—nor know I taught By me that's said or done amiss this night; Unless self-charity be sometime a vice, And to defend ourselves it be a sin, When violence assails us.

Iago. Now, by heaven, My blood begins my safer guides to rule: And passion, having my best judgment collaid, Assays to lead the way:—If once I stir, Or do but lift this arm, the best of you Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know How this foul rout began, who set it on; And he that is appoy'd in this offence, Though he had twain'd with me, both at a birth, shall look on, Worthy Montano, in a town way. Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear, To manage private and domestic quarrel, In night, and on the court and guard of safety! To armours,—if you be begu when Mon. If partially affid, or leagued in office Than dost deliver more or less than truth, Thou art no soldier.

Iago. Touch me not so near; I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth, Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio; Yet I persuade myself, to speak the truth Shall nothing wrong me;—Thus it is, general. Montano and myself being in speech, There comes a fellow, crying out for help; And Cassio following him with determin'd sword, To execute upon him Sir, this general Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause;— Myself the crying fellow did pursue, Lest, by his clamor, (as it so fell out,) "Denied. [Convicted by proof.]

Iago. Related by nearness of office.
OTHELLO, Think, Divinity when will she lead thee? For I heard the chink and full of swords, And Cassio high in oath; which, till to-night, I never might say: was when I came hither. (Found not.) I found them close together, At blow, and thrust; even as again they were, When you yourself did part them. Never of that importance— But men are men; the best sometimes forget— Though Cassio did some little wrong to him, As men in rage strike those that wish them well, Yet I believe, receipts receiv'd— From him that died, with strange indignity, Which patience could not pass. Oth. The honesty and love doth mine own matter, Making it light to Cassio—Cassio, I love thee; But never more be officer of mine. Enter Desdemona, attended. Look, if my gentle love be not rais'd up— I'll make thee an example. Des. What's the matter, dear? Oth. All's well now, sweeting; Come away to bed. Sir, for your hurts, Myself will be your surgeon: Lead him off. [To Montano, who is led off. Iago, look with care about the town; And silence those whom this vile brawl distressed— Cassio and Desdemona; This will suffice. To have their blamy slumberers waked with strife. [Exit all but Iago and Cassio. Iago. What, are you hurt, lieutenant? Cass. Ay, just all surgery. Iago. Marty, heaven forbid! Cass. Reputation, reputation, reputation! O, I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal fame I have almost all my life made, and will make. My reputation, Iago, my reputation. Iago. As I am an honest man, I thought you had recovered somewhat, and did not expect this in you, in that, in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving: You have lost no reputation at all, unless you repent your free lost to any such a loser. What, man! there are ways to recover the general again: You are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his own defenceless dog, to allfringe an impertinent lion: sue to him again, and he's yours. Cass. I will rather sue to be despised, than to deceive so good a commander, with so slight, so drunken, and so indescible an officer. Drunk! and speak parrot? and squab! swagger! swear! and discourse in vain with one's own shadow!—O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast now no name to be known by, let us call thee—devil! Iago. What was that he followed with your sword? What had he done to you? Cass. I know not that. Iago. Is it possible? Cass. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore,—o, that men should put an enemy in their mouths, to steal away their brains! that we should, with joy, revol, pleasure, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts? Iago. Why, but you are now well enough: How came you thus recovered? Cass. It hath pleased the devil, drunkenness, to give place to the devil, wrath; one unperfectness shows me another, to make me frankly despise myself. Iago. Come, you are too severe a moraller: As the time, the place, and the condition of this country, stands, I could hardly wish this had not been taken; but since it is as it is, mend it for your own good. Cass. I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me, I am a drunkard! Had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be how a sensible man, by-and-by a fool, and presently a drunkard! O stay! O stay!—When Cassio could, I have been too well exquisitely well embossed; and the ingredient is a devil. Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well used; examine no more.

Dismissed in his anger. Talk silly.

Cas. I have well approved it, sir,—I drank! Iago. You, or any man living, may be drunk at some time or other; and yet I'll tell you if you shall do. Our general's wife is now the general.—I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and demonstration of her parts and import—

Cas. Iago. I know, Iago. [Exit Cassio. Iago. And what's he then, that says,—I play the villain;

When this advice is free, I give, and honest, Probed my soul, and found the reason true; To win the Moor again! For, 'twas easy

The meek Desdemona to subdue

In any honest suit; she's framed as fruitful As the best elements, and then food to win; To win the Moor, we're to renounce his baptism, All seals and symbols of redeemed sin,— His soul, his body, to her love.

That she may make, unmake, do what she list,

Even as her appetite shall play the god

With his weak function. How am I then a villain,

To consider Cassio to this parallel course,

Directly to his good! Divinity of hell! When devils with their blackest sins put on,

They do surges at first with heavenly shows,

As I do now: For while this honest fool,

Pries Desdemona to repair his fortunes,

And for him pleads strongly to the Moor,

I'll pour this pestilence into his ear,—

That she repeats! him for her love of him;

And, by how much she strives to do him good,

She shall undo her credit with the Moor.

So will I turn her virtue into pitch!

And out of her own good nature make the net

That shall enmesh them all.—Now, Roderigo! Enter Roderigo.

Rob. I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that lifts up the cerry. My money and my goods have come, and I have been toiled exceddingly well embossed; and I, I think, the issue will be—I shall have so much experience for my pains: and so, with no money at all, and a little more will, return to Venice.

Iago. How poor are they, that have not patience!

What wound did ever heal, but by degrees

Thou know'st we work by will, and not by witchcraft; And wit depends on dilatory time.

Don't not go well! Cassio hath beaten me,

And thou, by that small hurt, hast cashier'd Cassio

Though of his things great harm is not as yet observed.

Yet fruits that blossom first, will first be ripe:

Content thyself a while,—by the mass, his morning,
Pleasure, and action, make the hours seem short.

Retire to bed; go where thou hast betel set.

Away, I say; thou shail know more hereafter:

Nay, get thee gone. [Exit Roderigo. Two things are done.

My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress; I'll set her on;

Myself, the while, to draw the Moor apart,

Not bring him to light! 0 stay!—O stop! When Cassio find soliciting his wife—Ay, that's the way;

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before the Castle.

Enter Cassio and some Musicians.

Cass. Masters, play here, I will entertain your pains,
Something that's brief; and had—good-morrow, general.

[Music.

Enter Clown.

C1o. Why, masters, have your instruments been
At Naples, that they speak 'I the nose thus?
1 Mus. How, sir, how?
C1o. Are these, I pray you, called wind instruments?
1 Mus. Ay, marry, are they, sir.
C1o. O, thereby hangs a tail.
1 Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir!
C1o. Marry, sir, by many a wind instrument
That I know. But, masters, here's money for you; and the general so likes your music, that he desires you,
of all loves, to make no more noise with it.
1 Mus. Well, sir, we'll not.
C1o. If you have any music that may not be heard, tof' again; but, as they say, to hear music,
the general does not greatly care.
1 Mus. We have none such, sir.
C1o. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away: Go; vanish into air; a way.

[Exeunt Musicians.

Cas. Dost thou hear, my honest friend? I hear you.
Cas. Prythee, keep up thy quillips.9 There's a poor piece of gold for thee; if the gentleman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Cassius entertains her little a favor of speech: Wilt thou do this?
C1o. She is stirring, sir; if she will stir hither,
I shall seem to notify this.

[Exit.

Enter Iago.

Cas. Do, good my friend,—in happy time, Iago.
Iago. You have not been a-bed then?
Cas. Why, no; the day had broke
Before I parted. I have made bold, Iago,
To send in to your wife: My suit to her.
Is that she will to virtuous Desdemona.
Prelure me some access.
Iago. You shall send her to you presently:
And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free.

[Exit.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Good-morrow, good lieutenant: I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will soon be well.
The general and his wife are talking of it;
And she speaks for stoutly: The Moor replies,
That he, you hurt, is of great time in Cyprus,
And great affluence; and that, in wholesome wisdom,
He might not but refuse you: but, he protests, he loves you;
And makes no other suit, but his likings,
To take the last occasion by the front,
To bring you in again.

Cas. Yet, I beseech you,—
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone.

Emil. Pray you, come in;
I will entreat you, where you shall have free
To speak your bosom freely.

Cas. I am much bound to you.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen.

Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot;
And, by him, do my duties to the state:
This done, I will be walking on the works;
Repair there to me.

Iago. Well, my good lord, I'll do't.

* Nice distinctions.
Des. Why then, to-morrow night; or Tuesday morn; Or Tuesday noon, or night; or Wednesday morn;— I pray thee, name the time; but let it not Exceed three days: in faith he's pentent; And yet his trespass, in our common reason, (Save that, they say, the wars must make ex- ample Out of their best,) is not almost a fault To incur a private check: When shall he come? Tell me, Othello, I wonder in my soul, What you could ask me, that I should deny, Or stand so mammering on? What! Michael Cassio, That came a-wooing with you; and many a time, When I have spoke of thee disparagingly, Hath ta'en your part; to have so much to do To bring him in! Trust me, I could do much— Oth. Frythee, no more: let him come when he will I will deny thee nothing. Des. Why, this is not a boon; 'Tis as I should entreat you wear your gloves, Or fed on nourishing dishes, or keep your warm, Or sue to you to do peculiar profit To your own person: Nay, when I have a suit, Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed, It shall be full of pose and difficulty, And wanton to be graced. Oth. I will deny thee nothing: When, then, do beseech thee entertain me this, To leave me but a little to myself. Des. Shall I deny you? no: Farewell, my lord. Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona: I will come to thou wilt Entertainment. Des. Emilia, come— Be it as your fancies teach you: Whate'er you be, I am obedient. [Exit, with Emilia. Oth. Excellent wretch! Perdicion catch my soul, But I do love thee! and when I love thee not, Change come again. Iago. My noble lord,— Oth. What dost thou say, Iago? Iago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woud my lady, Know of your love! Oth. He did, from first to last: Why dost thou ask? Iago. But for a satisfaction of my thought: No further harm. Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago? Iago. I did not think he had been acquainted With such a matter, and was gone as far as a mile. Oth. O yes, and went between us very oft. Iago. Indeed! Oth. Indeed! ay, indeed:—Discern'st thou thought Is he not honest? Iago. Honest, my lord! Oth. Ay, honest. Iago. My lord, for aught I know. Oth. What dost thou think? Iago. Think, my lord? Oth. Think, my lord! By heaven, he echoes me. As if there were some monster in his thought Too hideous to be shown.—Thou dost mean some- thing. I heard thee say now,—Thou likest not that, When Cassio left my wife: What didst not like? And, when I told thee—he was of my counsel In my whole course of wooing, thou cry'st "Dost, Indeed?" And didst contract and purse thy brow together, As if thou hadst shut up in thy brain Some horrible conceit: If thou dost love me, Show me thy thought. Iago. My lord, I know you love me, I cannot but confess I know thou dost love me, And—for I know thou art full of love and honesty, And weight's thy words before thou giv'st them breath,— There are false-shears of thine fright me the more: For such things, in a false disloyal knave, Are tricks of custom; but in a man that's just, They are close denotements, working from the heart, That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,— I dare be sworn, I think that he is honest. Oth. I think so too. Iago. Men should be what they seem; Or, those that he not, would they might seem none? Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem. Iago. Why then, I think that Cassio is an honest man. Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this: I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings, As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of the worst of words. Iago. Good my lord, pardon me; Though I am bound to every act of duty, I am not bound to hate that all slaves are free to, Utter my thoughts! Why, says, they are vile and false,— As where's that palace, whereunto foul things Sometimes are borne in open: Who has a breast so pure, But some uneasily apprehensious Keep leets, and law-days, and in session sit With meditations lawful? Iago. Thou dost conspire against thy friend, Iago, If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his car A stranger to thy thoughts. Iago. I do beseech you,— Though I, perchance, am vicious in my guess, As I confess, it is my nature's plague To spy into abuses; and, off, my jealousy Shapes doubts that are not,—I entreat you then, From one that so imperfectly conceits? You take no notice; nor build yourself a trouble Out of his scattering and unsure observance; It would be for your quiet, nor your good; Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom, To let you know my thoughts. Oth. What dost thou mean? Iago. Good name, in man, and woman, dear my lord, Is the immediate jewel of their souls: Who steals my purse, steals trash: 'Tis something, nothing; 'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thou- sands; But he is of a different note from me: The noblest heer whom I have served, Robs me of that, which not confers him, And makes me poor indeed. Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thought. Iago. I'll yet devise, or my best heart will be in thy hand; Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custody. Oth. Ha! Iago. O, beware, my lord, of jealousy: If it is a green-eyed monster, which doth mock The meat it feeds on: That cuckold lives in bliss, Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger; But, O, what damned minutes tells he over, Who doubts but that he doubts?—suspects, yet strongly loves! Oth. O misery! Iago. Poor, and content, is rich, and rich enough; But riches, finesse, and poor as water, To him that ever fears he shall be poor— Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend From jealousy! Oth. Why, why is this? Iago. Think'st thou, I'd make a life of jealousy, To follow still the changes of the moon With fresh suspicions! No: to be once in doubt, Is, or to be resolved: Exchange me for a goal, When I shall turn the business of my soul To such expediency and blown surmises, Matching thy inrence. 'Tis not to make me halt. To say,—my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company, Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well; Where virtue is, these are more virtuous: Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw The smallest fear, or doubt of her revolt; For she would not stay those eyes, or move whose me: No, Iago; I'll see, before I doubt; when I doubt, I'll prove; And, on the proof, there is no more but this,— Away at once with love, or jealousy. Iago. I am glad of this, for now I shall have reason To show the love and duty that I bear you With tener spirit: therefore, as I am bound, Receive it from me—I speak not yet of proof.

1 Courts of inquiry. 2 Conspicuous. 3 Endless, unbounded.
Scene III.

THE MOOR OF VENICE.

Look to your wife: observe her well with Cassio;
Wear your eye—thus, not jealous, nor secure:—
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of such a self-bounded, too leaky a
I know our country disposition well:—
In Venice, they do let heaven see the pranks
They dare do now, their husbands; their best
The heart—Is—not to leave undone, but keep unknown.

Oth. Dost thou say so? If
So be, she'll devise her father, marrying you;
And when she seemed to shade, and hear your
She lov'd them most.

Iago. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to, then;
She that, so young, could give out such a seeming,
To so'k her father's eyes up close as oak,—
He thought it was witchcraft:—But I am much to
I humbly do beseech you of your pardon,
For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever.
Iago. I see this hath a little lash'd your spirits.

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. Trust me I fear it. I
I hope, you will consider what is spoke
Comes from my love:—But, I do see, you are mov'd:
I am to pray you, not to strain my speech
To grosser issues? not to larger reach,
Than to suspicion.

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord,
My speech should fall into such wise success
As my thoughts aim not at. Cassio's my worthy friend:—
My lord, I see you are mov'd:—
I do not think but Desdemona's honest.

Iago. Long live she so! and long live you to Think so!
Oth. And yet, how nature, earring from itself,— Iago. Ah, there's the point,—As, to be bold
with you,—
Not to affect many proposed matches,
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree;
Whereto, we see, in all things nature tends:
Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank
Foul disposition, taints, and unnatural,—
But, pardon me: I do not, in position,
Directly speak of her: though I may fear,
Her present, calling to her heart, judg'd
May fail to match with you her country forms,
And (happily) repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell:—
If more thou dost perceive, let me know more;
Set thy wife to observe: Leave me, Iago.
Iago. My lord, I take my leave. (Going.
Oth. Why did I marry?—this honest creature,
dullards,
Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.
Iago. My lord, I would, I might entreat your honor
To shun this thing no further; leave it to time; and Though it be not in that Cassio hath his place, (For, sure, he fills it up with great ability,
Yet if you please to hold him on a while,
You shall by that perceive him and his means:—
Note, if thy lady strait his entertainment!
With any strong or vehement opportunity;
Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,
Let me be thought too busy in my head. (As worthy cause I have, to hear—I am)
And hold her free, I do beseech your honor,
Oth. In all state.
Iago. I once more take my leave. (Exit.

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit,
Of humble waiting: If I do prove her haggard;
Though that her jesses were my dear heartstrings,
I'll whidle her off, and let her down the wind,
To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black;

And have not those soft parts of conversation
That chamberers have:—Or, for I am declin'd
Into the vale of years—yet that's not much
She's gone: I am abused; and my relief
Must be—to loath her. O curse of marriage,
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not those appetites! I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapor of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love
For others' uses. Yet, 'tis the plague of great ones;
That we are disorder'd, and less than gods;
Tis destiny unshunnable, like death:—
Even then this forked plague is fitted to us,
When we do quicken. Desdemona comes:

Enter Desdemona and Emilia.

If she be false, O, then heaven mock'st itself!—
I'll not believe it.

Des. How now, my dear Othello?
Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why is your speech so faint? are you not well?

Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. Faith, that's with watching; 'twill away again;
Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin is too little;—
[He puts the Handkerchief from him, and it drops.
Let it alone. Come; I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well

[Exeunt Oth. and Des.

Emilia. I am glad I have found this napkin;
This was her first remembrance from the Moor;
My wayward husband hath a hundred times
Wo'd me to steal it; but she so loves the token,(For he confus'd her, she would ever keep it,) That she reserves it even now about her.
To kiss and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en out,
And give it Iago;
What he'll do with it, heaven knows, not I;
Nothing, but to please his fantasy.

Enter Iago.

Iago. How now! what do you here alone?

Emilia. Do you not chide; I have a thing for you.

Iago. A thing for me!—it is a common thing,—

Iago. To have a foolish wife.

Emilia. O, is that all! What will you give me now
For that same handkerchief?

Iago. What handkerchief?

Emilia. What handkerchief?

Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona;
That which so often you did bid me steal.

Iago. Hast stolen it? gave it her?

Emilia. No, faith; she let it drop by negligence;
And to the advantage, I, being here, took 't up.
Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench; give it me.

Emilia. What will you do with it, that you have been so earnest
To have me nick it!

Iago. Why, what's that to you?

[Snatching it.

Emilia. If it be not for some purpose of import,
Give me again the handkerchief! She'll run mad,
When she shall lack it.

Iago. Be not you known of't; I have use for it.

Go, leave me.

[Exit Emilia.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin;
And let him find it. Trixes, light as air,
Are, to the jealous, confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ. This may do something:
The Moor already changes with my poison;
Dangerous concents are, in their natures, poisons,
Which, at the first, are scarce found to distaste;
But, with a little act upon the blood,
Burn like the mines of sulphur.—I did say so:—

Enter Othello.

Look, where he comes! Not peppy, nor mandra-gora!
Nor all the drowsy syrops of the world,
Shall medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'dst yesterday.

[When we begin to live.

The mandrake has a soporific quality:
Possessed
Othello, Act III.

Oth. Give me a living? reason she's dissolv'd.

Iago. Do not like the office:—
But, sith I am enter'd in this cause so far,—
Prick'd to it by foolish honesty and love,—
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately,
And, being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleep.

There are a kind of men so loose of soul,
That in their sleeps will matter their affairs;
One of those men is Cassio:
In sleep I heard him say,—Street Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves;
And then, sir, would he gnite, and wring my hand,
Cry,—O, sweet creature! and then kiss me hard,
As if he pluck'd up kisses by the roots,
That grew upon my lips; then had his leg
Over my face, and the hand upon mine head,
And cried,—Cursed fate! that gave thee to the Moor!

Oth. O monstrous! monstrous!

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.

Iago. But this denoted a foregone conclusion;
'Tis a shiredoul, though it be but a dream.

Iago. And this may help to thicken other proofs,
That do demonstrate thine.

Oth. I'll tear her all to pieces.

Iago. Nay, but be wise: yet we see nothing done;
She may be honest yet. Tell me but this,—
Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand?

Oth. I gave her such a one; 'twas my first gift.

Iago. I know not that; but such a handkerchief,
(I am sure it was your wife's;) did I to-day
See Cassio wip his beard with.

If 'tis he that,

Iago. If it be that, or any that was hers,
It speckles her with the other. —

Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives;
One is too poor, too weak, for my revenge!

Now do I see 'tis true.—Look here, Iago;
All my true love thus I do bow to heaven;
'Tis gone.

Iago. Arise, black vengeance, from thy hollow cell!
Yield, O, love, thy crown, and hearted throne;
To tyranny! mine fair! yield, besom, with thy fraught,
For 'ts as of asp's tongues!

Iago. Pray, be content.

Oth. O, blood, Iago, blood!

Iago. Patience, I say; your mind, perhaps, may change.

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic sea,
Whose icy current and compassing course
Never feels retiring cbb, but keeps due on
To the Propontic, and the Hellespont;
Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace,
Shall be his fresh hand, and never cbb toisable love,
Till that a capable! and wide revenge
Swallow them up.—Now, by yond marble heaven,
In the due reverence of a sacred vow
[Knocks.]
I here engage my words:

Iago. Do not rise yet—[Knells.

Witness, you ever-burning lights above!

You denounce that elision round about—
Witness, that here Iago doth give
The execution of his wit, hands, heart,
To wrong'd Othello's service! let him command,
And to obey shall be in me remorse;

What bloody work sober.

Oth. I greet thy love,
Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance bounteous.

And will upon the instant put thee to't:
Within these three days let me hear thee say,
That Cassio's not alive.

Iago. My friend is dead: 'tis done at your request;
But let her live.

Oth. I know your level mins: O, damn her! Come, go with me apart; I will withdraw.

To furnish me with some sweet menus of death
For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant.

Iago. I am your own for ever.

Scene IV.—The same.

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clonm.

Des. Do you know, sirrah, where lieutenant Cassio lies?

Iago. It were a tedious difliculty, I think,
To bring them to that prospect: Damn then then,
If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster,
More than their own: What then? how then?
What shall I say? Where's she's seated?
It is impossible you should see this—
Were they as pame as goats, as hot as monkeys,
As such as wolves in pride, and fool's as gross
As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say,
If impudence, and strange circumstances,
Which lead directly to the door of truth,
Will give you satisfaction, you may have it.

The violets of the camp. Pioneers were generally de graded soldiers.

To me?

Iago. Why, how now, general! no more of that.

Oth. Ay, aunt! be gone! thou hast set me on the rack:
I swear, 'tis better to be much abused,
Than but to know a little.

Iago. How now, my lord?

Oth. What sense had I of her stolen hours of lust?

I saw it not, thought it not, it harm'd not me:
I slept the next night; 'twas free and merry;
For I found Cassio's kisses on her lips.
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolen,
Let him not know it, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. If you were sorry to hear this,
Oth. I had been to the general camp, the pioneers' and all, had tasted her sweet body,
So I had nothing known: O now, for ever,
For nothing can the trustful mind! farewell content!
Farewell the plumed troop, and all the great wars,
That make ambition virtue! O, farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, the car-piercing b lie,
The royal banner; and all quality,
Froide, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war!
And O you mortal engines, whose rude throats
The treacherous dreads elopers counterfeited,
Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!

Iago. Is it possible?—My lord,—

Iago. Villain, be sure you prove my love a whore;
Be sure of it; give me the ooeul proof; [Taking him by the Throat.

Or, by the worth of mune eternal soul,
That thou hadst been better have been born a dog,
Than answer my waked wrath.

Iago. Is it come to this?

Oth. Make me to see it; or (at the least) so prove it,
That the probability bear no hinge, no loop,
To bang a doubt on: or, woe unto thy life!

Iago. My noble lord,—

Iago. If I did not slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more: abandon all remorse;
On horror's head horrors accumulate:
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amaz'd,
For nothing can thou to damnation add,
Greater than that.

Iago. O grace! O heaven defend me!

If you a man? have you a soul, or sense?—
God be wi' you! take mine office.—O wretched fool,
That liv'st to make thing honesty a vice!—
On earth this world! Take note, take note, O world,
To be direct and honest, is no note,
I thank you for this profit; and, from hence,
I'll love no friend, since love breeds such offence.
Oth. You should have been honest. Iago. I should be wise, for honesty's a fool,
And loves that it works for.

Iago. By the world,
I think my wife be honest, and thou thinkest not;—
I think that thou art just, and think thou art not;
I'll have some proof: Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrimed and black
And hate one face;—if there be cords, or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,
I'll not endure it. —Would, I were satisfied!
Iago. I see, sir, you are eaten up with passion:
I do repent me, that I put it to you.

You would be satisfied?

Oth. Would? nay, I will.

Iago. And may: But, how he how possessed, my lord!
Would you, the supervisor, grossly gape on?
Behold her tupp'd!

Oth. Death and damnation! O!

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think,
To bring them to that prospect: Damn then then,
If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster,
More than their own: What then? how then?
What shall I say? Where's she's seated?
It is impossible you should see this—
Were they as pame as goats, as hot as monkeys,
As such as wolves in pride, and fool's as gross
As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say,
If impudence, and strange circumstances,
Which lead directly to the door of truth,
Will give you satisfaction, you may have it.

The violets of the camp. Pioneers were generally de graded soldiers.
Des. I dare not say, he lies anywhere!
Des. Why, man!
Des. He is a soldier; and for me to say a soldier lies, is shame!
Des. Go to; where lodges he!
Des. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.
Des. Can any thing he made of this!
Des. I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say — he lies here, or he lies there — would it lie in my own great heart.
Des. Can you inquirie him out, and be edified by report?
Des. I will catechize the world for him; that is, make him questions, and by them answer.
Des. Seek him, bid him come hither; tell him I have moved my lord in his behalf, and hope, all will be well.
Des. To do this is within the compass of man's wit; and therefore I will attempt the doing it.

[Exit Desdemona.]

Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief, Emilia?
Emil. I know not, madam.
Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse full of crowndoes than my noble Moor.
Des. But my noble Moor is true of mind, and made of no such baseness as jealous creatures are, it were enough To put him to ill-thinking.
Emil. Is he not jealous?
Des. Who, be! I think, the sun, where he was born.
Drew all such humors from him.
Emil. Look, where he comes.
Des. I will not leave him now, till Cassio
Be called to him. — How is't with you, my lord?

[Enter Othello.]
Oth. Well, my good lady; — [Aside] O, hardness to dissemble! —

Des. How do you, Desdemona?
Des. Be so kind as to give me your hand this hand is moist, my lady.
Des. I yet seen so no more, nor known no sorrow.
Oth. This makes fruitfulness, and liberal heart: — hot, hot, and moist! This hand of yours requires A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer, Much castigation, excessive desert; — For here's a young and sweating devil here, That commonly rebels. — 'Tis a good hand, A rank one.
Des. You may indeed say so;
For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.
Oth. A liberal hand: The hearts, of old, gave hands;
But our new heraldy is — hands, not hearts.
Des. I cannot speak of this. Come now, your promise.
Oth. What promise, chuck?
Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak with you.
Oth. I have a salt and settled hemlock offends me;
Lend me thy handkerchief.
Des. Here, my lord.
Oth. That which I gave you.
Des. I have it not about me.
Oth. No, indeed, my lord.
Oth. That is a fault:
Des. Did an Egyptian to my mother give:
She was a charmer and could almost read
The thoughts of people: she told her, while she kept it,
'Twould make her amiable, and subdue my father
Entirely to her love; but if she lost it,
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her loathly, and his spirit should hunt
A furious course. She, seeing gave it me;
And bid me, when my fate would have me weep,
To give it her. I did so: and take heed of 't,
Make it a darling like your precious eye;
To keep it, gave it away, were such perdition,
As nothing else could match.
Des. Is it possible?
Oth. 'Tis true: there's magic in the web of it;
A syllable that had number'd in the world
The sun to make two hundred compasses,

[Enter Iago and Cassio.]
Iago. There is no other way: — 'tis she must do;
And, lo, the happiness! — and, importune her.
Des. How now, good Cassio! what's the news with you?
Cas. Madam, my former suit: I do beseech you,
That, by your virtuous means, I may again
Exist, and be a member of his love,
Whom I, with all the blessing of my heart,
Entirely honor; I would not be delaying:
If my offence be of such mortal kind,
That neither service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpose medly in futurity,
Can ransom me into his love again,
But to know so must be my benefit;
So shall I clothe me in a forced content,
And what shall sell up in some other course,
To fortune's aims.
Des. Alas! thrice gentle Cassio,
My devotion is not now in tune,
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favor: as in humor alter'd.
So help me, every spirit sanctified,
As I have spoken for you all my best;
And stood within the blank of his displeasure.
For my free speech! You must a while he patient:
What I can do, I will; and more I will,
Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.
Iago. Is my lord angry?
Emil. He went hence but now,
And, certainly, in strange uneasiness.
Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon,
When it hath blown his ranks into the air;
And, like the devil, from his very arm
Pulld his own brother — And can he be angry!
Nothing beats me: I go to meet him;
There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry.
Des. I pr'ythee do so. — Something, sure, of state.

[Exit Iago.]

Either from Venice; or some unhatch'd practice
Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him.
Hath puddled his clear spirit: and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with interior things,
Though great ones are their object. — 'Tis even so;
Vehemently, violently.
Emil. In countenance.
Des. Within the spirit of his anger.

Scene IV.
THE MOOR OF VENICE.

764
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Othello and Iago.

Iago. Will you think so?

Oth. * Think so, Iago?

Iago. What?

To kiss in private!*

Oth. An unauthorized kiss.

Or to be naked together in a house.

An hour, or more, not meaning any harm!

Iago. Naked, abed, Iago, and not mean harm?

It is hypocrisy against the devil.

The devil that mean virtuously, and yet do so.

The devil, his virtue tempt, and they tempt heaven.

Iago. So they do nothing, 'tis a venial slip.

But if I give my wife a handkerchief—

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why then 'tis hers, my lord; and, being hers,

She may, I think, bestow on any man.

She is the protector of her honor too;

May she give it?

Iago. Her honor is an essence that's not seen;

They have it very oft; that have it not:

But for the handkerchief—

Oth. By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot

it—

Thou saidst, —Oh, it comes o'er my memory, And makes me now more raven than the house,

Boding to all— he had my handkerchief.

Iago. Ay, what of that?

Oth. That's not so good, now.

What, if I had said, I had seen him do you wrong?

Or heard him say, —As knives be such abroad,

Who having, by their own unperturbed suit,

Or voluntary donation of some mistress,

Convoced or supplied them, cannot choose

But they must be:

Oth. Hath he said any thing?

Iago. He hath, my lord; but, be you well assured,

No more than he'll unswear.

Oth. * What hath he said?

Iago. * Faith, that he did,— I know not what he did.

More tedious than the dial eight score times!

Overyreckoning! —

Oth. * Purdon me, Bianca;

I have this while with lewd thoughts been press'd; But I shall, in a more continuous time,

Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca,

[ * Giving her DESDEMONA's handkerchief.]

Take me this work out. 6

Bian. O, Cassio, whence came this?

This is some token from a newer friend.

To the left absence now I feel a cause:

Is it come to this? Well, well.

Oth. * Woman, go to!

Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,

From whence you have them. You are jealous now,

That this is from some mistress, some remembrance.

No, in good troth, Bianca.

Bian. * Why, whose is it?

Oth. * I know it not. I found it in my chamber

Like the work well; ere it be demanded.

As, like enough, it will.) I'have it copied;

Take it, and do't; and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you? Wherefore?

Oth. * Can I appear here on the general;

And think it no addition, nor my wish,

To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. * Why, I pray you!

Oth. * Do not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me.

I pray you, bring me on the way a little;

And say, if I shall see you soon at night.

Oth. * His but a little way, that I can bring you,

For I attend here; but I'll see you soon.

Bian. * 'Tis very good; I must be circumstanced.

[ * Exeunt.]

Enter Iago.

Oth. * With her?

Iago. * With her, on her; what you will.

Oth. * Lie with her! he on her! —We say, lie on her, when they belie her: Lie with her! that's libson.— Handkerchief,—confessions,— handkerchief,—To confess, and be hanged for his labor.—

First to be hanged, and then to confess:—I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion, without some instruction. It is not words, that shake me thus:—Fsh!—Noses, ears, and lips:—Is it possible?—Confess!—Handkerchief,—he dieth—

[ * Faith in a Trance.]

Iago. Work on,

My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are caught;

And many worthy and chaste dames, even thus, All guileless meet reproach.— What, ho! my lord!

Enter Cassio.

Iago. My lord, I say! othello!—How now, Cassio! Cassio. * What is the matter?

Iago. * My lord is fallen into an epilepsy; This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

Oth. * Rub him about the temples.

Iago. * No, forbear: The lewry must have his quiet course.

If not, he swains at mouth; and, by and by, Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs. Do you withdraw yourself a little while, He will receive straight: when he is gone, I would on great occasion speak with you.—

[ * Exit Cassio.]

How is it, general? have you not hurt your head! Oth. * Dost thou mock me?

Iago. * I mock you! no, by heaven; Would you would bear your fortunes like a man.

Oth. * A bearded man's a monster, and a beast.

Iago. * There's many a beast then in a populous city, And many a civil monster.

Oth. * And he confess it?

Iago. * Good sir, be a man. Think, every bearded fellow, that's but yoked,
May draw with you; there's millions now alive
That nightly lie in those unproper beds,
Which they dare swear peculiar; your case is better,
O, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,
To hop a wanton in a secure couch,
And to suppose her chaste! No, let me know;
And, knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.
Oh, Oh, thou art wise; 'tis certain.

[Aside.] Stand you a while apart; confine yourself but in a patient list;
Whilst you were here, eweheld with your grief,
(As passion most unamusing such a man.)
Cassio came hither: I shifted him away,
And laid good sense upon your ecstasy;
Bade him anon return, and here speak with me;
That he should prate'd. Do but excuse yourself,
And mark the ferees, the gibes, and notable scorns,
That dwell in every region of his face;
For I will make him tell the tale anew,
When, and how, and by what course he loved her; and when
He hath, and is again to cope your wife;
I say, but mark his gesture. Marty, patience,
Or I shall say, you are all in all in spleen,
And nothing of a man.

Oh.

Dost thou hear, Iago?

I will be found most cunning in my patience,
But dost thou hear! most bloody.

Iago.

That's not amiss;
But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?

[Aside.]

Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A housewife, that, by selling her desires,
Buys herself bread and clothes; it is a creature
That dotes on Cassio—as 'is the trumpeter's plague,
To dote on many, and be beguiled by one;
He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain
From the excess of laughter:—Here he comes:—

Re-enter Cassio.

As he shall smile, Othello shall so mad;
And his unlook'd jealousy must construe
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour
Quite out of the wrong.—How do you now, lieuten-

ant?

Cassio. The wiser, that you give me the addition,
Whose want even kills me.

Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure of it.

Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's power,
[Speaking louder.]
How quickly should you speed?

Cassio. Alas, poor caut!—

Iago. Look, how he laughs already!—

Cassio. I never knew woman be a man so.

Iago. Alas, poor rogue! I think, I faith, she loves me.

Cassio. Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it out.

[Aside.]

Iago. Do you hear, Cassio?

Cassio.

Iago. Now he imporses him to Tell it over: Go to; well said, well said. —

[Aside.]

Iago. She has it out, thou shalt marry her:
Do you intend it?

Cassio. Ha, ha, ha!

Iago. Do you triumph, Roman? do you triumph?

Cassio. I marry her!—what! a customer! I pr'ythee, hear some charity to my wit; do not think it unemphatical. Ha, ha, ha.

Iago. So, so: they laugh at that win. —

Iago. 'Faith, the cry goes, that you shall marry her.

Cassio. Pr'ythee, say true.

Iago. I am a very villain else.

Iago. Have you scolded me? Well. —

Cassio. This is the monkey's own giving out; she is laughed I will marry her, out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.

Iago. Iago beckons me; now he begins the story.

Cassio. She was here even now; she hath me in every place. I was, the other day, talking on the sea-bank with certain Venetians; and thither comes this babble; by that hand, she falls thus about my neck.

Cassio. Crying, O dear Cassio! as it were: his gesture imports it. —

Cassio. So longs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so, he ha, ha, ha, ha, ha, ha!

Within the bounds of patience. — Hide. — Ignored. — Title of lieutenant. — A common woman.

Iago. Now he tells, how she pluck'd him to my chamber: O, I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to. — [Aside.]

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me! look where she comes.

Enter Bianca

Cas. 'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a per-

Cassio. What do you mean by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you! What did you mean by that same handkerchief, you gave me even now! I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the whole pack!—A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and not know who left it there! This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work! There,—give it your holy benediction, wheresoever you had it, I'll take out no work on.

Cas. How now, my sweet Bianca! how now! how now!

Bian. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief! —

Cas. An you'll come to supper to-night, you may: an you will not, come when you are next prepared for it in her.

[Exit.]

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. Faith, I must, she'll rail in the street else.

[Aside.]

Bian. Will you sup there?

Cas. Faith, I intend.

Bian. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very lain speak with you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, come, will you?

Bian. Go to; say no more. —

[Exit Cassio.]

Iago. How shall I murder him, Iago?

Iago. Did you perceive how he laughed at his view?

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Iago. Hang her! but do say what she is:—so delicate with her needle!—An admirable musician! O, she will be the weaseness out of a hear!—Of so high and plentiful wit and invention!—

Iago. She's the worse for all this.

Iago. O, a thousand, a thousand times:—And then, of so gentle a condition!—

Iago. Ay, too gentle.

Iago. Nay, that's certain: But yet the pity of it, Iago:—O, Iago, the pity of it, Iago!—Iago. If you are so hard over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; and, if it touch not you, it comes near nobody.

Iago. I will chop her into masses—Cuckold me!

Iago. Nay, O, is fool.

Iago. With mine officer!

Iago. That's fouler.

Iago. Get me some poison, Iago; this night:—I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprofyle my mind again,—this night, Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poison, strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

Iago. Good; good: the justice of it pleses; very good.

Iago. And, for Cassio,—let me be his undertaker.

You shall hear more by midnight. — [A Trumpet within.]

Oth. Excellent good,—What trumpet is that sound?

Iago. Something from Venice, sure. 'Tis Lodovico,

Enter Lodovico, Desdemona, and Attendants.

Lod. 'Save you, worthy general!—

4 A plaus'd.

5 Of so sweet a disposition.
That I may save my speech: Do but go after,
And mark how he continues.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter Othello and Emilia.

Oth. You have seen nothing then?
Emil. Not ever heard; nor ever did suspect.
Oth. Did you have seen Cassio and she together?
Emil. But then I saw no harm: and then I heard each syllable that breath made up between them.
Oth. What, did they never whisper?
Emil. Never, my lord.
Oth. Nor send you out of the way?
Emil. Never.
Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?
Emil. Never, my lord.
Oth. That's strange.
Emil. I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest,
Lay down my soul at stake: if you think other,
Remove your thought: it doth abuse your bosom.
If any wretch hath put this in your head,
Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse!
For, if she be not honest, chaste, and true,
There's no man happy: the purest of their wives
Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither:—
[Exit Emilia.

She says enough:—yet she's a simple bawd
That cannot say as much. This is a subtle where Close-door key and vVillous secrets,
And yet she'll knell, and pray: I have seen her do't.

[Re-enter Emilia, with Desdemona.

Des. My lord, what is your will?
Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.
What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes;—
Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?
Oth. Some of your function, mistress.

[To Emilia.

Leave preceants alone, and shut the door.
Cough, or cry—hcm, if anybody come;—
Your mystery, my mystery—tay, depatch.

Des. Upon my knees, what dotth othore speech import?
I understand a fury in your words,
But not the words.

Oth. Why, what art thou?
Des. Your wife, my lord; your true
And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself;—
Lost, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves
Should fear to seize thee: therefore be double-damned.

Swear—thou art honest.

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.
Oth. Heaven truly knows that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom, my lord, with whom? How am I false?
Oth. O Desdemona!—away! away! away!

Des. Alas, the heavy day!—Why do you weep?
Am I the occasion of these tears, my lord?
If, haply, you my father do suspect,
An instrument of this yours calling back,
Lay not your blame on me; if you have lost him,
Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleased Heaven?

To try me with affliction; had he rain'd
All kinds of sores, and shames, on my bare head
Sleep'd me in poverty to the very lips;
Given to beggary, and my utmost hopees
I should have found in some part of my soul
A drop of patience; but (alas!) to make me
A fixed figure, for the time of scorn
To point his slow and moving finger at,—
O! O! Yet I could hear that too; well, very well:
But there, where I have garner'd up my heart
Wherever I must live, or hear no more:
The fountain from the which my current runs,
Or else dries up; to be discarded thence!
Or keep it as a cistern for foul loads

* Treasured up.

* Reconcile.
To knot and gender in!—turn thy complexion there!
Patience, thou young and rose-bripp'd cherubin;
Ay, there, look grim as hell!
Des. I hope, my noble lord esteems me honest.
Oth. 0, ay; as summer flies are in the swarms.
That whack in even with blooming. O thou weed,
Who art so lovely fair, and smell'st so sweet,
That the sense aches at thee.—Would thou hadst never been born!
Des. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed?
Oth. Was this fair paper, this most kindly book,
Made to write whore upon? What committed?
Commend it!—Or then public commoner!
I should make very force of my cheeks,
That would to endars burn up modesty.
Did I but speak thy deeds—What committed?
Heaven stopp'd the naked and the moon winks;
The bawdy wind, that kisses all it meets,
Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not hear it: What committed?
Impudent strumpet!
Des. By, heaven, you do me wrong.
Oth. Are not you a strumpet?
Des. To preserve this vessel for my lord,
From any other foul unhallowed touch,
Be—not to be a strumpet, I am none.
Oth. What, not a whore!—No, as I shall be saved.
Des. Oth. Is it possible!?
Des. O, heaven forgive us!
Des. I cry you mercy, then;
I took you for that cunning whore of Venice,
That married with Othello.—You, mistress,
Re-enter EMILIA.
That have the office opposite to Saint Peter,
And keep the gate of hell! You! you! ay, you:
We have done our course: there's money for your pains;
I pray you, turn the key, and keep our counsel.
[Exit.
Des. Alas, what does this gentleman conceive?
How do you, madam! how do you, my good lady!
Des. 'Faith, half asleep.
Des. Good madam, what's the matter with my lord?
Des. With who?
Emil. Why, with my lord, madam.
Des. Who is thy lord?
Emil. He that is yours, sweet lady.
Des. I have none: Do not talk to me, Emilia;
I cannot weep; nor answer I have none,
But what is said doth go by water. Pr'ythee, to-night,
Lay on my bed my wedding-sheets,—remember;
And call thy husband hither.
Emil. Here is a change, indeed!
Des. 'Tis meet I should be used so very, meet.
How have I been behaved, that he might stick
The smallest opinion on my greatest abuse!
Re-enter EMILIA, with IAGO.
Iago. What is your pleasure, madam? How is it
with you?
Des. I cannot tell. Those that do teach young ladies,
Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks:
He must have child mind so; for, in good faith,
I am a child to chusing.
Iago. What's the matter, lady?
Emil. Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewhor'd her,
That all despite and heavy terms upon her,
As true hearts cannot bear.
Des. Am I that name, Iago?
Iago. What name, fair lady?
Des. Such as, she says, my lord did say I was.
Emil. He call'd her, where? a beggar, in his drink,
Could not have laid such terms upon his calliet.
Iago. Why did he so?
Des. For such a wish. I am sure, I am none such.
Iago. Do not weep, do not weep. Alas the day!
Emil. Has she forsaken so many noble matches,
Her country, and her country, and her friends,
To be call'd where? where? shall it not make one weep?
Des. It is my wretched fortune.
Emil. Beshrew him for it!
How comes this trick upon him?
[He drinks.
9 The drunk.
even, from this instant, do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Roderigo: Thou hast taken against me a most just execution; but yet, protest, I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

Oth: It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant indeed, it hath not appeared; and you, wherein is it without wit and judgment. But, Roderigo, if thou hast that within thee indeed, which I have greater reason to believe than ever,—mean, purpose, design, and value,—then shall I show it: if thou the next night following enjoyest not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery, and devise engines for my life.

Rod: Well, what is it? is it within reason, and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice, to depute Cassio in Othello's place. Iago. Is that true? when, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. O, no; he goes into Mauritania, and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be harbinger here by some accident: wherein none can be so determinate, as the removing of Cassio.

Oth: How do you mean—removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains.

Oth. And that you would have me do it?

Iago. Ay, if you dare do yourself a profit and a right. He sups to-night with a harlot, and thither will I go to him:—he knows not yet of his honorable fortune: if you will watch his going thence, (wherein I will be him to fall out between twelve and one,) you may take him at your pleasure; I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me: I will show you such a necessity in his death, that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste: about it.

Oth. But for further reason for this, Iago. And you shall be satisfied. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Room in the Castle.

Enter Othello, Lodovico, Desdemona, Emilia, and Attendants.

Oth. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no further.

Lod. O, pardon me; I will do me good to walk.

Oth. Madam, good-night: I humbly thank your ladyship.

Des. Your honor is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, sir?

Lod. O, Desdemona,—

Oth. My lord!

Lod. Get you to bed on the instant, I will be returned forthwith: dismiss your attendant there; look, it be done.

Oth. I will, my lord.

[Exeunt Oth., Lod., and Attendants.

Emilia. How goes it now? he looks gentler than he did.

Oth. He says he will return incontinent;—

He hath commanded me to go to bed, and bade me to dismiss you.

Emilia. Dismiss me!—

Oth. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia, give me my night's wearing, and advise:—

We must not now displease him.

Emilia. I would you had never seen him!

Oth. So would not I; my love doth so approve him,

That even his stubbornness, his checks, and frowns,

Pr'ythee, unpin me,—have grace and favor in them.

Emilia. Farewell, have those sheets you bade me on the bed.

Oth. All's one;—Good father! how foolish are our minds!

If I do die before thee, pr'ythee, shroud me In one of those same sheets.

Emilia. Come, come, you talk. I will not go from my mind: I have much to do, And to hang my head all at one side, And sing it, like poor Barbara. Pr'ythee, despatch.

Emilia. Shall I go fetch your night-gown?

Oth. No, unpin me here.—

This Lodovico is a proper man.

Emilia. A very handsome man.

Oth. And he speaks well.

Emilia. I know a lady in Venice, who would have which had walked barefoot to Palestine, for a touch of his neither lip.

I. Des. The poor soul sat singing by a stream-side,

Sing all a green willow; [Singing

Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,

Sing willow, willow, willow,

The fresh streams ran by her, and murmured her moans;

Sing willow, willow, &c.

Her salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones,

Lay by these:—

Sing willow, willow, willow;

Pr'ythee, he thee; he'll come anon.

Sing all a green willow, must be my garland.

II. Let nobody blame him, his scorn I approve—

Nay, that's not next—Hark! who is it that knocks!

Emilia. It is the wind.

Des. I call'd my love, false love; but what said he then?

Sing willow, &c.

If I court men, you women, you'll coach with my men,

So, get thee gone; good-night. Mine eyes do itch; Dost think I have bode weeping?

'Nis neither I nor there.

Des. I have heard it said so.—O, these men,

Dost thou not conscience think,—? I me, Emilia,—

That there he women do abuse t. husbands

In such gross kind!

Emilia. There be some—such, no question.

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emilia. Why, would not you?

Des. No, 2 heaven's light!

Emilia. Nor I neither by;—Lavish light?

I might do as well I the n.ck.

Des. Wouldst thou do it a deed for all the world?

Emilia. The world is a ch—ch—thing: 'tis a great price For a small vice.

Des. Good troth, I th'o' thou wouldst not.

Emilia. Good troth, his troth, I amc I should; and I don't, when I had done. Many, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring; nor for measures of laws; nor for c. gowns, petticoats, nor capes, nor petty tracks for the whole world. —Why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to me I a monarch! I should venture purgatory to.

Des. Bedrew me, if I would do such a wrong for the whole world.

Emilia. Why, the wrong is but a v. rag it the world: and, having the world for your abor, 'tis a wrong in your own world, and yet may quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.

Emilia. Yes, a dozen; and as mo—

To the vantage, as would stop the world they play'd for.

But, I do think, it is their husbands' faults,

If wives do fall. Say, that they slack their duties, And pour our treasures into foreign laps; Or else break out in peevish jealously, Throwing restraint upon us; or, say they strike us, Or scant our former having? in despite; Why, we have galls; and, though we have some grace,

Yet we have some revenge. Let husbands know Their wives have sense like them: they see, and smell,

And have their palates both for sweet and sour, As husbands have. What is it that they do,

* Mo, for more.

* One honorable allowance of expense.

* Sensation.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter IAGO and RODERIGO.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk; straight will he come:

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home;
Quick, quick; fear nothing: I'll be at thy elbow:
It makes us, or it mars us; think on that,
And fix most firm thy resolution.
Rod. Be near at hand; I may miscarry in't.

Iago. Here, at thy hand; be bold, and take thy sword.

[Rushes to a little distance.

Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed;
And yet he has given me such amainus—
'Tis but a man gone; forth, my sword; he dies,
[goes to his stand.

Iago. I have rubb'd this young traitor almost to the sense,
And he grows angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio,
Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
Every way makes my gain: Live Rodrigo,
He calls me to a restitution large
Of gold, and jewels, that I hol'd from him,
As gifts to Desdemona;

It must not be: if Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor
May unfold me to him; there stand I in much peril;
No, he must die:—But so, I hear him coming.

Enter CASSIO.

Rod. I know his gait, his he;—Villain, thou diest.

[Rushes from his post, and makes a pass of Cassio.

Cas. That threat had been mine enemy indeed,
But that my coat is better than thou think'st;
I will make proof of thine.

[Drares, and wounds Roderigo.

Rod. [To Iago, rushes from his post, cuts Cassio behind in the Leg, and Exeunt.

Cas. I am main'd for ever,—Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter OTELLO, at a distance.

Oth. The voice of Cassio:—Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O, villain that I am!

Oth. Hark! 'tis even so.

Cas. O, help! ho! light! a sanguine! Oth. 'Tis he;—O brave Iago, honest, and just,
That hath such noble sense of thy friend's wrong!
Thou thinkest me;—Minion, dear lies dead,
And your false lies appear—Strumpet, I come;
For th' sake of my heart those charms, thine eyes, are blotted;
Thy bed, ,last-stain'd, shall with his blood be spotter:

[Exeunt OTELLO.

Enter LODOVICO and GRATIANO, at a distance.

Cas. What, ho! no watch; no passage! murder! murder!

[Enter LODOVICO and GRATIANO, at a distance.

Gra. ?'tis some mischance; the cry is very direful.

Cas. O, help! —

Rod. O wretched villain!—

Rod. Two or three greens;—it is a heavy night:

These may be counterfeit;—let's think it unsafe
To come in to the cry, without more help.

Rod. Nobody come! then shall I bleed to death.

[Enter IAGO, with a Light.

Rod. Hark!—

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light

And weapons.

Iago. Who's there! whose noise is this, that cries on murder!

Then, let them use us well: else let them know,
The ills we do, their ills instruct us to.

Des. Good-night, good-night: Heaven me such usage send.
Not to pick bad from bad; but, by bad, mend! [Exeunt.
Otello

[To Bian.] What, look you pale!—O, bear him out of the air.

[Cassio and Rod. are borne off.] Stay you, good gentlemen:—Look you pale, mistress?

Do you perceive the ghastness of her eye?—

No, if you stare, we shall hear your answers:

Behold her well; I pray you, look upon her;

Do you see, gentlemen? nay, guiltiness will speak,

Though tongues were out of use.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Las, what's the matter: what's the matter, husban'?

Oth. Cassio hath here been set on the dark,

By Rodrigo, and fellows that are 'scape d';

He's almost shain, and Rodrigo dead.

Emil. Alas, good gentleman! alas, good Cassio! Iago.

This is the fruit of whoring.—Pr'ythee, Emilia,

Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night:

Will you and I shake at that?

Bian. He supp'd at my house: but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O, do he? I? should I know you go with me,

Emil. No, I see, upon thee!—Strumpet, Iago.

Iago. Kind gentleman, let's go see poor Cassio dress'd.

Come, mistress, you must tell us another tale,—

Emilia, run you to the citadel, and

Tell my lord and lady what I have happ'd.

Will you go on, I pray?—This is the night,

That either makes me, or fordoest' me quite.

[Aside.

Enter scene II. A bed-chamber: Desdemona in bed asleep. A light burning.

Enter Otello.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,—

Let me not name it to you, you clasp stars!—

It is the cause:—Yet I'll not shed her blood;

Nor swear that whiter skin of hers than snow,

And smooth as monumental alabaster.

Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.

Put out the light, and then put out the light?

If I should thee, then flaming minister,

I can again thy former light restore,

Should I repent me:—but once put out thine.

Thou cunning'st pattern of excellent nature,

I know not where is that Prometheus heat

That can light this reumone. When I have pluck'd thy rose,

I cannot give it vital growth again,

It needs must wither:—I'll smell it on the tree.

O bathy breath, that dost almost persuade

Justice to break her sword!—One more, one more,

Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee.

And love thee after:—One more, and this the last:
So sweet was never so fatal.

I must weep,

But they are cruel tears: this sorrow's heavenly;

It strikes, where it doth love. She wakes—

Des. Who's there! Othello! Iago.

Aye, Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my lord?

Oth. Have you pray'd to-night, Desdemona?—

Ay, my lord.

Des. If you behinck yourself of any crime,

Unaccus'd as yet to heaven and grace,

Sek for it straitly.

Des. Alas, my lord, what may you mean by that?

Oth. Well, do it, and be brief: I will walk by;

I would not kill thy unpreparest spirit.

No, heaven forbids!—I would not kill thy soul.

Des. Talk you of killing?

Des. Then heaven

Have mercy on me! Oth.

Amen, with all my heart!

*Unke.'

This is the punctuation of the folio of 1623, and of Pope, Stevens, &c., but some editors print it thus:

Put out the light, and then:—Put out the light:—

Forbidden.

Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill me.

Oth. Humph!

Des. If you fear you are for you are fatal then,

When your eyes roll so:—Why should I fear, I know not;

Since guiltiness I know not; but yet, I feel, I fear

Oth. Think on thy sins.

They are loves I bear to you, Oth. Ay, and for that thou diest.

Des. That death's unnatural, that kills for loving.—

Alas, why may you so your nether lip!

Some bloody passion shakes your very frame:

These are portents; but yet, I hope, I hope,

They do not point on me.

Oth. Peace, and be still! Des.

1 will so: What's the matter? Oth. That handkerchief which I so lov'd and Thou gav'st to Cassio.

Des. No, by my life and soul;

Send for the man and ask him.

Oth. Sweet soul, take heed, take heed.

Take heed of perfidy; thou art on thy death-bed.

Des. Ay, but not yet to die.

Oth. Yes, presently;

Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin;

For to deny each article with oath,

Cannot remove, nor choke, the strong conception

That I do grieve withal. Thou art to die.

Des. To-day, lord have mercy on me!

Oth. I say, amen.

Des. And have you mercy too!—I never did

Oth. Send you in my life, I never lov'd Cassio,

With but such general warranty of heaven

As I might low: I never gave him token.

Oth. By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in his Hand.

O perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart,

And mak'st me call what I intend to do,—

A murder, which I thought a sacrifice:

I saw the handkerchief:—He found it then;

I never gave it him—Send for him hither,

Let him confess a truth.

Oth. He hath confess'd.

Des. What, my lord?

Oth. That he hath—used thee.

How! unlawfully?

Oth. Ay.

Des. He'll not say so.

Oth. No, his mouth is stopp'd;

[Aside. Honest Jago hath ta'en order for't, Des.

Mysterious and I think interpreting then.—What is he dead? Oth. Had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge

Had stomach for them all.

Des. Has he is betray'd, and I undone.

Oth. Out, strumpet! Weep'st then for him to my face?

Des. O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not.

Oth. Out, strumpet; Kill me to-morrow, let me live to-night.

Des. Nay, if you strive,—

Oth. But half an hour.

Des. Being done, There is no pause.

Des. But while I say one prayer.

Oth. It is too late. (He smashes her."

Des. Within."

Oth. What is this?—Not dead! not yet

I, that am cruel, am yet merciful;

I would not have thee linger in thy pain.—

So, so.

Des. Within."

Oth. What be this, my lord, my lord? Oth. Who's there?

Within."

Oth. Within."

Des. Good my lord, I would speak a word with you.

Oth. Within."

Des. Within."

She's dead. 'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death:

The noise was high—Ha! no more moving!

Still as the grave. Shall she come in? Wouldn't come is:

I think, she stirs again:—No—What's the best?

if she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife:

My wife! my wife! what wife? I have no wife:—

O, insupportable! O heavy hour!

Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse

Of sun and moon: and that the affrighted globe

Should sway in alteration.
Enter EMILIA. O, good my lord, yonder’s foul murder done. Oth. What! now! Em1. Alas, Nay, Do Thy, Come, But I Oth. I did not, thou’rt not such a villain; Speak, for my heart is full. Iago. I told him what I thought; and told no more. Oth. But what he found himself was apt and true. Em1. But did you ever tell him she was false! Iago. I did. Em1. Thou told a lie; an odious, damned lie; Upon my soul, a lie; a wicked lie— She false with Cassio!—Did you say with Cassio? Iago. With Cassio, mistress: go to, charm your tongue. Oth. I will not charm my tongue: I am bound to speak; My mistress here lies murder’d in her bed. All. O heavens forebode! Em1. And your reports have set the murder on. Oth. Nay, stare not, masters; it is true, indeed. Gran. Tis a strange truth. Mon. O monstrous act! Iago. Villany, villany, villany!  I think upon’t,—I think,—I smell’t,—O villany!  I thought so then,—I’ll kill myself for grief,— 0 villany, villany! Iago. What, what are you mad? I charge you, get you home. Em1. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak:  'Tis proper I obey him, but not now: Percibane, Iago, I will ne’er go home. Oth. O! O! O! [Hanging over his wife. Em1. Nay, lay thee down and roar; For thou hast kill’d the sweetest innocent That e’er did lift up eye. Oth. O, she was foul! [Rising. I could not know you, uncle: There lies your niece, Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopp’d; I know the place shows horrible and gring. Gran. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father’s dead; Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief Shone his old thread in twain: did he live now, This sight would make him do a desperate turn, Yea, curse his better angel from his side, And fall to reproual. Oth. ’Tis pitiful: but yet Iago knows, That she with Cassio hath the act of shame A thousand times committed: Cassio confess’d it; And she did gratify his amorous works With that which receiv’d her a wicked pledge of love Which I first gave her; I saw it in his hand; It was a handkerchief, an antique token My father gave my mother. Oth. O heaven! O heavenly powers! Iago. Come, hold your peace. Em1. I will out, ‘twill out:—I hold my peace, sir no; No, I will speak as liberally as the air; Let heaven, and men, and devils, let them all, All, all, cry shame against me, yet I’ll speak. Iago, be wise, and get you home. Oth. I will not. [Iago offers to stab his wife. Iago. Ily! Your sword upon a woman! Em1. O thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou speak’st of, I found by fortune, and did give my husband; For others, with a sable earthen box; More than, indeed, belon’d to such a trifle, ’twixt beg’d of me to steal it. Iago. Villainous whore! Em1. She give it Cassio! no, alas; I found it, And I did give’t my husband. Iago. Fifth, thou liest. Oth. By heaven, I do not: I do not, gentlemen. O most’uns covetous! what should such a fool Do with so good a wife! [Iago stabs Emilia, then runs out.  --- End of Act Second. ---
Oth. I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.

Will you, my lord; demand that demihuman,

Why he hath thus ensnared my soul and body?

Iago. Demand me nothing; what you know, you know;

From this time forth, I never will speak word.

Lod. What! not to pray!

Iago. Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. You shall understand what hath befell 's:

Which, as I think, you know not: Here is a letter,

Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo:

And here, another: the one of them imports

The death of Cassio to be undertook

By Roderigo.

Oth. O villain.

Cas. Most heathenish, and most gross!

Lod. Now here's another discover'd paper,

Found in his pocket too: and this, it seems,

Roderigo meant to have sent this damned villain,

But that, belike, Iago in the interim,

Came in and satisfied him.

Oth. 0 the pernicious catch!

How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief?

That was my wife's?

Cas. I found it in my chamber:

And he himself confess'd, but even now,

That there he drop'd it for a special purpose,

Which wrought to his desire.

Oth. O fool! O fool! Fool.

Cas. There is besides, in Roderigo's letter,—

How he upbraids Iago, that he made him

Brave me upon the water; whereas, when it came

That I was cast; And even but now he spoke,

After long seeming dead,—Iago hurt him,

Iago seizes him.

Lod. You must forsake this room and go with us

Your power and your command is taken off,

And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,—

If there be any cunning cruelty,

That can torment him much, and hold him long,

It shall be his: You shall close prisoner rest,

Till that the nature of your fault be known

To the Venetian state: Come, bring away.

Oth. Soft you; a word or two before you go.

I have done the state some service and they know it;

No more of that:—I pray you, in your letters,

When you shall these unlook'd deeds relate,

Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate,

Nor set down aught undue in malice: then must you speak

Of one, that lov'd not wisely, but too well;

Of one, not easily jealous, but, being wrong'd,

Perverse in the extreme; of one, whose hand, like

The base burial, threw a pearl away,

Richer than all his tribe; of one, whose subtle eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood,

Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees

Their mediæval gum: Set you down this:

And say, besides,—That in Aleppo once,

Where a malignant and a turk'd Turk

Beat a Venetian, and instanced the state,

I took by the throat the circumcised dog,

And smote him thus,—

The slave himself.

Lod. O bloody period!

Gra. All, that's spoke, is marr'd.

Lod. Othello's sword into Iago.

Oth. I kiss'd thee, ere I kill'd thee:—No way but this,

Killing myself, to die upon a kiss.

Cas. This did I fear, but thought he had no weapon:

For he was great of heart.

Lod. O Spartan dog,

More fell than anguish, hunger, or the sea;

Look on the tragic leading of this bed: [To Iago.

This is thy work: the object poisons sight;—

Let it be drunk:—Griatiano, keep the house,

And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor,

For they succeed to you,—To you, lord governor,

Remains the censure of this hellish villain;

The time the place the fortune,—On force it! Myself will straight abroad; and, to the state,

This heavy act with heavy heart relate.

[Exeunt]
POEMS.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLY,

EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON, AND BARON OF TITCHFIELD.

RIGHT HONORABLE,

I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your Lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden: only if your honor seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours, till I have honored you with some graver labor. But if the first hear of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather, and never after car so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honorable survey, and your honor to your heart's content, which I wish may always answer your own wish, and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your Honor's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

VENUS AND ADONIS.

Villa ministrar vulgus nulli flavus Apollo
Poeulo Castalia pleon ministral aquis.—Ovid.

EYES as the sun with purple-color'd face
Had taken his last leave of the weeping morn,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis bade him to the chase:
Hunting he loved, but love he laugh'd to scorn;
Sick-thoughtful Venus makes again into him,
And like a bold-faced suitor 'gins to woo him.

Thrice fairier than myself, (thus she began,) The field's chief flower, sweet above compare, Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man, More white and red than doves or roses are; Nature that made thee, with herself at strife, Saith that the world hath ending with thy life.

Vouchsafe, thou wonder, to alight thy steed, And reign his proud head to the saddle-how; If thou wilt do this favor, for thy need A thousand honey-secrets shalt thou know: Here come and sit, where serpent never kisses, And, being set, I'll smoother thee with kisses:

And yet not cloy thy lips with host'd satiety, But rather famish them amid their plenty, Making them red and pale with fresh variety; Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty: A summer's day will seem an hour but short, Being wasted in such time-beguiling sport.

With this, she seizeth on his sweating palm, The precedent of pith and livelihood; And, trembling in her passion, calls it balm, Earth's sovereign salve to do a goddess good: Being so enraged, desire doth lend her force Courageously to pluck him from his horse.

Over one arm the lusty courser's rein, Under her other was the slender boy, Who blush'd and pouted in a duteless disdain, With leaden appetite, unapt to toy; She red and hot as embers glowing fire, Her red for shame, but frosty in desire.

The studded birdie on a ragged bough
Nimbly she fastens; (O how quick is love!) The steed is stalled up, and even now To tie the riper she begins to prove:

Backward she push'd him, as she would be thrust, And governed him in strength, though not in lust.

So soon was she along, as he was down, Each leaning on their elbows and their hips: Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he grow, And 'gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips:

And kissing-speaks, with wasteful language brokeup, "If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open."

He burns with bashful shame; she with her tears Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks: Then with her windy sighs, and golden hairs, To fan and blow them dry again she seeks: He saith, she is immodest, blazes her 'miss: What follows more, she smooths with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast, Tires with her beak on feathers, flesh and bone, Shaking her wings, devouring all to haste, Till either be stuff'd, or prey be gone; Even so she kiss'd his brow, his cheek, his chin, And where she ends, she doth anew begin.

Forced to content, but never to obey, Hunting he lies, and breathing in his face; She leaveth on the steam, as on a prey, And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace, Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers, So they were diewd with such distilling showers.

Look how a bird his tangle in a net, So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies: Pure shame and aw'd re-stance made him fret, Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes:

Rain added to a river that is rank, Perforce will force it overflow the bank.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

Still she entreats, and prettily entreats, For to a pretty ear she tunes her tale; Still is he suffer, still he love's and frets, For being fair and fairest of his hate; Being red, she loves him best; and being white, Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love; And by her fair immortal hand she saw Her beauty make the world-born swallow; Till he take truce with her contending tears, Which long have rained, making her cheeks all wet;

And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless debt.

Upon this promise did he raise his chin, Liberating his fair captive from the grave, Who, being lock'd on, ducks as quickly in; So offers he to give what she did crave; But when her lips were ready for his pay, He winks, and turns his lips another way.

Never did passenger in summer's heat More thirst for drink, than she for this good turn: Her help she sees, but help she cannot get; She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn: "Oil pitty," can she cry, "thirt-hearted boy; 'Tis but a kiss I beg; why art thou coy? I have been wo'd, as I entreat thee now, Even by the stern and dreadful god of war, Whose shewy neck in battle ne'er did bow, Who conquer'd where he comes, in every jar, Yet ha'n't I been my captives's own slave? And begg'd for that which thou unask'd shalt have.

Over my altars hath he hung his lance, His banner 'erred, his uncontrolled crest, And for my sake hath learned to sport and dance, To coy, to wanton, saucy, and jest; Seeming his churlish drum, and cussin red, Making his arms his field, his tent my bed.

Thus he that overru'd, I oversway'd, Leaving his ensign in a red-rose chain; 'Stoop'd in my arms, steeling the strength ob'y'd, Yet was he servile to my coy disdain. O be not proud, nor brag not of thy might, For mastering her that I o'er the god of light!

Teach but thy lips with those fair lips of thine, (Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red,) The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine:— What see'st thou in the ground! hold up thy head; Look in mine eye-ball, there thy beauty lies: The kiss is not lips on lips, nor eyes in eyes!

Art thou advance to kiss? then work again, And I will wink, so shall the day seem night; Love keeps her revels where there are but twain, Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight: This love's in vain's viol'd whereon we lean, Never can blab, nor know not what we mean.

The tender spring upon thy tempting lip Shows face utrine; yet mayst thou well be tastd; Make use of time, let not advantage slip; Beauty within itself should not be wasted; Fair flowers that are not gather'd are their prime, Rot and consume themselves in little time.

Were I hard-flavor'd, foul, or wrinkled-old, Ill-mur'd, crook'd, churlish, harsh in voice, O'er-worn, despised, rheumatic, and cold, Thick-sighted, barren, lean, and lacking juice, The night'st hour pause, for then I was not for thee; But having no defects, why dost abhor me!

Thou cannot see one wrinkle in my brow; Mine eyes are grey, and bright, and quick in turning; My hair is fairest in the spring of all my age. My flesh is soft and plump, my marrow burning; My smooth must hand, were it with thine hand felt, Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear, Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green. Or, like a nymph, with long chyrub'sd hair, Dance on the sands, and yet no footing seen:

Gray is said to be here used as blue. We have subsequently—

"Her two blue windows faintly she upheareth."
And when from thence he struggles to be gone,
She locks her lilys fingers one in one.

"Fondling," she saith, "since I have hemmed thee
Within the circuit of this ivory pale, [there,]
Tell me, doth he not in his spear place,
Feed where thou wilt, on mountain, or in dale?
Graze on my lips; and if those hills be dry,
Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie.

Within this limit is relief enough,
Save on the bottom grass, and through a doubtful plain,
Round rising hillocks, brave obscure and rough,
To shelter thee from tempest and from rain;
Then be my deer, since I am such a park;
Nor shall I raise thee, thou thousand and a bark."

At this Adonis smiles as in disdain,
That in each cheek appears a pretty dipple:
Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
He might be buried in a tomb so simple;
Fore-knowing well if there he came to lie,
Why there Love liv'd and there he could not die.

These lovely caves, these round-endearing pits,
Open'd their mouths to swallow Venus' liking;
Being mad before, how doth she now for wits?
Shall we at last what need she needs striking?
Poor queen of love, in thine own law forlorn,
To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn?

Now which way shall she turn? what shall she say?
Her words are done, her woes the more increasing,
The tears spent, her object is withering;
And from her twining arms doth urge releasing.

"Pity," she cries, "some favor—some remorse;"
Away he springs, and hasteth to his horse.

But lo, from forth a cope that neighbors by,
A breeding jennet, lusty, young, and proud,
Adonis' trampling course doth easy.
And forth she rushes, snorts, and neighs aloud:
The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a tree,
Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds,
And new vgarth wavers high he bows and asunder.
The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds,
Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven's thunder;

The other bit he crushes 'tween his teeth,
Controlling what he was controlled with.

His ears up-prick'd; his braided hanging mane
Upon his compass'd crest now stands on end;
His nostrils drink the air, and forth again,
And from his nostril, arbor, vapors issue.
His eye, which glances scornfully like fire,
Shows his hot courage and his high desire.

Sometimes he trots, as if he told the steps,
With gentle majesty, and modest pride;
Afon he bears upright, curved, and legs,
As though he thought his measurement tried;
And this I do to captivate the eye
Of the fair breeder that is standing by.

What recketh he his rider's angry stir,
His flattering "holla," or his "Stand, I say?"
What cares he now for cur's, or pricking spur?
Or rich capsarions, or trapping gay?
He sees his love, and nothing else he sees,
For nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look, when a painter would surpass the life,
In Limming out a well-proportion'd steed,
He finds it with nature's working sitt more strie,
As if the dead the living should exceed;
So did this horse excel a common one,
In shape, in courage, color, pace, and bone.

Round hoof'd, short-jointed, fellocks shag and long,
Brown with full tail eyes, and a tail most wide;
High crest, short ears, straight legs, and passing strong.

This man in thick tail, broad butteck, tender hide
Look what a horse should have, he did not lack,
Save a proud rider on so proud a back.

Sometimes he sends far off, and there he stares;
Anon he starts at shining of a feather;
To bid the wind a base; now prepares,
And when he run, or fly, they knew not whether;

In the game of love, or prison race, one runs and challenges another to pancre.
"To bid the wind a base," is therefore to challenge the wind to speed.

For through his mane and tail the high wind sings,
Fanning the hairs, who wave like feather'd wings.

He looks upon his love and neesds unto her;
She answers him as if from his mind:
Being proud, as females are, to see him woo her,
She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkind;
Spurns at his love, and scorns the heat he feels,
Beating his kind embraces with her heels.

Then like a melancholy malecontent,
He vails his tail, that, like a falling deer,
Cool shadow to his melting buttock leat;
He stumps, and bites the poor flies in his fame:
His perceive how he is enraged,
Grew kinder, and his fury was changed.
His testy master goeth about to take him;
When lo, the unback'd breeder, full of fear,Jealous of catching, swiftly doth break him;
With her the horse, and left Adonis there:
As they were mad, unto the wood they them,
Out-stripping crows that strive to over-take them.

All sworn with chasing down Adonis sits,
Running his boisterous and unruly heart;
And now the happy season once more fits,
That love-sick Love by pleading may be blest;
For love-sick the heart hath trouble wrong,
When it is barr'd the abundance of this tongue.

An oven that is stopp'd, or river styn'd,
Burneth more hotly, swelth with more rage:
So of concealed sorrow may be said;
Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage;
But when the heart's attorney once is mute,
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to glow,
Even as a dying coal revives with wind,
And with his bonnet hides his angry brow;
Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind;
Taking no notice that the face is so changed.

For all askance he holds in his eye,
O what a sight it was, swiftly to view
How she came stealing to the wayward hoy!
To note the fighting conflict of her line!
How white and red each other did destry;
But now her cheek was pale, and by and by
It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky.

Was now she just before him as he sat,
And like a lowly lover down she kneels;
With one fair hand she heareth up his hat,
Her other hand her fair cheek softly he saith.
His tender cheeck receives her soft hand's print,
As apt as new-fallen snow takes any dust.

As a what a war of looks was then between them!
Her eyes, petitioners, to his eyes sung;
As her eyes waver'd, to the heaven it is sung;
And this I do to captivate the eye
Of the fair breeder that is standing by.

"Give me my hand," saith he, "why dost thou feel it?"

"Give me my heart," she saith, "and thou shalt have it;"
O give it me, lest thy hard heart do steel it,
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never graven it.
Then love's deep groans I never shall regard,
Because Adonis' heart hath made mine hard.

"For shame," he cries, "let us, and let me go;
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,

The tonges.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

And 'tis your fault I am bereft him so;
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone:
For so my mind, my thought, my busy care,
Is how to get my palfrey from the mare.

Thus she replies: "Thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomes the warm approach of sweet desire,
Affection is a coal that must be co'od;
Else, suffer'd, it will set the heart on fire;
The sun hath bound it, but deep desire hath none,
Therefore no marvel though thy horse be gone.

How like a jade he stood, tied to a tree,
Cerulian master'd with a leathern rein!
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair face,
He did deface her such petty acciones in:
Throwing the base thong from his bending crest,
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.

Who sees his true love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,
But, when his gluton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight!
Who is so fain that dare not be so bold
To touch the fire, the weather being cold?

Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy;
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take an advantage on presented youth.
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings teach thee.
O learn to love; the lesson is but plain,
And, once made perfect, never lost again.

*I know not love," quoth he, "nor will not know it,
Until I see a boar, and then I shall see it.
'Tis much to borrow, and I will not owe it;
My love to love is love but to disgrace it.
For I have heard it is a life in death,
That by coughing, and weeping, and breath.

Who wears a garment shapeless and unfinished?
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth?
If sprouting things be any jot diminish'd,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing worth:
This child that's back'd with thirteen years of young,
Loses his pride, and never waxeth strong.

You hurt my hand with wringing; let us part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat;
Remove your siege from my unhappy heart;
To love's alarm it will not ope the gate.

Dismiss your vows, your leagued tears, your battery;
For where a heart is hard, they make no battery.

"What! canst thou talk," quoth she, "hast thou a tongue?
O would thou hast not, or I had no hearing!
Thy mermaid's voice hath done me double wrong;
I had my load before, how press'd with bearing;
Melodious discord, heaviness tune harsh sounding.
Earth's deep sweet music, and heart's deep-sore wounding.

Had I no eyes, but cars, my ears would love
That inward beauty and invisible:
Or, were I deaf, thy outward parts would move
Each part in me that were but sensible;
Though neither eyes nor ears, to hear or see,
Yet should I be in love, by touching thee.

Say that the sense of seeing were bereft me,
And that I could not see, nor hear, nor touch,
And heaven had ray'd by the very smell that weft me,
Yet would my love to thee be still as much;
For from the still-foisy of thy face excelling
Comes breath perfum'd, that breveth love by smell.

But O, what banquet wert thou to the taste,
Being nurse and feeder of the other four!
Would they not wish the feast might ever last,
And bid Suspicion double-lock the door!
Last thought away, that soul unworshipp'd guest,
Should, by his stealing in, disturb the feast.

Once more the ruby-color'd portal open'd,
Which to his speech did honey passage yield;
Like a red morn, that ever yet betoken'd
Wreck to the seaman, tempest to the field,
Sorrow to shepherds, woe unto the birds,
Gust and foul haws to herdsmen and to herds.

This ill presage advisedly she marketh;
Even as the wind is hushed before it raineth,
Or the sweet dews fall before the bearketh,
Or as the berry bursts before it staineth,
Or like the deadly bullet of a gun,
His meaning struck her ere his words began:

And at his look she fully fellath down,
For looks kill love, and love by looks reviveth;
So she from the bounding of her down,
But blessèd bankrupt, that by love so thriftly
The silly boy believing she is dead,
Claps her pale cheek, till clapping makes it red.

And all amaz'd brake off his late intent,
If so far only he did think to reprehend her,
Which causing love did writrfully prostrate her:
Fair fall the wit that can so well defend her.
For on the grass she was as she were slain,
Till his breath breathe him in her again.

He wrings her nose, he strikes her on the cheeks,
He bends her fingers, holds her pulses hard;
He chases her lips, a thousand ways he seeks.
To mend the hurt that his unkindness marr'd;
He kisses her, and she, by her good will,
Will be her rise, so he will kiss her still.

The night of sorrow now is turn'd to day:
Her two blue windows fairly she did finish:
Like the fair sun, when in his fresh array
He cheers the morn, and all the world relieveth:
And as the bright sun glorifies the sky,
So, through the storm, this morn did bring with it.

Whose beams upon his hairless face are fix'd,
As it from thence they borrow'd all their shine.
Were never four such lamps together mix'd,
Had not his clouded with his bow's repine;
But now, the which through the crystal tears gave light,
Shone like the moon in water seen by night.

"O where am I," quoth she, "in earth or heaven,
Or in the ocean drench'd, or in the fire!
What hour is this! or morn, or weary even!
Do I delight to die, or life desire?
But now I liv'd, and life was death's anny;
But now I died, and death was lively joy.
O thou didst kill me—kill me once again;
Thy eyes' shrewd tutor, that hard heart of thine,
Hath taught them scornful tricks, and such disdain
That they have murder'd this poor heart of mine;
And these mine eyes, true leaders to their queen,
But for thy piteous lips no more had seen.

Long may they kiss each other, for this cure!
Oh never let their crimson laces wear!
And never let their fair venture still endure;
To drive infection from the dangerous year!
That the star-gazers, having wri on death,
May say the plague is banish'd by thy breath.

Pure lips, sweet seals in my soft lips imprinted,
What bargains may I make, still to be scaling!
To sell myself I can be well encompassed.
So thou wilt buy, and pay, and use good dealing;
Which purchase, if thou make, for fear of slips,
Set thy seal-manual on my wax-red lips.

A thousand kisses buys my heart from me,
And put them at thy leisure, one by one.
What is ten hundred touches unto these?
Are they not quickly told, and quickly gone?
Say, for non-payment that the debt should double,
Is twenty hundred kisses such a trouble?"

"Fair queen," quoth he, "if any love you owe me,
Measure my strangeness with my unripe years;
Before I know myself seek not to know me;
No fisher but the ungrown fry forbears;
The mellow plum doth fall, the green sticks fast,
Or, as they say, "the early chick'd is sourer late.
Look, the world's companion, with weariness call,
His day's hot task hath ended in the west;
The owl, night's herald, shrieks—'Tis very late,
The sheep are gone to fold, birds to their nest;
The fox to seek his hole that shelter doth provide.
Doth summon us to part, and bid good night.
Now let me say, good night, and so say you;
If you will say so, you shall have a kiss."
"Good night," quoth she; and, eye he says adieu,
The honey bee of parting tender'd is:
Her arms do lend his neck a sweet embrace;
Incorporate then they seem, face grows to face.

Till, breathless, he disjoin'd, and backward drew
The honey mould moisture, that sweet coral mouth,
Whose precious taste her thirsty lips well knew,
Whereon she surfeit yet complais on drouth;
He with her plenty press'd, she faint with dearth,
(Their lips together glued,) fall to the earth.

Now quick Desire hath caught the yielding prey,
And glutious-like she feeds yet never-sate;
Her lips are conquerors, his lips obey,
Favoring what ransom the insolent willeth;
Whose vulture thought doth pitch the price so high.

That she will draw his lips' rich treasure dry.
And having felt the sweetness of the spoil,
With blind-fold fury she begins to forage;
Her face doth reek and smoke, her blood doth boil,
And careless lust stirs up a desperate courage;
Planting oblation, beating reason back.

Forgetful shame's pure blush, and honor's wrack.
Hot, faint, and weary, with her hard embracing,
Like a wild bird being tamed with too much hand
Or as the fleet-foot roe that's tired with chasing,
Or like the stroward mantl still'd with dandling,
He now obeys, and now no more resisteth,
While she takes all she can, not all she hateth.

What wax so frozen but dissolves with tempering,
What scorch'd wax so fast lost of the fire light!\nThings out of hope are compass doit with venturing.
Chieflie in love, whose leave exceeds commission:
Affection fain not, like a pale-faced coward,
But then were best when most his choice is roward.
When he did crown, O, she had she then gave over,
Such nectar from his lips she had not suck'd.
Foal words and frowns must not repel a lover;
With him the rose, her rosy prickles, yet his pluck'd:
Were beauty under twelve, her heart was blest.

Yet Love breaks through, and picks them all at last.
For pity now she can no more detain him;
The poor fool prays her he may depart:
She is resolve'd no longer to restrain him;
said him farewell, and took well to her heart.
The which, by Cupid's bow she doth protest,
He carries thence imaged in his breast.

"Sweet boy," she says, "this night I'll waste in sorrow;
For my sick heart commands mine eyes to watch,
Tell me, love's master, shall we meet to-morrow?
Say, shall we two! will thou make the match?"
He love's not, nor to morrow doth he intend.
To hunt the bear with circling if his friends.

"The bear!" quoth she; whereat a sudden pale,
Like lawn being spread upon the blushen robe,
Upon her cheeks; she trembles at his tale,
And on his neck her yoking arms she throws;
She sinketh down, still hanging on his neck,
He on her belly falls, she on her back.

Now is she in the very lists of love,
Her champion mounted for the hot encounter:
All is imaginary she doth prove,
Honour will not range her, although he mount her;
That worse than Tantalus is her enemy,
To clip Elissus, and to lack her joy.

Even as poor birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes,
Do surfeit of the eye, and pine the jaw.
Even so she languish'd in her mishaps,
And poor birds that helpless berries saw:
The warm effects which she in him finds missing,
She seeks to handle with continual kissing.

But all in vain; good queen, it will not be;
She hath assay'd as much as may be proved;
Her pradig'd heart deserv'd a greater fee;
He's love's, she loves, and yet she is not lov'd.
"Fie, fie," he says, "you crush me; let me go;
You have no reason to withhold me so.

"Thou hast been gone," quoth she, "sweet joy,
Therefore, thou hast done me what I feared to hear.
O be advis'd! thou know'st not what it is
With javelin a point of indifference to gore,
Whose tussles never sheath'd he whetteth still,
Like to a mortal butcher, bent to kill.

On his bow-back he hath a battle set
Of briskly pikes, that ever threat his foes;
His eyes like glowing embers shine when he doth sit,
His snout doth stamp up where enquiring eyes,
Being mov'd, he strikes whate'er is in his way,
And whom he strikes his cruel tussles shay.

His brawny side, with hairy bristles arm'd,
Are better proof than thy spear's point can enter;
His short thick neck cannot be eaked the third;
Being frcul, on the horn he will venture.
The thorny brambles and embracing bushes.
As fearful of him, part; through whom he rushes.

Alas, he sought extrem's that face of thine,
To which Love's eye pays tributary gazes;
Nor thy soft hands, sweet lips, and crystal eye,
Whose full perfection all the world amazes;
But having thee at vantage, (wondrous dread!)\nWould root these beauties as he roots the mead.

O, let him keep his loathsome cabin still!
Beauty has thought no more with such foul friends:
Come not within his danger by thy way.
They that thrive well, take counsel of their friends.
When thou didst name the boar, not to assemble,
I fear'd thy fortune, and my joints did tremble.

Didst thou not mark my face? was it not while
What needst thou fear, O, boar's sweet beauteous eye?
Drew I not mine? and tell I not downright?
Within my bosom, whereon thou dost lie,
My boiling heart pants, heats, and takes no rest.
But, like a tempest shakest thee on my breast.

For where Love reigns, disturbing jealousy
Doth call himself Affection's servant's heir;
Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny.
And in a peaceful hour doth cry, Kill, kill;
Intemperant gentle Love with his desire,
As air and water destines to the sea last.

This sour inquirer, this bate-breathing spy,
This canker that eats up love's tender spring,
This carry-tale, disconsolate jealousy,
That sometime true news, sometime false doth bring,
Knocks on my heart, and whispers in mine ear,
That if I love thee thy death should I fear:
And, more than so, presented to mine eye
The picture of an angry-chasing boar.
Under whose sharp lances on his back doth lie
Somuch an image thus, all staid with gore;
Whose head upon the face-h flowers being shed,
Both make them doop with grief, and hang the head.

What should I do, seeing thee so indeed,
That tremble in the imagination?
The thought of it doth make my faint heart bleed,
And fear doth teach it develop my head;
I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow,
If thou encounter with the boar to-morrow.

But if thou needs will hunt, he rul'd by me;
Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
Or at the fox, which live by subtle witt,
Or at the roe, which no encounter dare;
Pursue those fearful creatures o'er the downs,
And on thy well-breath'd horse keep with thy bounds.

And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Dark the tallow, to it a thousand times missing
How he outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles;
The many messities through which he goes.
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

Sometime he runs among a flock of-sheep,
To make the cunning hounds raise on their smell,
And sometime where earth-delivering comes keep,
To stop the loud pursuers in their yell;
And sometime soothed with a herd of deer;
Danger deviseth shifts, wit waits on fear.

* Stiffe breeding.
* Bad, or young shod.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

For thee his smell with others being mingled,
The hot scent-smanting hounds are drawn to-dout,
Closing their clamorous cries till they have sunged
With much ado the cold fault cleanly out;
Therein the hairs and their nozy echoes ring,
As if another chase were in the skies.

By this, poor Wat, far off upon a bell,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,
To hearken if his toes pursue him still;
And then his head alighting he doth hear:
And now his greet may be compared well
To one sore-sick, that hears the passing bell.

Then shall thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch
Turn, and return, uniting with the way;
Each curious brar his weary legs doth scratch,
Each soft and warm makes him stop,
While murmurs run on by many,
To make thee love the painting of the boar.

Unlike me, I long to hear the moralize,
Applying this to that, and so to so;
For love can comment upon every woe.

Where did I leave?—"No matter where," quoth she:
"Leave me, and then the story aptly ends:
The night is spent."—"Why, what of that?" quoth she.
"I am," quoth he, "expected of my friends;
And now 'tis dark, and going to fall.
In night," quoth she, "Desire sees best of all.

But if thou fall, O then imagine this,
The earth in love with thee footsteps footing,
And all is but to rob thee of a kiss.
Roses every true men thieves; so do thy lips
Make modest Leda's cloudly and client,
Lost she should steal a kiss, and die forsworn.

Now of this dark night I perceive the reason;
Cynthia for shame obscures her silver shine,
To forgive nature he condemn'd of treason,
For stealing mounds from heaven that we, divine,
When can she framed thee in high heaven's despite,
To shame the sun by day, and her by night.

And therefore hath she braid the Destinies,
To cross the curious workmanship of nature,
To magie beauty with infirmities,
And pur constitution with imperious defecture;
Making it subject to the tyranny
Of mad mischance and much misery.

As burning fevers, ague pale and faint,
Life-poisoning pestilence, and fenzies wood,
To heart-sick love, and wandering and disorder breeds by hearing of the blood.
Surfale, imposthumes, grief, and damn'd despair,
Swear Nature's death for framing thee so fair.

And not the least of all these maladies,
But in one minute's light brings beauty under;
Both favor, favor, hue, and qualities,
Wereat the impartial gazer late did wonder,
Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd, and done,
As mountain snow melts with the midday sun.

Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
Hating sinning yet in self-loving arms,
That on the earth would beat his breast,
And barren death of daughters and of sons,
Be prodigal: the lamp that burns by night,
Burns up his oil, to lend the world his light.

What is thy body but a swalowing grave,
Seeking to bury that pleasant,
Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,
If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity
If he, the world will hold thee in disdain,
And thy pride so fair a hope shall slay.

So in thyself thusly art made away
A miserable worse than civil home-born strife,
Or theirs whose desperate hands themselves do slay,
Or butchery, that leaves his son of life.
Foul cackling riot the hidden treasure frets,
Fut gold that's put to use more gold begots.

"Nay then," quoth Adon, "you will fall again
Into thy idle over-handled theme;
The kiss I gave you was bestow'd in vain,
And all in vain you strive against the stream;
For by this black-faced night, desire's fool nurse,
Your treatise makes me like yours, or worse.

If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
And every tongue more moving than your own,
Be with the wanton mermaid's songs,
Yet from mine ear the tender tune is blown;
For by this black-faced night stands armed in mine ear,
And will not let a false sound enter there;

Let the deceiving harmony shall run
Into the quiet closure of my breast,
And then my little heart were quite undone,
In this chamber to be hard of rest.

No lady, no, my heart longs not to groan,
But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.

What have you urg'd that I cannot repose?
The path is smooth that leadeth unto danger;
I hate not love, but your device in love,
That leads embracements unto every stranger.
You do it for increase; O strange excuse!
When reason is the bawd to lust's abuse.

Call it not love, for love to heaven is fled,
Surely sweating lust on earth usurp'd his name.
Upon fresh hearts, dotting it with blood;
Which the hot tyrant stains, and soon bereaves
As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

Love comforteth like sunshine after rain,
But lust's effect is tempest after sun;
Love's gentle spring doth always wish remain,
Lust's winter comes ere summer half be done.

Love surfeits not; just like a gluton dies:
Love is all truth; lust full of forged lies.

More I could tell, but more I dare not say;
The next is old, the operator too green.
Therefore, in sadness, how I will away;
My face is full of shame, my heart of teen;
Mine ears that to your wanton talk attended,
Do burn themselves for having so offended.

With this he breaketh from the sweet embrace
Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast,
And homeward through the dark laund runs apace,
Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress'd.

Look how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
So glides the night from Venus' eye;
Which after him she darts, as one on shore
Gazing upon a late-embarred friend.

Till the wild waves have will him seen no more,
Whose riddles with the meeting clouds contend;
So do the meteorites and pitchy night
Fold in the object that did feed her night.

Whereat amaz'd, as one that unaware
Hath dropp'd a precious jewel in the flood,
Or stornish'd as night-wanderers often are,
Their light blown out in some mistrusted wood;
Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
Having lost the fair discovery of her way.

And now she beats her heart, whereat groans,
That all the neighbor-caves, as seeming troubled,
Make verbal repetition of her moans;
Faint whisperings, deepiy redoubled:
"Aha!" she cries, and twenty times, "Aha, aha!"
And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.

She, marking them, begins a waking note,
And sings externally a woefull ditty:
How love makes young men thrall, and old men
How love is wise in folly, foolish-witty:
Her heavy anthem still concludes in we,
And still the choir of echoes answer so.

Her song was tedious, and outwore the night,
For her hours are long, those remaining short;
If pleased themselves, others, they think, delight
In such like circumstance, with such like sport.
Their copious stories, oftimes begins,
End and both audience, and are never done.

For who hath she to spend the night withal,
But idle sounds, resembling parasites,
Venus salutes him with this fair good-morrow:

"O thou clear god, and patron of all light,
From whom each lamp and shining star doth borrow
The beauteous influence that makes him bright.
There lives a son, that suck'd an earthly mother,
May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to other."

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove,
Missing the morning so much of wear:
And yet she hears no tidings of her love:
She hearkens for his hounds, and for his horn:
Anon she hears them chant it lustily,
And in all haste she costeth to the cry.
And as she runs, the bushes in the way
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,
Some say what of her things to make her stay;
She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
Like a milch doe, whose swelling ducts do ache,
Hastening to feed her calf, in some brake.
By this she hears the hounds are at a bay,
Whereat she starts, like one that spars an adder
Wrought up in fatal folds, just in their way.
The fear whereby doth make him shake and shudder:
Even so the timorous yelping of the hounds
Appalls her senses, and her sprite confounds.
For now she knows it is no gentle chase.
But the hunst boar, rough bear, or lion proud,
Because the cry remaineth in one place.
Where fearfully the dogs exclaim aloud:
"Finding their enemy, to be so curt.
They all strain courtly who should hope him first."

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart,
Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
With cold-pale weakness numbeth each feeling part:
Like soldiers, when their captain is from hold yield,
They basely fly, who were wont to the field.
The stands she in a trembling ecstasy;
Till, cheering up her senses sore dismay'd,
She tells them 'tis a careless fantasy,
And childish error that they are aind.
Bids them leave quaking, bids them fear no more;
And with that word she spied the hunted boar;
Whose frothy mouth, bepainted all with red,
Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries she knows not whither:
This way she runs, and now she will no further,
But back returns, to rate the boar for mutter.
A thousand spears hear her a thousand ways;
She treads the path that she outreads again;
Her more than haste is mated with delays,
In her proceedings; or should chance drunk in Full of respect, yet not at all respecting,
In hand with all things, nought at all effecting.
Here kennel'd in a brake she finds a hound,
And asks the wary careful for his master;
And there another licking of his master's Gallant man's sores was only sovereign plaster:
And here she meets another sadly swooning,
To whom she speaks, and he replies with howling.
When he hath ceased his ill-resounding noise.
Another clap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the well-bred and careful of his voice;
Another and another answer him,
Clapping their pendants to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amazed
At apparitions, signs, and prodigies,
Whenon with fearful eyes they long have gaz'd,
Turning them with dreadful prophetic face;
So she at these sad signs draws up her breath,
And, sighing it again, exclaims on Death.

"Hard-favor'd tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean,
Hateful divorce of love," (thus chides she Death,)
"Grim-gummingghost, earth's worm, what, dost thou
To stifle beauty, and to steal his breath.

Who when he lived, his breath and beauty set
Gloes on the rose, smell to the violet!
If he be dead,—0 no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou shouldst strike at it—
O yes, it may; thou hast no eyes to see,
But hatefully at random dost thou hit.
Thy mark is feeble age;—but thy tale dart
Mistakes that aim, and cleaves an infant's heart.

Hastad thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
And hearing him thy power had lost his power.
The Destinies will cause thee for this stroke;
They bid thee crop a weed, then pinckst a flower.
Love's golden arrow at him should have fled,
And not Death's own dart, to strike him dead.

Dost thou drink tears, that thou provok'st such weeping?
What may my dearest one's advantage thee?
Why hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?
Now Nature carres not her thy mortal vigor,
Since that best work is mired with thy rigor.

Here over weeps one full of despair,
She veil'd her eye-brows, who, like violets, stopp'd
The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fair
In the sweet channel of her bosom drop'd;
But through the deadbeats breaks the silver rain,
And with his strong course opens them again.

O how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eyes seen in her tears, tears in her eye;
Both crystals, where they view'd each other's sorrow.
Sorrow, that friendly sighs sought still to dry;
But like a stormy day, now wind, now rain.
Sighs dry her cheeks, tears make them wet again.

Variable passions through her constant woe,
As striving who should best become her grief;
All entertain'd, that every present sorrow
That every present sorrow seemeth chief,
But none is best; then join they all together,
Like many clouds consulting for foul weather.

By this, far off she hears some huntsmen hollo;
A nurse's song ever pleased her babe so well;
The pure imagination she did follow,
This sound of hope doth labor to expel;
For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
And flatters her, it is Adonis' voice.

Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye, like pearls in glass;
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside,
Which her cheek melts, as scorning it should pass.
To wash the foul face of the wretched ground.
Who is but drunken when she seemeth drunk'd.
O hard-believing love, how strange it seems
Not to believe, and yet the clock can see
Thy sorrow and we are both of them extremes,
Despair and hope make thee ridiculous:
The one doth flatter thee in thoughts mutually,
With lately thoughts the other kills thee quickly.

Now she unweaves the web that she hath wrought,
Adonis lives, and Death is not to be known.

* No, no," quoth she, "Sweet Death, I did but jest;
Yet pardon me, I feel a kind of balance;
When as I met the boar, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe;
Then gentle shadow, (truth I must confess,) I rai'd on thee, fearing my love's decease."
VENUS AND ADONIS.

"Tis not my fault: the bow pro cured my tongue;
be wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
"Tis he, soul creature, that hath done thee wrong:
I speak, not of thy author of this wrong.
Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet
Could rule them both, without ten women's wit."

Thus, hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her rash suspect she doth extenuate;
And as her beauty may the beast attire,
With Death she humbly doth insinuate;
Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs; and stories
His victories, his triumphs, and his glories.

"O Love," quoth she, "how much a fool was I,
To be of such a weak and silly mind,
To think of those, who live, and death who lies not die,
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind!
For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And beauty dead, black chaos comes again.

Fic, fic, and love, thou art so full of fear
As one with treasure laden, hemmed with thieves,
Tribs, unwitnessed with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false bethinking grieves,"
Even at this word she hears a merry horn,
Whereat she leaps that was but late forlorn.

As falcon to the lure away she flies;
The grass stops not, she treads on it so light;
And the must unwatched with hope,
The foul bear's conquest on her fair delight;
Which seen, her eyes, as murder'd with the view,
Like stars ashamed of death, themselves withdrew.

Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
She flies in his shelly cuirass, and hides his pain,
And there, all smother'd up, in shade doth sit;
Long after fearing to creep forth again;
So, at his bloody view, her eyes are led
Into the deep dark temples of her head;

Where they resign their office and their light
To the disposing of her troubled brain,
Who bids them still consort with ugly night,
And never wound the heart with looks again;
Who, like a king perplexed in his throne,
By their suggestion gives a death to each,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes:
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
When with cold terror men's minds confound,
The mutiny each part doth so surpass
That from their dark beds once more leap her eyes;

And, being open'd, threw unwilling light
Upon the wide wound that the bow had trenched
In his soft flank; whose wonted lily white
With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drenched:
No flower was rizh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed,
But stole his blood, and seem'd with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head;
Dumbly she passions, faintly she doth;
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead.
Her voice is stopy'd, her joints forget to bow;
Her eyes are mad that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly
That her sight dazzling makes the wound seem less
And then she reprehends her mangling eye,
That makes more gashes where no breach should be;
His face seems twin, each several limb is doubled,
For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled,

"My tongue cannot express my grief for one.
And yet," quoth she, "behold two Adonis dead!
My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
My groans, forsaken, and to fire, my heart is led.
Heavy heart's head melt at mine eyes' red fire!
So shall I die by drops of hot desire."

Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost!
What face remains alive that's worth the viewing?
What true and music new that canst thou boast
Of things long since, of any thing ensuing!
The flowers are sweet, their colors fresh and trim;
But true sweet beauty liv'd and died with him.

Honest nor veil henceforth no creature wear!
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you;
Having no fair to lose, you need not fear,
The sun shall scorn you, and the wind doth his you;
But when Adonis liv'd, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves, to rob him of his fair.

And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep;
The wind would blow it off, and, hell, hell, hell!
Play with his locks; then would Adonis weep;
And straight, in pity of his tender years,
They both would strive who first should dry his eye.

To see his face, the hon walk'd along
Behind some hedge, because he would not fear him
To recreate himself, when he had sang,
The tiger would be tame and gently hear him.
If he had spoke, the wolf would leave his prey,
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

When he beheld his shadow in the brook
The fishes spread on it their golden gills;
When he was by, the birds such pleasure took
That some would sing, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries, and ripe red cherries;
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries.

But this foul, grim, and unshrinmointed bear,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore;
Wore the entertainment that he gave;
If he had see his face, why then he say
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

'Tis true, 'tis true; thus was Adonis slain;
He ran upon the bear with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But he kiss'd thought to persuade him there;
And nuzzling in his flank, the loving swine
Sheath'd, unware, the tusk in his soft groin.

Had I been tooth'd like him I must confess
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first;
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his; the more am I accursed,"
With this she raleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold;
She lyes in his ears a heavy tale,
As if they heard the woeful words she told;
She lifts the collider-ids that close his eyes
Where, lo! two lamps, burn't out, in darkness lies.

Two glasses, where herself herself beheld
A thousand times, and now no more exist;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late resided,
And every beauty nob'd of his effect;
"Wander of time," quoth she, "this is my spine,
That you being dead the day should yet be light.
Since thou art dead, lo! here I prophesy,
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend;
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning but unsavory end;
"We're certified equally, but high or low;
That all love's pleasure shall not match his woe.

It shall be blind, and too full of fraud;
Bulb and he blasted in a breathing white;
The bottom poison, and the top o'erstraw'd
With sweets that shall the truest sight beguile
The strongest body shall it make most weak,
Strike the wise dumb, and teach the fool to speak.

It shall be springing, and too full of riot
Teaching deception to tread the asures;
The stiring rathal shall it keep in quire,
Black down the rich, enrich the poor with trasures
It shall be raging mad, and silly mild,
Like young old men, the old and young child.

It shall suspect where is no cause of fear;
It shall not fear where it should most mistrust;
It shall be miserable, and too severe,
And most deceiving when it seems most just;
"Beauty."
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE HENRY Wriothesly,

EaRL OF SOUTHBAMPTON, AND BARON OF TITCHFIELD.

The love I dedicate to your Lordship is without end; whereas this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superfluous motley. The warrant I have of your honorable disposition, not the worth of my untutored lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours, what I have to do is yours; being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater, my duty would show greater; meantime, as it is, it is bound to your Lordship, to whom I wish long life, still lengthened with all happiness.

Your Lordship's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

THE ARGUMENT.

LUCIUS TARQUINIUS (for his excessive pride so called Superbus) after he had caused his own father-in-law, Servius Tullius, to be cruelly murdered, and contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom; went, accompanied with his sons and other noblemen of Rome, to besiege Ardea. During which siege, the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquinius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper, every one commended the virtues of his own wife; among whom Collatians extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucrece. In that pleasant humor they all posted to Rome; and intending, by their secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatians finds his wife, though it were late in the night, spinning in her chamber: the other ladies were all bound dancing and reveling, or in several sports. Whereupon the noblemen helped Collatians the victory, and his wife the fame. At that time Sextus Tarquinius being inflamed with Lucrece's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp, from whence he shortly after privately withdrew himself; and was (according to his estate) privately entertained and lodged by Lucrece at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stooped into her chamber, violently ravished her, and early in the morning speedily away. Lucrece, in this lamentable plight hastily dispatched messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatine. They came, the one accompanied with Janus Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius; and finding Lucrece attended in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She, first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and told all manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent they all vowed to rest out the whole hated family of the Tarquins, and, hearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the deed and manner of the vile deed, with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king: whereas the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

From the besieged Ardea all in post, Borne by the trustless wings of false desire, Lest-breathe Tarquin leaves the Roman host, And to Collatium bears the lightless fire Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire, And gridle with embracing flames the waist Of Collatine's fair love, Lucrece the chaste.

Haply that name of chaste unhappily set This baseless edge on his keen appetite; When Collatine unwisely did not let To praise the clear unmached red and white Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight, Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties, With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent,
Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state;
What priceless wealth the heavens had him lent
In the possession of his beauteous mate.
Reckoning his fortune at such a prodigious rate,
That kings might be expected to more fame,
But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.
O happiness enjoy'd but of a few!
And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done
As the morning's silver-melting sun!
Against the golden splendor of the sun!
An expir'd date, cancel'd ere well begun:
Honor and beauty in the owner's arms,
Were weakly lost from a world of harms.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
The eyes of men without an orator;
What needeth then apologies be made
To set forth that which is so singular!
Or why is Calliope the publisher
Of that rich jewel she should keep unknown
From this fair car, because it is his own?
Perchance his boast of Lucretia's sovereignty
Suggested this proud issue of a king;
For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be
Percibale that envy of so rich a prize:
Braving compare, disdainfully did sting
His high-pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men
Should vaunt so.

That golden hair which their superiors want;
But some untimely thought did instigate
His all-too-timely speed, if none of those:
His honor, his affairs, his friends, his state,
Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
To quench the coal which in his liver glows.
O rash false heat, wrapt in repentant cold,
Thy hasty spring still blasts, and men grows old!

When at Caiusfian this lord arriv'd,
Well was he welcome by the Roman dame,
Within whose faire beauty and virtue striv'd
With them she should in both shape and fame:
When virtue brag'd, beauty would blush for shame;
When beauty boast'd blushes, in despite
Virtue would stam that o'er with silver white.

But beauty, in that while intuited,
From Venus' daws dothchallegg'd that fair field:
Then virtue claims from beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age, to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield;
The chance that envy of so rich a theft.
When shame assaul'd, the red should hence the white.

This heraldry in Lucretia face was seen,
Argued by beauty's red, and virtue's white;
Oppos'd to this the other's dim,
Proving from world's minority their right:
Yet their ambition makes them still to light;
The sovereignty of either being so great,
That off they interchange each other's seat.

This silent war of lines and of rose,
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses;
Where, lest between them both it should be kill'd,
The coward captive vanquish'd doth yield
That off two armies that would do him go,
Rather than triumph or else to be.

Now thinks he that her husband's shallow tongue
(The mirror provid'd that prais'd her so)
In that high task hath done her beauty wrong,
Which far exceeds his barren skill to show;
Therefore that praise which Calliope doth owe,
Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
In silent wonder of still-gazing eyes.

This earthly saint, adored by this devil,
Little suspecteth the false worshipper;
For by his having thing to use it in evil,
Birds never limit'd no secret terrors fear:
So guiltless she securely gives good cheer
And reverend welcome to her pious guest.
When warder ill doth outward no outward express
For that he color'd with his high estate
Hiding base sin in plaits of majesty:
That nothing in him seemedordinate,

Save sometime too much wonder of his eye,
Which, having all, all could not satisfy;
But, poorly rich, so wanteth in his store
That cloy'd with much he pinch't still for more.
But she, that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their parling looks,
Nor smart the subtle-sounding words of arts.
Writ in the glassy margins of such books;
She touch'd no unknown baits, nor fear'd no death:
Nor could she moralize her wanton sight,
More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame,
Won in the fields of fruitful Italy;
And decks with praises Calliope's high name,
Mentioning by his, chiefly chief.
With bruised arms and wreaths of victory:
Her joy with heav'd-up hand she doth express,
And, wordless, so greets heaven for his success.

Far from the purpose of his coming thither,
He makes excuses for his being there:
No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather
Dost yet in his fair welkin once appear;
Till sable Night, mother of Dread and Fear,
Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
And in her guilty prison staves the day.

For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed,
Inter'd, revolting with his heavy sight;
For, after supper, long he questioned
With modest Lucretia, and wrore out the night:
Now leaden shambler with life's strength doth fight
And every one to rest himself betakes,
Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds, that wakes.
As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining;
Yet how to obtain his will resolv'n.

Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abandon Despair to gain doth traffic off for gaining;
And which great treasure is the need proposed,
Tho' death be adjourn'd, there's no death suppos'd.

Those that much covet are with gain so fond
That what they have not, that which they possess
They scatter and wunderse it from their bond,
And so, by hoping more, they have but less;
Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain,
That they prove bankrupt in this poor-rich gain.
The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honor, wealth, and ease, in waning age;
And then to die there is such a virtuous strife,
That one for all, or all for one we get.
As life for honor, in tell battle's race;
Honor for wealth; and oft that wealth doth coat
The death of all, and all together lost.

So that in vent'reng ill we leave to be
The things we are, for that which we expect
And this ambitious soul infirmary
In having much, torments us with defect;
Of that we have, so then we do neglect
The things we have, and, all for want of will,
Make something nothing, by augmenting it.

Such hazard now must dotting Tarquin make,
Pawning his honor to obtain his lust;
And for himself himself he must forsake:
Then where is truth if there be no self-trust!
When shall we think to find a stranger just,
When he himself himself confounds, betrays
To slanderous tongues, and wretched hateful days!
Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
When heavy sleep had close'd up mortal eyes;
No noise but owls' and owlets' throst-dying cries;
Now serves the season that they may surprise.

The lady's mind is so thoughtfully still,
While lust and murder wake to stain and kill.
And now this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm;
Is madly us'd between desire and dread;

4 Speaking.

5 Prefacing.
Th' one sweetly flatters, th' other earstake harm;
But honest Fear, bewitch'd with lust's foul charm,
Doth too too oft betake him to retire,
Beaten away by brash-sick rude Desire.

His falcon on a flute he softly smiteth,
The warren beloved stopt a while to fly, to do fly,
Whereat a waxen torch forthwith with lighteth,
Which must be lode-star to his lustful eye;
And to the flame this speaks advisedly;

As from this cold that I endured this fire,
So Lucrece must I force to my desire.

Here pale with fear he doth premeditate
The dangers of his baseborn enterprise,
And in his inward mind he doth debate
What following sorrow may on this arise:
Then looking securly his naked heart,
His naked armor of still-slaughter'd lust,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust:

"Fair torch, burn out thy light, and lend it not
To darken her whose light excelleth thine!
And die unhallowed thoughts, before you blot
With your unfitness which is divine!
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine:
Let fair humanity abhor the deed
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white weed.

O shame to knightliness and to shining arms!
O foul dishonor to my household's grave!
O impious act, including all foul harms!
A martial man to be so sorely slave!
Thus, erst still a true respectable slave;
Then my disguise is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraven in my face.

Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eyesore in my golden coat;
Some bash'd some dash the herald will confine,
To such as may be a good disdain.
That my posternity, sham'd with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I, their father had not been.

What win I if I gain the thing I seek?
A dream, a breath, a fleeting joy of joy:
Whose minutes is my mouth a wall a week?
Or sells eternity, to get a toy?
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy?
Or is a single beam beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be stricken down?

If Collatine dream of my intent
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent!
To either me hostile or kind and true,
That my posterity, sham'd with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I, their father had not been.

What excuse can my invention make
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed?
Will not my tongue be mute, my fruit joints shak'e?
Mine eyes forego their light, my false heart bleed!
The guilt being great the fear doth still exceed;
And extreme fear can neither light nor fly,
But coward-like with trembling, terror die.

Had Collatine kill'd my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife,
For that is thine end, that is thine end
To shew to thine end, that is thine end,
But as he is my kinsman, my dear friend.
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

Shameful it is, ay, if the fact be known:
Hateful it is, ay, there is no hate in loving:
I'll beg her love—but she is not her own;
This way is but denial, and repudiation,
My will is strong, past reason's weak removing,
Who fears a sentence or an old man's say
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe.

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation
Tween frozen conscience and hot-burning will,
And all my soul's good thoughts made insensate,
Uring the worser sense for vantage still;
Which in a moment doth confound and kill

*Garment.
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.
Quoth he, "She took me kindly by the hand,
And gaz'd for tidings in my eager eyes;
Fearing some hard news from the warlike band
Where has Collatine lies,
O how her tear did make her color rise?
First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.

And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd,
Forced it to tremble with her loyal fear?
Which struck her speech, and then it never rock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
So love had never drown'd him in the flood
Why hunt's then for color or excuses,
All orators are dumb when heart is seethe
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses;
Love thrives not in the heart that shadowed breathed;
Aleciton is his captain, and he leadeth;
And when his sturdy banner is display'd,
The coward lights, and will not be dismay'd.

Then, childish fear, avar'nt! debating, die;
Respect and reason wait on wrinkled age!
My heart shall never counterpart mine eye;
Sad passage and deep distress be never stages;
My part is youth, and beates these from the stage:
Desire my pilot is, beauty my prize;
Then whosearkings seek where such treasures lie?"

As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost check'd by unresisted lust.
Away he steals with the silent lip, and ear,
Full of fool hope, and full of fond mistrust;
Both which, as servants to the unjust,
So cross him with their opposite persuasion.
That name of love he gives his grudging invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the self-same seat sits Collatine:
That eye which looks on her confounds his wits;
That eye which he beholds, as more divine,
Into a void so false will not the stage;
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted takes the worse part;
And therein hearts up his servile powers,
Who, that'd by their leader's sound show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill on hours,
And as their captain, in their praise doth show,
Pay the more lavish tribute than they owe.
By reprobat desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece' bed.
The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one her enemy, retire and ward;
But as they open they all rate his ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard;
The threshold grates the door to have him heard;
Night-wand and new wands shriek to see him there;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little veins and cresses of the place
The wind wars with his torch, to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extenuating his conduct in this death's how.
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scorn,
Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch
And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks;
He takes it hy in the rushes where it lies; and
And grips it, as his finger doth make bonds:
As who should say, this glove to wanton tricks
Is not inured; return again in haste;
Thou seest our mistress ornaments are chaste.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the thickest sustains the fires that rage,
The doors, the wind, the glove that did delay him,
He takes for accedentals things of trial;
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial.
Who will begin long stay his hand to lose,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

"So, so," quoth he; "these let attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime thr at the spring,

Save of their lord no bearing yoke they knew,
And by each other's life they truly honour to sing.
These words in Tarquin new ambition bred:
Who like a foul usurper went about
From this fair throne to heave the owner out.
What could he see but mightily he noted?
What did he note but strongly he desired?
What he beheld on what he hurriedly noted,
And in his will his wilful eye he tired.
With more than admiration he admired
Her azure eyes, her alabaster skin,
The liberal lips, her snow-white diaphanous chin.
As the grim lion fawneth o'er his prey
Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,
So o'er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
His rage of lust by gazing qualified;
Shackled and oppressed; nor stirring by her side,
His eye, which late this mutiny restrains,
Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins.
And they, like straggling slaves for pillage fighting,
Odibrane vassals, still exploits effecting,
To whose distress sets every joint a shaking;
Nor children's tears, nor mother's gramos respecting Swell in the pride, the onset still augmenting
Anon his beating heart, alarm striking
Gives the hot charge, and bids them do their hark!
His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye,
His eye commends the leading to his hand;
He's proud of such a doughty band.
Smoking with pride, march'd on to make his stand
On her bare breast, the heart of all her land;
Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale,
Let their round turrets desist, and pale pale.
They, mustering to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governor and lady lies,
Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,
And fright her with contusion of their cries:
She, much amazed, breaks ope her look deep eyes,
Who, peeping forth this tumult to behold,
Are by his flaming torch dimm'd and control'd
Imagine her as one in dead of night
From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy waking,
That thinks she hath beheld some ghostly sprite,
Wounding itself to death, rise up, and fall.
What terror 'tis! but she, in worser taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view
The sight which makes supposed terror true.
Wrapp'd and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to the duck-'d bird she trembling lives;
She daces not look; yet, winking at the air
Appears Quick-shutting antics, ugly in her eyes;
Such shadows are the weak brain's phantoms;
What starts these eyes by flitting their lights,
In darkness daunts them with more dreadful sights.
His hand, that yet remains upon her breast,
(Rude man, to batter such an ivory wall!)
May feel her heart, poor citizen! distressed,
Wounding itself to death, rise up, and fall.
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes within.
This moves in him more rage, and lesser pity,
To make the breach, and enter this sweet city.
First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
To sound a parley to his heartless foe,
Who, that the white sheet meets peas his lighter chin,
The reason of this rash alarm to know,
Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;
But with vehement prayers unto him still
Under what color he commits this ill.
Thus he replies: "The color in thy face
(That even for anger makes the lily pale,
And the red rose blush at her own disgrace)
Shall plead for me, and tell my loving tale;
Under what color am I come to scale
Thy never-conquer'd sor; the fault is thine,
For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.
Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide;
Thy beauty hath ensnared thee to this night,
Wheat under patience must my will abide,
My will that marks thee for my earthen delights,
Which I to conquer sought with all my might
The Rape of Lucrece

But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.
I see what crosses my attempt will bring;
I know what thorns the growing rose defy;
I know the honeyed bread he shall retire,
And stoo to honor, to nul desire.

Quoth she, "reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended;
Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee;
Nor the thing that cannot be repented;
And end thy sin, before thy shoot be ended:
He is no woodman that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unseasonable doe.
My husband is thy friend, for his sake spare me;
Thyself art mighty, for thine own sake leave me;
My self is nothing, do not then exercise me.
Thou look'st not like deceit; do not deceive me;
My sighs, like whirlwinds, labor hence to heave thee.
If ever man were mov'd with woman's means,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans:
All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wither-threatening heart,
To solen it with their continual motion;
For stones dissolv'd to water do not part,
0, if no harder than a stone thou art;
Melt at my tears and be compassionate!
Soft pity enters at an iron gate.
In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee;
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the heaven I complained.
Thou wronged'st his honor, wound'st his princely name.
Thou art not what thou seemedst; and if the same
Thou wast not what thou art, a god, a king;
For kings like gods should govern every thing.
How will thy shame be seed in thine age,
When thus thy vices bud before thy spring?
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What dar'st thou not when once thou art a king?
O be resolv'd to change thy fragrant state,
From vassal acts can be wiped away;
Then kings' inseedes cannot be hid in clay.
This deed will make thee only lov'd for fear,
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love:
With soil offenders thou perforce must bear,
When they in thee the like offences prove;
Hut for fear of this thy will remove;
For princes are the glass, the school, the book,
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.
And wilt thou be the school where Lust shall learn!
Must he in thee read lectures of thy shame?
Will thou be glass, wherein it shall discern
Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonor in thy name!
This is not the proper reproach against long-lived land,
And mak'st no reputation but a bawd.
Hast thou command? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will:
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy prince may be of small men's minds, and know
When, pattern'd by thy iniquity, our sins may say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach the way!
Think but how vile a spectacle it were
To view thy present trespass in another:
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own transgressions partially they 'mothe;:
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother.
O how are they wrapp'd in with infamies,
That from their own inseedes askance their
To thee, to thee, my head-haps hands appeal,
Not to seducing lust, thy rash reliever;
I see for exil'd majesty's repeat;
Let him return, and flattering thoughts retire:
Thy true respect with prison false devised,
And wipe the dim mist from thy doting eye.
That thou shalt see thy state, and pity name."

"Have done," quoth he; "my uncontrolled tide
Turns not, but swells the higher by this lot,
Small lights are soon blawn out, huge fires abide,
And with the wind in greater fury fret;
The petty streams that play a daily debt,
To their salt sovereign, with their fresh falls haste,
And to their death, to their dry dis feast.

"Thou art," she said, "a sea, a sovereign king;
And lo, there falls into the battle's pool
Black lust, dishonor, shame, misgoverning,
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood.
But who can make such fell change thy good,
This sea within this pool's womb is hersed,
And not the puddle in thy sea dispersed.

So shall these slaves be king, and thou their slave;
Thou nobly base, they basely dignified;
Thou their fair life, and they thy fouler grave;
The spot where in their shame, their pride;
The lesser thing should not the greater hide;
The cedar stoops not to the base shrub's root,
But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.

So let thy thoughts, low vassals to thy state":—
"No more!" quoth he, "by heaven, I will not hear
Yield to my love; if not, enforced hate,
Instead of love's coy touch, shall ruudly tear thee;
That dream, despitely I mean to bear thee
Unto the bane of some rare, may they still do thee,
To be thy partner in this shameful doom.

Thus said, he sets the foot upon the light,
For light and lust are deadly enemies;
Shame folded up in blind concealing night.
Wherein the sun, unseen, they cannot proclaim.
The wolf hath seized his prey, the poor lamb cries,
Till with her own white teeth heer voice control'd
Entrails her outcry in her lips' sweet fold:
For with the nightly linen that she wears
He pens her piteous claims in her head;
Cooling his hot face in the chasing heat.
That ever modest eyes with sorrow sheed.
O, that prone lust should stain so pure a bed!
This lust could weeping purify.
Her tears should drop on them sel'fally.
But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
And he hath won what he would lose again.
This forced league doth force a further strife,
This momentary joy breeds months of pain,
This hot desire converts to cold disdain;
Pure Chastity is rilled of her store,
And Lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look as the full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
May slow the rout, or altogether halt.
The prey whereon by nature they delight;
So surfeit-taking Tarquin faires this night:
His taste deficients, in digestion souring,
Devours his will that liv'd by soul devouring.

O deeper sin than bottomless conceit
Can mangryhead in silk maintain?
Drunken desire must vomit his receipt,
Ere he can see his own abomination.
While lust is in his pride, no exclamation
Can curb his heat, or rein his rash desire,
Till, like a jade, self-will himself doth tire.
And then with lance and lean discon'dr check.'
With heavy eye, knat bow, and strengthless pace,
Feeble desire, all recrulant, poor, and meek.
Like the winter's death, the cold star waft.
The flesh being proud, desire doth light with grace,
For there it revels; and when that decays,
The guilty rebel for remission prays.

So faires it with this faithful lord of Rome,
Who this accomplishment so hotly chased;
For now he honnent himself he doth draw down,
That through the length of times he stands disgraced:
Besides, his soul's fair temple is defaced;
To whose weak ruin must his rash desires,
To ask the spotted princess how she faires.
She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
Have batter'd down her consecrated wall,
And by their mortal fault brought in subjection
In immortality, and made her triumph;
To living death, and pain perpetual:
Which in her prescience she controlled still,
But her foresight could not forestall their will.

Even in this thought through the dark night in stealth,
A captive victor that hath lost in gain;
Because they, by the wound that toucheth health,
The scar that will, despite of cure, remain.
Leaving his spoil perplex'd in greater pain.
She bears the load of lust he left behind,
And he the barren of a guilty mind.

He like a lavish dog creeps sadly thence;
She like a wrenched limb has paining cen,
He scowls, and hates himself for his offence,
She, desperate, with her nails her flesh doth tear;
He faintly flies, swearing with guilty fear;
Their spoils, exclaiming on the doleful night;
He runs, and chides his vanity, loath'd delight.

He then perch a heavy particule,
She there remains a hopeless castaway;
He in his speed looks for the morning light;
She prays she may her may behold the day.

"For-day," quoth she, "night's exclaim's open eye.
And my true eyes have never practis'd how
To cloak offences with a cunning brow.
They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold,
And in our sight they will they should in darkness:
To have their unseen sin remain untold.
For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
And grave, like water, that doth eat in steel,
Unto all and all, checks what helps principle.

Here she exclaims against repose and rest;
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
And bids it leap from thence, where it may find
Some vestige, to close so pure a day.

Faints with grief this breathe she for her spire
Against the unseen secrecy of night:
"O comfort-killing night, image of hell!
Don register and notary of shame!
Black stage where villains and murderers fell;
Vast all-concealing chaos! nature's blare.
Blind muffled bawl! dark harbor for defence!
Grim cave of death, whispering conspirator.
With close-tongued treason and the ravisher!

O hateful, vaporous, and foggy night,
Since thou art guilty of my careless crime,
Must thy mists to meet the eastern light,
Make war against proportion'd course of time!
Or if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
His rated height, yet ere he go to bed,
Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

With rotten damp savors the morning air:
Let their exhal'd unwashed breaths make sick
The life of purity, the supreme fair,
Ere she receive his weary noon-lide pricks;
And let thy nasty vapors march so rude.
That in their smoky ranks his smoother'd light
May set at noon, and make perpetual night.

Were Tarquin now, (as he is but night's child,) To cross their arms, and hang the shady vine,
To mask their brows, and hide their immaturity;
But I alone alone must sit and pine,
Scarcely the breath with showers of silver brace,
Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with groans,
Poor wasting monuments of lasting moans.
O night, thou furnace of soul-reaking smoke,
Let not the jealous day behold that face.
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak Imbues by the wounds with discomfiture;
Keep still possession of thy gloomy place.
That all the faults which in thy reign are made May likewise be sepulchred in thy shade!

Make me not object to the tale-tell day,
To tell the tale, and show, character'd in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay.

The impious breach of holy wedlock vow:
* The point of noon.
* Wherein.
Yea, the illiterate, that know not how
To cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote my loothsome trespass in my looks.

The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's name;
The orator, to deck his oratory,
Will fill my reproach to Tarquin's shame:
Feast-finding minstrels, tuning my disable,
Will tie the henchmen to attend each line,
How Tarquin wronged me, I Collatine.

Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept in mind:
If that be made a theme for disputation,
The branches of another root are rotted,
And undeserv'd reproach to him allotted,
That, to avoid such reason as this fame,
As I, ere this, was pure to Collatine.

Unseen shame! invisible disgrace!
One unmit;t! crest-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp'd in Collatine's face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot; afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war.

Alas, how many bear such shameful blows,
Which not themselves but he that gives them knows!

If, Collatine, thine honor lay in me,
Put me by strong assault in thy hand,
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But rob'd and ransack'd by injurious theft:
In the weak have a wandering harp kept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.

Yet I am guilty of thy honor's want;
Yet for thy honor did I entertain him;
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonor to disdain him:
Besides, the partless deed complai'n him,
And talk'd of virtue,—0, unlook'd for evil,
When virtue is profan'd in such a devil!

Why should the worm intrude the maiden bud?
Or hateful cuckoo hatch in sparrow's nest?
Or sweet fair huts with an hour's stripesBow?
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?
Or kings be breakers of their own behets?
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impurity doth not pollute.

The aged man that rolls up his gold,
Is plagued with cramps, and gout, and painful fits,
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pin'd Tantalus he sits,
And useless barns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure but complaining him,
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.

So then he hath it when he cannot use it,
And leaves it to be master'd by his young,
Who in their pride do presently abuse it;
Their father was too weak, and they too strong,
To hold their cursed-blessed fortune long.
The sweets we wish for turn to loathed sours,
Even in the moment that we call them ours.

Unruly blasts wait on the tender spring;
Unwholesome weeds take root with precious showers.
Theadder hisses where the sweet birds sing;
What virtue breeds impuity devours:
We have no good that we can say is ours,
But dishonour'd Opportunity
Or kills his hie, or else his quality.

O Opportunity! thy guilt is great;
Tis thou that execut'st the traitor's treason;
Thou set'st the wolf where he the lamb may get;
Who, wouldst thou set the sun, thou polic'st the season;
Thou set'st that spurn'd at right, at law, at reason;
And in thy shady cell, where none may spy him,
Sits Sin, to seize the souls that wander by him.

Thou mock'st the vestal violate her oath;
Thou blow'st the fire when temperature's thaw'd;
Thou pour'st the honey, thou marriest truth;
Thou spoil'st bellow! thou notorious hawd!
Thou plantest scandal, and displaced land;
Thou raiser, thou traitor, thou false thief;
Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief.

Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame,
Thy private plotting to a public fast;
Thy soothing titles to a ragged name;
Thy sugar tongue to bitter wormwood taste;
Thy violent vanities can never fast.

How comes it, then, vile Opportunity!
Being so bad, such numbers seek for thee!

When wilt thou be the humble suppliant's friend,
And bring him where his suit may be obtain'd?
When wilt thou set an hour great stripes to end?
Or tree that soul which wretchedness hath claim'd?
Give physic to the sick, ease to the pain!
The poor, fame, blind, halt, creep, cry out for thee,
But they ne'er meet with Opportunity.

The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
The arbiter pure while the opportunity slumbers;
Justice is leashing while the widow weeps;
Advice is sporting while infection breeds;
Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds;
Wreath, easy, treason, rape, and murder's rages.

Thy heinous hours wait on them as their pages
When truth and virtue have to do with thee;
A thousand crosses keep them from thy aid;
They buy thy help; but Sin ne'er gives a lee;
He gratis comes; and thou art well appa'd
As well to wear as grant what he demand'd
My Collatine would else have come to me
When Tarquin did, but he was stay'd by thee.

Guilty thou art of murder and of theft;
Guilty of perjury and subornation;
Guilty of treason, forgery, and shift;
Guilty of incest, that abortuates
An accessory by thine inclination
To all sins past, and all that are to come;
From the creation to the general doom.

Mishapen Time, cope-mate of ugly night,
Scuttles past all, carrier of grisly care;
Eater of youth, false stave to raise delight;
Base watch of woes, sin's pack-horse, virtue's snare;
Thou norseth all, and murderest all that are;
O hear thou then, in answer, shining Time:
Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

Why hast thy servant, Opportunity,
Betray'd the hours thou gav'st me to repose!
Cancel my fortunes, and enchain me
To endless date of never-ending woes!
Time's office is to find the hate of foes;
To cut up errors by opinion bred,
Not spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

Time's glory is to calm containing minds,
To unmask falsehood, and bring truth to light,
To stamp the soul of time in aged things,
To wake the man, and seem him so much,
To wrong the wouser till he render right;
To ruinate proud buildings with thy hours,
And smear with dust their glittering golden towers.

To fill with worm-holes stately monuments,
To load oblivion with decay of things,
To blot old books, and alter their contents,
To pluck the quills from ancient ravens' wings,
To dry the old oak's sap, and chieft springs?
To spoil the antiquities of number, and art;
And turn the giddy round of Fortune's wheel.

To show the belial daughters of her daughter,
To make the child a man, the man a child,
To stay the tiger that doth live by slaughter,
To tame the unicorn and lion both;
To muck the saddle, in themselves beguile'd;
To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops,
And waste huge stones with little water-drops.

Why work'st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou could'st return to make amends?
One poor fitting mate in an happy band;
Would purchase thee a thousand thousand friends,
Lending him wit, that to bad debors lends:
O, this dread night, would'st thou one hour come
To cool my heart, that fevers me as thou canst?

I could prevent this storm, and shun this wreath!
Thou ceaseless lackey to eternity,
With some meachance cross Tarquin in his flight:
To bring an end.
To shoots, saplings.
Devise extremes beyond extremity:
To make him curse this cursed crimeful night:
Let ghastly shadows his heed eyes alight,
And the dire thought of his committed evil
Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
And let false musicians with wild groans
Let there bechance him pitiful musick tunes,
To make him moan, but pity not his moans:
Stone him with harden'd hearts, harder than stones.
And let the wild women to him holler wildness,
Wilder to him than tigers in their wildness.

Let him have time to tear his curled hair,
Let him have time against himself to rave,
Let him have time of Time's help to despair;
Let him have time to live a boathed slave,
Let him have time a beggar's arts to crave;
And time to see one that by alms doth live
Disdaim to him disdained scraps to give.

Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
And merry mock to mock at him resort;
Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
In time of sorrow, and how swift and short
His time of folly and his time of sport:
And ever let his unrecalling crime
Have time to wait the abusing of his time.

O Time, thou latter both to good and bad,
Teach me to curse him that thou hast ill
At his own shadow let the thief run mad,
 Himself himself seek every hour to kill:
Such wretched hands such wasted blood should spill:
For who so base would such an office have
As slanderous death's-man to so base a slave!

The lacer is he, coming from a king,
To shame his hope with deeds degenerate.
The monarch that the devil incarnate is the thing
That makes him honor'd, or doth becloud his hate:
For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
The moon being clouded presently is miss'd,
But little stars may hide them when they list.

The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in mire,
And yet receive'd fly with the Fifth Sun's light;
But if the like the snow-white swan desire,
The stain upon his silver down will stay.
Fast grooms are sightless night, kings glorious day.
Guns are unmixt Whereas'thry they,
But eagles gaz'd upon with every eye.
Out, idle words, servants to shallow souls!
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
Busy yourselves in skill-contending schools,
Deprive you of success with dull debaters;
To troubling clients be you mediators:
For me, I force not argument a straw,
Since that my case is the past help of law.

In vain I rail at Opportunity,
At Time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful night;
So I may cavil, as it please my heart,
In vain I spurn at my confounds deep desire.
This helpless smoke of words doth me no right.
The remedy indeed to do me good,
Is to forth my foul defiled blood.
Poor hand, why quiver'st thou at this decree?
Honour thyself to rid me of this shame:
For if I die my honor lives in thee,
But if I live, thou livest in my defame:
So that I could not disfigure the good name,
And was afraid to scratch her wicked bed;
Kill both thyself and her for yielding so."

This said, from her debauched couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death:
But this is no-night-house no tool impertant,
To make more work for passage of death.
Which throning through her lips so vanishing
As smoke from Etna, that in air consumes,
Or that which from discharged cannon flames.

There, I must now forlorn have in Hell,
Utmost extremity which I could do,
In vain," quoth she, "I live, and seek in vain
Smoke for my soul a hapless shade,
I fear'd by Tarquin's faction to be slain,
Yet for the selfsame purpose seek a knife:
But when I fear'd I was a loyal wife;
So turne I o'er me, that I might be
Of that true type; last Tarquin rid my.

O! that is gone for which I sought to live,
And the elevo now I need not fear to die.
To deck my spot by death, at least I give
A badge of fame to slander's livery;
A dying life to living infamy;
I'll do helpless help, the treasure stolen away,
To blash in that guiltless cask where it lay!

Well, well, dear Collatine, thou wilt not know
The stained taste of violated truth;
I will not wrong thy true affection so
To flatter thee with an infringed oath;
This basest graft shall never come to growth:
He shall not boast who did the jack pollute
That thon art doing father of his fruit.
Nor shall he smile at thee in secret thought,
Nor laugh with his companions at thy state;
But thou shalt know thy interest was not bought
But with thy hardy gore from forth thy gate.
For me, I am the mistress of my fate,
And with my trespass never will dispense,
Till life to death acquit my forced offence.
I will not pason thee with my attain.
Nor told my fault in cleanly-coind excuses,
My sable ground of sin I will not pour
To hide the truth of this false night's abuses:
My tongue shall utter all; mine eyes like shutes,
An empty mountain-spring that feeds a date,
Shall gush, pure streams to purge my impure tale.

By this, lamenting Philomel had ended
The well-turn'd warble of her nightly sorrow,
And soothfast night with slow-sead gast descended
To unembittered heaven, the blushing morrow
Lends light to all fair eyes that light will borrow;
But cloudy Lucrece shames herself to see,
And therefore still in night would cloister'd be.
Revealing day through every cranny spies,
And seems to point her out where she sits weeping;
To would-be graver speaking speaks "c - art paint.
Why pr'yst thou through my window? leave thy peering;
Mock with thy twitching beams eyes that are sleepig
Brand not my forehead with thy piercing light,
For day hath thought to do what's done by night."

Thus cavils she with every thing she sees:
True grief is fond and testy as a child,
Whose wish some time his need unthought agrees.
Old woes, nor instant sorrows, bear them mild,
Continuance tames the one; the other wild.
Like an unpractis'd swimmer, plunging still
With too much labor, drawn for want of skill.
So shall her-drenched in a sea of care,
holds dispulation with each thing she views,
And to herself all sorrow doth compare;
No object but her passion's strength renew;
And as one shifts, another straight ensues;
Sometimes her grief is thrum, and hath no words;
Sometime 'tis mad, and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy
Make her moons mad with their sweet melody.
For nigh reach search the bottom of annoy.
Sad song have all the merry company;
Grief best is pleasd with grief's society:
True sorrow then is feebly suffer'd,
When with like semblance it is sympathiz'd.
'Tis double death to drown in ken of shore;
He ten pines pines that pine beholdings food;
To see the salve doth make the wound ache more;
Great grief grieves most at that would do it good.
Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood.
Who, being stopp'd, the bounding banks o'er.

Grief daliied with nor law nor limit knows.
"You mocking birds," quoth she, "your tunes enombed Within your hollow-swelling feather'd breasts, And your joy borning to you vante and dumb! (My restless discord loses no stopp nor mor.) A woeful hostess brooks not merry guests"
Refish your moment notes to pleasing ears;
Distress like diets when time is keeped with tears.

Melancholy airs.
Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad groan in my dishew'd hair.
My dark eye shall wash thy stony kiss away,
And so at each sad strain will stram a tear,
And with deep groans the diason bear:
For further-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
While thou on Ceres deck'st better skill.
And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
To keep thy shame with waking, wretched I,
To imprint thee well, against my heart
Will fix a sharp knife, to allright mine eye;
Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.
These words, as frets upon an instrument,
Shall tune our heart-strings to true languishment.
And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
Asshameing any eye should thee behold,
Some dark deep desert, seated from the way,
That they that lose, with greater patience be poor,
We will find out; and there we will unloak
To creatures stern sad tunes, to change their mood:
Since men prove beasts let beasts bear gentle minds.
As the poor frightened deer, that stands at gaze,
Widly determining which way to fly,
Or one encompass'd with a winding maze,
That cannot treat the way out readily;
So must myself be in such mutiny,
To live or die which of the twain were better,
When life is shamed, and death Reproach's debtor.
"To kill myself," quoth she, "alack! what wert
But with my body my poor soul's pollution;
They that lose half, with greater patience be poor,
Than they whose whole is swallow'd in confusion.
That mother tries a merciless conclusion
Who, having two sweet babes, when death takes one,
Will slay the other, and be nurse to none.
My body or my soul, which was the dearer?
When the one pure, the other made divine,
Whose love of either to myself was nearer?
When both were keipt for heaven and Collatine.
Ah me! the lark peel'd from the laby pine,
His leaves will wither, and his sap decay;
So must my soul, her lark being peel'd away
Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy;
Her sacred temple spotted, spoil'd, corrupted,
Grown insipid with dawning impiety.
Then let it not be call'd impuity
If in this blemish'd tort I make some hole,
Though which I may convey this troubled soul.
Yet die I will not till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death;
That he may vow, in that sad hour to mine cold,
Revenge on him that made me stop my breath.
My stained blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
Which by him tainted, shall for him be spent,
And as his due, write in my testament.
My honor, I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my soul, my worthy descendant,
'Tis honor to deprive dishonour'd life;
The one will live, the other being dead;
So of shame's asse's shall my time be bred;
For my death I merit sharper shame and scorn;
My shame so dead, mine honor is new-born
Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
What legacy shall I bequeath to thee?
My resolution, Love, shall be thy boast,
By whom shall thy name, when old be taunted.
That Tarquin must be used and it
Myself, thy friend, will kill myself, thy lie,
And, for my sake, serve thou false Tarquin so.
This brief abridgment of my will I make:
My soul and body to the skies and ground;
My resolution, to the grave, and my husband, do thou take;
Mine honor be the king's that makes my wound;
My shame be his that did my fame confound;
And all my fame that lives disurned be
To those that live, and think no shame of me.
Thou, Collatine, shalt overcome this will;
How was I overseen that thou shalt see it?
My blood solace shall wash the stains away;
My life's foul deed, my life's fair end shall see it.
Faint not, faint heart, but stoutly say, 'so be it.'
Yield to my hand, my hand shall conquer thee.
Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors be.
This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And whiles her mind misreel'd from her baleful eyes,
With untoun'd tongue she harsely call'd her maid,
Whose swift obedience to her mistress sits;
For hee-sun's duty with thought's feathers flies.
Poor innocent lions unto her maid seem'd so,
As winter mends when sun doth melt their snow.
But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,
Each flower modest'd like a melting eye;
Even so the maid with swelling drops gun wet
Her circled eye, color'd by sympathy
Of those fair suns, set in her mistress' sky,
Who in a salt-wed ocean quench their light.
Which beholding makes the woe lout the dewcnight.
A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
Like ivory conduits canals sisterns filling
One justly weeps; the other takes in hand
No cause, but company, of her drops spilling;
Their gentle tears to weep are other willing,
Grieving themselves to guess at other hearts,
And then they drown their eyes, or break their hearts.
For men have marble, women waxen minds,
And therefore are they form'd as marble will
The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange kinds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill;
Then call them not the authors of their ill,
No man that shall be it shall be acceptable ill,
Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.
Their smoothness, like a goadly champaign plain,
Lays open all the little worm's that creep.
In men, as in a touch-grown grove, remain,
Care-keeping evils that obscurely sleep.
Through all those walks of each little worm will peep:
Though men can cover crimes with bold stern looks,
Poor women's faces are their own faults' books.
No man inveigh against the wither'd flower;
But chide us, women, that the flower's fad'd;
Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour
Is worthy blame. O, let it not be held.
Poor women's faults that they are so fulfill'd;
With more abuse those proud loves, to blame.
Make weak-made women tenants to their shame.
The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
Assail'd by night with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to do her husband wrong;
Such danger to resistance did her mount,
That dying fear through all her body spread;
And who cannot abuse a body dead!
By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the poor courtier of her complaining;
"My girl," quoth she, "on what occasion break
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are staining
If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining,
Know that it is but, it small avail's my mood;
If tears could help, mine owen would do me good.
But tell me, girl, when went"—(and there she stayed) Till after a deep groan), "Tarquin from hence?"
"Madam, ere I was up," replied the maid,
To the bare to stances, the plaster stuck the face;
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense
Myself was stirring ere the break of day,
And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

The Rape of Lucrece

But, lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request your lady's favor.
For by the very word that I have uttered,
The repetition cannot make it less;
And that, dear lord, I am bound to tell,
For more is than I can well express.
And that deep torture may be called a hell,
When more is felt than one hath power to tell.

Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen—
Yet save that labor, for I have them here.
What should I say?—One of my husband's men
Bade me be ready, by and by, to hear
A letter to my lord, my love, thy clear
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it:
The cause cancels haste; and it will soon be writ.

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First heaving over the paper with her quill:
Confessing, before God and woman, that
What wit can do is blotted straight with will;
This is too curious, this blunt and ill;
Much like a press of people at a door,
Thronging her inventions, which shall be before.

At last she thus begins:—"Thou worthy lord,
Of that unworthy wife that grieves thee sore,
Health to thy person next vouchsafe to afford
(If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see)
Some present speed to come and visit me:
So I can learn our love in grief;
My woes are tedious, though my words are brief."
Here folds she up the tenor of her woo,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
Not without a short schedule Colonna may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality;
She dares not thereof make discovery
lest he should hold it her own gross abuse,
Ere she with blood hath stain'd her standard once.

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She hoards, to spend when he is by to hear her;
When signs and groans and tears may grace the fashion
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her
From that suspicion which the world might bear her.
To show this blot, she would not blot the letter
With words, till action might become them better.

To see sad sights moves more than hear them told;
For then the eye interprets to the ear
The heavy motion that it doth behold,
When every part a part of woe doth bear.
The sound of a broken spirit doth it move
That we are sorrowed so; it surfeits poor souls;
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow fords,
And sorrow ebb, being blown with wind of words.

Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ,
"At Ardea to my lord with more than haste;
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sure-faced groom to his due as fast
As lagging bulls before the northern blast.
Speed more than speed, but dull and slow she deems:
Extremely strict urge such extremes.
The lonely villain court'sies to her low;
And blushing on her with a steadfast eye
Receives the scroll, without or yea nay,
And forth with bashful innocence doth she,
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie,
Bought every eye beholds their shame.
For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her shame;
When, silly groom! God wot, it was defect
Of spirit, life, and hold amacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect
To talk in deeds, while others singly
Prolixly to discourse, but do it slow.
Even so, this pattern of the worn-out age
Fawn'd honest looks, but bade no words to gage,
His kindred duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red lives in both their faces blazed;
She blushing clear knew she had hit his lust,
And, blushing with him, lastly on him gazed;
Her earnest eye did make him more amazed:
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
The more she thought he sped in her some

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone
The very time she cannot with such power tell.
For now "in stile to sigh, to weep, and groan;
So woe hath wearied woe, molted too soon,
That she her plaints a little while doth stay,
Paunching for means to mourn some newer way.

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy;
Before the which is drawn the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threatening the world by his bloody hands:
The pity, the conicted painter drew so proud.
As heaven (it seem'd) to kiss the turrets bow'd;
A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of Nature, Art gave life less fire:
Nestor, and Priam, and Carthage's Troy
Shed for the slaughtered husband by the wise.
The red blood reck'd to show the painter's strike;
And dying eyes gleam'd forth their ash'y lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.
There might you see the laboring pioneer
Bermud with sweat, and smeared all with dust;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loop-holes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little taste:
Such sweet disaccord in the painter's had
That one might see those far-off eyes look sad,
In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphant in their faces;
In youth, quick hearing and dexterity;
And here and there the painter interlaces
Tike curls, sticking on with running paces;
Which heartless peasants did so well resemble.
That one would swear he saw them quake and tremble.

In Ajax and Ulysses, O what art
Of physiognomy might one behold!
The face of either 'eripher'd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told;
In Ajax' eyes burst rage and vigor roll'd;
But in that glance, that stily Ulysses
Show'd deep regard and smiling government.
There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 'were encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand
That it confound'd attention, charmed the sight;
In speech, it seem'd, he heard all silver wise.
Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly
That winding breath, which pur'd up to the sky
About him were a press of grasping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice;
All joyfully listening, but with several graces,
As if some mermaid did their ears enlace;
Some high, some low, the painter was so nice;
The soclos of many, almost hid behind,
To see him up higher'd, and to mock the mind.
Here one man's hand lond on another's head,
His nose being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear.
Here one being thor'g'd bears back, all bold'ry and red.
Another, smother'd, seems to pelt and swear,
And in their rage such signs of rage they bear,
As, but for loss of Nestor's golden words,
It seem'd they would debate with angry swords.
For much imaginary work was there;
Cenically decent, so compait, so kind,
That his "brilUes" image stood his spurs
Grip'd in an armed hand; himself, behind,
Was left unseen, so to the eye of mind:
A hand, a foot, a see, a leg, a head,
Stood for the whole, to be imagined, to
And from the walls of strong-besieg'd Troy,
When their brave hope, hold Hector, march'd to field,
Stood these Trojan mothers, sharing joy
To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield;
And to their hope they soon add action yield.
That through their light joy seem'd to appear
(Like bright things staid) a kind of heavy fear
And, from the strand of Ilium where they fought,
To Simois' reedy banks the red blood ran.
The Rape of Lucrece

Whose waves to imitate the battle sought
With swelling ridges; and their ranks began
To break upon the called shore, and than?
Retire again, till meeting greater ranks
They yield with loss, and shoot their foam against
The sullen sea, and there their course changes.

To this well-painted piece is Lucrece come,
To find a face where all distress is sted.'
Many she sees where cares have carved some,
But none where all distress and dolor dwell'd;
Till she perceiving Heulin below her
Staring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes,
Which bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud feet lies.

In her the painter had anatom'd
Time's ruin, beauty's wrack, and grim care's reign;
Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were disquis'd
Of all her grace; and in her countenance
Her blue blood, chang'd to black in every vein,
Wanting the spring that those shrunk pipes had
In her.

Show'd his imprison'd in a body dead.
On this sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes,
And shapes her sorrow to the bel dame's woes,
Who nothing wants to answer her but cares,
The bitter words to ban her cruel foes;
The painter was no god to lend her those;
And therefore Lucrece swears he did her wrong,
To give her so much grief, and not a tongue.

"Poor instrument," quoth she, "without a sound,
I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue:
And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound,
And cleanse Tyre's Pyrrhus from his stung.
And with my tears quench Troy that burns so long;
And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes
Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.

She wone the trumpet that began this stir,
That with his nails her beauty! I may bear,
Thy hands to dir'd her, and did not yield those
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear;
Thy eye kindled the fire that burneth here;
And here in Troy, for trespass of this eye,
Thy heart, and hands, and soul, and body die.

Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many too?
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgress'd so.
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe:
For one's ofifice why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general?

Lo, here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies,
Here mangel Hector faints, here Troilus swoons;
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unaided wounds.
And one man's just these many lives confound:
Had doting Priam chock'd his son's desire,
Troy had been bright with fame, and not with fire!

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes:
For so coldly, like a heavy hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes;
Then little strength rings out the dolorous knell:
So Lucrece set a work-sole tides doth tell
The pen'ded pompaness and color'd sorrow;
She lends them words, and she their look doth borrow.

She throws her eyes about the painting, round,
And whom she finds forlorn she doth lament:
At he she sees a watch'd evil want,
That pensive looks to Phrygian shepherds lent;
Its face, though full of cares, yet show'd content:
O'ward to Troy with the blind swans he goes,
So mild that Patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter lab'd with his skill
To dirch the eye, and give the heart its show
An humble gait, calk looks, eyes waiting still,
A brow unhect, that seem'd to welcome woe;
Checks neither red nor pale, but mangled so
This with the weary red no sign of grace,
Nor ashy pale the fear that false hearts have.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,
And therein so enconce'd his secret evil,
That every eye itself could not mistrust
Then, More.

False-creeping craft and perjur'y should thrust
Into so bright a day such black-faced storms,
Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skil'd workman this mild image drew
For perjur'd Simon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after slew;
Whose words were wilder, burn, and shinning glory
Of nob-built Iion, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places,
When their glass fell whenr in they view'd their faces.

This picture she advise'd perus'd,
And child the painter for his wonderful skill;
Saying, some shape in Simon's was abuse'd,
So far a form bod'd not a mind so ill;
And still on her he gaz'd, and gazing still,
Such sign of truth in his plain face she spied,
That she concludes the picture was belied.

"It cannot be," quoth she, "that so much guile"—
(She would have said) "can lurk in such a look;
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while,
And from her tongue "can lurk" from "cannot" rise.

"It cannot be" she in that sense forsook,
And turn'd it thus: "It cannot be, I find,
But such a face should bear a wicked mind:
For even as subtle Simon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild,
(As if with grief or travail he had faint'd.)
To me can I the same complexion yield
With outward honesty, but yet deceit'd?
With inward wise: As Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did peri.
Look, look, how listening Priam wets his eyes,
To see those bow'd tears that Simon sheds.
Priam, who thought, and yet not wise! for
For ever fear he fails a Trojan breed;
His eye drops fire, no water thence proceeds;
Those round clear pearls of his that move thy pity
He tears, the mark of the sad son's father with
With outward honesty, but yet deceit'd?

These evils steal effects from lightless hell;
For Simon in his life doth quake with cold,
And in that cold hot-burning fire doth dwell;
These contraries such unity do hold
Only to flatter fools, and make them hold;
So Priam's trust false Simon's tears doth follow,
That he finds means to burn his Troy with water.

Here, all curag'd, such passion her assails,
That patience is quite beaten from her breast.
She tears the senseless Simon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest,
Whose death had made herself her death-test;
At last she smilingly with this gives o'er:
"Food! fool! fool!" quoth she, "his wounds will not be sore."

Thus ebbs and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary with the former's woe.
She looks for majesty, and then she longs for morrow.
And both she thinks too long with her remaining;
Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp suspending.
Though her the tears, yet it is seldom sleep;
And they that watch see time how slow it creeps.
Which all this time hath oversipp'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent
Being from the feeling of her own grief brought
By deep surmise of others' detraction;
Losing her wits in show's of discontent.
It caseth some, though they are not cur'd,
To think their dolor others have endured.

But now the mindful messenger, come back,
Brings home his lord and other company;
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black;
And round about her tear-distain'd eye.

The cloud's a storm, it rides the rainbow in the sky.
These water-galls in her dim element
Foretell new storms to those already spent.

When which her sad beholding husband saw,
Amazedly in her sad face he stares;
Her eyes, though sad in tears, look'd red and raw,
Her livly color kif'd with deadly care.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares,
But stood like old acquaintance in a trance,
Far from home, wondering each other's chance
At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins: "What uncouth ill event
Hath thee befal'n, that thou dost trembling stand!
Sweet love, what spite hath that cruel dealer spent?
Why art thou thus attire'd in discontent?
Unmask, dear, this moody heaviness,
And tell thy grief, that we may give redress.

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow fire
Once since she can discharge one word of woe:
At length address'd to answer his desire,
She modestly promises to let him know
Her honor is taken prisoner by the foe;
While Colantine and his consorted lords
With sad attention long to hear her words.

And now this pale swan in her watery nest
Begins the same dirge of her certain ending:
"Few words," quoth she, "shall fit the trespass best,
Where no excuse can give the fault amending;
In me more vows than words are now depending;
And my laments would be drawn too long,
To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.

Then be this all the task it hath to say:—
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed
A stranger came, and on that pillow lay
When thou wast wont to rest thy weary head;
And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,
From that, alas! 'tis Lucrece is not free.

For in the dreadful dead of dark midnight,
With shining falcon in my chamber came
A creeping creature, with a flaming light,
And softly cried, Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love; else lasting shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradict.

For some hard-favor'd groom of thine, quoth he,
Upon thy skane did thy liking to my mind,
'I'll murder straight, and then I'll slay thee too,
And swear I found you where you did pilfil
The leachers in their deed: this act will be
My fame, and thy perpetual infamy.

With this I did begin to start and cry,
And then against my heart he set his sword,
Swearing, unless I took all patiently
I should not live to speak another word:
So should my shame still rest upon record,
And never be forgot in mighty Rome
The adulterate death of Lucrece and her groom.

Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak,
And far the weaker with so strong a fear;
My rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past:
No rightful plea might plead for justice there;
His scarlet lust came evidence to swear
That my poor beauty had partil'd his eyes,
And when the judge is rob'd, the prisoner dies
O teach me how to make mine own excuse!
Or, at the least, this refuge let me find;
Though my gross blood be stain'd with this abuse,
Immaculate and spotless is my mind;
That was not forc'd; that never was inclin'd
To necessary yeldings, but still pure
Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure.

Lo here, the hopeless merchant of this loss,
With heart declaim'd and soul drown'd up with woe,
With sad-set eyes, and wretched arms across,
From lips new-waxed pale begins to blow
The grief away that stops his answer so;
But shame is catch'd as he is strive'd to speak:
What he breathes out his breath drinks up again,
As through an arch the violet towering rise
Outruns the eye that doth behold his haste;
Yet in the eddy boundith in his pride
Back to the street that forced him on so fast;
In tears went out, recall'd in rage, being past:
Even so he sighs, his sorrows make a saw,
To push grief on, and back the same grief draw.

Which speechless woe of his poor she attendeth,
And his untimely frenzy this awaketh:
"Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendest
Another power; no blood by raiming staketh;
My grace, so sensible thy passion makes
More feeling-painful: let it then suffice
To drown one woe, one pair of weeping eyes.

And for my sake, while I might charm thee so,
For she that was thy Lucrece—now attend me;
Be suddenly revenged on my foe.
Things thus as you suppose dost I defend me
From what is past: the help that thou shalt lend me
Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die;
For spaying justice feeds iniquity.

But ere I name him, you, fair lords," quoth she,
( Speaking to those that came with Colatine,) Shall I find my heart's honorable faiths
With swift pursuit to venge this wrong of mine;
For 'tis a meritorious fair design
To chase injustice with revengeful arms:
Knights, by their oaths, should right poor ladies' harms.

At this request, with noble disposition
Each present lord began to promise aid,
As bound in knighthood to her imposition,
Loudly to hear the unfortunate foe thus told;
But she, that yet her sad task had not said,
The protestation stops. "O speak," quoth she,
How may this forced stain be wiped from me!
What is the quality of mine offence
Being so constrain'd with dreadful circumstance?
May my false mind with the foul no response,
My low-declined honor to advance!
May any terms acquit me from this change?
The ground and Foule cleans itself again;
And why not I from this compell'd stain?

With this, they all at once began to say,
Her body's stain her mind unainted clears;
While with a joyless smile she turns away
The face, that, moan which deep impression bears
Of haps bestow'd on her, every day in it was
"No, no," quoth she, "no, no, hereafter living
By my excuse shall claim excuse's giving."

Here with a sigh, as if her heart would break,
She throws forth Tarquin's name; "He, he," she says
But more than "he" her poor tongue could not speak
Till after many accents and delays,
Untimely breathing, sick and short assays,
She thus intempest: "He, he, he, of that grudge
That guides this hand to give this wound to me,"
Even here she sheathed in her harmless breast
A harmful knife, that thence her soul unseal'd
That blow did blast it from the deep unrest
Of that disdained prisoner where it breath'd:
Her contrite sighs unto the chang'd soul
Her winged spirit, and through her wounds doth fly
Life's lasting date from cancell'd destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed,
Stood Colantine and all his lordly crew.
Till Lucrece' father, that beholds her blood,
Himself on her self-slaughter'd body threw;
And from the purple fountain Brutus drew
That precious stone knife, and as it red it place
Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase;
And bubbling from her breast, it doth divide
In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood
Circles her body in on every side,
Who like late time an Adam cast'st stood
Bare and unpeopled, in this fearful blood.
Some of her blood still pure and red remain'd,
And some look'd black, and that false Tarquin stain'd it.

About the mourning and concealed face
Of that black blood, a watery rag'd rose
Which seems to weep upon the impal'd place:
And ever since, as pitting Lucrece' woes,
Corrupted blood some watery token shows;
And blood unainted still doth red abide,
Blushing at that which is so purfli'd.

SONNETS.

1.
From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the riper should by time decease,
Thy tender heir inherit might possess
That fair which thou gav'st not to thine heir,
And live through thee again to see thy son,
My love shall in thy love and thy in mine,
And after thee which thou shalt bear shall be
That love and loss in me shall spring again;
So that live thou, and I live in thy love.

II.
When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy bounty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery so gazed on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed of no worth held;
Then being asked where all thy beauty lies,
Thou shalt say, 'There lies the beauty of the days';
Which being with thy health would be professed,
A thing more rare than any flower on earth.

Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.
SONNETS.

VI.

Sap to the flower, life to the bud;
Whose fresh repair if now not renewed,
Thou dost consummate the world, unless some mother.
For where is she so fair whose union 'tis
Disdains the tincture of her husbandry?
Or who is he so bold will be the tomb
Of his seduction, to keep posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Casting good deeds, and being happy.
Now that thy leaves are half withered, and thy fruit worn,
Thou through windows of thine age shalt see,
Despite of wrinkles, this thy golden time.
But if thou live, remember 'tis not to be,
The single, and thine marge dies with thee.

VII.

Untruthliness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
Nature's bequest gives nothing, but doth lend,
And binds the frank she lends to these free.
Then, beautious niggard, why dost thou abuse
The bounteous largess given thee to give!
Profiss less usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of sums, yet cannot live?
For having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dest deceive.
Thou wast, when nature called thee to done,
What acceptable cause canst thou leave?
The musty beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
Which, used, lives thy executor to be.

V.

Those hours that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same,
And that unpair which fairly doth excel;
For never-resting time leaves summer on
To hideous winter, and confounds him there;
Sap check'd with frost, and lusty leaves gone,
Beauty o'erstow'd, and barrenness everywhere;
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass,
Beauty's effect with beauty were best,
Nor it, nor no remembrance what it was.
But fruits distil'd, though they with winter meet,
Leese! but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

VI.

Then let not winter's razed hand deface
To thee thy summer, ere thou be distil'd:
Make sweet some pledge; treasure thou some place
With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-kill'd.
That use is not forbidden assuy,
Which happies those that pay the willing loan,
That's for thyself to breed another thee,
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one;
Then when thyself were happy other art,
In ten of thine ten times renger'd thee:
When what could death do if thou shouldst depart,
Leaving thee living in posterity?
Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
To be Death's conquest, and make womes thine heir.

VIII.

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?
Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy.
Why lovest thou that which thou receiv'st not gladly?
Or else receiv'st with pleasure thine annoy?
If thou once lovedst well-taen sounds,
By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou shouldst bear.
Mark how the strong, when their sweet mother will,
Strikes each in each by mutual ordering;
Resembling sire and child and happy mother,
Who all in one, one pleasing note do sing:
Whose speechless song, being many, seeming one,
Sings this to thee, "thou single wilt prove none."

IX.

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye
That thou consum'st thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou wouldst shew but to die,
The world will wait thee, like a matchless art,
The world will be thy widow, and still weep
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
Where they who first were gentle, well may keep,
By children's eyes, her husband's shape in mind.
Look, what an unriht in the world doth spend
Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty's waste hath in the world an end,
And kept unused, the user so destroys it.
No love toward others in that bosom sits,
That on himself such murderous shame commits

X.

For shame! deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thy self art so un provident.
Grant if thou wilt thou art belov'd of many,
But that thou none lov'st is most evident;
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate,
That against thyself thou stickest not to conspire,
Seeking that beautious roof to runmate,
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.
O change thy thought, that I may change my mind!
Shall hate be fatter look'd than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind,
Or to thyself, at least, kind-hearted prove;
Make thee another self, for love of me.
That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

XI.

As fast as thou shalt ware, so fast thou growst
In one of thine, from that which thou departest;
And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestow'st,
Thou mayst call thine, when thou from youth condest.
Herein lives wisdom, beauty, and increase;
Without this, folly, age, and cold decay;
If all were minded so the times should cease;
And we are here that make them mind away.
Let those whom Nature hath not made for store,
Harsh, featureless, and rude, barrenly perish;
Look whom she best endow'd, she gave them more;
Which beauteous gift thou shouldst in beauty cherish;
She carv'd thee for her seal, and meant thereby
Thou shouldst print more, nor let that copy die

XII.

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hootless night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls all silver'd o'er with white
When I think on trees I saw in happy life,
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all gallery'd up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and brahtly beard;
Then of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the wares of love must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
And die as fast as they we others grow;
And nothing against Time's scythe can make defence.
Save bread, to braise him when he takes thee hence.

XIII.
O that you were yourself! but, love, you are
No longer yours, than you yourself here live:
And though this coming end you should prepare,
And your sweet semblance to some other give,
So should that beauty which you hold in lease
Find no determination: then you were Yourself again, after your deceased,
When your sweet issue your sweet form shall bear.
Who lets so fair a house fall to decay,
Which husbandry in honor might uphold
Against the stormy gusts of winter's death,
And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
Of none but unthrift:—Dear my love, you know
You had a father; let your son say so.

XIV.
Not from the stars do I my judgment pluck,
And yet methinks I have astronomy,
But not to tell of good or evil luck,
Of that which is of dearer reason true.
Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell,
Poeinmg to each his thunder, rain, and wind,
Or say with princes if it shall go well,
By omen prov'd that I myself shall find:
But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
And (constant stars) in them I read such art
As truth and beauty shall together thrive,
If thy dear self to store thou wouldst convert:
Or else of thee thus I prognosticate,
Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

XV.
When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment,
That this huge state presents in short but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheer'd and check'd even by the selfsame sky;
Vanish in their youthful sap, at height decreas'd,
And wear their brave state out of memory;
Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
Seems to strain out rich in youth thereon my sight,
Where wasteful time debateth with it's power,
To change your day of youth to sulied night;
And all, in war with Time, for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engraft you new.

XVI.
But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, Time?
And forfeit yourself in your decay
With meaner bless'd than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours;
And many maiden gardens, yet unseen,
With virtuous wish would bear you living flowers,
Much licker than your painted counterfeit;
So should the lines of life that life repair,
Which this, Time's pencil, or my pupil pen,
Neither in inward worth, nor outward fair,
Can make you live you may live in your own:
To give away yourself keeps yourself still;
And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

XVII.
Who will believe my verse in time to come,
If it were fill'd with your most high deserts?
Though yet, Heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
Which hides your life, and shows not half your parts.
If I could write the beauty of your eyes,
And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
That is the way to come would say, this poet lies:
Such heavenlyouches, ne'er touch'd earthly faces.
So should my papers, yellow'd with their age,
Be scorn'd, like old men of less truth than tongue;
And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage,
And strange more of an antique beauty's face,
But were some child of yours alive that time.
You should live twice,—in it, and in my rhyme.

XVIII.
Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of Heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd;
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By changing course,avois her youth, and giveth up
But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st
Nor shall Death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines I time record thee:
So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

XIX.
Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood,
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-lived phænx in her blood;
Make glad and sorry seasons, as thou list'st,
And do what 'ere thou wilt, with swift or slow,
To the wide world, and all her fair delights;
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime;
O carpe not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw my lines there with thine antique pen;
Him in the coarse untainte'd do allow,
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
Yet, do thy worst, old Time: despise thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse even live young.

XX.
A woman's face, with nature's own hand paint'd,
Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion;
A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted
With such a change as I desire to fashion:
An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,
Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth;
A man in hue, all lines in his controlling,
Which steals men's eyes, and women's souls amazeth.
And, by a woman wert thou first created;
Tell nature's change, she wrought thee not for long;
And by addition me of thee defeated.
By adding one thing to my purpose nothing,
But since she pick'd thee out for women's pleasure
Mineubby love, and thys love's use their treasure.

XXI.
So is it not with me as with that mine,
Striv'd by a painted beauty to his verse;
Who heaven itself for ornament doth use,
And every fair with his fair doth rehearse,
Making a couplet of proud compare,
With sun and moon, with earth and seas' rich wave.
With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare
That heaven's air in his huge roundness bears;
O let me, true in love, but truly write,
And then may I, my love is as fair
As any mother's child, though not so bright
As those gold candies fix'd in heaven's air:
Let them say more like that of hearsay well;
I will not praise, that purpose not to sell.

XXII.
My glass shall not persuade me I am old,
So long as youth and thou are of one date;
But when in time's time's furrows I behold,
Then look I death, and youth should pour mine.
For all that beauty that doth cover thee
Is but the seamy raiment of my heart,
Which in thy breast doth live, as time in me;
How can I then be elder than thou art lowish?
O therefore, love, be of thyself so wary
As I not for myself but for thee will.
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so char'y
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill,
Presume not on thy heart when mine is slain;
Thou gav'st me thine, not to give back again.

XXIII.
As an unperfect actor on the stage,
Who with his fear is put beside his part,
Or some fierce thing replie't with too much rage,
Where's strength's abundance weakens his own heart?
So I, for fear of trust, forget to say
The perfect ceremony of love's rite,
And in mine own love's strength seem to decay.
O'ertcharg'd with burthen of mine own love's might.
Let my books he then the eloquence
And dumb pressers of my speaking breast;
Who pleads for love, and look for rempence
More than that tongue that more hath expresse'd,
O learn to read what silent love hath writ;
To hear with eyes belongs to love's fin wit.

XXIV.
Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath stell'd
T'ly beauty's form in table of my heart;
My body is the frame wherein 'tis held,
And perspectively the best painter's seat;
For through the painter you must see his skill,
To find where your true image picture'd lies,
Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,
That hath his window glazed with thine eye.
Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done;
Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me
Are windows to my breast, where-through the sun
Depths to see, to cast them on thee;
Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art,
They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

XXV.
Let those who are in favor with their stars,
() O proud titles, and a thousand hail'd,
Whilst 1, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
Unlook'd-for joy in that I honor most.
Great princes' favors, their fair leaves spread
But as the margot at the sun's eye;
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a crow they in their glory die.
The painful warrior favoured for light,
Ado thousand villains, not a face
Is from the book of honor raz'd quite,
And all the rest forget for which he told:
Then happy 1, that love and am beloved.
Where I may not remove, nor be removed.

XXVI.
Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knelt,
To thee I send this written embassage,
To witness duty, not to show my will.
Duty so great, which so poor as mine
May make seem bare, in wanting words to show it;
But that I hope some good conceit of thine
In my soul's thought, all naked, will bestow it;
Tell whatsoever star that guided my moving,
Points on me graciously with fair aspect,
And puts apparel on my tattered loving,
To show me worthy of this sweet moving;
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee,
Till then, not show my head where thou ma'st prove me.

XXVII.
Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel tired;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my mind, when body's work's expir'd;
For then my thought (from thence I abide)
Intend a tedious pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eye-lids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see;
Save what my soul's imagin'd sight
Presents th' shadow to my sightless view,
Which, like a jewel hung in ghastly night,
Makes black night beautious, and her old face new.

Lo, thus, by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee, and for myself, no quiet find.

XXVIII.
How can I then return in happy plight,
That am debar'd the benefit of rest?
When day's oppression is not cas'd by night,
But day by night and night by day oppress'd!
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to lose me.
The one by toil, the other to complain,
How far I toil, still farther from thee.
I tell the day, to please him, thou art bright,
And dost him grace where cloud's do blot the heaven.
So flatter I the smait-complexion'd night;
When sparkling stars twine not, thou gildst the day.

But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer,
And night doth nightly make grief's length seem stronger.

XXIX.
When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone between my outcast state,
And trouble deaf Heaven with my lowness cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate.
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
That I, like him, with friends possess'd,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
I think on thee, and cannot think on thee
(Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth) sings hymns at heaven's gate,
For that sweet love remember'd such wealth brings,
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

XXX.
When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I hold
At full dispose of former time to wast.
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste.
Then can I drown my eye un'sd to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep a fresh love's long-since cancell'd vow,
And moan the expense of many a vanished sight.
Then can I grieve at grievances forgone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er,
That account of one long-since cancell'd man,
Which I new pay as it was not paid before.
But while the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restor'd, and sorrows end.

XXXI.
Thy bosom is endear'd with all hearts,
Which 1 by lacking have supposed dead;
And there reigns love, and all love's loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obscene tear
Hath dear religious love stolen from mine eye,
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things remov'd, that hidden in thee lie!
Then art the grave where buried love doth live,
Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
Who all their parts of thee to thee did give;
That one of many now is thine alone.
Their images I lov'd I view in thee,
And thon (all they) hast all the all of me.

XXXII.
If thou survive my well-contented day,
When that enfrail Death my bones with dust shall lay,
And shalt by fortune once more re-survey
Those poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time;
For then they be outstripp'd, and outliv'd by him,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the height of happier men.
0 then enloading me but this loving thought:
"Had my friend muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage;
But since he died, and poets better prove,
Their for their style I'll read, his for his love."

XXXIII.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain-tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
And o'er the plain, the bourn o'er which to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face,
And from the solemn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my son one day thy masst did shine
With all triumphant splendor on my brow;
But out! alas! he was but one hour mine,
The region cloud hath mask'd him from me now.
Yet hint for this my love in what delitement
Suns of the world may stain, when heaven's
Sun staineth.

XXXIV.

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day,
And make me travel forth without my cloak,
To let base clouds o'ertake me in my way,
Hiding thy bravery in their rotten smoke?
Thou promisest not enough that through the cloud thou break,
To dry the rain on my summer-born face,
For no man well of such a salve can speak,
That heal's the wound, and cures not the disgrace:
Nor can thy shame give physic to my grief:
Though thou repent, yet I have lost the less:
The offender's sorrow lends but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence's cross.
Ah! but those tears are pearl which thy love sheds,
And they are rich, and ransom all ill deeds.

XXXV.

No more be grieve'd at that which thou hast done;
Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
Andlothsome canker lives in sweetest bud.
All men must be faulted, and even I in this,
Authorizing thy trespass with compare,
Myself corrupting, solving thy amiss;
Exceeding thy sins more than thy sins are:
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense,
(The adverse party is thy advocate.)
And gainst myself a lawful plea commence:
Such civil war is in my love and hate,
That I an accessory needs must be
To that sweet thief which sorely robs from me.

XXXVI.

Let me confess that we two must be twin,
Although our undivided loves are one:
So shall those blest that do with me remain
Without thy help, by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable splice.
Which though it alter not love's sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's delight.
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewail'd guilt should do thee shame,
Nor thou with public kindness honor me,
Unless thou take that honor from thy name:
But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XXXVII.

As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's bad decrepitude,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth;
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Endeav'd in thy parts do crown'd me,
I make my love engravi'd to this store,
So then I am not lame, poor, nor despis'd,
Well able for this shadow doth no substance give,
That in thy abundance am suff'd,
And by a part of all thy glory live.
Look what is best, that best I wish in thee;
This wish I have; then ten times happy me.

Fault.

XXXVIII.

How can my muse want subject to invent,
While thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my verse
Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to receive?
O, give thyself the thanks, if ought in me
Worthy personal standing to thine eye;
For who's so dumb that cannot write to thee,
Whom thou thyself dost give invention light!
He thou the teetl muse, ten times more in worth
Than these old numbers, which their rhyme invocate;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to outlive long date.
If my slight muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.

XXXIX.

0, how thy worth with manners may I sing,
When thou art all the better part of me!
What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
And what is't but mine own when I praise thee?
Even for this let us divide the day,
And our dear love lose name of single one,
That by this separation I may give
That due to thee, which thou deserv'st alone.
O absence, what a torment wilt thou prove,
Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave
To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
(Which time and thoughts so sweetly doth deceive.)
And thus thy absence may to me a way
By praising him here, who doth hence remain.

XL.

Take all my loves, my love, ye take them all;
What hast thou then more than thou hast before?
No love, my love, that thou may'st true love call;
All mine was thine, before thou hadst this more.
Then if for my love thou love receivest,
I cannot blame thee for my love thou wertest;
But yet be blam'd, if thou thyself deceivest
By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.
I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief,
Although thou steal'st all my poverty;
And yet, love knows, it is a greater grief
To bear love's wrong, than hate's known injury.
Lascivious grace, in whom all ill will shows,
Kill me with spites; yet we must not be foes.

XLI.

Those pretty wrongs that liberty commits
When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
Thy beauty and thy tears full well befits
For still temptation follows where thou art.
Gentle thou art, and therefore to be won;
Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assequ'd;
And when a woman wou'd, what woman's son
Will surely leave her tiff she have prevail'd?
Alme! but yet thou might'st my seat forebear,
And close thy beauty and thy straying youth,
Who lead thee in their riot even there
Where thou art forced to break a two-fold truth.
Here, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.

That thou hast her, it is not all my grief;
And yet it may be said I lov'd her dearly;
That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief.
A loss in love that touches me more nearly,
Lov'ing official duty, I will excuse.
Thou dost love her, because thou know'st I love her;
And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
Suffering my friend for my sake to lose love.
If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
And, losing her, my friend hath found that loss
Both fast each other, and I lose both twain,
And both for my sake lay on me this cross;
But here's the joy; my friend and I are one;
Sweet flattery! then she loves but me alone.

Because.
SONNETS.

XLIII. When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see, For all the day they view things unrespected; But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee; And, dully bright, are bright in dark directed; Then through whose shadow shadows doth make bright, How would thy shadow's form form happy show To the clear day, with thy much clearer light, When to unseen eyes thy shadow slues so!

How would (I say) mine eyes be blessed made By looking on thee in the living day, When in dead night thy far imperfect shade Was heavy sleep or sightless eyes doth stay? All days are nights to see, till I see thee, And nights, bright days, when dreams do show thee me.

XLIV. If the dull substance of my flesh were thought, Injurious distance should not stop my way; For, then, despite of space, I would be brought From limits far more remote, where thou dost stay, No matter then although my foot did stand Upon the farthest earth remov'd from thee, For nimble thought can jump both sea and land, As soon as this thy place where thou dost be would.

But ah! thought kills me, that I am not thought, To leap large lengths of miles when thou art gone, But that, so much of earth and water wrought, Most attend time's leisure with my moin; Receiving nought by elements so slow But heavy tears, badges of either's woe:

XLV. The other two, slight air and purging fire, Are both with thee, wherever I abide: The first my thought, the other my desire, These present-absent, swift with sudden slide. For when those quicker elements are gone In tender embassy of love to thee, My life, being made of four, with two alone Sink's down to death, oppress'd with melancholy; Until life's hemisphere be recouered By these swift messengers return'd from thee, Who even but now come back again, assured Of thy fair health, recounting to me: This bled, I joy; but then no longer glad, I send them back again, and straight grow sad.

XLVI. Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war, How to divide the conquest of thy sight; Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar, My heart my eye the freedom thou dost right. My heart doth plead that thou in him dost lie, (A closet never pier'd with crystal eyes,) But the defendant doth that plea deny, And says in him thy face appears lies. To ride this title is impatient A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart; And by their verdict is determined The clear eye's motley, and the dear heart's part: As thus; mine eye's due is thine outward part, And my heart's right time inward love of heart.

XLVII. Retract mine eye and heart a league is too, And each doth grow turns now unto the other: When that mine eye is furnish'd for a look, Or heart in love with sighs himself doth smother, With my love's picture then my eye doth feast, And to the painted banquet bids my heart: Another time mine eye is my heart's guest, And in his thoughts of love doth share a part: So she in picture by the picture of mine, Thyself away art present still with me: For thou not farther than my thoughts cast move, And I am still with them, and they with thee; Or they sleep, thy picture in my sight Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

XLVIII. How careful was I when I took my way, Each trifle under truer bars to thrust, That, to my use, it might unseas stay From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust! But the, much as thou thy jewels trust, Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief, Thou, best of dearest, and mine only care, Art left the prey of every vulgar thief. There have I not lock'd up in my chest, Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art, Within the gentle closure of my breast, From whence at pleasure thou mayst come and Art; And even thence thou wilt be stolen I fear, For truth proves thevishe for a prize so dear.

XLIX. Against that time, if ever that time come, When I shall see thee bow'd down on my defects, When as thy love hath cast its utmost stone, Cast'd to the audit by advis'd respects; Against that time, when thou shalt strangely pass, And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye, When love, converted from the thing it was, Shall reasons find of settled gravity; Against that time do I converse me here Within the knowledge of mine own desert, And this my hand against myself Irear, To guard the lawful reasons on thy part: To leave poor me thou hast the strength of laws, Since, why to love, I can allege no cause.

L. How heavy do I journey on the way, When what I seek—my weary travel's end— Doth teach that ease and that repose to say, "Thus far the miles are measured by thy hand!" The beast that bears me, tired with my woes, Plods dully on, to bear that weight in me, As if by some instinct the wretch did know His rider's love'd not speed, being made from thee: The bloody spur cannot provoke him on That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide, Which heavily he answers with a groan, Much as to me the wretch, with spurring to his side; For that some groan doth put this in my mind, My grief lies onward, and my joy behind.

LI. Thus can my love excuse the slow offences Of my dull bearer, when from thee speed: From where theart thou why should I haste me thence? Till I return, of posting is no need: If I were, thus, so far behind my way, Then should I spur, though mounted on the wind; In winged speed no motion shall I know: Thou, in the miles are measured by thy hand. Therefore desire, of perfect love being made, Shall neigh (no dull flesh) in his fiery race; But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade; Since from thee going he went willing slow, Towards thee I'll run, and give him leave to go

LII. So am I as the rich, whose blessed key Can bring him to his sweet uplocked treasure The which he will not every hour survey But only at the fine point of seldom pleasure. Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare, Since seldom coming, in the long year set. Like signs of joy, when th' thoughts they think are, Or captains' jewels in the carcase. So is the time that keeps you, as my chest, Or as the wardrobe which the rode doth hide, To keep some special instant special-bles't, By new unfolding his imprisonment's pride. Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope Being had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

LIII. What is your substance, whereof are you made? That millions of strange shadows on you tend Since every one hath, every one, one's shade, And you, but one, can every shadow lend. Chieft.
SONNETS.

LIV.

O how much more doth beauty beams seem,
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give!
The rose looks fair, but fairest is it deem
For that sweet odor which doth in it live.
The canker-blooms have foil as deep a dye
As the pertormed tincture of the roses,
Hang on such thorns, and play so freely
When summer's breath their masked buds discloses.
But, for their virtue only is their show,
They live unwound, and unrespected fade.
Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odors made;
And so of you, beantuous and lovely youth.
When that shall fade, by verse distils thy truth.

L.V.

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
But you shall shine more bright in these sheets
Than unawed stone, besmeared with sluttish time.
When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory.
Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity
Shall you pace north; your praise shall still find
Even in the eyes of all posterity.
That wear this world out to the ending doom
So, till the judgment that yourself aye rise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

L.VI.

Sweet love, renew thy force; be it not said,
Thy edge should blunter be than appetite,
Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might:
So, love, be thou; although to-day thou all
Thy hungry eyes, even till they wink with fulness,
To-morrow see again, and do not kill
The spirit of love with a perpetual dulness.
Let this sad interval like the shadow be
Which parts the shore, where two contracted-new Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more blest may be the view;
Or call it winter, which, being full of care,
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more rare.

L.VII.

Being your slave, what should I do but tend Upon your hours and times of your desire?
I have no precious time but all to spend,
Nor services to do, till you require.
Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour,
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of my absence sour.
When you have bid your servant once adieu;
Nor dare I question with my jealous thought
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,
But, like a sad slave, stay and think of nought.
Save, where you are how happy you make those:
So true a fool is love, that in your will (Though you do any thing) he thinks no ill.

L.VIII.

That God forbid, that made me first your slave,
I should in thought control your times of pleasure,
Or at your hand the account of hours to crave.
Being your usual, bound to stay your leisure!
O, let me suffer (being at your beck)
The imprison'd absence of your liberty,
And patience, tame to sufferance, bide each check
Without accusing you of injury.
Be where you list; your charter is so strong,
That you yourself may privilege your time:
Do what you will, to please it done.
Pouring Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
I am to wait, though waiting be so hell;
Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

LIX.

If there be nothing new, but that which is Hath been before, how are our brains beguil'd,
Which laboring for invention bears amiss
The second burthen of a former child?
O, that record could with a backward look,
Even of five hundred courses of the sun:
Show me your image in some antique book,
Since mind at first in character was done!
That I might see what the old world could say
To this expression of our frame;
Whether we are meended, or w'e better they,
or whether revolution be the same.
O! sure I am, the wits of former days
To subjects worse have given admiring praise.

L.X.

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.
Nativity, once in the page of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,
Crooked eclipses gainst his glory fight,
And Time, that gave, doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transfix the envious of the youth,
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow;
Feeds on the raptures of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his speedy tow.
And yet this same day is mine, mine own,
My verse shall stand, praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

LXI.

Is it thy will thy image should keep open
My heavy eyelids to the weary night?
Dost thou desire thy slumberers should be broken,
While shadows, like to thee, do mock my sight?
Is it thy spirit that thou send'st from thee
So far from home into my deeds to try;
To find out shames and idle hours in me,
The scope and tenor of thy image-to be
Oh! thy love, though much, is not so great;
It is my love that keeps mine eye awake,
Mine own true love that doth my rest defect,
To play the watchman ever at thy gate.
For thee I watch, whilst thou dost wake else-where,
From me far off, with others all-too-near.

LXII.

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye,
And all my soul, and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy.
It is so grounded inward in my heart.
Methinks no face so gracious is as mine,
No shape so true, no sight of such account,
And for myself mine own worth do define,
As I all other in all worths surround.
But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Heated and chopp'd with tann'd antiquity,
Mine own self-love quite contrary I read.
Self-so self-loving were iniquity.
'Tis thee (myself) that for myself I prize,
Paining my age with beauty of thy days.

LXIII.

Against my love shall be, as I am now,
With Time's injurious hand crush'd and o'erworst;
When hours have drain'd his blood, and fill'd his brow
With lines and wrinkles; when his youthful morn
Hath travell'd on to age's steepy night;
And all those beauties, whereof now he's king,
Are vanishing or vanish'd out of sight;
Steal way the treasure of his spring;
SONNETS.

For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife,
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life.

His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and he in them, still green.

802' When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced
That beauty which the outward cost of outworn age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-raised,
And brass eternal, slave to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the wat'ry nam,
Increasing store with loss, and loss with store
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or that myself confounded to decay,
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate—
That time will come and take my love away.

This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

LXIV.

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'erwhelms their power,
How shall this beauty shift to common grief,
Which action is no stronger than a flower?
O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wretched siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but time decays!
O fearful meditation! where, alas;
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie hid?
Or shall strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
None, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

LXV.

Tired with all these, for restful death I cry—
As to behold deserted a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And purest faith unharply foresworn,
And gilded honor shamefully misplaced,
And maiden virtue rudely stamped,
And right perfection wrongfully disgraced,
And strength by loping sway disabled.
And art made tongue-bed by authority
And folly (doctor-like) controlling skill,
And simple truth masqu'd simplicity,
And captive good attending captain ill;
Tired of all these, from which would I be gone,
Leave that, to die, I leave my love alone.

LXVI.

Ah! wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his presence grace impiety,
That sin by him advantage should achieve,
And face itself with his society?
Why should false painting imitate his cheek,
And steal dead seeing of his living line?
Why should poor beauty indirectly seek
Between the bow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live now Nature bankrupt is,
Regard of blood to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchequer now but love,
And of that many, lives upon his gains.
O, him she stores, to show what wealth she had
In days long since, before these last so bad.

LXVII.

Thus is his character the map of days outworn,
When beauty liv'd and death was but a name,
Now before these bastard signs of fair were borne,
Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead,
The garlanded sepulchres, were show'd away,
To live a second life on second head.
Ere beauty's dead decease made another gay:
In him these holy antique hours are seen,
Which all ornament, itself, and love,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;

And him as for a map doth nature store,
To show false art what beauty was of yore.

LXIX.

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view
Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend:
All beauty (the voice of souls) gives that due,
Iuttering bare truth, even so as false commend.
Thine outward thus with outward praise is crown'd;
But those same tongues that give thee so thine own,
In other accents do this praise confound,
By seeing farther than the eye hath shown.
They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And that, in guess, they measure by thy deeds,
Then (churl) their thoughts although their eyes were kind,
To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds:
But why thy odor matcheth not thy show,
The sense is this,—that thou dost common grow.

LXX.

That thou art blam'd shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being woo'd of time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And often present's a pure unstained prime.
Thou hast past by the ambush of young days,
Either not assai'd, or victory charg'd;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To he up envy, evermore enlarg'd.
If some suspect of ill mask'd in thy show,
Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.

LXXI.

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am gone.
From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell:
Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so,
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O! if (I say) you look upon this verse,
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as your poor name revere;
But let your love even with my life decay,
Lest the wise world should look into your moan
And mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXII.

O, lest the world should task you to recite
What is not in me that you should love;
After my death,—dear love, forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie
To do more for me than mine own deser;
And hang more praise upon deceased
Than niggard truth would willingly impart;
O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
That lovers love their sweetest till they love
Me; and my name, by which I was known,
To go along with me to my grave,
And live no more to shame nor me nor you.
For I am shamed by that which I bring forth,
And so should you, to love things nothing with

LXXIII.

That time of year thou may'st in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none or few, do hang
Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare rain'd choirs, where late the sweet birds sang
In me to see the twiflet of such day,
As after sunset fades in the west.
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
In me to see the flaving of such fire,
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
As the death-bed wherein it must expire,
Consum'd with that which it was nourish'd by.

SONNETS.

This thou perceiv'st which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well which thou must leave ere long:

LXXIV.

But be contented: when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very part was consecrate to thee.
The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
So then thou hast lost but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead;
The coward conquest of a wretch's knave,
Too base of thee to be remembered.

To love that well which thou must leave ere long:
And that is this, and this with thee remains.

LXXV.

So are you to my thoughts, as food to life,
Or as sweet season'd showers are to the ground;
And for the peace of you I hold such store
As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found;
Now proud as an enjoyer, and anon
Doubling the fitching age will steal his treasure;
Now counting best to be with you alone,
Then better'd that the naked may see my pleasure:
Sometimes all full with feasting on your sight,
And by and by clean starved for a look;
Possessing or pursuing no delight,
Save what is hat or must from you be look'd
Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
Or gluttonning on all, or all away.

LXXVI.

Why is my verse so barren of new pride
So far from variation or quick change?—
Why, with the time, do I not glance aside
To new-found methods and to complex strange?
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep invention from the golden weed?
That every word doth almost tell my name,
Showing their birth, and where they did proceed?
O know, sweet love, I always write of you,
And you and love are still my argument:
So all my best is dressing old words new,
Spending again what is already spent;
For as the sun is daily new and old,
So is my love still telling what is told.

LXXVII.

Thy glass shall show thee how thy beauties wear,
Thy dial how thy precios minutes waste;
The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
And of this book this learning mayst thou taste.
The wrinkles which thy glass shall truly show,
Of mouthed graves will give thee memory;
Thou by thy dial's shadie stealth mayst know
Time's thievish progress to eternity.
Look what thy memory cannot contain,
Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find
Those children new'd, deliver'd from thy brain,
To take a new acquaintance of the dead.
These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
Shall profit thee, and much enrich thy book.

LXXVIII.

So oft have I invok'd thee for my muse,
And such fair assistance in my verse,
As every alien pen hath got my use,
And under thee their poesy disperse.
Thine eyes, that taught the dumb on high to sing,
And keep in ignorance what to fly.
Have added feathers to the learned wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine, and honours thee.
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces grace be;
But thou art all my art, and dost advance
As high as learning my rude ignorance.

A dress known and familiar.

LXXIX.

Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all thy gentle grace;
But now my gracious numbers are dead,
And my sick pause doth give another place.
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travel of a warthen pen:
Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent,
He robs thee of, and pays thee again.
He lends thee virtue, and he stole that word
From thy behavior; beauty doth he give,
And found it in thy check; he gives thee peace,
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
Then thank him not for that which he doth say,
Since what he owes thee thou thyself dost pay.

LXXX.

O, how I flint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tongue-plied speaking of your fame!
But since your worth (worse as the ocean is)
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark, inferior far to his,
On your broad main doth willfully appear.
Your shallowest help shall hold me up at sea,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride;
Or, being wreck'd, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building, and of godly pride:
Then if I thrive, I must be cast amid
The worst this was;—my love was my decay.

LXXXI.

Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten,
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although it make the new world forget.
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die;
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entomb'd men's eyes shall lie.
Your monuments shall be your gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read;
And tongues to be, your being shall rehearse,
When all the breeders of this world are dead:
You shall still live (such virtue hath my pen)
Where breath most breathes, even in the mouths of men.

LXXXII.

I grant thou wert not married to my muse,
And therefore mayst without attain o'erlook
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject, blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in lay,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise;
And therefore art enforc'd to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days,
And do so, love; yet when they have devi'd
What strained touches rhetoric can lend,
Thou truly fair worth truly sympathiz'd
In true plain words, by thy true-telling friend;
And their gross painting might be better us'd
Where checks need blood; in thee it is abus'd.

LXXXIII.

I never saw that you did painting need,
And therefore to your fair no painting set.
I found, of thought I found, you did exceed
The barren tending of a poet's debt:
And therefore have I slept in your report,
That you yourself, being extant, well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow.
This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb;
For I should not bear him beauty being mute,
When others would give life, and bring a tomb.
There lives more life in one of your fair eyes
Than both your poets can in praise devise.

LXXXIV.

Who is it that says most? which can say more
Than this rich praise,—that you alone are you!
In whose confusion is the store
Which should example where your equal grew!
Look in what order that pen doth dwell,
That to his subject lends not some small glory;
But he that writes of you, if he can tell
That you are you, so dignifies his story,
Let him but copy what in you is writ,
Not making worse what nature made so clear,
And such a counter-part shall fame his wit,
Most like his master, which this grace admired every where.
You to your beauteous blessing add a curse,
Being kind of praise, which makes your praises worse.

LXXXV.
My tongue-tied muse in manners holds her still,
While comments of your praise,得以 compli'd
Reserve their character with golden quill,
And precious phrase by all the muses fil'd?
I think good thoughts, while others write good words,
And, like unletter'd clerks, still cry "Amen" To every hymn that able spirit affords,
In polished form of well-rehned pen.
Heard you prais'd, I say, "tis so, 'tis true," And to the most of praise add something more; But that is in my thought, whose love to you, Through words some honours have his rank before. Then others for the breath of words respect,
Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

LXXXVI.
Was it the proud full sail of his great verse,
Bound for the prize of all-too preciosous you, That but my ripe thoughts in my brain in were, Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew? Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write Above a mortal pitch, that struck me dead? So high the company, nor he himself by night Giving him aid, my verse astonished. He, nor that allable familiar ghost Which nightly gulls him with intelligence, And, once of my silence cannot. I was not sick of any fear from thence, But when your conuenience fil'd up his line, Then lack'd I matter, that excelled mine.

LXXXVII.
Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st my value estimate:
The charter of thy worth gives thee his blessing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting?
And for that riches where is my desiring?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.
Thus self Iavan'st, thy own worth then not knowling;
Or, me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistakes;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.
Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter,
In sleep a king, but, waking, no such matter.

LXXXVIII.
When thou shalt be dispos'd to set me light,
And place my merit in the eye of scorn,
Upon thy side against myself I'll fight,
And prove thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn;
With mine own weakness being best acquainted,
Upon thy part I can set down a story
Of husband once I had, wherein I am attained;
That thou, in losing me, shalt with much glory: And I by this will be a gainer too;
For bending all my loving thoughts on thee,
The myes that to myself I do,
Doing thee vantage, double-vantage me.
Such is my love, to thee I so belong,
That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

LXXXIX.
Say that thou didst forsake me for some fault,
And I will comment upon that offence:
Polished.

Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt,
Against thy reasons making no delivery.
Then I shall not, love, nor dishonour brave so ill,
To set a form upon desired change,
As I'll myself disgrace: knowing thy will,
I will acquaintance strangle, and look strange;
Be all my hand from thine eyes, and in my tongue
Thy sweet-betold name no more shall dwell;
Lest I (too much profane) should do it wrong,
And haply of our old acquaintance tell.
For thee, against myself I'll vow debate,
For I must ne'er love him whom thou dost hate.

XC.
Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever now;
Now while the world is bent my deeds to cross,
Join in the spite and fortune, make me bow,
And do not drop in for an after-loss.
Ah! do not, when my heart hath scap'd this sorrow,
Come in the rearward of a conquer'd woe; Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
To linger out a purpose o'th less.
If thou wilt leave me, do not me last,
When other petty grieves have done their spite,
But in the onset come; and at the first
The very worst of fortune's might;
And other strained of woe, which now seem woe,
Compare'd with loss of thee will not seem so.

XCI.
Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
Some in their wealth, some in their body's force;
Some in their garments, though new-sanged ill;
Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horses;
And every humor hath his adjunct pleasure, Wherein it finds a joy above the rest;
But these particulars are not my measure,
All these I better in one general best.
Thy love is better than high birth to me,
Richer than wealth, prouder than garments' cost,
Of more delight than jewels' or horses be:
And, having thee, of all men's I am the best.
Wretched in this alone, that thou mayst take
All this away, and me most wretched make.

XCII.
But do thy worst to steal thy soul away;
For term of life thou art assur'd no more.
And life no longer than thy love will stay,
For it depends upon that love of thine.
Then why dost thou not with fear the worst,
When in the least of them my life hath end?
I see a better state to me belongs,
Than that which on thy humour doth depend.
Thou canst not vex me with thy constant mind,
Since that my life on thy will doth lie.
O what a happy title do I find,
Happy to have thy love, happy to die!
Thou hast my heart, and hast it for thine own,
Or what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot?
—Thou mayst be false, and yet I know it not.

XCIII.
So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
Like a deceived husband; so love's face
May still seem love to me, though alter'd new,
Thy heart which with me didst so tenderly grace.
For there can live no hate in thine eye
Therefore in that I cannot know thy change.
In many's looks the false heart's history
Is writ, in modes and moods and wrinkles strange;
But Heaven in thy creation did decree
That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;
What's thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
Tis that should nothing thence but sweetness be.
How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow
If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!

XCIV.
They that have power to hurt and will do none,
That do not the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmov'd, cold, and to temptation slow;
SONNETS.
805

They rightly do inherit Heaven's graces,
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others but stewards of their excellence.
The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die;
But the flower wither'd in the meanest seat,
The basest weed outlives his dignity:
For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

XCV.

How sweet and lovely dost thou make the shame
Which like a canker in the fragrant rose,
Both spot the beauty of thy budding name!
O, in what sweet dost thou thy sins enclose!
That tongue that tells the story of thy days,
Making lascivious comments on thy sport,
Cannot disgrace but in a kind of praise;
Naming thy name blesses an ill report.
O, what a monarch have those vices got
Which for their habitation chose thee out!
Where beauty's veil doth cover every blot,
And all things turn to fair, that eyes can see!
Thou melt'st, deceived, like the hardest privilege;
The hardest knife ill-used doth lose his edge.

XCVI.

Some say thy fault is youth, some wantonness;
Some say thy grace is youth and gentle sport;
Both that and faults I love, if I love more and less:
Thou make'st faults graces that to thee resort.
As on the pillar of a throneed queen
The basest jewel will be well esteem'd;
So are those errors that in thee are seen.
To truths translated, and for true things deem'd.
How many lambs might the stern wolf betray,
If like a lamb he could his looks translate!
How many gazers in the chaste away,
If thou wouldst use the strength of all thy state!
But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XCVII.

How like a winter hath my absence been
From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
What frowers have I, what dark days seen?
What old December's barrenness everywhere!
And though thy fault was summer's and mine time,
The leaping autumn, big with rich increase,
Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease;
Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans, and unfather'd fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And thou away, the very birds are mute;
Or if they sing, his with so dull a chear,
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

XCVIII.

From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April, dress'd in all his trim,
Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing,
That heavy Saturn laugh'd and hap'd with him.
Yet nor the lyes of birds, nor the sweet smell
Of vernal flowers in odor and brawn,
Could make me any summer's story tell,
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew.
Nor did I wonder at the lilies white,
Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
Yet seemed it winter still, and, you away,
As with your shadow I with these did play:

XCIX.

The forward violet thus did I chide:
Sweet thief, whence didst thou steal thy sweet that
I stole from thee? If not from my love's breath? The purple pride
Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells,
In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dy'd.

Time of absence,

The lily I condemned for thy hand,
And birds of marjoram had stolen thy hair:
The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
One blushing shame, another white despair.
A third, nor red nor white, had stolen of both,
And to his robbery had annex'd thy breath;
But for his theft, in pride of all his growth
A vengeful canker eat him up to death.
More flowers I noted, yet I none could see,
But sweet or color it had stolen from thee.

C.

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so long
To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?
Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
Darkening thy power, to lend base subjects light?
Return, forgetful Muse, and straight to the deed
In gentle numbers time so idle spent;
Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem
And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
Rise, restive Muse, my love's sweet Ace survey,
If Time have any wrinkle graven there;
If any, be a satire to decay,
And make Time's spoils despised everywhere.
Give me from thine ample store of grace,
So much as will, by no means, make my Muse waste,
Thou present'st his setyhe, and crooked knife.

CI.

O truant Muse, what shall thy amends,
For thy neglect of truth in beauty dy'd?
Both truth and beauty on my love depends;
So dost thou too, and therein dost I find.
Make answer, Muse; wilt thou not happily,
"Truth needs no color with his color fix'd,
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay;
But best is best, if never intermix'd!"—
Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
Excuse not silence so; for it lies in thee
To make him much outshine a gilded tomb,
And to be prais'd of ages yet to be.
Then do thy office, Muse; I teach thee how
To make him seem long; hence as he shows now.

CII.

My love is strengthen'd, though more weak in seeming;
I love not less, though less the show appear;
That love is merchandiz'd, whose rich esteeming
The owner's tongue doth publish everywhere.
Our love was new, and then but in the spring,
When I was wont to greet it with my lays;
As Philomel in summer's front doth sing,
And stops his pipe in growth of ripper days:
Not that the summer's less pleasing then,
Than when her mournful hymns did hush the night,
But that wild music hurrieth every bough,
And sweetest flowers lay waste their dear delight.
Therefore, like her, I sometime hold my tongue,
Because I would not dull you with my song.

CIII.

Alack! what poverty my muse brings forth,
That having such a scope to show her pride,
The argument, all bare, is of more worth,
Than with it hath my dimidion grace.
O blame me not if I no more can write!
Look in your glass, and there appears a face
That overgoes my that exceeds my invention quite,
Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.
Were it not sinful then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that before was well?
For to no other pass my verses tend,
Than of your graces and your gifts to tell:
And more, much more, than in my verse can sit,
Your own glass shows you, when you look in it.

CIV.

To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were when first your eye me spied,
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters' cold
Have from the forest shuck three summers' pride.
Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd
In process of the seasons have I seen;
Three April perfumes in three hot June's burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green,
Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial hand,
Steal from his figure, and no pace perceiv'd;
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath, as my eye, and mine eye may perceiv'd.

For fear of which, I hear this, thou age unbed,
Were you born, was beauty's summer dead.

CV.
Let not my love be call'd idolatry,
Nor may beloved as an idol show.
Since all alike my song and praises be
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love to-day, to-morrow kind,
Still constant in a womankind excellence;
Therefore my verse, to constancy cou'd n't,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference.
Fair, kind, and true, is all my argument,
Fair, kind, and true, I am aspiring to these words;
And in this change is my invention spent,
Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords.
Fair, kind, and true, have often liv'd alone,
Which three, till now, never kept seat in one.

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest weights,
And many nothing but the faithful else are,-
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
Then in the blaze of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have express'd
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophacies
Of this our time, all you prefiruring;
And, for they look'd but with divine eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sung:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CVII.
Not mine own fears, nor the prophet's soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Suppos'd as forfeit to a convin'd doom.
The mortal moon hath her eclipse asur'd,
The sad augurs mock her present auspice;
Uncertainties now crown themselves assur'd,
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes:
Since spite of him I'll live in this poor rhyme,
With titles o'er dull and spiritless trite.
And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

CVIII.
What's in the brain that ink may character,
Which not figur'd to thee my true spirit?
What's new to speak, what now to register,
That may express my love, or thy dear merit?
Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
I must each day say over the very same;
Counting no old thing old, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hadow'd thy fair name.
So that eternal love in love's fresh case
Weights not the dust and injury of age,
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for yce his pace;
Finding the first conceit of love there bred,
Where time and outward form would shew it dead.

CVIX.
O, never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify
As I might from myself depart,
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie:
That is my home of loves; if I have rang'd,
Like him that travels, I return again;
Just to the time, not with the time exchang'd,-
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All fruits that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

CX.
Alas, 'tis true, I have gone here and there,
And made myself a motley to the view,
Gor'd mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is Made old offences of affections new.
Most true it is, that I have look'd on truth
Askance and strangely; but, by all above,
These blench'd gave my heart another youth,
And worst essays prov'd thee my best of love.
Now all is done, save what shall have no end:
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend.
A god in love, to whom I am convin'd.
Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

CXI.
O for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide,
Then much more human which puts my creatures breeds.
Thence it comes that thy name receives a brand
And almost thence my nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dryer's hand;
Pity me then, and wish I were renew'd;
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eyesb.'Gainst my strong infection;
No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor doth tenacious be, to cornection.
Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye,
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

CXII.
Your love and pity doth the impression fill
Wherein a scandal stamp'd upon my brow;
For what care I who calls me well or ill,
So you o'ergreen my bad, my good allow?
You are my all-the-world, and I must strive
To know my shames and praises from your tongue;
None else to me, nor I to none alive,
That my steel'd sense or changes, right or wrong.
In so profound abyss I throw all care
Of others' voices, that my adder's breast,
To critic and to lettered stopp'd are.
Mark how with my neglect I do dispense:—
You are so strongly in your purpose bred,
That all the world besides methinks are dead.

CXIII.
Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind;
And that which governs me to go about
Both part his function, and is partly blind,
Seems seeing, but effectually is out.
For it no form delivers to the heart
Of bird, of flower, or shape, which it doth lack
Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch;
For if it see the rub'd or gentlest sight,
The most sweet favor, or deform'd creation,
The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
The chaste, or dower, it changes there your feature.
Incapable of more, replete with you,
My most true mind thus maketh mine intune.

CXIV.
Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with you,
Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery,
Or whether shall I say mine eye saith true,
And that your love taught it this alchemy,
To make the monsters and things indigested,
Such cherubins as your sweet self resemble,
Creating every bad a perfect best,
As fast as objects to his beams assemble ?
Oh, 'tis the first; 'tis flattery in my seeing,
And my great mind most kindly drinks it up:
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is grieving,
And to his palate doth prepare the cup:
Wounded.
Vinegar.
SONNETS.

If it be poison'd, 'tis the lesser sin
That mine eye loves it, and doth first begin.

CXV.

Those lines that I before have writ, do lie,
Even those that said I could not love you dearer;
Yet then my judgment of my heart was so:
My most full flame should afterwards burn clearer.

But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in 'twixt vows, and change degrees of kings,
Tan sacred beauty, but the sharpest intents,
Divert strong minds to the course of altering things;

Alas! why, bearing of Time's tyranny,
Might I not then say, "Now I love you best,"
When I was certain of an innocent,
Crowning the present, doubting of the rest?

Love is a babe; then might I not say so,
To give full growth to that which still doth grow.

CXVI.

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:

O no! it is an ever-fixed mark
That's left of things immovable.

Thou hast borne me, and I shall not mar
Thy perfectness, but may this faulty piece

Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come;

Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But doth still love what their ending doth leave.

That if this be error and upon me prov'd,
I never writ nor no man ever lov'd.

CXVII.

Accuse me thus; that I have sated all
Wherein I should your great deserts repay;
Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
Whereof all bonds do tie me day by day;

That I have frequent been with unknown minds,
And given to tune your own dear-purchas'd right;
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds
Which should transport me farthest from your sight.

Book both my wilfulness and errors down,
And on just proof surmise accumulate,
Bring me within the level of your frown,
Shall shoot not at me in your wak'd hate;

Since my appeal says, I did strive to prove
The constancy and virtue of your love.

CXVIII.

Like as, to make our appetites more appease,
With eager compounds we our palate urge;
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
We seek to slum our sickness, when we purge;

Even so, being full of your ever-cloying sweetness,
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding,
And, sick of souls, found a kind of meetness
To be diseas'd, ere that there was true needing.

Thus policy in love, to anticipate
The ills that were not, grew to our suit assured,
And brought to medicine a healthful state,
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured.

But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so tell sick of you.

CXIX.

What potions have I drunk of Siren tears,
Distill'd fromimmixes foul as hell within,
Applying fears to hopes, and hopes to tears,
Still losing when I saw myself to win.

What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never!
How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fill'd?

In the distraction of this madding fever!
0 benefit of ill! now I find true
That better is by evil still made better;
And ruined love, when it is built anew,
Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.

* Subjected to fits.

So I return reluc't to my content,
And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.

CXX.

That you were once unkind, befriends me now,
And for that sorrow, which I then did feel,
Unless my nerves were brass or hammer'd steel.
For if you were by my unkindness shaken,
As I by yours, you have pass'd a hell of time;

And, I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken
To weigh how once I suffer'd in your crime.

O that our night of woe might have remember'd
My deepest sense, how hard true love doth feel,
And soon to you, as to me, then tender'd
The humble salve which wounded bosoms fits;
But that your trespass now again becomes a fece:
Mine ransom yours, and yours must ransom me.

CXXI.

'Tis better to be vile than vile esteem'd,
When not to be receives reproach of being,
And the just pleasure lost, which is so deem'd
Not by our feeling, but by others' seeing.

For why should others' tales adorne our eyes
Give salutation to my sportive blood!
Or on my frailties why are Starter spies,
Which in their wills count bad what I think good!

No, - I am true and they that level
At my abuses, reckon up their own;

I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel;
By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be

Unless this general evil they maintain,—
All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

CXXII.

Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
Full charter'd with lasting love from time to time;
Which shall above that idle rank remain,
Beyond all date, even to eternity;

Or at the least so long as brain and heart
Have faculty by nature to subsist; -
Till each to raz'd oblivion yield his part
Of thee, thy record never can be miss'd.

That poor retention could not so much hold,
Nor need I tell thee dear love to secure;

Therefore to give them from me was I bold,
To trust those tables that receive thee more:

To keep an adjunct to remember thee,
Were to import forgetfulness in me.

CXXIII.

No! Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change;
Thy pyramids built up with newer might
To me are nothing novel, nothing strange;
They are but dressings of a former sight.

Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
What thou dost fast upon us that is old;
And rather make them born to our desire,
Than think that we before have heard them told.

Thy registers and thee I both deny,
Not wonder'd at the present nor the past;
For thy records and what we see do lie,
Made more or less by thy continual taste:

This I do vow, and this shall ever be,
I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee.

CXXIV.

If my dear love were but the child of state,
It might for Fortune's bastard be unfather'd,
As subject to Time's love, or to Time's hate.
Weeds among flowers, or flowers with flowers gather'd.

No, it was bidded far from accident;
It suffers not in smiling sun, nor furs
Under the blow of thralled discontent;

Whereof the inviting time our fashion calls:
It fears not policy, that heretic,
Which distracts learning of short-number'd hours,
But all alone stands hugely politic.

That it nor grows with heat, nor drowns with showers.
To this I witness call the fools of time,

Which die for goodness, who have liv'd for crime.

SONNETS.

Shall will in others seem right grievances,
And in my will no false acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou, being rich in will, add to thy will
One will of mine, to make thy large will more.
Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;
Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

CXXXVI.

If thy soul check thee that I come so near,
Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy Will,
And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
Thus far for love, my love's suit, sweet, fulfill.
Hild will if will fulfill the treasure of thy love;
Ay, fill it full with wills, and my will one.
In things of great receipt with ease we prove;
Among a number one is reckon'd none.
Then in the number let me pass untold,
Though in thy stores' account I one must be;
For nothing hold me, so please thee hold
That nothing me, a something sweet to thee:
Make but thy name thy life, and love that still.
And then thou lovest me,—for my name is Will.

CXXXVII.

Thou blind fool, Love, what dost thou to mine eyes,
That they behold, and see not what they see!
I know what beauty is, see where it lies,
Yet wilt the best be, take the worst to be.
If eyes, corrupt by over-partial looks
Be anchor'd in the bay where all men ride,
Why of eyes' falsehood fast thou forged hooks,
Where'et the judgment of my heart is tarry'd,
Why should my heart think that a several plot,
Which my heart knows the wide world's common place?
Or mine eyes, seeing this, say this is not,
To put fair truth upon so foul a face;
In things right true my heart and eyes have err'd,
And this false plague are they now transfer'd.

CXXXVIII.

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies;
That she can think some unnot'd youth,
Unlearn'd in the world's false subtildties.
Thus vanily thinking that she thinks me young,
Although she knows my days are past the best,
Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue,
On both sides thus is simple truth suppli'd.
But wherefore says she not she is unjust?
And wherefore say not I that I am old?
O, love's best habit is in seeming trust.
And in age love lives not to have years told;
Therefore I live with her, and she with me,
And in our faults by theirs we flatter'd be.

CXXXIX.

O, call not me to justify the wrong
That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
Wound me not with thine eye, but with thy tongue;
Use power with power, and slay me not by art.
Tell me thou lovest elsewhere; but in my sight,
Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside,
What need'st thou wound with cunning, when thy might
Is more than my o'erpress'd defence can hide?
Let me excuse thee; ah! my love careth less
Her pretty looks have been mine enemies;
And therefore from my face she turns her eyes,
That they elsewhere might dart their injuries:
Yet do not so; but since I am near slain,
Kill me outright with looks, and rid my pain.

CX.

Be wise as thou art cruel; do not press
My tongue-tied patience with too much disdain;
Lest sorrow lend me words, and words express
The manner of my pitying pain.
If I might teach thee wit, better it were,
Though not to love, yet, love, to tell me so;
(As testy sick men, when their deaths be near,
No news but health from their physicians know;) For, if I should despair, I should grow mad,
And in my madness might speak ill of thee.

Now this ill-wrestling world is grown so bad,
Mad slanderers by mad ears believed be.
That I may not be so, nor thou thyself,
Bear thine eyes straight, though thy proud heart go wide.

CXL.

In faith I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand and error's more,
But 'tis my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view is pleas'd to note.
Nor are my ears with thy tongue's tune delighted,
Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone;
Nor taste nor smell, desire to be invited
To any sensual feast with thee alone.
But if my five wits, my five senses can
Dissolve one foolish heart from wandering thee,
Who leaves unwav'd the likeness of a man,
Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be:
Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin, awards me pain.

CXLII.

Love is my sin, and thy dear virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving;
O but with mine compare thou thinne own state,
And thou wilt find that it merits not reproving.
Or, if it do, not from those lips of thine
That have profan'd their scarlet ornaments,
And seal'd false bonds of love as o'th mine;
Robb'd others' beds' of victory's evidence;
Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lov'st those Whom thine eyes woo as mine importune thee;
Root pity in thy heart, that, when it grows,
Thy pity I may deserve to be pitted be:
If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
By self-example may'st thou be deni'd.

CXLIII.

Lo, as a careful housewife runs to catch
One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
Sets down her work and makes all swift despatch
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay;
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase,
Cries to catch her mother, her busy care is bent
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent;
So runn'st thou after that which flies from thee,
Whilst I thy chase chase the fair behind;
But if thou catch thy hope, turn to the back again,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou may'st have thy Will,
If thou turn back, and my loud crying still.

CXLIV.

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still;
The better angel is a man right fair,
The worser spirit a woman, color'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing her purity with her soul pride.
And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend,
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
But, being both from me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in the other's stead.
Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel be my good one out.

CXLV.

Those lips that Love's own hand did make,
Breath'd forth the sound that said, "I hate,"
To me that languish'd for her sake did make,
But when she saw my woeful state,
Straight in heart did mercy come,
Chiding that tongue, that ever sweet
Was used in giving pain;
And taught it thus anew to greet:
"I hate," she alter'd with an end,
That follow'd it as gentle day
Both follow now, who like a fiend
From heaven to hell is flown away.
"I hate," from hate away she threw,
And sav'd my life, saying—"not you."
SONNETS.

CXLVI.
Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
Fo’st’d by those rebel powers that thee array,
Why dost thou pine within, and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease?
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body’s end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant’s loss,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more:
So shalt thou feed on Death, that feeds on men,
And, Death once dead, there’s no more dying then.

CXLVII.
My love is as a fever, longling still
For that which longer must the disease;
That censures falsely what they see aright;
If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
What means the world to say it is not so!
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love’s eye is not so true as all men’s are,
At random from the truth vainly express’d;
For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright.
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLVIII.
O me! what eyes hath love put in my head,
Which have no correspondence with true sight!
Or, if they have, where is my judgment fled,
That censures falsely what they see aright?
If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love’s eye is not so true as all men’s are,
At random from the truth vanish’d express’d;
For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright.
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLIX.
There is such strength and warrantise of skill,
That in my mind, thy worst all best exceeds;
Who taught thee how to make me love thee more,
The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
O, though I love what others do abhor,
With others thou shouldst not abhor my state.
If thy unworthiness rais’d love in me,
More worthy I to be belu’d of thee.

CL.
Love is too young to know what conscience is;
Yet who knows not conscience is born of love?
Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,
Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove.
For thou betraying me, I do betray
My nober part to my gross body’s treason;
My soul doth tell my body that he may
Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason;
But, rising at thy name, doth point out thee
As his triumphant prize. Proud of this prize,
He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
To stand in thy affairs, fall by thy side.

No want of conscience hold it that I call
Her—love, for whose dear love I rise and fall.

CLII.
In loving thee thou knewst I am forsworn,
But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swearing;
In act thy bed-vow broke, and new faith born,
In vow new fate after new love bearing.
But why of two oaths’ breach do I accuse thee,
When I break twenty? I am perjur’d most,
For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee,
And all my honest faith in thee is lost:
For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy;
And, to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
Or made them swear against the thing they see;
For I have sworn thee fair: more perjur’d I,
To swear, against the truth, so foul a lie.

CLIII.
Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep;
A maid of than’s this advantage found,
And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
In a cold valley—fountain of that ground;
Which borrow’d from this holy fire of love
A daireless lively heat, still to endure,
And grew a seething bath, which yet even prove Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
But at my mistress’ eye Love’s brand new-dried,
The boy for trial needs would touch my breast;
I, sick withal, the help of bath desired,
And thither hied, a sad distemper’d guest,
But found no cure; the bath for my help lies
Where Cupid got new fire,—my mistress’ eyes.

CLIV.
The little love-god, lying once asleep,
Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
Whist many nymphs that vow’d chase life to keep,
Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
The fairest votary took up that fire
Which many legions of true hearts had warm’d;
And so the general of hot desire
Was sleeping, by a virgin hand disarm’d.
This brand she quench’d in a cool well by,
Which from Love’s fire took heat perpetual,
Growing a bath and healthful remedy.
For men diseas’d; but I, my mistress’ thrall.
Came there for cure, and this by that I prove Love’s fire heats water, water cools not love.
PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

Dun not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
Gainst whom the world could not hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjury!
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.
A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthy, a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd e'ers all disgrace in me.
My vow was breath, and where a vapor is:
Then, thou fair sun, that on this earth doth shine,
Exhale this vapor vow; in thee it is:
If broke, then it is no fault of mine.
If by me broke, what fault is not so wise
To lose an oath to win a paradise?

II.

Sweet Cytherea, sitting by a brook,
With young Adonis, lovely, fresh, and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.
She told him stories to delight his ear;
She show'd him favors to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and there:
Touches so soft still conquer chastity.
But other unripe years did his manhood.
Or he reins'd to take her figure'd proffer,
The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer:
Then fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward
He rose and ran away; all, too froward!

If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love!
O never faith could hold, if not to beauty could.
Thought to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove;
These thoughts, to me like oaks, to thee like osiers bow'd.
Study his brazen leaves, and makes his book thine eyes.
Where all those pleasures live that art can comprehend.
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee express;
Allignorant that soul that seeth thee without wonder;
Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire:
Thine eye Jove's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder,
Which (not to anger beat) is music and sweet fire;
Celestial as thou art, O do not have that wrong,
To sing the heavens' praise with such an earthly tongue.

IV.

Scarce had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herds gone to the hedge for shade,
When Cytherea, all in love forlorn,
A longing torrentance for Adonis made,
Under an o'er growing by a brook,
A brook where Adonis used to cool his spleen.
Hot was the day; she hotter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.
Anon he comes, and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green brim;
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wistly as this queen on him:
He, speaking, bow'd, bonnet'd in, whereas he stood;
Oh Jove, quoth she, why was not I a fool?

V.

Fair is my love, but not so fair as field;
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty;
Brighter than glass, and yet as glass is, brittle,
Softer than wax, and yet, as iron, rusty.
A lily pale, with damask dye to grace her,
None fairer, nor none fairer to deface her.
Her lips to mine how often hath she join'd,
Between each kiss her oats of true love swearing!
How many tales to please me hath she told,
Bearing my love, the loss thereof still fearing!
Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings,
Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.
She burnt with love, as straw with fire flameth,
She burnt out love, as straw out burneth;
She fram'd the love, and yet she fail'd the framing,
For she love lost, and yet she fell a turning.
Was this a lover, or a lecher whether?
Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

VI.

If music and sweet poetry agree,
As they must needs, the sister and the brother,
Then must the love be great twixt thee and me,
Because thou lovest the one, and I the other.
Downward to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth reach human sense;
Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such,
As, passing all conceit, needs no defence.
Thou lovest to hear the sweet melodious sound
That Phoebus' lute, the queen of music, makes;
And in deep delight am chiefly drown'd,
Whens himself to singing he betakes.
One god is god of both, as poets feign;
One knight loves both, and both in thee remain.

VII.

Fair was the morn, when the fair queen of love,
* * * * *
Paler for sorrow than her milk-white dove,
A fairer face, a younger heart was ever seen;
Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill:
Anon Adonis comes with horn and hounds;
She, silly queen, with more than love's good will,
Forlode the boy he should not pass those grounds;
Once, quoth she, did I see a fair sweet youth
Here in these brakes deep-wound with a boar,
Deep in the thigh, a spectacle of ruth!
She in my thigh, quoth she, here was the sore;
She showed her; he saw more wounds than one,
And blushing fled, and left her all alone.

VIII.

Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon faded.
Pluck'd in the bud, and faded in the spring!
Bright orient pearl, alack! too timely shaded!
Fair creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp sting!
Like a green plum that hangs upon a tree,
And falls, through wind, before the fall should be.
I weep for thee, and yet no cause I have;
For why? thou lovest me nothing in thy will.
And yet thou lovest me more than I hidervo;
For why? I crave nothing of thee still:
O yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee;
Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

IX.

Venus, with Adonis sitting by her,
Under a myrtle shade, began to woo him:
She told the youngling how god Mars did try her,
And as in love she fell, she fell to him.
Even thus, quoth she, the warlike god embraced me;
And then she clipp'd Adonis in her arms:
Even thus, quoth she, the warlike god unlace me:
As if the boy should use like loving charms.

The second line is lost.

811
Even thus, quoth she, he seized on my lips, And with her lips on his did act the seizure; And as she fetched breath, away he skips; And would not take her meaning nor her pleasure. Ah! that I had my lady at this bay, To kiss and clip me till I run away!

X.
Crabb'd age and youth Cannot live together; Youth is full of pleasure, Age is full of care. Youth like summer morn, Age like winter weather; Youth like summer brave, Age like winter bare. Youth is full of sport, Age's breath is short, Youth is nimble, age is lame: Youth is hot and bold, Age is weak and cold; Age and youth, my love, are friends.

XI.
Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good, A shining glass, that fadeseth suddenly; A flower that dies when first it 'gins to bud; A brittle specie, that's broken presently. A doubtful good, a glass, a glass, a flower, Lost, faded, broken, dead within an hour. And these goods lost are sold or never found, As faded glass no rubbing will refresh. As flowers dead, li be wither'd on the ground, As broken glass no cement can restore, So beauty, blemish'd is once, forever lost, In spite of physic, painting, pain, and cost.

XII.
Good night, good rest. Ah! neither be my share. She bade good night, that kept my rest away; And daft me to a cabin hang'd with care, To descend on the doubts of my decay. Farewell, quoth she, and come again to-morrow. Farewell I could not, for I supp'd with sorrow. Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile, In scorn or friendship, nil I construe whether 'T may be, she joy'd to jest at my exile, 'T may be, again to make me wander thither. Heart's joy's a word for shadows like myself, As take the pain, but cannot pluck the pelf. Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east! My heart doth charge the watch; the morning rise Doth cite each moving sense from idle rest, Not daring trust the office of mine eye. While Philomela sits and sings, I sit and mark, And wish her lays were tuned like the lark; For she doth welcome daylight with her ditty, And drives away dark dismal-dreaming night: The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty; Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished sight. Sorrow changed to solace, solace mix'd with sorrow. For why? she sigh'd, and bade me come to-morrow. Were I with her, the night would post too soon; But now are minutes added to the hours. To spite me now, each minute seems a moon; Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers! Back night, peep day: good day, of night now morrow; Short, night, to-night, and length thyself to-morrow.

XIV.
It was a lordling's daughter, the fairest one of three, That liked of her master as well as well might be, Till looking on an Englishman, the fairest that eye could see. Her fancy tell a turning, Long was the combat doubtful, that love with love did fight, To leave the master loveless, or kill the gallant knight? To put in practice either, alas it was a spine Unto the silly damsel. But one must be refused, more mickle was the pain, That nothing could be used, to turn them both to gain. For of the two the trusty knight was wounded with disdain. Alas, she could not help it! Thus art, with arms contending, was victor of the day, Which by a gift of learning did bear the maid away; Then full, the learned man hath got the lady gay, For now my song is ended.

XV.
On a day (alack the day!), Love, whose month was ever May, Spied a blossom passing fair, Playing in the wanton air: Through the velvet leaves the wind, All unseen, 'gan passage find; That the lover, sick to death, Wish'd himself the heaven's breath. Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow; Air, would I might triumph so. But alas, my hand hath sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn: Vow, alack, for youth unmeet, Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet. Do not call it sin in me, That I am forsworn for thee; Thou for whom Jove would swear Juno but an Ethope were; And deny himself for Jove, Turning mortal for thy love.

XVI.
My flesh feed not, My eyes breed not, My ram speed not, All is amiss; Love is dying, Faith's declining, Heart's deceiving, Causer of this. All my merry jigs are quite forgot, All my lady's love is lost. Gone not: Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love, There a nay is placed without remove, One silly cross Wrought all my loss; O sorrowing Fortune, cursed fickle dame! For now I see, Inconstancy More in women than in men remain. In black mourn I, All lears stern I, Love hath forlorn me, Living in thrall: Heart is bleeding, All help needing, (O cruel speeding!) Fraughted with galls. My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal? My shepherd's bell rings doleful knell; My curtail dog, that wont to have play'd, Plays not at all, but seems afraid; With sighs so deep, Profers to weep. In howling-wise, to see my doleful plight. How sights resound Through heartless ground, Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody fight! in no degree.
Clear well's spring not,
Sweet birds sing not,
Green plants bring not
Forlorn: they die:
Herds stand weeping,
Flocks all sleeping,
Nymphs back peeping
Fearfully.
All our pleasure known to us poor swains,
All our merry meetings on the plains,
All our evening sport from us is fled,
All our love is lost, for Love is dead.
Farewell, sweet love,
Thy like ne'er was
For a sweet content, the cause of all my Moon.
Poor Cordian
Must live alone,
Other help for him I see that there is none.

XVII.
Whene'er thine eye hath chose the dame,
And still'd the deer that thou shouldst strike,
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy, partial wight;
Take counsel of some wiser head,
Neither too young, nor yet unwise.
And when thou com'st thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with filed talk,
Least thy simple practice smell;
(As a cripple soon can find)
But plainly say thou lov'st her well,
And set her person forth to sell.
What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will calm ere night;
And then too late she will repent,
That thus dissembled her delight;
And twice desire, ere it be day,
That which with scorn she put away.
What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her feeble force will yield at length;
When craft hath taught her thus to say:
"Had women been so strong as men,
In faith you had not had it then."
And to her will frame all thy ways;
Spares not to spend,—and cuddly there
Where thy desert may merit praise,
By raving in thy lady's ear:
The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet bears no flaw.
Serve always with assured trust,
And in th' suit be humble, true;
Unless thy lady prove unjust,
Press never thou to choose anew:
When time shall serve, be thou not slack
To proffer, though she put thee back.
The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.
Have you not heard it said full oft?
A woman's nay doth stand for nought?
Think women still to strive with men,
To sin, and never for to saint:
There is no heaven, by holy then.
When time with age shall them attain.
Were kisses all the joys we shed,
One woman would another wed.
But soft; enough,—too much I fear,
Lest that my mistress hear my song;
She'll not stick to round me i th' ear,
To teach my tongue to be so sweet a sound.
Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

XVIII.
Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dales, and fields,
And all the craggy mountains yield.
There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, by whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.
There will I make thee a bed of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies,
A carpet flowers and a hortus
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.
A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs:
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then live with me, and be my love.

LOVE'S ANSWER.
If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To love with thee and be thy love.

XIX.
As it fell upon a day,
In the merry month of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade,
Which a grove of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap, and birds did sing,
Trees did grow, and plants did spring:
Every thing did banish sain,
Save the nightingale alone.
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Leant her breast up-till a thorn,
And there she sung the doleful set dyt,
That to hear it was great pain.
Fie, fie, fie, now would she cry,
Teru, teru, by and by:
That to hear her so complain,
Scarce I could from tears refrain;
For her grace so lovely shawn,
Made me think upon mine own.
Ah! I thought I, thou mourn'st in vain;
None take pity on thy pain.
Senseless trees, they cannot hear thee;
Ruthless bears, they will not cheer thee:
King Pandion, he is dead.
All thy friends are lapp'd in lead:
All thy fellow-birds do sing,
Careless of thy sorrowing.
Even so, poor bird, like thee,
None alive will pity me.
Whilst as fickle fortune smil'd,
Thou and I were both beguil'd.
Every one that flatters thee,
Is no friend in mercy.
Words are easy like the wind;
Faithful friends are hard to find.
Every man will be thy friend,
Whilst thou hast wherewith to spend;
But if store of crowns be scant,
No man will supply thy want.
If that one he prodigal,
Bountiful they will him call;
And with such like flattering,
"Pity but he were a king."
If he be addict to vice,
Quickly him they will entice;
It to women he be bent,
They have heard it said full oft,
But if fortune once do frown,
Then farewell his great renown;
That he frown'd on him before,
Use his company no more.
He that is thy friend indeed,
He will help thee in thy need;
If thou beow, he will weep;
If thou wake, he cannot sleep;
Thus of every grief in heart
He with thee doth bear a part.
These are certain signs to know
Faithful friend from flattering foe.

XX.
Take, oh, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn,
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights doth in mist enbrand the morn:
But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.
Hide, oh, hide those hills of snow
Which thy frozen bosom bears,
A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

From off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
A plaintful story from a sistering vale.
My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
And down I lay to list the sad tun'd tale:
Ere long espied a fickle maid full pale,
Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

Upon her head a platted hive a straw,
Which fortify her usage from the sun,
Wherein the thought might think sometime it saw
The carcase of a beauty spent and done.
Time had not clyed all that youth begot,
Nor youth all quit; but, spite of Heaven's fell rage,
Some beauty peep'd through lattices of scar'd age.

Oft did she leave her napkin to her eye
Which on it had concocted characters.
Lauding! the silken figure in the urine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears,
And often reading what contents it bears;
As often shrinking undistinguish'd woe,
In claimers of its sorrow, both high and low.

Sometimes her devil'd eyes their carriage ride,
As they did battery to the spheres intend;
Sometimes diverted their poor balls are tied
To th' ordered earth; sometimes they do extend
Their view right out; anon their gazes lend

To every place at once, and nowhere fix'd.
The mind and sight distractedly commix'd.

Her hair, nor loose, nor tied in formal plait,
Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride;
For some, untuck'd, descended her sheav'd hat,
Hanging her pale and pinched cheek beside
Some in her threaden fillet still did bide
And true to bondage, would not break from thence;
Though slackly braided in loose negligence.

A thousand favors from a maund she drew
Of amber, crystal, and of bedded jet.
Which one by one she in a river threw.
Upon whose weeping margent she was set
Like none, accustom'd, weet to woe
Or monarch's hands, that let not bonny fall
Where want cries "some," but where excess beg's all.

Of folded schedules had she many a one,
Which she perus'd, sigh'd, tore, and gave the flood;
Cuck'd to the ringing of posied gold and bone,
Bidding them find their sepulchres in mud;
Found yet more letters sadly pen'd in blood
With sheав'd silk hat and affectedly
Enswath'd, and seal'd to curious secrecy.

These often bade her in her fixive eyes,
And often kiss'd, and often 'gan to tear;
Cried, "O false blood! thou register of her,
What unapprov'd witness dost thou bear!

To wash. 2 Formed into pellets, or small balls.

A LADY'S COMPLAINT.
A Lover's Complaint.

Ink would have seemed more black and damned here.

This said, in top of rage the lines she rents,
Big discontent so breaking their contents.

A reverend man that graz'd his cattle nigh,
Sometimes a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of country, old and city, and the wise.
The swiftest hours, observed as they flew,
Towards this afflicted fancy fastly drew;
And, priv'g'd by age, desires to be.
In brief, the grounds and motives of her woe.
She's dear: she is, though in me you behold
The injury of many a blustering hour,
Let it not tell your judgment I am old;
Not age, but sorrow, over me hath power:
I might as yet have been a spreading dower,
FRESH to myself, if I had self-applied
Love to myself, and to no love beside.
Yet woe is me! too early I attended
A youthful soul (it was to gain my grace)
Of one so fair and comely distant.
That maiden's eyes stuck over all his face;
Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him place;
And when in his fair parts she did abide,
She was new lodg'd, and newly confined.
Doth hang in crooked curls; and every light occasion of the wind
Upon his lips their silken parcels hurls.
What's sweet to do, to do will aptly find:
Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind;
For on his visage was in little drawn,
What largeness thinks in paradise was sown.
Small show of man was yet upon his chin;
His phrenix down began but to appear,
Like unshorn velvet, on that tawny skin.
Whose bare out-bragg'd the web he seem'd to wear;
Yet show'd his visage by that cost most dear;
And nice allusions awkening stood in doubt
If best 'twere as it was, or best without.
His qualities were beauteous as his form,
For maiden-tongued he was, and thereof free;
Yet, if men mov'd him, was he such a storm
Of all sorts? May love's heat and charm
When winds breathe sweet, untruly though they be,
His rudeness so with his author's youth,
Did lively falseness in a pride of truth.
Well could he ride, and often men would say
That through his mottle from his heart
Proud of subjection, noble by the sway.
What rounds, what bounds, what course, what stop
He makes!
And controversy hence a question takes,
Whether the horse by him became his deed,
Or he his manage by the well-doing steed.
But quickly on his side the verdict went;
His real habit gave life and grace
To apparitions and to ornament,
And complik'd in himself, not in his case?
All aids, themselves made fairer by their place,
Came for additions; yet their purpose'd trim
Pierced not his grace, but were all graced by him.
So on the tip of his subliming tongue
All kind of arguments and question deep,
All reflection prompt, and reason strong.
For his advantage still did wake and sleep:
To make the weeper laugh, the laugher weep,
Heir of the dialect and dainty unto,
Catching all passions in his craft of will;
That he did in the general bosom reign
Of young, of old, and sexes both enchanted,
To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
In personal duty, following where he haunted;
Consents with which, ere he desire, have granted;
One possessed by fancy,
Club,
Outward show.
And dialogue for him what he would say,
Ask'd their own wills, and made their wills obey.
Many there were that did his picture get,
To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind;
Like fools that in the imagination set
The goodly objects which abroad they find
If lands and passions, theirs in thought assign'd;
And laboring in more pleasures to bestow them,
Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe them.
So many have, that never touch'd his hand,
Sweety suppos'd them mistress of his heart.
My woeful self, that did in freedom stand,
And was my own part, (her part,) what
What of his art in youth, and youth in art,
Threw my affections in his charmed power,
Reserv'd the stake, and gave him all my flower.
Yet did I not, as some my equals did,
Demand of him, nor being desired, yielded;
Finding myself in honor so forbid.
With safest distance I mine honor shielded:
Experience for me many bulwarks builded
Of proofs new-bleding, which remain'd the foil
Of this false-jewel, and luminous spoil.
But ah! who ever shunn'd the precedent;
The destined ill she must herself stay
Of forced examples, against her own content,
To put the by-pass'd peril in her way?
Counsel may stop a while what will not stay;
For when we rage, advice is often lost.
By blustering us to make our wits more keen.
Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood,
That we must curb it upon others' proof,
To be forbid the sweet fault which seems so good,
For fear of harms that prauc in our blood.
A appetite, from judgment stand aloof?
The one a pal ate that needs will taste,
Though reason weep, and cry 'tis thy last.'
For further I could say, 'this man's untrue,'
And knew the patterns of his foul beguiling
Heard where his plans in others' hearts grew,
Saw how deceits were gilded in his soul;
Knew vows were ever brokers to depling
Thought characters, and words, merely but art,
And bastards of his soul adulterate heart.
And long upon these terms I held my city,
Till thus he 'gan beseech me: Gentle maid,
Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
And be not of my holy vows afraid:
That's to you sworn, to none was ever said;
And am I not a man of love? I still do
Till now did ne'er invite, nor never vow.
All my omissions that abroad you see,
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind:
Love made them not; with acture they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind;
They sought their shame so that their shame did find;
And so much less of shame in me remains,
By how much of me their reproach contains.
Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warm'd,
Or the affection put to the smallest keen,
Or any of my leisure ever charmed:
Harm have I done to them, but ne'er was harm'd
Kept hearts in livers, but mine own was free,
And reigned, commanding in his monarchy.
Look here what tributes wounded fancies sent me,
Of paled pearls, and rubies red as blood;
Figuring that they, their passions twisted me,
Gave grief and blushes, aply understood
In bloodless white and the encrust'd mood;
Effects of terror and tears broocking,
Encoun'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.
And lo! Behold these talents of their hair
With twisted metal greasy infinitely matted;
I have receiv'd from many a several fair;
Their kind acceptance weeping beneficeth;
With the annexions of fair gems enrich'd,
And deep-brain'd sounds that did amplify
Each stone's dear nature, worth, and quality.
* Intervened.
The diamond, why 'twas beautiful and hard,
Where'er its inviol'd properties did tend;
The deep-green emerald, in whose fresh regard
Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
The heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend
With objects manifold; each several stone,
With wit well biano'd, smil'd or made some morn.

Lo! all these trophies of affections hot,
Of pensive and subdued desires the tender,
Nature hath charg'd me that I hoard them not,
But yield them up where I myself must render,
That is, to you, my origin and ender:
For these, of force, must your obligations be,
Since I their altar, you enpatrion me.

O then advance of yours that phraseless hand,
Whose white weights down the airy scale of praise;
Take all these similes to your own command,
Hallow'd with sighs that burning lungs did raise:
What me your minister, for you obeys,
Works under you; and to your audit comes
Their distinct parcels in combined sums.

Lo! this device was sent me from a nun
Or sister sanctified of holiest note;
Which fate her noble suit in court did shun,
Whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote;
For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,
But kept cold distance, and did thence remove,
To spend her living in eternal love.

But O, my sweet, what labor is't to leave
The thing we have not, mastering what not strives?
Paling the place which did no form receive,
Playing patient spirits in unconstrained gyves:
She that her fame so to herself contrives,
The scars of battle 'scapeth by the fight,
And makes her absence valiant, not her might.

O pardon me, in that my boast is true;
The accident which brought me to your eye,
I put the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly:
Religious love put out religion's eye:
Not to be tempted, would she be immur'd,
And now, to tempt all, hereby procure'd.

How mighty then you are, O hear me tell;
The broken bosoms that to me belong
Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
And mine I pour your ocean all among:
I strong 'er them, and you 'er me being strong,
Must for your victory as all conquest,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.

My parts had power to charm a sacred nun,
Who disciplin'd and dieted in grace,
Believ'd her eyes when they to assault began,
All vows and consecrations giving place.
O most potential love! vow, bond, nor space,
In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor combine,
For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

When then impresset, what are precepts worth
Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame,
How coldly those impediments stand forth
Of wealth of filial fear, law, kindred, fame!

Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense,
'gainst shame,
And sweetens, in the sufferings pangs it bears,
The aches of all forces, shocks, and fears.
Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,
Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine,
And supplicat their sighs to you extend,
To leave the lattice that you make 'gainst mine,
Lending soft audience to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bonded bath,
That shall prefer and undertake my tooth.

This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose brows with cold sweat here leveled on my face,
Each check a river running from a fount
With brisht current downward flow'd apace:
O how the channel to the stream gave grace!
Who, glaz'd with crystal, gate! the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue incloses.

O father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear!
But with the inundation of the eyes
What rocky heart to water will not wear?
What breast cold is that is not here fret!
O elet effect! cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extirpate hath!

For lo! his passion, but an art of craft,
Even there resolved my reason into tears;
There my white stole of chastity I did lay,
Shook off my sober guard, and civil tears;
Appear to him, as he to me appears,
All melting: though our drops this difference bore,
His passion'd me, and mine did him restore.

In him a plenteous of subtle matter,
Applied to canteles, all strange form receives,
Of burning bluses, or of weeping water,
Of swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either step the best design he makes,
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows;
That not a heart which in his level came,
Could scarce the hail of his all-hurting aim,
Showing her nature is both kind and tame,
And, veil'd in them, did win whom he would win:
Against the thing he sought he would explain;
When he most burn'd in heart-sly'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid, and praised cold chastity.

Thus merely with the garment of a Grace
The naked and concealed heu he cover'd,
That the unexperic'd gave the tempter place,
Which, like a cherubin, above them hover'd.
Who, young and simple, would not be so hover'd?
Ah me! I fell; and yet do question make
What I should do again for such a sake.
O, that infected moisture of his eye,
O, that false fire which in his cheek so glow'd,
O, that forc'd thunders from his heart did fly,
O, that sad breath his spungy lungs bestow'd,
O, all that borrow'd motion, seeming ow'd,
Would yet again betray the fore-betray'd,
And new pervert a reconciled maid?

* Got, procured.  * Decorous.  * Devilful purposes.

THE END.
